club this year Navy department just told us to come and now that we are here we want to make friends with the students of the university and we think it a swell school.

It is true that there are a few boys who are rowdy, but when you have 500 men all in one place you are bound to have a few undesirables. You know that holds true right in your own school.

As to dating the girls, most of the sailors are lenesome and far from home, and they don't know anyone here. Naturally we like to dance and have fun just the same as anyone else and it's up to the girls who they go out with.

If a girl happens to go out with a sailor and finds him ungentlemanly, naturally she should tell him off, but she shouldn't judge all of us by just one, or a few. We know that the Navy hasn't too hot a reputation in the first place, but the girls should realize that we were civilians not long ago just like the fellows in their

it and that we are proud to be part of the university.

Thanks again. Sincerely yours, R. L. H., U.S.N.

Essay On Ice-Walkers

Jacqueline Everly .......

Some of that stuff which does, has been lately. We're refering to sleet, snow, and ice. The later seems to form on the campus paths and biways with disturbing frequency, leaving them a glassy glare. And likewise leaving the students who all too often find themselves reclining thereupon, with a look on their face that can be described by the same adjectives.

This week, as we stationed ourselves at a vantageous spot and watched student in the act of assuming the horizontal from the vertical—and vice versa—on a particularly slippery stretch, we observed several interesting types of ice walkers. Roughly, they could be segregated into three classes: 1. The daring type. 2. the walking-asusual type. 3. The cautious type.

The first type seemed to be the sort of person who had harbored aspirations as a skier yet couldn't quite make the grade. This type is responsible for the long run and whoo-oo-oosh . . . Some of them manage to stay on their feet and (therefore have nothing more wthan lampposts and mailboxes to worry about. The remainder are seldom able to get to the infirmary under their own

The walking-as-usual type never seem to learn. Each time they venture out upon the mirrored path, they assume an air of nonchalance which inclines one to believe they're out for a stroll on a spring day: They neither seek nor avoid the glassy spots so their chances of survival are about 50-50. They invariably have their hands in their pockets or their arms full of books. Their first question when they come to is, "What hit me?"

Type number three is, unfortunately, the minority. They carry along a haversack containing either ashes or sand. Upon encountering a slippery stretch, they either sprinkle as they go, go on their hands and knees, or don't go at all. Often one finds this type wading through the drifts to the side of the path. Finding cooperation in a campaign to stretch guide-ropes along the way unsuccessful, they usually content them-selves by sending "I told ya so" notes to infirmary inmates.

Communique Comment

Acceptance by the War Department of Archduke Otto of Hapsburg as the head of an Austrian legion to be recruited in the U.S. and rumors of secret British talks with agents of the German general staff, have caused alarm among liberal and working-class groups that are now working with the United Nations and against the Axis in the Occupied Zones of Europe. These fighters against Hitler's New Order may be able to understand American co-operation with Admiral Darlan as a temporary military necessity, but they are bewildered by U.S. and British moves that would seem to lead to the post-war establishment of an anti-democratic Hapsburg monarchy at Vienna or of a Junker oligarchy at Berlin.

As the war goes into its fourth year, class lines are being drawn more sharply on the European continent. The most bitter opposition to the German armies in the countries under Hitler's heel is to be found among the industrial workers. This class cannot forget the way in which German labor has been put into a straight-jacket by the Nazis. It sees in the defeat of the Axis the only hope the workers in the Reich and in Occupied Europe will regain what labor considers its fundamental rights. It does not look with foreboding on a Russian victory over Germany.

A large proportion of the middle class and of the peasants in such countries as France, Belgium, Holland and Norway seems to remain in a state of anxious bewilderment. On the one hand, these individuals resent domination of their national soil by the German invaders. On the other, they are haunted by the fear that the defeat of Hitler would mean widespread Russian influence in Europe and the establishment of leftist governments in the important capitals of the Continent. Goebbels' propaganda, with its insistence on the defense of Europe by the Nazis against Bolshevism, has struck a responsive chord among Frenchmen, Belgians, Dutchmen and Norwegians who have property or in-

At the top of the social scale in Occupied Europe, we find extensive collaboration with the Nazi authorities on the part of wealthy bankers, captains of industry, country gen-try and what is left of the old nobility. These Bourbons back up the German New Order because they see in permanent unification of Europe under Hitler the sure destruction of the menace of socialist and communist parties to their own security. The leaders of big business are also lured on by the hope of unlimited trade expansion and profits in a federation of European states with its capital at Berlin.
