UNIVERSITY OF IDAHO, MOSCOW, OCTOBER 20, 1909.

NO. 4.

LIEUTENANT STEUNENBERG

Former Commandant of Cadets Visits University.

First Lieutenant George Steunenberg now of the 28th Infantry, stationed at Ft. Snelling, in St. Paul, has been in Moscow for several days.

Lieutenant Steunenberg was stationed at the University as commandant for only two years. He was a strict disciplinarian, enforcing obedience to the orders and attention to duty as few men could have done and at the same time have been considered anything less than a tyrant. His reprimand sometimes froze the blood of the stumbling recruit and made him ready to endorse heartily General Sherman's definition of war. Yet in spite of his usual gruff exterior and the short time that he was here he has a warm place in the heart of every student and member of the faculty of our University. He was loyal to Idaho and an indefatigable worker in her behalf. He attended every rally and always took an active part usually summoning a crowd by a few volleys of artillery. The football players have not forgotten how he would drag one of our old cannon through the mud to a hill near the field and then miss the entire game in order to drown our rivals' yells with cannon shots. He was a warm friend to every student and was always ready to lend a helping hand; and every student knew that, whether it was commanding the battalion, speaking at assembly, or rooting at a game, whatever the "Lifty" did was done thoroughly and well.

Scholarships In College of Engineering.

A good friend of the University has given the money for two scholarships of seventy-five dollars, each for one year to students in the College of Engineering of the University.

The faculty of the University, on recommendation of the Committee on the College Engineering, has adopted the following rules governing the award of these scholarships:

That they be awarded at the end of the junior year, and that they be paid at the beginning of the Senior year only in case the recipients return for the work of that year;

That these scholarships be rewards for high scholastic standing and in appreciation of the high personal honor of the recipients; and

That they be awarded on the basis of the records in the Dean's office of all college work up to the end of the Junior year, confirmed by the action of the Committee on the College of Engineering.

The first award will be in June, 1910.

Herrington-Stuart Nuptials.

A quiet home wedding was solemnized on Thursday evening at six o'clock, October 14th when Miss Nina Stuart '10 and Wilfred Herrington, '08 were married by Rev. Koontz. The bride, gowned in white and unattended entered to the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March. After the ceremony a sumptuous supper was served to a few intimate friends.

Later the bridal couple left for their new home a few miles from Moscow.

Both the bride and groom were prominent students while in college, and The Argonaut joins with their many friends in wishing them much happiness.

Vas Ist?

"The Merry Widow?"

"Oh no, 'The Merry Milkmaids.'"

"What is it for?"

"The Junior Class, you know. They have an Annual looming up in the dim distance, so Miss Caldwell has consented to gather all the songsters, orchestra musicians, clever monologue artists, etc., into one galaxy of stars and put on the clever operetta, 'The Merry Milkmaids.'"

It may seem they are boosting for Prof. Frandsen's department, but it's all a boost for the Junior Class, and the best annual yet thrust upon the public.

First College Dance.

Last Friday evening the first college dance of the year was held in Hodgins' hall. A large number of students and faculty were present. The music furnished by the college orchestra greatly added to the enjoyment of the dancers, who departed at twelve o'clock, after having spent a most delightful evening.

Oregon has fifteen letter men trying out for the football team this fall.

IDAHO WINS FIRST GAME

Good Crowd Sees Farsity Trim Boys From Puget Sound University.

Saturday afternoon gave the students and townspeople the first real opportunity to see the Varsity football team in action, and they seemed to take advantage of it.

Idaho lined up against Puget Sound University, and while the team was not in the best condition, they did credit to the college.

With a slight wind blowing from the south, Puget Sound won the toss and chose the south goal. At 2:45 the whistle blew and Decker kicked off to Curtis, who caught the ball on his 20 yard line and brought it back 20 yards. After an exchange of kicks Idaho succeeded in carrying the ball to P. S.'s 40-yd. line, where a 20-yd. line plunge and a 20-yd. end run by Thornton netted the first touchdown. Thornton missed goal, score, Idaho 5, P. S. 0. Idaho soon came back with another score, when Montgomery got away for a beautiful 40-yd. run through the whole Puget Sound team, followed by a forward pass to Curtis, which netted 25 yards and a 20-yd. line plunge by Fritz, Lundstrum carried the ball across the line, Thornton missed goal, score Idaho 10, P. S. 0. Curtis received a bad kick on the head during the scrimmage and was badly dazed for the next few plays. When tackled a little later he had to be taken out, Smith going to quarter in his place.

Second half: By an exchange of kicks Idaho succeeded in getting ball to Puget Sound's 35-yd. line, where a beautifully executed forward pass to Graves carried the ball over for a touchdown. Thornton kicked goal, score, Idaho 22, Puget Sound 0.

At this stage of the game Coach Grogan called out Jewell, Stokesbury, Montgomery, Lundstrum, Graves, Armstrong and Shagnon and sent in to replace them Cash Cook, Fluharty, Barrett, Bashor, Bennett, Stein, Perkins and Pritchard. From that point on there was considerable fumbling and kicking, although the Idaho squad of almost entirely second team men made far more ground than Puget Sound. When within 20 yards of P. S. goal

Smith carried the ball around the end for a touchdown and Thornton kicked goal; score, Idaho 28 P. S. 0. After advancing the ball again to the 20-yd. line, and with only three minutes to play Perkins fell back and placed a pretty drop kick squarely between the posts; score, Idaho 31, P. S. 0. The only thing to mar the game was a fluke which enabled Decker of Puget Sound to gain the ball on a fumble and run 60 yards through an open field for a touchdown and goal. Time was called, score, Idaho 31, P. S. 6.

Jimmie Thornton played a star game, getting away for two forty yard runs and making innumerable shorter gains besides great defensive work.

Montgomery's kicking was a feature, as he got away several 50-yd. punts and was not blocked once.

Rex Curtis played a brilliant game at running back punts, and had he not received a nasty kick on the head, necessitating his removal from the game, the score would have undoubtedly been much larger.

The substitutes who went in the second half played gamely and while unable to do much scoring on account of fumbles, they prevented Puget Sound from doing the same until the last half minute of play.

Next week the Varsity plays Whitman College and this game will probably be the hardest of the year not even excepting our old enemy, Pullman. Only indomitable spirit will win for the boys and this spirit can be attained if every student and faculty member and every one of their friends attend the game and cheer the Varsity on from start to finish. Come to the rally on Friday night on the athletic field.

Diogenes and Washington.

Diogenes in an airship, slowly descending;

"What can be that magnificent stone structure yonder? I must alight and discover whose name is written on such an unusual work of art." He draws nearer, but within a few feet of the ground, something goes wrong with the airship, and with a crash it falls to the earth. Stunned but unharmed, Diogenes picks himself cautiously from the debris, while he looks anxiously about as if hunting something. Finally his face lights up, and he eagerly pulls from beneath the wreck, a dilapidated lantern, its chimney gone, the tin dented and rusty.

"My beloved lantern," he cries, as he presses it tightly to his breast, and reverently bows in an attitude of prayerful thanksgiving. A voice causes him to turn with a startled look. Immediately behind him he discovers a fissure in the ground, caused no doubt, by the terrible jar of the falling machine, and a head topped by a white wig slowly emerging from below.

Washington, for he it is. "By thunder, what's happening up there? It broke the fine glass front to my casquet. Wonder if I can squeeze out of this hole? I'm pretty stiff lying so long, and this is hard work," he puffed out, his breath coming hard and fast. "Who in the Dickens are you?" staring meanwhile at Diogenes, "and what in Sam Hill is that contraption on the ground?"

Diogenes, with dignity: "That, my dear sir, is an airship—an aerial conveyance, as it were, by means of which one is enabled to travel through space at the maximum speed limit. And I, to go back to your first inquiry, am Diogenes, a profound cynic of Greece who has spent days, weeks, months, even years, in ceaseless journeyings in the vain endeavor to discover on this terraqueous planet a man who is conceded to be truthful by all who know him; a man who, though it cost him money, friends, everything, would still cling to what he knows to be right; in other words, a thoroly honest man. I have carried this lantern with its penetrating light the world over, but have still been unable to find that quality in a sufficient degree. But, sir, may I be allowed to inquire in a similar manner, with whom I have the extreme pleasure of speaking?"

Washington: "What! Do you mean to say you don't know what monument that is, rearing its massive head toward the sky? Why, any first year Prep could tell you that! That magnificent structure could be for no other than for George Washington, the Father of his country."

Diogenes: "Pardon; do pardon my stupidity, but I have not read the dailies for some little time, my eyesight being poor, and must have missed the article and it was, no doubt, in them all. I am very pleased to make your acquaintance, but sorry to have disturbed you."

Washington: "Not at all, not at all. I was perfectly willing to be stirring again. My bones get stiff with the cold and close confinement."

Diogenes: "Pardon me; but I must be going unless you can give me the clue to a man that with any possibility would answer to the description I gave you; for, as you see, my kind sir, in my rapid descent my lantern became somewhat mutilated, and I fear that the sacred bit of tin and wick will in a few hours or days be past its time of usefulness, then hope will be past and I shall have nothing for which to live."

Washington: "By Jove, you say you can't find a single fellow? That's hard luck."

Diogenes: "No, I have not been able to find the one who has such a high sense of honesty that he would own up to a sin if there were danger of its harming his reputation, if the world would turn against him at the knowledge of a crime. They all fail when reputation is at stake. I have hunted the world over while in it, I have searched along the river Styx after leaving it, only to be disappointed finally."

Washington: "So you have been down along the river Styx? Have you seen any of my friends?"

Diogenes: "My memory fails to recall any such. But I recognized one of mine. Do you remember Demosthenes?"

Washington: "What! the little fellow who always used to be picked out to speak pieces Friday afternoons when the School Board visited us?"

Diogenes:—
"Yes, that's the one. I discovered him one warm afternoon searching the banks of the river for pebbles to put in his mouth. He believes it increases his ability to speak plainly but it never appeared to me in that light."

Washington:—
"Did you see Caesar? How is his wife and children?"

Diogenes:—They are in perfect health and happy except that Mrs. Caesar suffers from the heat. But poor Caesar! He never recovered from the blow given him at the time of his marriage."

Washington:—
"What was that, I didn't hear about it."

Diogenes:—
"It was all a mistake, his marrying the woman he did. You remember the time he came to the Rhine on his march West. It was just before he crossed over that he was dictating at the same time two letters to his

Good Luck Social.

A Good Luck social will be given Friday evening by the B. Y. P. U. of the Grace Baptist church at the home of Mrs. Mabel Williams, 222 N. Washington street. Students will receive a cordial welcome.

A girls' debating society has been organized at the University of Oregon and the girls have received permission to debate with any other college with which they can arrange a contest. Washington girls were very enthusiastic along this line last year and will probably accept a challenge if given.

Arrangements are being made with W. S. C. for a contest in which five men from each cross country running club will take part. This will be something new in Idaho athletics, but we have some good men and it should be successful.

If Graham don't cut your hair we both lose.

stenographer, one to his housekeeper and the other to his sweetheart. Some how a mistake was made. He proposed to Bridget. He then felt in honor bound to marry her. His girl had scornfully refused him since the scolding meant for Bridget had gone to her, so it didn't make so much difference. But Caesar was never known to smile again."

Washington—

"How sad. It's all news to me."

Diogenes—

"It is now my turn to ask questions. Why were you not down there? Benedict Arnold was extremely angry about your absence. Abraham Lincoln mentioned something about being too good; especially concerning a certain incident connected with a tree, a cherry tree I believe. But that only made Benedict rave worse than before. He said you didn't deserve the honor given because of that deed. He called you a — but the words are more appropriate to that atmosphere than this. The last word however, was hypocrite. What was the matter with him?"

Washington—

"Well, I'll tell you all about it. I am ashamed of myself, heartily ashamed, and I'm ready to tell the world I was a hypocrite, that I did not deserve the honor bestowed upon me. It happened this way. Benjamin Franklin, Robert Fulton and Benedict came over to see me on my tenth birthday. We had been sailing some of Robert's ships on the creek behind the house until Benjamin got tired and went off to fly his kite. Then Robert made war on Benedict and myself, capturing all of our fleet. It wasn't fun anymore, so we two went over to the orchard and left the victor to glory in his spoil. There we came upon the hatchet father had given me that morning. Immediately Benedict dared me to cut down a certain tree, just a small one in the corner of the orchard. I never could stand a dare in those days. There were not many cherries on it anyhow so down it came with a few strokes of my weapon.

"Now you'll catch it," he called out derisively. He always gloated in getting someone into trouble when he was a child.

My father's stern countenance and a birch switch loomed up in my mind's eye. With a terribly scared and guilty feeling, I ducked my head and ran—ran, yes, but straight into my father's arms as he came from behind the hedge. He saw at a glance the hewn tree and my frightened face.

"Who cut down that tree?" he growled, while I shrank as far away as his arm and my coat tail would conveniently allow. "Tell me who did it?"

Benedict stood there exulting in my agony. It was no use. If I told a lie, he would let out on me and father always whipped harder for lies than anything else. I knew from sad experience. There was nothing to do but confess. I did it. The world applauded, but now I humbly confess."

Diogenes—

"Brave man thus to confess your sin. You will now win the deserved applause of every tribe and every nation, altho you ran the risk of losing it, your name will live forever and the deed of this day—through eternity. Take thou this wick and place it in the lamp of 'honesty' that it may shine forth to all people and through all ages."—Edith Keyes, '10.

Mace, Idaho, Oct. 15, 1909.

Dear Frank—

Congratulations on the first issue of the Argonaut. I have not received any other numbers so cannot judge of them. I am glad you are going to run an eight page sheet for I think it can and ought to be done with an enterprising business manager. I think the idea of having High School correspondents good. Of course we have no students in the University yet but believe me we are going to have if I can work it. I already have four or five talking about it and have sent for a number of catalogues. Please put Mace on the High School list, for this is a coming place. I am going to try to get a correspondent elected at the next literary society meeting. Possibly that is not what you meant by the article. If you want items from here tho' just let me know and I will see that we are represented. The next meeting will be held Friday night, October 22. Let me know before that and I will get you what you want.

By the help of Superintendent Hibbard of the Mace School I have started a night school for miners at Mace. It meets twice a week in the city fire hall and gives instruction in all the common branches. See articles in Spokesman. I have at last risen to the dignified position of principal of the Mace Night School for Muckers.

If any of this is interesting for Alumni notes, let her run. I know some of the trials of an editor when short of copy, but remember I am not trying to "but in" for cheap advertising. Use what you need. Let me hear of your troubles from time to time. Advise me in regard to the correspondent. I am, Sincerely, T. T. CROOKS.

Students' Assembly.

President MacLean being absent last Wednesday, the presentation of I's won in basket ball, track and baseball last year fell to the lot of Paul S. Savidge, president of the student body. Mr. Savidge gave a short explanation of what the Idaho I means and how it is won.

Three yell leaders were then elected: Soe Barrett, chief, and Vestal Hockett and Loren Brown, assistants.

Speeches were then made by Coach Grogan, Manager Smith and Gus Larson.

Yell Leader Hockett then came forward and the first yelling practice of the year was held.

The first issue of The Student Farmer for the year is out, and anyone wishing to procure instructive reading on current topics of interest to agriculturists, and fruit growers should not fail to see it. The articles are written by the instructors in the departments of the Agricultural College or by the students in that college, under the supervision of the instructors, so accuracy is assured to readers. In order to increase their circulation they are offering some expensive prizes to the students securing the most subscriptions before the Thanksgiving holidays.

We were glad to hear from Miss Sonna, former English teacher in the University, enclosing subscription price for The Argonaut. She also sent some articles of interest to the students, which will be published at an early date?

The first number of the Idaho Student Farmer has been published. It shows quite an improvement over last year, speaking well for the new editor and business manager, Lee Fluharty and Ray Lyman respectively.

"MOSCOW'S GREATEST STORE"

Alpha Delta Pi Reception.

On Saturday afternoon, October 16th, the Alpha Delta Pi gave their annual reception at their chapter house. The rooms were artistically decorated in autumn leaves and chrisanthemums, and were lighted by candles. Dainty refreshments, carrying out a color scheme of green and white, the sorority colors, were served in the dining room. Mrs. Little, Mrs. Truitt and Miss. Henrietta Moore assisted the young ladies in receiving.

Musical Notes:

Several of the University students are members of the St Mark's choir, thereby adding to the musical events of the town as well as helping Rev. Watsen in his very laudable work in building up his church.

Massages a specialty at Hegge'..

The story, "A Gold-Brick," which appeared in our last two issues, was written by A. P. Beckner, '11, and was not founded on facts. We neither hire athletes nor suspect Washington of doing so.

Prohibition in the University.

The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association has sent to the University, Mr. Taylor, one of its secretaries, who is working hard to get a number of students interested in the temperance question. This league recognizes the fact that many students are not firm in a stand against the liquor traffic and also that the student is to be the leader of the masses when he has completed his education.

From this standpoint a greater work can be done for reform by interesting students and causing them to take a definite stand than by working with the common mass of people.

The national league forms local leagues in the colleges and carries on about six kinds of work. Its most popular line of work is the oratorical contest. It conducts the only series of student oratorical contests that extend from Atlantic to Pacific, and valuable prizes are given to the winners of the successful contests. It is hoped that the league will flourish in Idaho.

Mrs. Thomas Heney, who has been visiting her daughter, Veronica Foley, '11, has returned to her home in Wallace.
