Our People In Boise

There he was. The ogre of the University and the boogey man of the budget. Only he wasn't so bad and during our onehour meeting he didn't snort fire once. In fact, he was very nice and tried to explain his stand on the budget and his hopes for the state.

Gov. Don Samuelson came across as a sincere, conscientious man during his interview Monday with the University students representing the Idaho Center for Education in Politics. They were in Boise observing the Legislature as part of their studies in state government and Jason was along observing them observe.

The Governor explained that this year's budget is based on a 12 per cent increase from the budget of the preceding biennium. this percentage increase is how he arrived at the $152.1 million figure.

Government Like Business

His ideal seems to be that the government should be run like a business. Economics professors and experts might take issue with this approach, but that is the way the government will be run for four years, according to Samuelson's present approach.

He is basing his present budget on a stationary percentage increase. The amount that results from this increase becomes the total budget and the agencies can fight for their portions. This year the budget is not being built from the bottom up based on each agency's need. The governor hopes that this can be done in the future.

As he explained it, every agency was given a 12 per cent increase. Then those needing less than this amount were dropped back to the amount they needed and the excess funds were pooled and distributed to the agencies needing more than a 12 per cent increase.

Samuelson did not seem to feel that this is the best way to go about making budgets, but felt that it is the only one under the circumstances. "Idaho has been playing the numbers game when it comes to making out budgets," he said. By the numbers game, he explained that he meant that the agencies have been fighting each biennium for a percentage of the total budget without giving the budget makers substantial information on which to base the appropriations.

The Idaho Code does not require very specific information, Budget Director James Defenbach told us.

No "Witch Hunter"

The governor hopes to look into all the state agencies during the coming biennium and check for waste and duplication. He said that he was definitely no "witch hunter" but was looking for each agency's "true and honest" needs.

"It's Where the Action Is!"

Samuelson emphasized that all the money that could be saved for the State must be. He pointed out that Idaho is one of, the few states with property tax, income tax and sales tax. "There is no where else to go for revenue so we must do the best with what we have.

The governor also discussed hopes he had for consolidating some of the state agencies.

Several times Samuelson reiterated that in making out the budget he was "not being vindictive." He said that if certain budgets get cut, it would not be because of any personal animosity.

Friendliness, Sincerity

One got the feeling that the governor is trying very hard to do what is best for the state. One may disagree violently with his methods and theories but cannot doubt his sincerety. He was definitely on the defensive while speaking to us but was doing his best to get across his ideas on state government. He answered questions openly and was most cooperative.

Perfect Hosts

Speaking of cooperative, so were Sen. Harold Lough and Rep. Harold Snow from Moscow. Both were perfect hosts to the student group and pulled strings to get us seats on the floor of both the Senate and · House. They also got us into meetings of the House committees on education and state affairs.

For that matter all the legislators we met were friendly and cooperative. Rep. George Brocke of Kendrick invited us up to the Legislative Council to critique his proposed election laws bill. It specified that the primaries have a ballot just like the general election ballot. The voter would be allowed to cross party lines and vote for his choice for each office.

New Jokes

All was not sober contemplation of the legislators while we were in Boise. Several picked up a whole new repertoire of jokes. Just ask Leo Jeffres, Phi Delt. He'll be happy to recite them all for you. Other sources are Jim Tegan, Lee Davis and Ginny Eiden.

Thanks Whipper

Jason would like to thank the brothers of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and especially the Wily Whipper and Squirrel for making the long trip to Boise more bearable. Without their kindness Sunday morning, the afternoon would have been long and dreary.

Evaluation Of Disticting Shows Advantages, Defects The Menagerie

Districting for election of executive board members is going to bring student government down to the students. Even the little freshmen might know who the E-Board members are when this plan goes into effect—for they will be electing them. — And if the students dont' know who they are, you can bet they won't be elected.

For the plan limits voters to casting ballots only for candidates within their district. The districts include only four or five living groups and only one candidate will be elected from each district. This means if more than one living group has a qualified and interested andidate—the battle will be on!

But the battle will take place within each district's convention and will not concern any other portion of campus where the candidate may not be as well known.

Districting may also arouse more interest in student government itself by being more representative to area. Off-campus students will have a representative who will be held directly responsible to them for any improvements they desire. If they may want action on improved housing standards, for example, they will not have to go to the Town Men's Association or the Off-Campus Housing Committee--but strictly to their E-Board member to get action from the board. Other district representatives will be responsible for similar problems.

But the greatest accomplishment of the concept is that of fore-thought on the part of this year's executive board. The plan is a step in providing for the future when the campus grows larger, student politics get stronger and bloc voting gets more powerful.

With the districting plan, bloc voting will be held to a minimum within the independent divisions. The Greek section of the campus will not have to worry about being out-weighed by the large independent bloc. Thus, districting will help them to keep their representation.

ceive proportionate representation according to their numbers. Thus more opportunity in student government positions will be created for them and it may follow that more interest and action will grow from their segment of the student body.

Finally, the districting plan creates the framework for a fair system of electing campus representation.

the entire complex area and two Greek men within just one living group. One can hardly say this is proportional representation. Granted, the plan has many complications. The number of conventions will be clumsy. How political parties will function is yet to be seen. The question of how the vice president and president will be elected is a problem, the succession of disqualified or ineligible members is another. There is also a possibility of having a district without an interested or qualified candidate.

In theory, at least, there may seem to be a multitude of "what if's," but they can be ironed out in practical use. We should give the plan a trial run and if it doesn't work with the desired efficiency, there is a stipulation which puts it up before review and evaluation each year. That will provide the chance to either revise it or renew it, according to its worth. —Е. H. O.

And the independent areas on campus will be pleased to find they will re-

Last column was devoted to a discussion of responsibility and the student, with authority being the criterion for responsibility.

Now, let us apply the same criterion to the Hill. At the top of the heap is the president, who is ap-

> Over the years the Board of Regents has compiled a "Handbook of Poli." cies and Procedures" which outlines the broadest of regulations and provides for general policy lines. These policies have, in general, resulted from recommendations by the Hill.

The president, then, is the one who is charged with carrying out these broad policies. His precise methods of operations are largely his own choice.

Then there are two vice-presidents: one is charged vith administering our multimillion dollar budget; (pro vided we have a multimillion dollar budget this year) the other is in charge of academic matters. Parallel to these two areas and equally large an operation is the Office of Student Affairs, headed by the Dean of Students. Since, of course, the University is not a military organization, there are many crossings of the chain of command. Areas that are not completely academic, financial, or student are handled by a myriad of committees, boards, subcommittees, and informal agreements among people. Within the three major areas: academic, financial and student there are also many things handled either through a committee or informally. The three divisions make recommendations to the Board of Regents through the office of the president. Recommendations by the Hill are rarely, if ever, two historic cases, the Board of Regents has never initiated an action on their own. In other words, the Board of Regents serves as a rubber stamp for the administrative policies of the Hill. This whole setup is a paradox if authority and re-denied by the Board of Regents. Except for one or sponsibility are to be investigated. On the surface, responsibility for a certain decision or policy may lie in the hands of a committee, while it fact one man or his office had the authority. The Board of Regents has been blamed at one time or another for almost every University policy, while in fact they only sign the papers.

Our administrators, then, take it upon themselves to assert authority, while shirking responsibility by hiding behind the skirts of either a committee or the Board of Regents.

There is, of course, another side to the coin. No one should hold our administrators responsible for matters over which they have no control.

One among these is the teaching and testing methods of the various instructors. Spacing and types of examinations are the authority (and responsibility) of the instructors involved.

Another is the final examination schedule, which is decided by the Interim Committee.

Probably most important is the amount of money given to the University. This is decided by the state egislature and the Hill must do the best it can with what it is given. This restriction of authority (and re-Jonsibility) has far-reaching effects on decisions made in every part of the University.

Now, let's sum up this discussion of responsibility authority and our university administrators.

The authority granted our administrators (or the authority they have assumed) is much greater than they would have the students believe. They can and should be held responsible for almost every phase of Notable exceptions are individual teaching methods, examination scheduling, and the size of the budget.

The basketball team won its 13th ball game Tuesday night in Hawaii. That guarantees them no less than an even season and with five games remaining it is very likely that they will have their first winning season in four years. For a man who has held the position of coach for only one year, Coach Wayne Anderson has done a remarkable job. The last coach tried in vain to have a winning season. Of course, the veterans have been doing and Bob Noice have been playing excellent ball. Phil Waddell has been doing his share of the work as has stronger all of the time and should prove to be a real asset to the team.

What about that ski team? For a group that has only two scholarships they have been doing real well. Last weekend they put the cap on a good season by placing second in the Big Sky Conference Championtage, with 96 field goals on 199 ships. Idaho has always been strong in cross-country and this year was no exception. They placed one, two, three, and they won that event. With a little more co- points on one play with 34 sec- Walter Ritte missed two free selves with 62 goals out of 90 attempts operation and help from the Athletic Department they should be able to put Idaho on the skiing map in short dals to a 69-66 win over the 67-66 until Pipkin added his last order. Congratulations, guys, on a job well done.
