gins to tell on many students. For freshmen, the big thrill of entering college is over. For others, the joy of renewing old friendships goes with returning to the old Alma Mater begins to fade.

The first splash of social events is over. The all-school functions seem to disappear for a few weekends. And to add to the general let-down, the weather becomes dull and dismal.

Jason has noticed that it is jusabout this time that many of us discover our academic standing is leaning slightly. We've neglected studying to take part in as much activity as possible.

booking solidly to the exclusion of the Connecticut unit. social life. Jason recommends that they come out and get around a little. Most authorities, including Idaho's officials, assert that the college students gets as much, or almost as much, out of a full social life as out of those books he carries around.

The regretable part of the getthe unbalanced man to woman ratio. Eight hundred women can hardly keep 1900 men well dated.

The women who are seniors this year don't feel very happy about it though, as they went through a year and a half with the ratio reversed, only more so.

University officials such as Dean Lattig have expressed more contribution of women. The opening of the Idaho club to the fair sex was a step in overcoming this abnormal set-up.
