Concern to avoid being hypocrites?

American youth on college campuses today share some rather startling characteristics which set them apart from past generations: less willingness to compromise, concern to avoid being hypocrites, an amazing ability to spot the phony, insincere and the pompous, a greater commitment to justice and service, the need to identify with ideals, goals or personalities.

Some of these were characteristics compiled by Daniel Yankelovich, market researcher-sociologist at the Institute of Life Insurance meeting held recently in New York. Like so many other generalizations on American youth, and particularly college students, this one has the pitfalls of typing the varied and complex body without attempting to substantiate the conclusionsyet some of the suggested characteristics do seem to have some validity.

The first generalization is that youth is iess willing to compromise. The immediate question is "compromise on what?" In this complex world of shifting values and goals, the word compromise often means very little. If most of the young society does not have fixed goals or unchangeable standards upon which to base their lives, then there is actually little to compromise. The problem is one of deciding what the goals or standards should be.

One of the desirable aspects of this generation is the trend toward liberal thinking. This does not mean liberal in the sense of politics, but in the sense of considering values, goals, ideas on their own merits, regardless of previous ideologies. It is a matter of weighing the debits with the credits.

Concern to avoid being hypocrites is another characteristic proposed for American youth. Certainly there are many exceptions to this so-called characteristic: the social climbing with designs on a queenship, pseudo-intellectuals, and many others. But there does seem to be a tendency to "be as you are" and relegate what others think to a less important role. Although many would disagree and say that "what others think" is a useful control by society, it's encouraging when students can do what they want without fear of being boycotted by society because the majority disagrees. If this were consistently true, then the public school teacher could drink when he wanted, the sincere intellectual could study on Friday night without being considered an odd ball, and the student who says what he thinks wouldn't shock anyone. Unfortunately some of the out-dated mores of our time will continue to take precedence over the more realistic standards and actions which are held by a minority, the non-hypocrites.

Closely related to this concern of avoiding hypocrisy is the amazing ability of college students to spot the phony, insincere and pompous individuals. One of the more difficult phonies to spot on campus today is that student who aiways has a fabulous time. Life for him is a butch of superlatives, coated with beer and smothered with unrelenting optimism about his final grades. At the other end of the scale is the individual whose concern for humanity seems to be more of a concern for protesting itself than an actual desire to seek change. For, him half of the fun is getting there—the protesting—not the desired change once it is achieved. Fortunately, few students fit into either of these two categories but instead fall somewhere in between.

A greater commitment to justice and service was also cited as one of the characteristics of the present generation. But the terms justice and service as used here perhaps are misleading. Students, if committed to justice, are committed to their interpretation of it-not necessarily those laws already in force. One such law is the drinking age; another "law" is women's hours on the U of I campus. Both have their origins in an era which applies little to today's life. The idea of service is usually not considered very strong in the minds of college youth today, except in cases of VISTA and the Peace Corps. Yet perhaps the most important concept of service for college students is that to friends, and sometimes organizations. Commitments to friends are probably much more important in the college society than the rest of America. Although these bonds may be more liable to breakage in this restless society, their intensity and number per persons are often overlooked. The last of the characteristics considered is the need to identify with ideals, goals or personalities. A much larger number of college students today is waving the banner for particular causes and organizations. But even more students idealize the actions and personalities of others.

Written On 7he Wind

By BOB STANFIELD

As you may recall from our last exciting installment, the Veterans of Future Wars had been formed in the spring of 1936 to provide benefits to the college youth who obviously were going to serve in a future war. The American Legion reacted swiftly for the defense of the country, the flag, and motherhood. Oscar W. Worthwine, a Boise attorney and national vicecommander of the American Legion, wrote Shull Arms a 1,200-word letter in which he cautioned Idaho university students not to take too lightly their responsibilities to their country. He hinted that the Future Vets might be encouraging Communists who want to overthrow the United States government. Lester F. Albert, state adjutant of the American Legion, said, "I feel that whoever advocates that sort of propaganda for the minds of youth of the country instills not only disrespect for the American Legion but disrespect and disregard for all forms of orderly constituted government." The commander of the Veterans of Future Wars, Shull Arms, wrote the following letter to the editor of the Arg in reply to the American Legion attacks.

To the Editor:

On Sunday last a group of slightly more than 70 boys — many of whom did not know each other either by sight or name - assembled. This in response to a single announcement that a meeting of all those interested in the formation of an organization to be known as "The Veterans of Future Wars" would be held designated time and place. The meeting occurred as scheduled and has caused a great deal of comment.

The inspiration for the meeting was found in an Associated Press dispatch in the Spokesman-Review of Monday, March 16, stating that an organization of the same name had been formed at Princeton, New Jersey. What the ideals of this organization were, we had no means of knowing; from the tone of the news article the whole procedure was a joke -- although a rather

The organization here at Moscow has no connection with the University of Idaho except that some, perhaps most, of the members are at the present time attending the University. I have no authority to speak for the organization here, except, inasmuch as the group signified their intention that I be "post commander", with duties not designated and power equally vague. I believe, however, that the following is a fair statement of the state of mind of most of the young men who were present at that meet-

When I was in grammar school, I was taught that the "Great War" of 1914-18 was the last war, the war to end all wars. I was taught that henceforth the world would settle its differences by a more sane means. I was taught that Congress was a group of super men sitting in lofty deliberation upon the problems of our country. In short, I was taught that this was the best of all possible worlds, or would be as soon as the city council passed an anti-smoke ordinance and prohibition was

Now, though my mind may not be mature, I can see that further war is inevitable, starting possibly in Europe, possibly in the East; starting possibly in some as yet unnoted place over a yet unknown quarrel. I have discovered, although I was never quite as naive as Tom Sawyer, that our Congress is composed of men and women not very different from my mother the Police Court, the correct and father, or the butcher, or the man next door; possibly a bit wiser, and perhaps a bit more overworked, but still human,

And so I am afraid.

At present, that is the status of this organization, Apparently we have touched upon a subject very close to the emotions views provide little necessity for of a great number of people. In conclusion, may I say that I have no desire to die for my case and this is a probation country, I have no desire to die at all. Life is too good, violation case. I hope that I can serve my country better by living for it than by dying for it.

Student Claims JC, Arg Are Incompetent

Dear Jason:

In the Friday, April 22, 1966 as well as attempt to prevent Kathy Field edition of the Idaho Argonaut are this students expulsion due to Sharon K. Bungum Connie Tribble two stories that display a dread- the circumstances. ful illustration of inaccuracy and incompetence. The news story on page 4 is entitled, "JC Hears Cheating Case: Frosh May Be Suspended." There follows an extensive discussion of the Judisome two months ago concerning a cheating incident by a freshman. Dear Jason: The student was placed on probation at that time could possible set the precedent since this case is not a cheating case? This case arose due to an assault charge in the city of Moscow. The student must again appear before the Judicial Council not because he again attempted to cheat, but rather because he is charged with violating his probationary status.

The reporter's obligation should have been one of learning the correct charge against the person this time and to have discussed the matters pertinent to this case. They would have included the correct police charge, the disposition of the matter by time, and place of the hearing.

The editorial on page 2 is very human. I have learned that this is not the best of all worlds. entitled, "Punishment For Cheatbation violation

This case also illustrates a serious weakness in the area of student disciplinary matters. Whereas one may view with these cases before students, one must also view with alarm the attempt to do so without extensive

If as reported the assault charge was a correct one then the Dean's position suggests no need to go before the Judicial Council since probation is an automatic dismissal. One would have hoped that the Judicial Council would have considered whether a violation took place, how the court decided the case, whether additional punishment is warranted and whether the university's policy of concerning itself with off-campus matters was still appropriate.

Redford's suggestion to seek justice by fitting the punishment to the crime runs contrary to the recent trends in criminology, psychology and sociology The attempt now is to provide universal protections through procedure but to fit the punishment to the individual needs of the

Coaches Call First Vandal Grid Intrasquad Scrimmage 'Good'

The rookies had their day Saturday as the University of Idaho staged its first intra-squad scrimmage of the spring training season.

The "Whites" shutout the "Blacks" 18-0 as the third and fourth units dominated the opening battle. The Idaho staff had its first two units in Black and the rest of the squad in white.

Quarterback Woody Deckard piloted the white to its first touchdown on a sustained drive with Spokane's Denny McCanna scoring the touchdown. Key plays of the drive were a 21-yard pass from Deckard to wingback Darrell Danielson and a 14-yard run by McCanna.

Steve Garman, who started Saturday's fray as the number four quarterback, piloted the black to its second tally. Garman, a sophomore from Caldwell, and Darryl Ailor, a sophomore wingback from Lewiston carried the load during the 60-yard drive. Ailor gained 34 yards including the final four for the score.

The black came right back with their third touchdown as rookie quarterback Dick Nelson from Pocatello fired a pair of passes to LaVerl Pratt, veteran linebacker, who was playing tight end. Nelson went the last six himself to close out the day's scoring.

The scrimmage was under the direction of the Idaho coaching assistants as head mentor Steve Musseau watched from his car parked on the rim of the stadium. Musseau is recovering from an April 1 heart attack. "You Want to Hit"

After the workout line coach Walt Anderson told the squad he thought it looked pretty good. "All we want to know right now," he said, "is if you want to Irackmen hit. We've got this session down on film and we'll know whether you are hitters or not.

"We're not interested in technique at this stage, we just want to find out how many football players we have."
