- - In Defense of Hell Week - -

Now that the first week of the new semester has seen the inauguration of the first "Hell Weeks" among fraternities on the campus a trickle of moans have come in already from sob sisters that such an inhuman, immature, unnecessary, unmanly tradition should be abolished forthwith.

Surely, let's abolish the Hell Week. Let's cut out one more vestige of the fun and glamour of college days. The reason, you mean to say, an old graduate looks back on those eventful, peppy years is the way Doc "So and So" explained the law of supply and demand, not the time that 'Old Grad' and Pete and Joe chased a tiger tomcat over a chicken roost much to the extreme consternation of university hens for that last, but vital one, live mousetrap? Now it is wrong, of course, to laugh uproariously and undignifiedly at the comical attempts of a pledge to handle a three foot soup spoon with hands bound by boxing gloves. Nor does this woebegone frosh have any fun when, in company with seven or eight fellow "sufferers;" they comb down town in the early hours of the day for a boy friend for the cook. Of course not . . . but it has been known for a pledge to volunteer to go through Hell Week the sec-

Hell Weeks have long since been modernized with educational plants and theories. Unfrequently is it a succession of "assume the angle" hazing. All organizations necessarily maintain some form of discipline. The halls never think of a Hell Week but enforce quiet hours and other regulations with a paddle. Try to get 15 or 20 young men in the prime of life to give up one whit of concession without some form of persuasion.

Health? More house presidents and advisers checked up on physical conditions of men during Hell Week than they ever do before or afterwards.

Gone is the Hulme fight, cast into oblivion is the rollicking Homecoming bonfire, and the green cap of the freshman flashes no more in the campus halls. It is modern to dis-

So let's make a clean sweep. Push out the malignant Hell Week. Let's make college what it should be-a knowledge factory. After all when we finish, we must settle down to the daily routine of a time clock in a business office or factory the rest of our lives; so we should get used to it early,
