

Athletic vote nears

Just exactly what will be accomplished by the advisory ballot on athletics scheduled for Oct. 27 is still relatively undetermined.

Wording of the ballot could be crucial in deciding whether one sport is de-emphasized or whether the entire athletics program is crippled.

"I hope the wording of the ballot allows students to express themselves rather than guiding them through the nature of the questions," said Dr. Ernest W. Hartung, University of Idaho president.

If the students vote no on athletics in general, the program will be "severely crippled," according to Dr. Hartung.

"We have no way to move with appropriated funds to take up the slack," he said. "I'm convinced that, even with a completed stadium and the football team turning to gold and winning their next nine games, the gate receipts couldn't take up the slack."

If the ballot is preferential in nature, then students might decide to de-emphasize one sport and the one sport people are talking about is football.

However, there could be serious problems in cutting the budget of football only, according to Ed Knecht, director of athletics.

Student fees come to athletics rather than to football each semester, Knecht explained, and the money is dumped into a general fund for all sports.

"It is difficult to say where the student money goes," Knecht said. "The student money wouldn't run the other sports as they are now."

Each student pays $15 a year, amounting to $84,270 of the $451,405 total athletic budget, he explained.

"Gate receipts for football are essential in conducting the athletic program," Knecht claims. "In the last three years that we had a home stadium the expenditures versus the gate receipts ran: 1966—$143,800, $228,415.40; 1967—$125,650, $199,999.29; 1968—$153,400, $303,534.87."

"In these years we built our athletic reserve."

Of the minor sports, basketball is the only one producing revenue, Knecht says, and the gate receipts from last year ($27,904.49) added to the amount of student fees still wouldn't cover a deficit—caused by deleting football.

Operational budgets for the other sports are:

- Basketball—$57,400
- Baseball—$12,300
- Track and cross country—$14,450
- Wrestling—$4,550
- Tennis, golf, skiing, swimming—$18,750

"What I'm trying to say here is that the opportunity to conduct a normal program in our own stadium, I believe, will bring us back to the time when football will more than pull its own weight and will contribute to the financial programs of other sports," Knecht said.

"It is important for kids to realize that they are contributing to the operating budget the same $15 that was established in 1954."

Other monies for athletics comes from the Vandal Boosters, state allocations, gate receipts and that athletic reserve fund.

If, in spite of Knecht's protests, the students vote down either just football or football and all other sports, some serious financial considerations will have to be made.

For example, football games have been scheduled with other schools into the 1980's. If, by next year, the athletic board of control decides to limit the football budget and the Regents concur, financial remuneration will have to be made to schools scheduled in the immediate future.

"If we've promised them a guaranteed $4,000 then we would probably have to pay the $4,000," Dr. Hartung said.

The more distant games would probably be less of a bother to get out of, according to Gene Slade, assistant business manager.

Another area which has been under consideration is the money students pay each year for the stadium and other athletic facilities.

The $75 that each student pays for athletic facilities has been pledged far into the future and there is no way for the University to backtrack on the money, remarked Knecht.

The money, which is not used for athletic operating expenses, will be paid by students who are not even born yet, according to Slade.

"It's not just these 6,000 students who are paying for the stadium, it's maybe 60,000 future students," he commented.

GEORGE WASHINGTON WITH HIS ONE DOLLAR bills is back on the ballot when students go to the polls to vote on the future of athletic spending. Legend has it that George was something of a jock himself.

Nightline continues services

"The basic thing we're looking for is someone who realizes he can't help somebody else. The big task is to be a good listener."

This is the summation of the most important qualifications for a Nightline volunteer, according to one of the original instigators of the service and one of its Board of Directors, Rev. Hank Bremmer.

Bremmer commented that the volunteer has to be able to listen to what the caller says, feel the caller's problem and suggest possible alternatives. He emphasized that what they're looking for is a warm, open person.

Bremmer commented on some of the provisions that a volunteer agrees to when he signs an application. One such is the strict confidentiality of all records and communication while working for Nightline due to the nature of much of such information. Another point he stressed was that volunteers are expected to attend training sessions in order to know how to handle calls that may be of a very serious nature.

Bremmer especially emphasized the agreement that a volunteer be on time for a Nightline shift, commenting that only when the service is in constant operation does it serve its purpose properly.

The Nightline training program is a nine month program starting with four general sessions. The opening session deals with general techniques and mechanics. This utilizes various devices, including role playing, to tell the new volunteer how to handle various situations a Nightline telephonist is expected to encounter. This session handles the psychology of talking to a particularly disturbed person and what small things like tone of voice or a pause at the wrong time can mean.

The second training session will deal with the individual's identification of himself. Bremmer entitled it "Who am I" and said that its purpose would be to find out who the individual really is.

Establishing empathy with the caller would be the title of the third session and the volunteer would find out how better to let the caller know that the telephonist really cares about his problem. The fourth general session will involve a panel that includes as members a law enforcement officer, an attorney, a doctor and someone from Nightline. This would explore the relation of each to the overall function of Nightline.

Additional training would provide specialized training on specific areas of Nightline concern, such as drugs, abortion and suicide.

One procedure that Nightline has been developing is the use of small groups, or cells. These cells meet for training together and work as a group to carry out specific research projects to inform the individuals of the cell on specific subjects of Nightline concern. This training further helps the volunteer to become more expert in various areas.

Nightline started last November 10 and has been in nightly operation since that time, including operation this summer. With many university students leaving for the summer Nightline felt that the number of calls would fall off. However, according to Bremmer, this didn't happen. The calls came from many places outside Moscow. Calls, collect when necessary, come into Nightline from Troy, Deary, Lewiston, Clarkston, Grangeville and Spokane.

Ideally, Nightline would like to have telephonists working no more than a single shift every two weeks. However with many of the volunteers from the university gone, many of the remaining telephonists were working as many as three or four shifts in a row.

The percentage of Nightline volunteers who are university students has remained around 70 to 80 during the school year but it is hoped this year that a larger base of non-university help may be obtained and that that percentage could lower to 50 per cent sometime this fall.

Some have raised the question of the validity of Nightline asking an applicant various personal questions on the application. These questions include whether the applicant has faced a crisis in the past year; whether he has called Nightline for help; whether he, or a friend or relative, has attempted suicide and if he is in therapy or has been within the preceding three years. However Bremmer commented that any Nightline call could be one in which a life and death situation could exist. Therefore Nightline can't risk putting a psychotic on a shift as a telephonist.

Bremmer emphasized the importance of the volunteer to the Nightline program. "The volunteer is what makes Nightline possible. We cannot stress enough the importance of the Nightline volunteer."

Visitation hours set

Recent voting on visitation privileges by campus living groups reveal that maximum visitation will be in effect in six of the nine womens residence halls.

Through the use of secret balloting and a 75 per cent approval by group members, men and womens halls, fraternities and sororities determine their own hours within the maximum limit devised by students and faculty and approved by the Board of Regents last April.

The maximum hours for guests to remain in the company of their hosts are: Monday through Thursday: Noon to 11 p.m.; Friday and Saturday: Noon to 1 a.m.; Sunday: Noon to midnight.

Among the six womens halls who have maximum visitation rights are Campbell, Forney, Hays, Houston, Olesen and McCoy.

French Hall will have maximum hours on Mondays through Saturdays, with Sundays schedule to begin at 1 p.m. rather than 12 noon and continue till midnight.

Carter Hall's hours are as follows: Sunday noon until 11:30 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays, noon until 10:30 and Fridays and Saturdays noon until 12:30 a.m.

Visitation rights at Ethel Steel House will be Mondays through Thursday 1 p.m. to 10 p.m., Friday and Saturday 1 p.m. to 12 midnight, and Sundays 1 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Of the four sororities who turned in their voting results Alpha Chi Omega exists as the only group to have any form of visitation. Theirs will be an adjusted form which will only be employed on weekends. Fridays and Saturdays the hours are from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. and on Sundays 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Alpha Gamma Delta, Pi Beta Phi and Delta Gamma voted against visitation on the grounds that the rooms were too small and that there were enough facilities already open to men, said Jean Langenes, U of I assistant dean of women.

California court overturns residency law for students

By Linda Fullmer

Eighteen to 20 year olds who have hailed their recent recognition as full-righted citizens of the United States have been confronted with state laws which prohibit them from voting in local elections while residing in college towns.

Idaho was no exception with a ruling passed down by the attorney generals office which required students to swear that they intend to live in a city permanently before they are allowed to vote.

In a recent lawsuit brought before the California courts, justices decided in favor of college students in a decision which may have an effect on the student vote in other states. The court declared that new voters between the ages of 18 and 20 must be treated like all other voters for the purposes of determining what their voting residence is.

The court ruled unanimously in favor of the plaintiffs-Common Cause, a national citizens lobby headed by John W. Gardner, former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and eight students. Gardner noted of the decision in a news release from Common Cause.

"It marks the first judicial statement since the ratification of the 26th amendment that our newly enfranchised citizens are to be judged by the same standards as all voters."

According to the release, the Supreme Court of California, basing its decision on both the Federal Constitution and on state law, ruled that refusal by registrars to register younger voters "would clearly frustrate youthful willingness to accomplish change at the local level through the political system."

The California state law required that unmarried 18-20 year olds must register and vote where their parents reside. The court made it clear in its Aug. 27 decision that a person's eligibility to vote as a resident could not be invalidated because of age or occupational status.

"Rights won," comments the court, "at the cost of so much individual and societal suffering may not and shall not be curtailed on the basis of hoary fictions that these men and women are children tied to residential apron strings. Respondents refusal to treat petitioners as adults for voting purposes violates the letter and spirit of the 26th opinion."

Contrary to the opinion of Moscow city officials, who implied that students would have no interest or knowledge of local issues, the Supreme Court justices felt making students go to their hometowns to vote would have people voting on issues that they were isolated from most of the time.

The court stated in its decision that "Fears of the way minors may vote or of their impermanency in the community may not be used to justify special presumptions — conclusive or otherwise — that they are not bona fide residents of the community in which they live."

The court rejected the ruling made by the California state Attorney General which contended that unmarried students were incapable of having a residence of their own. The court pointed out that under California law a minor child may become fully emancipated and may acquire a residence of his own. Therefore, the court reasoned that considering the 26th amendment minors must be considered emancipated for all purposes related to voting.

has commented, "We hope," she says, "that this landmark decision will have significant impact on other court suits and the thinking of state and local officials concerning the all-important matter of where young people may register to vote."

COMMUNICATIONS BOARD MEMBERS ponder the points made by both sides concerning a complaint brought against the Argonaut and Bruce Leary by John Burlison. They decided the complaint which contended that Leary's column was injurious to the Catholic and LDS churches, should be directed to the editor.

Complaint against paper to be directed to editor

Communications Board ruled that a complaint made by John Burlison against the Argonaut should be directed to the editor in the form of a letter to the editor or a column, in a special meeting Wednesday.

Burlison's protest was over an article printed in the Sept. 14 issue of the paper by Bruce Leary. He had requested an apology be printed.

"We decided," comments Greg Heitman, "that the board was not the body to grant such a request. It should be up to the editor."

Burlison had filed the complaint on grounds that the article was injurious to

Department sets seminar series on environment

The Department of Chemistry at the University of Idaho is presenting a series of environmental seminars during first semester, set for 7:30 p.m. on Thursday evenings. These will be once every two weeks in Physical Science 125.

The first of the five informal seminars, all of which are open to the public, was yesterday. Others will be Oct. 7, when Dr. J. Willett, assistant professor of chemistry, speaks on "Nematodes and the Environment"; Oct. 21, David Maxfield, S.O.S. project leader, "Student Originated Studies of Heavy Metal Pollution in the Coeur d'Alene River Delta, Summer 1971" and Dr. C. Wai, assistant professor of chemistry, "Techniques of Trace Metal Analysis"; Nov. 4, Dr. R. Porter, associate professor of chemistry, "Sewage and Quantum Chemistry"; and Nov. 18, Dr. R. Williams, professor of geology, "Sources of and Recommendations on Pollution in the Coeur d'Alene River Valley".

two religions on campus, Catholic and LDS.

"Though the article was well written I minded the implications made about two religious groups," he said. "I don't object to the printing, but not in the Argonaut with student funds."

Leary retorted that he was not going to apologize, noting that the LDS Institute's successful attempt to have a beer license denied to the Perch pertained to students since drinking was a student activity. His article then belonged in the student newspaper, Leary reasoned.

Irresponsible journalism

Roger Koopman, a member of the board, felt Leary should be censored for irresponsible journalism.

"The Argonaut," commented Koopman, "needs certain editorial standards. Things like Leary's column should not be included in a student newspaper."

Leary refuted Koopman by pointing out that Koopman was allowed to express his opinion in the form of a column although the entire student body probably didn't agree with what Koopman may have printed.

Opinion column

"My article," declared Leary, "was an opinion column. I have an equal right to my opinion."

It was noted that the Argonaut had not received any complaints from students other than Burlison's.

Plans proposed for intersession courses

Plans for winter intersession courses, which could go into effect this January, were presented at a recent Faculty Council meeting.

Paul Kaus, summer school director and coordinator of continuing education, said that the availability of three weeks between semesters at Christmas allows the opportunity for courses on campus during that period. Such a schedule, which includes travel-study possibilities, is already in effect at Boise State College and many private schools.

Under this new program, continuing students would have the option to return for concentrated, three credit courses in special areas of interest. Grades and credits would carry over or be considered under extension procedures, depending on the operation recommended by the curriculum committee of Faculty Council.

Directed study

"Many courses would be directed study or the research type of study" Kaus said. "Some of them might be new, innovative courses if they were approved by the faculty."

Traditional general studies courses, meeting five days a week for three class hours, would also be offered.

Financial support for the winter session was outlined in the report by Kaus, although board and room costs have not yet been figured. There are the possibilities of charging $18 a credit for all students or considering the intersession program as part of the academic year with little or no additional compensation to participating faculty.

Not impossible

Concentrated courses for this January are not impossible, Kaus said. The Faculty Council, general faculty, and Board of Regents must still select and authorize one plan. Departments will then have to prepare the courses to be offered.

Although students will not vote on the possibility of winter session, they will have an indirect voice by their participation in the three week classes and selection of courses, he said.

"It is essential that students' needs be considered and we're always open to suggestions," Kaus said.

Wives to present movies for children

Hoppity Goes To Town and The Three Lives of Tomasina are among the films to be shown Saturday afternoon during the school year for Moscow children, said Mrs. Susan Fales, Chairman of the Associated Student Wives, which is sponsoring the program.

Two series of six films will be shown on the first and third Saturday of each month. Season tickets for each series sell at $1 for both children and adults. Children under the age of four will not be admitted to a movie without an adult.

The movies to be shown in Series A are: Ichabod and Mr. Toad, Alakazam the Great, Hoppity Goes to Town, Pinocchio in Outer Space, Melody Time, and The Three Lives of Thomasina. Series B films, showing on the 3rd Saturdays, are: The Three Caballeroes, Gay Purr-ee, Rudolf, the Red-Nosed Reindeer along with The Sage of Windwagon Smith, Make Mine Music, Arabian Nights, and The Hunting Instinct.

Ticket sales will begin this Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. near the Information Desk at the SUB. Remaining tickets will be sold at the door on October 2.

Guest Column

A southerner looks at the feud

This guest column was sent to the Idaho Argonaut by Ben Plastino, executive and political editor of the Idaho Falls Post-Register. It appeared Wednesday in that paper.

By Ben J. Plastino
Post-Register Staff Writer

The attitude and catcalls emanating during and after the football game between the University of Idaho and Boise State College last Sept. 11 at Boise underlines why higher education in Idaho faces such rough sledding for the next few years.

To many Boiseans it appeared the football contest was a test of academic standards between the two institutions of higher learning, rather than a display of brawn among a handful of athletes.

Boise State College was fired up that night and there is little question it was the better of the two teams as it vanquished the comparatively listless University of Idaho Vandals 42-14. BSC, as was stated at a joint BSC-U of I booster luncheon that same noon, wanted to upset its more ancient and well known adversary.

Where is the university

Many Boiseans, and this even includes some University of Idaho graduates, remarked that this game, among other things, demonstrated that Boise should be the seat of the state's leading university.

Many Idahoans, including this writer who is a graduate of the U of I, agree Boise should have been the seat of the University of Idaho, which, incidentally, was founded even before Idaho became a state. But it wasn't, unfortunately, and it never will be, and that's that.

If the remarks tossed about during and after the game were those of a few hotheads and overly zealous Boiseans it wouldn't amount to much. However, this attitude is pretty well reflected among the vast citizenry of Idaho's capital city, including Ada's legislative contingent.

The prowess of football teams, of course, doesn't reflect the greatness of any college or university. One has only to look at such institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the remainder of the so-called Ivy colleges, which play little better brand of ball than Idaho, or Chicago or George Washington universities, which don't even have football teams.

In fact, U of I president Ernest Hartung has indicated some de-emphasis on Vandal football, feeling perhaps that youths go to college to attain a well rounded education. A university and college is judged by its alumni and the calibre the U of I turns out is a mark of distinction.

This writer, at the time the Idaho Legislature by a narrow margin agreed to admit BSC to a status of higher education in the state system some four years ago, predicted it would become a political headache for years to come.

At that time, the Boise legislature assured their colleagues they would not ask for significant amounts of state funds, only that they wanted the distinction of higher education status. Of course, this proved only so much talk as the Ada lawmakers soon demanded money far above what they had promised.

This writer agrees Boise should have a university but only when the population and tax base permit it without detracting from the two older institutions, U of I and Idaho State University at Pocatello, not at present. This could come when the state approaches the million population mark from its present 700,000.

In other states

One only has to look to Washington State, Oregon and Montana which have only two major state universities each,

"One only has to look at such institutions as Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the remainder of the so-called Ivy colleges, which play little better brand of ball than Idaho..."

and Wyoming where there is one. Utah, with a population in excess of a million, has three.

The attitude of the Boise citizenry, reflected by the Boise legislators, now has drawn antagonism from many other sections of the state, particularly East Idaho and North Idaho which have joined together frequently in high education legislative matters.

Boise Valley including Ada and Canyon counties, still has only some 150,000 population as compared with 550,000 in the remainder of the state. The Ada and Canyon legislative delegation, even with the 1970 reapportionment, only has nine of the 35 legislative districts, or 27 of the 105 state senators and state representatives, six in Ada and three in Canyon-Owyhee. But there is doubt that Canyon would stand solid with Ada on many legislative matters.

Why bother with NSA?

Mary Ruth Mann spent $342 of student money to save us students $30 in registration fees at the NSA Convention! We all know that she feels this was a valuable experience. What many of us don't know is what NSA is. Just what is NSA?

organization to truthfully represent all students. Especially by means of a National Student Lobby!

Mary Ruth Mann (MR) has stated that she does not like the NSA organization and has called it "contradictory," "alienated from minority groups," "controlled by a small Eastern clique," and so on. The NSA leadership does not want referendums on major issues by the students for then these dictators of policy would lose their control and not be able to dictate what the students think!

Since NSA does not offer any services that are not already offered free to the students, is relatively unresponsive to student opinion and cannot possibly represent all the diverse student opinions, why should the University of Idaho join NSA?

It is impossible to give one good reason! Unless, of course, you consider the disruption of campuses (and NSA Conventions), closing down universities, and free trips to NSA Conventions to be good reasons. I can't see 6,000 students benefitting from this.

If you cannot see any benefit from contributing or working with Jerry Rubin, Tom Hayden, Eldridge Cleaver, et al. (from the NSA Speakers Bureau), then work within your organization or individually for the U of I to withdraw from our spur-of-the-moment trial membership and complete abandonment on the NSA!

Leary not satirical

To the Editor:

Having read Leary's article in the 14 September 1971 issue of the Arg, I would like to comment that I wasn't especially impressed if it was supposed to be satire.

I attended a good part of his hearing before the Communications Board on the evening of the 22nd. There I heard both sides of the story, where he was asked for an apology. I was aware of much nit-picking before it was concluded.

Essentially, after everyone had spoken his piece, the plaintiff had established only that the article was in poor taste and that it had offended those whom he represented. The defense could but claim it was just satire.

I appreciate good satire. However, my dictionary describes satire: a literary work holding up human vices and folly to ridicule or scorn by wit, irony, or sarcasm to expose and discredit them.

I cannot identify with any especially outstanding sarcasm, wit, or irony. I do recognize discredit but what have his targets done to be exposed? And I would hesitate to name it a literary work.

I ask you this: Would you be willing to print an article by this same author, written in the same manner, burlesquing our college, its president, or to bring it closer to home, your minister? How about your friends, relatives, or whatever?

I recognize in Bruce an erudite talent that probably exceeds much which has been turned out of this mill. Perhaps it has been channeled in the wrong direction. In my estimation much of his writing has been but an example of gross waste.

I say this not in a judgemental manner. As a tenderfoot journalist I would be as objective as my abilities enable me. I can't help but feel that his competence could be better appreciated were he to vary his theme somewhat. One is led to believe that his whole line of thinking lies along the line of sex and anti-God. It would be nice to see him expand his conception of life.

Respectfully yours,

If you don't like it. . .

Editor, the Argonaut:

In response to your Sept. 21 editorial, Mr. Foley, I would like to make a few comments. Not only is our football team at stake, but possibly our school too. Let me explain.

Your idea of dissolving the football program and focusing our student fees on other sports, such as soccer, seems sensible to the unknawledged reader. But did you know before printing your editorial, Mr. Foley, that your program would completely eliminate all Vandal Booster money which totals over $300,000?

And I'm sure that I need not remind you that it is these same Vandal Boosters that contribute huge sums of money to promote high scholastic achievement. By eliminating our football program, we will also eliminate the Vandal Booster financial contributions which would lead to the foreseen destruction of the University of Idaho.

As far as the money received from the state, without a football team the Idaho Congress would give us a small portion of money for our Athletic fund or maybe none at all. I will take into account that these facts were unknown to you because any simpleton can see that one needs more than $80,000 — which is the total of our student fees that goes for football — to finance all of those other sports. (i.e. soccer, skiing, water polo, cross country, bowling, tennis, swimming, golf and track.)

For my concluding remarks... I wish, Mr. Foley, that you along with the rest of the Idaho student body should either support your school and its team, whether it be football or soccer or anything else, and demonstrate a little school pride or else transfer to BSC!

Elks: racist or not?

To the Arg.

I talked to an Elk the other day; he wasn't racist. He was a veteran, a father, a Republican, but by God he wasn't a racist — he told me so.

Maybe barring someone from joining your club because of his skin color isn't being racist. I mean just because the Elks Club in Moscow voted to keep a racist clause in their constitution...well you know, maybe voting like a racist doesn't mean you're a racist.

And besides, racism is unAmerican; we all know Elks aren't unAmerican. Maybe racism isn't racism and whatever this psuedo-racism is is very Amerikan. You know what I mean?

If I don't make sense ask an Elk to explain it, I bet some of your best friends are Elks.

Preaching or practice

Editor, the Argonaut:

Based upon the Argonaut's recent lead articles on public relations, I judge that the public image of the University must be of some concern to you. I wonder whether you and other recent Argonaut editors have been conscious of your own potential for making a positive contribution to a good image.

In particular it has seemed to me that significant accomplishments by students and faculty here are rarely given coverage in the Argonaut. Stories about such academic and professional activity are commonly issued by the University publications office (at least this is true of chemistry stories), but only home town papers tend to use them. The Argonaut almost never does.

At the moment I'm particularly conscious of this omission, because last week I called the Argonaut office to report that Prof. Jean'ne M. Shreeve of our chemistry faculty had just been announced at a national meeting of the American Chemical Society as winner of the Garvan Medal — a $2000 prize for significant contributions to chemistry. The girl at your desk expressed considerable interest in my report, but as usual nothing has appeared in the Argonaut.

A story was issued by the University's publications office about the national recognition of Dr. Shreeve, and it was used in several local papers, which probably aren't read by students from other sections of the state. Based on past experience, the story probably was neglected by papers elsewhere in Idaho.

Thus our students have not learned of a significant accomplishment by an internationally known member of our faculty. Were they aware of such accomplishments students could do a great deal in their home towns to encourage proper appreciation of the University, but they are denied the opportunity.

The last sentence in Miss Urbahn's feature story today says that "word-of-mouth" will have to be relied on to bring students to the U of I. But there will be conspicuous lack of significant words quoted unless the Argonaut helps to distribute them on our campus.

Stop Dworshak Dam

Editor, the Argonaut:

Dear Sir:

The article, "Moscowans Ask Andrus to halt Dworshak Filling", in the Daily Idahoian, Friday, September 10, 1971, brings forward several facts which should be of interest to anyone concerned with the economics of the environment in Idaho.

Eight major factors point out the devious methods used to get the green light for such a structure: (1) Elimination of the Clearwater River as a medium for transporting logs, (2) Recreation benefits of a free flowing stream, (3) Recreation value of the land that would be flooded, (4) Destruction of the free flowing stream as a fishery, (5) Cost of solving nitrogen supersaturation, (6) Elimination of winter range for big game animals, (7) Over-evaluation of flood control benefits, and (8) Assumptions regarding marketability of power produced.

If these items had been considered accurately by the Corps of Engineers, their conclusion would undoubtedly have been that the Dworshak project would not be economically feasible.

I agree that an unfilled reservoir could be a valuable drawing card for Idaho — if Idaho cares enough for its natural state to keep it from being flooded. As the article states, "such a monument to the environment would be unprecedented in the history of mankind", and the economic return from it could be considerable.

I urge all students and other citizens of this area to write Governor Andrus and your congressmen asking that an injunction be granted delaying the filling of the Dworshak Reservoir until a more thorough cost-benefit analysis can be conducted by an independent group (or groups) of experts. This action would not hinder the major purpose of the dam, as neither flood-control nor power are critical in the immediate future. Take 5 and do it.

Weekend learning

Editor, the Argonaut:

I wish to thank Jack Gilligan for being an educator who is concerned with making education meaningful.

Jack conducted a class in psychology of education 421, in which the total semester class hours were crammed into one weekend. Whatever doubts were felt about such an abbreviated course were dispelled Monday morning when we 60 students had to return to the traditional lecture, note-taking, regurgitation-come-test-time (forget five minutes after) type classes (which, unfortunately, are prevalent at Idaho.)

Due to the degree of interaction between the participants, the students who I've talked with feel they not only have learned more from that weekend class but were inspired to continue their studies in education and psychology. (The class voted to meet again for a feedback session in October.)

More classes could have this degree of interaction and success and make education meaningful but the "teachers" are either complacent and don't teach for the students benefit, or are afraid of failure and shouldn't have a position which may be emulated.

Jack, you don't believe that there is such a thing as a "teacher" — if that's the case, you're one hell of a human being who can turn people on to learn — and that's 180 degrees from education today.

Thanks again, Jack,

Wobblies alive, well and working

By Linda Fullmer

The prevailing silence of leftist student organizations during the last few months may be unnerving to those who equate inactivity with complacent submission. It seems the roar of 1968 has diminished to the sound of an x on a ballot. One organization on the left, however, which has been experiencing a lull in activities since 1950 but is unconcerned about it is the International Workers of the World, a collection of industrial laborers and students.

In 1905 IWW began an attempt to organize the 75 per cent of the nation's workers who were not unionized. The number included unskilled native workers, immigrants and migrant laborers who had the AFL and the CIO would not accept.

The workers, according to Jerry Calvert of the political science department at Washington State University, were not organized around traditional union structure with separate unions for each craft such as carpentry or construction. The laborers instead were collectivized as a whole.

Wobblies, as they are nicknamed, did not initially seek to increase workers' wages or improve working conditions. Instead the movement was one to increase the membership of the group.

"The idea was," explains Calvert, "that as IWW would gain more and more numbers it would culminate with the worker's ability to control the means of production and liberate themselves by sheer numbers alone."

The IWW, says Calvert, was to be a vehicle for revolutionary change aimed at dissolving the state. The state and party politics cannot be a place for change since the source of power for parties comes from the capitalistic class whose interest is in preserving present conditions.

He explained that eventually the mass of workers would destroy the government, freeing themselves from the authoritarian rule of class politics. IWW doctrine is in agreement with Marxian thought, at least in its attitude towards classes.

"We agree," Calvert continued, "that a person's thinking is a product of his class environment though we may disassociate it with a doctrine and call it a product of a person's learning experience."

Basically a rivalry has always existed between Marxists and IWW thinkers. The main difference in the thinking of the two groups lies in their separate concepts of the nature of the revolutionary takeover. While Marx specifies that a dictatorship of the workers be established after the labor takeover to direct the transition to a communist state, the IWW doctrine rejects the dictatorship as simply a new party coming to power and does not see it as eventually dissolving the state.

"Marx claimed that a revolutionary party," Calvert states, "is to seize the state. The state doesn't disappear thereby. Once power is given to certain people they will avoid anything to give it up."

Calvert explained that an IWW revolution would result not in the workers being ruled by a smaller class of themselves or revolutionary bourgeois but the union, inclusive of all members, would govern itself. The unpatterned structure evolving from such a revolution, according to Calvert, would be equalitarian rather than authoritarian in social relationships as well as economical. The lack of differences in treatment would negate the necessity for state protection of class interests.

"A Ph.D. would not be paid anymore than a grounds keeper. Who contributes more is not always clear. A bread truck driver takes food to people. What does a professor do?"

On the basis of this doctrine IWW members sought to increase the union's size. Between 1905 and 1918 the Wobblies were at the peak of their activity, according to Calvert. During World War I, however, the group, lost its strength because of government repression.

"The war was an excuse," says Calvert, "to crush any competitive labor it could call unpatriotic."

After the war, according to Calvert, most of the IWW top and second level leaders were in Federal prison because of violation of the war-time Espionage Act which censored any criticism of the government. The union lost many of its members to the Communist party while others fled to Russia.

Calvert explains, "The communists could offer the members something IWW couldn't—a successful socialist revolution."

Then until 1950, according to Calvert's analysis, Wobblies acted as a labor union engaging in strikes and negotiations. In Cleveland, Calvert notes, IWW workers controlled 100 per cent of the metal works factory. The union however, was slowed down again when the Taft-Hartly act was introduced.

Under the act labor unions had to sign a non-Communist oath. IWW refused to sign and lost the support of the National Labor Relations Board.

"It wasn't that IWW was pro-Communist," clarifies Calvert, "the oath was not signed because it was contrary to the union's fundamental beliefs to have to take an oath."

After 1950, Calvert said, the IWW ceased to be deeply involved in labor relations.

"This became especially true," he commented, "after Attorney General Tom Clark put us on his list of subversives." Calvert claims that Clark never replied to a request made by IWW leadership as to why IWW was considered subversive.

In 1968 membership was opened to students. According to Calvert the union needed to be revitalized with new blood. Earlier in the century, in Calvert's description, the typical IWW member was a single, male under 25, transient engaged in mining, logging, or farming. These members gave the union its original stronghold in the west.

Today 75 per cent, according to Calvert's figures, of IWW membership is less than 30 years old and the remaining 25 per cent is mostly older than 70. Wobbly branches are established in most major cities of the country with Chicago as its main headquarters. A branch also exists at Pullman which has, according to Calvert, 25 members, half of which are students. Anyone is now eligible to join as long as he is not involved in capitalistic practices.

"People join," thinks Calvert, "because we offer a nonauthoritarian alternative to Marxism and Leninism now popular. We have no compulsive requirements that members must follow dogmatically."

Calvert said that leftist parties such as the Progressive Labor Party, which seeks to organize workers under Maoists principles, are inflexible and fail to compromise when the need to arises.

"Questions of ideology are relative," comments Calvert.

People are also attracted to the history of the party and its heroic nature, he claims.

Within the last few years the IWW has been involved in a few minor labor disputes and in some student activity. Several collectives and cooperatives, organizing under the IWW have sprung up in the last few years, according to Calvert, including IWW print shops and several underground newspapers.

The union has disengaged its activities from national affairs, says Calvert, and concentrates on local issues.

"People must organize under their own interests. The New Left is involved in other people's affairs and for most people it is too abstract. People should organize as producers."

"We should organize on the basis of where we work," he commented earlier, "after all we spend most of our lives working."

The Pullman Branch of International Workers is presently, says Calvert, just a common meeting ground for similar ideology, though he states that members are distributing information about the union.

"We're not optimistic about spreading our ideology, he concluded, though Calvert said he would like to see student control of universities.

"We have no desire to motivate students. We try to avoid the organizational structure of other leftist associations."

Incinerator proposed to replace landfill

By Linda Fullmer

After a year of heated argument, Moscow city council has agreed to a temporary sanitary landfill site. The agreement to lease property located between Moscow and Troy for a year came Tuesday night after four other permanent sites had been considered by the council. Purchase of a permanent location for the landfill has been delayed by a court injunction stopping the council from taking final action.

A suit, filed by two adjacent neighbors of Don Morton, who owns the prospective property, objects to a city expenditure of $84,000 for the purchase. Under state law a city cannot spend over $2500 without a vote from municipal residence. The city planned to finance the purchase with revenue from garbage collection routes but the funds have not been directly budgeted.

According to Dr. Robert Lottman of the engineering department, who was a member of the council's ad hoc committee on solid waste disposal, Moscow couldn't wait for the end of the year long injunction because of the city's immediate need to find a new landfill site that would meet State Health Board standards. The temporary site will be leased then for $2400 for a period of one year, says Lottman, to meet the immediate needs of the city.

The forced selection of a temporary rather than permanent site has, in the view of Edith Partridge, a resident of Moscow, provided additional time to convince Moscow city officials and university personnel that a better way is to be found for garbage disposal. Mrs. Partridge submitted a proposal to the council recommending that an incinerator system be built in joint cooperation with the University of Idaho.

The incinerator, proposed by Zurn Industries of Pennsylvania, according to Mrs. Partridge, will not only eliminate the garbage disposal problem but reduce air and water pollution as well as provide a source of heat for the university. Zurn Industries is the only large coop in the nation devoted entirely to environmental engineering. The company conducts research in areas of noise pollution, water and air pollution.

The incinerator, designed by Zurn engineers, could be built at the edge of the university, said Mrs. Partridge, and provide heat for future expansion of the university. A heat of 1700 degrees F. would have to be maintained in the unit which is designed to burn 4,000 pounds of refuse an hour with 2% residue at the most according to Dr. Arthur Partridge of the forestry department. Smoke normally emitted from an incinerator is cleaned with a water bath after the refuse has been burned and is emitted as steam. The excess steam could be used for heating the university, according to Mrs. Partridge.

THE SMOKE THAT COMES FROM the heating plant could be a thing of the past if the plan proposed by Edith Partridge is put into effect. However, it does not appear that it will ever happen.

The city council rejected Mrs. Partridge's plan, mainly on grounds of cost. The unit would cost about $200,000 to implement. To run, the operation would require about $32,000 a year including $18,000 for labor and $5000 for propane gas to run it.

"We've checked with consulting engineers in Illinois and Ohio," says Lottman, "and the decision is that such a program is bad news. When you put all the costs together it is not an economical operation."

Mrs. Partridge, who contends that the information the city council received was third hand rather than coming directly from engineers in New Hampshire, holds that in the long run such a plant would be more economical and more beneficial to the environment.

"People around here," comments her husband, "are out of the mainstream of life. If they don't wake up soon it will be too late for the environment."

"Maybe when incinerators become popular," concludes Lottman, "we could afford to explore the possibility. Now we're not even sure the air pollution standards will not change and the thing won't be any good."

"Maybe in ten years," said Paul Mann. Professor Mann is a member of city council.

BARBER CHAIRS as well as barbers are needing retraining and new employment due to the long-hair revolution.

Where have all the barbers gone

By Dennis Carlson

According to Moscow barbers, the trend toward longer hair has hampered the success of their profession.

Long hair in the past two years has ironically shaved and cut two Moscow barbershops out of existence.

Art Gillian, a Moscow barber said, "Long hair has very definitely hurt the business and in several cases it has helped shut down the operation of two establishments."

Mandel Erickson, a barber for over thirty years, said there has been a decline in the number of shops and barbers in Moscow. According to Erickson there are now five shops and eight barbers compared to seven shops and eleven barbers that were operating two years ago.

Moscow barbers indicate that the frequency of haircuts among college and prep students which account for the large proportion of the business, has dropped greatly over the last year and a half.

Carl Shirt, one of the remaining eight barbers, said, "It used to be that a student would get a haircut every three or four weeks, but now it's more like three or four months."

Bob Cummings, owner of the Sportsman's Barbershop said, "When shops do get the long hair business they often don't cater to them and consequently these shops are hurt even more."

Clarence Johnson, who operates a one-man shop, believes the decline in business can also be attributed to the fact that people with long hair are seeking styling rather than the conventional haircut.

"These people with long hair don't mind paying $7.25 for styling done by a professional in Spokane," Johnson said.

Most barbers believe that long hair will be part of the Moscow scene for at least several years, but it appears that the "crowning-glory" profession must adapt.

"I think long hair will remain for a couple of years and barbers are going to have to learn how to cut it or face more financial loss," Johnson said.

Entertainment goes big time

By Barbara Sinclair

Musical variety — Blood, Sweat, and Tears, Glenn Yarbrough, and Bread — will highlight campus entertainment in the Moscow-Pullman area this fall.

First on the scene will be the hard jazz-rock group Blood, Sweat, and Tears, appearing Oct. 1 at Bohler gymnasium at WSU.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. concert are being sold in the music listening room of the CUB in Pullman. There are still reserve seats available for $4.50, with general admission prices at $3.50.

The softer sounds of Glenn Yarbrough will kick off Idaho's homecoming activities Oct. 2 with a two hour concert in the Memorial gymnasium.

Billed as "Glenn Yarbrough Weekend," this Moscow concert will be one stop on the star's last US tour before retirement. He played once before at Idaho in 1969 for a crowd of 1500.

Tickets for the Glenn Yarbrough show will go on sale tomorrow at the SUB information desk with prices at $2 for students and $2.50 for the rest of the community. All seats will be general admission with plans for the gymnasium arrangement to feature a central stage surrounded by the audience on the floor on all four sides.

The last big name appearance this semester will be Bread, playing at Washington State's homecoming Oct. 29. Tickets for that concert have not yet been made available.

More entertainment is also scheduled for the Idaho campus soon. Randy Luce, chairman of the ASUI bands committee, has announced plans for an outdoor concert by Cheyenne Sept. 30.

The free open-air show by the Los Angeles group will be staged in front of Theophilus Tower from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday afternoon, if weather permits. In case of rain, the concert will be held in the SUB cafeteria.

The Chess Nut

Paul Morphy is one of the legendary weirdoes of chess. His career was brief but brilliant, and he retired from public play in 1860, after defeating every prominent chess master in the world who would play him. He was 23 when he retired but he still continued to write intermittent chess columns, commenting on the games that he thought were interesting.

This is a game played between Macdonnel and Labourdonnais in London, 1834. Macdonnel offers a King's Gambit, and Labourdonnais greedily accepts. The comments on the game are Morphy's.

Casts announced for university plays

The cast for the University of Idaho drama department production of "You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running," scheduled to run Oct. 7-9 at the University Auditorium, has been announced by Edmund M. Chavez, department head and director for the play.

The hit comedy which ran almost two full years on Broadway was written by Robert Anderson, author of "Tea and Sympathy." Because the play is composed of four individual vignettes offering glimpses of contemporary American life, all 13 roles in the play are major characters.

Appearing in the "Shock of Recognition" are Jeffery Stoddard, freshman drama major from Boise, as the playwright Jack Barnstable; Linda Lincoln, freshman drama major from Twin Falls, as the secretary Dorothy; Val Molkenbuhr III, junior drama major from Lewiston, as Richard Pawling, an actor; and Ron Cuff, sophomore business management major from Belmont, Calif., as Herb Miller, the producer.

Appearing in "The Footsteps of Doves" are Edward D. Britt, sophomore drama major from Twin Falls, as the furniture salesman; Charlotte Riersgard, a senior English major from Spokane, as the wife Harriet; Paul Gussenhoven, freshman drama major from Lewiston, as the husband George; and Terri Parker, junior drama major from Shelby, Mont., as the divorcee Jill.

Appearing in "I'll Be Home for Christmas" are Charles R. Spurgeon, senior drama-English major from Bonners Ferry, as the husband Chuck; Janna McGee, senior drama major from Boise, as the wife Edith; and Connie Brown, freshman drama major from Boise, as the daughter Clarice.

Appearing in "I'm Herbert" are Brent Wagner, senior music-drama major from Moscow, as the old husband Herbert; and Jan Downing, junior drama major from San Francisco, Calif., as the old wife Muriel.

The production will be one of the highlights of the 1971 Homecoming Weekend. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Food trip

Most foods should not be overcooked if they are going to taste right—brown rice is one of them. To cook delectable brown rice you need some oil (preferably sesame because it is most nutritious), a pan with a tight-fitting lid (so that steam won't be lost while cooking), an accurate way of timing the cooking process, water, and some organic long or short grain brown rice—I usually measure the rice and water with my index finger although I suppose a measuring cup does as good a job—The proper measure is 2 parts water to 1 part rice, so I usually put some rice in the pan and stick my finger in it to see if it would be enough, then wash it (organic rice is usually very clean and washing it is probably a superfluous action), and fill the pan until the water comes up twice as high on my finger as the rice does—Swish the rice around with a fork and put the pan on a burner turned to high that has been pre-heated—Pour about 2 tablespoons of vegetable oil in the rice and water—as soon as it boils swish it with the fork again and then put on the tight-fitting lid—Let it boil for 5 minutes taking into consideration the heat retained in the pan and the burner after you turn the burner down (I usually turn it down to medium for about three minutes and then to the finishing temperature)—Then set the burner on the lowest possible temperature and let the rice steam for 40 minutes—Take it off exactly when it is done and I will guarantee you good fluffy rice—Rice is fantastic with butter and soy sauce—Another thing that makes rice exceptionally tasty is stir-fried vegetables—Take assorted vegetables and chop them into bite-sized pieces—Keep them in separate piles—broccoli, sunflower seeds, onions, carrots, celery, mushrooms, sprouts, various nuts are all good cooked this way, together or separately—Take a large skillet or frying pan and put in it enough vegetable oil (preferably sesame), to cover the bottom well (you'll want about an eighth of an inch on the bottom)—Heat on medium high heat or on high heat until it pops when you spit in it—then drop in the vegetables that take the longest to cook and stir constantly while frying with a wooden spoon or paddle—Then after about five minutes drop in the vegetables that take the next longest to cook and continue stirring constantly for about five minutes—Last, but definitely not least, drop in the short termers (mushrooms, sprouts, sunflower seeds or nuts) and cook stirring constantly for about another five minutes—Now the vegetables should all be very bright, crispy, and ready to eat—Far-out—Enjoy—

Members needed for Chess Club

The University of Idaho Chess Club now has money to buy chess sets and clocks, according to Larry R. Sinclair, club member.

This will enable the club to play tournaments both locally and regionally, but more members are needed in order to hold elections, he said. Officers for the chess club must be elected before the sets and clocks can be ordered. Meetings are every Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Blue Room of the SUB for anyone who wants to join. Money is also available to send two club members to Seattle to participate in the ACUI regional tournament. Last year the tournament was at Idaho.

Area farmers burn fields

Now that the harvesting is complete and the crops are stored away it appears it is time to begin preparing the fields for next year's events.

Much of the stubble and straw from this year's growth of wheat is being burned off so that plowing will be made easier, according to Dick Benjamin, fire warden for the Kendrick Fire Protection District. Heavy rain this spring resulted in the crop having much more stem than usual, he said. Ordinarily this would mean extra labor to prepare the ground for another crop.

This stubble needs to be disposed of and it appears easier and quicker to burn it off than to work it back into the soil. Certainly there is less time consumed, says Frank Schoffler, Idaho state woodland forester.

Farmers aware

"But," he added, "in my opinion, most conscientious farmers are aware that sound soil conservation practices frown on burning, except in extreme conditions."

Fire destroys the mulch that, ordinarily, serves as a builder of rich loam, he said.

Schoffler explained that when left to be plowed under, the stubble and straw act as a means of preventing erosion besides adding to the texture of the ground.

Few cases

"Only in the case of the heavy draws and wet bottom land where thistles have come on strong or the straw is exceptionally long is a burn really needed," said Schoffler. "I really see no reason for a great deal of the burning that has been done."

There have been more permits issued this year for burning fields off than ever before according to Benjamin. Because of this year's heavy growth, he estimates that it will require from two to three times the labor to prepare the fields than is ordinarily used.

Save effort

"The fields are burned mostly to save effort," he said. "I know several farmers who will take the time to put this straw back into the soil. It is to their advantage because I have seen many burned-off fields that looked like so much paved road come spring."

Each year sees more and more of the good rich top soil being carried off as a result of this convenience farming, according to Schoffler.

"In the short run it is possibly profitable for the farmer to burn his fields but looking at it by way of the long haul, it just doesn't have it," he said. He said even though there are some cases where there is no alternative but to touch off a few acres, to burn whole fields shows poor judgement.

THE SMOKE FLOATS ALONG as area farmers burn the stubble off their fields. While this does nothing to aid keeping the air pure, neither does it help in conserving the soil, according to one area forester. He said that erosion sets in and washes away the top soil easier in fields which have been burned.

ASUI Senate defeats wage bill, approves Yarbrough contract

The ASUI senate voted no on a bill setting salaries and wages of ASUI personnel and irregular help at the level established by the 1971-72 operating budget. This action was taken at the Tuesday night meeting.

"We should go along in spirit with the wage-prize freeze," commented Roy Eiguren in voting no.

ASUI attorney general, Hy Forgeron, said that action taken would probably cause little hassle either way, although he concurred with Eiguren.

"After all, no one is living on these salaries," he said.

Robie Russell objected, saying that since the budget was approved before July 1, the wages shouldn't be affected.

"Therefore, everyone should get their raise," he said.

Motion failed

However, the motion failed with Chris Smith voting yes and Todd Eberhard and Bill Fitzgerald abstaining.

The senate in other action, passed a resolution requesting that President Hartung enjoin the athletic department from entering into further contractual relationships which bind beyond 1976 until the final report of the Athletic Study Commission is submitted.

Yarbrough to appear

After some discussion, the senate approved the Glenn Yarbrough contract. Cost will be $2,000 and students will be charged.

Action on the Gem contract bill was delayed until the next meeting. Communications board director, Greg Heitman, commented that a poll of student opinion in this area should have been included in registration packets, but a mixup between the communications board and the registrar's office had occurred.

It was decided to reconsider the bill providing for the acceptance of a contract for the printing of the Argonaut and send it to communications board to obtain their opinion.

McCreary speaks

Frank McCreary, Director of University Relations appeared and asked the senate to consider buying an IBM composer unit since he feels that future printing contracts could be divided and bids might be submitted separately for printing and composing.

McCreary says that since the University already is renting the magnetic selectric typewriter unit, the additional rent for the composer unit could possibly realize a considerable savings in publications.

The senate also unanimously passed a bill establishing a National Affairs Advisory Committee. The purpose of the committee is to coordinate and distribute information concerning state and national issues which affect the ASUI.

Free university begins classes

A free university has been formed here in Moscow. It has just gotten underway this week in its job of organizing classes and class space around town.

According to one of the organizers, the free university is very loosely put together so that the students can decide what they want to do.

"The way we're going to run it is that anybody that wants can go to the Talisman house at 615 W. Sixth and tell the people there what they are interested in studying and how they would like to study it. If enough interest is shown in a given area, we'll contact the people and find a place to hold meetings. We'll also find an instructor if one is needed," he said.

Two course ideas that have emerged so far are a sewing class for men and an auto mechanics course primarily for women but really for anyone who would like to take it.

"The sewing class is for sure as is the mechanics class. We just need people who want to take them."

The university will also hold academic courses if there is an interest.

New Vandal lineup for Colorado State

Four major changes in the offensive line are scheduled for the Idaho Vandals as they wind up their practice sessions for this week.

Coach Don Robbins moved three new players into starting roles, converted one player from tackle to guard on the offensive line and announced a new quarterback for the Idaho-Colorado State game scheduled for Joe Albi Stadium at

Robbins talks Ohio State

"We are two-thirds home in our game of football at Idaho, as we played our defensive game well, our kicking game was fine, but our offense was just horrible," Don Robbins, Idaho head football coach said this week.

"The defense played a whale of a game against one of the finest offensive lines in the country at Iowa State. Bill Cady, senior tackle from St. Maries, Idaho, was out-standing and Rick Simmons, junior from Spokane, Wash., had one of his better games. The defense secondary was a 200 per cent improvement over last week and the youngsters played as well as any secondary effort I have seen since I have been at Idaho," Robbins added.

Coach Robbins started four new defensive backs against the Iowa State Cyclones and the efforts of Kelly Courage and Randy Hall at corner back and Steve Hunter and Ross Nelson at safety were praised by the Idaho staff.

Nelson, a 6'2" sophomore from Boise, and Steve Hunter, 6'2" junior from Prosser, Wash., were named as co-winners of the Vandal Award. Nelson had a total of six tackles and two pass interceptions, while Hunter had 10 tackles, one interception and also punted 10 times for a 38.3 yard average. Cady took the defensive award for his outstanding play and Andy Kupp, senior from Sunnyside, Wash., was named the offensive player of the week.

The Vandals now point to the "home" game in Spokane tomorrow when they meet the Colorado State Rams. Colorado State, which also went down to defeat last Saturday, will bring one of the finest runners in the WAC conference to town in Larry McCutcheon, 210-pound halfback. The Rams also have a highly touted passing attack with Scott Simmons and Jim Erickson at quarterback. Greg Stemrick, a 6-foot sophomore, also will be tough to cover as he had an outstanding game last week at split-end.

Robbins said that this week will see much pressure put on the offensive side of the game. "We haven't run the ball as well as some high school teams so far this year and we have the running backs who could be playing for most any team in the country. We are going to make some changes in our front line and see if we can come up with the right combination to break the runners loose. If we can make our running game come through it certainly will improve our passing attack," Robbins said.

Rich Kushlan, senior guard, received a concussion in the Iowa State game and will be out for at least two weeks. Robert Lee Williams, starting fullback, also picked up a hip-pointer and sat out most of the Cyclone game. Williams is expected to be back for Saturday's contest.

Spokane tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. under the lights.

Andy Kupp, senior tackle, was moved to weak guard and Larry Warren, a 225-pound tackle, gets the starting nod at the weak tackle position on the left side of the Vandal offensive line. Dave Crnich, who has been playing behind Rich Kushlan at weak guard, was moved to strong guard and Larry Bosma, a 260-pound tackle, will be starting at strong tackle.

"We hope to generate some blocking power in the "trenches" and open a few holes for our talented running backs," Coach Robbins announced.

Rick Seefried, sophomore quarterback from Central Valley high school in Spokane, has been tapped as the starting quarterback. Seefried moved the Vandals well in the fourth period against the strong Iowa State team and has completed 11 passes out of 25 in his first action this year. Seefried also is a quick runner and can be counted upon for some scrambling action if necessary.

The Vandals have been playing some top-notch defense, their kicking game is well above par but the offense has yet to generate anything that resembles a sustained drive in two games. "With a senior club with veterans with size and great ability, they must start producing at once in the manner that they finished the season last year," Robbins added.

The Vandals will be meeting the Rams in the second game of a series. The Colorado team won the first game 31-21 two years ago at Fort Collins.

"We must put the clamp on the talented Larry McCutcheon and stop any passing attack in order to take the win in this game. McCutcheon is a runner much like our own Fred Riley, who may break a game open at any time," Robbins added.

The Vandals will bus to Coeur d'Alene for their pre-game meal on Saturday and then bus to Spokane, planning to arrive just before the game.

U of I harriers start season

Coach Ed Troxel of the Idaho cross-country team plans to send a full contingent of harriers to the Whitworth Invitational Cross-Country Meet at Spokane on Saturday.

Troxel said that he plans to enter a varsity team in the open division and a frosh team in the novice division at the meet. It will be the first outing of the year for the Vandal harriers.

"This will be a good test of our team as the course will be over the four-mile route of various surfaces and I'm sure there will be some great competition from the other colleges in this meet," Troxel said.

Jim Hatcher, junior, leads the veterans in this meet. Hatcher gained honors a week ago after winning the Spokane Open Marathon and seems to be in top condition.

Bob Hamilton, senior, will be backing up Hatcher and these two fine runners will have plenty of help from Jim Ferguson, David Gladstone, and Norm Snodgrass.

Troxel plans to have Mark Novak, top prospect from San Diego, Calif., lead the frosh team. Randy Miller, Gary Anderson, Clifford Willing, and Robert Moore round out the frosh team.

Cleve Moss, a graduate assistant, will be handling the team in this 11 a.m. meet as Coach Troxel will be accompanying the football team as they prepare for the Saturday evening game with Colorado State.

THE ASUI SOCCER CLUB lives on! Thanks to a $350 loan from Recreation Board and a $100 donation from Intra-Fraternity Council, the club will have traveling money. They meet Whitman Saturday at 1 p.m. on the soccer field behind Wallace Complex.

NBA games in area; Spokane game tonight

Area basketball fans will have the chance to see two NBA exhibition games within the next two weeks, both games featuring the Seattle SuperSonics.

This evening the Sonics will tangle with the Portland Trailblazers in the Spokane Coliseum. The 8 p.m. game will be the first pre-season game for both teams.

Seattle returns to the area in less than two weeks to face the Golden State Warriors the evening of Oct. 6. The Warriors operated formerly as 'San Francisco' and the name change was to give the team a broader base of support in the Bay area.

The Blazers will be debuting their 1-2 combination of Geoff Petrie and Sidney Wicks this evening. Petrie was co-rookie of the year in the NBA last season and is expected to open at guard.

Wicks played for the UCLA Bruins last year and was Portland's No. 1 draft. He should begin at forward.

Seattle fans will undoubtedly see Spencer Haywood. Also, Bob Rule should return to the sonic lineup after sitting out last season because of an injury and joining them will be Lenny Wilkins, most valuable player in the NBA all-star game last year.

The game in Moscow will take place less than a week before the opening of the NBA regular season and both teams should be down to their regular rosters in preparation. Idaho cage coach, Wayne Anderson, commented that he expected the game would be "an excellent contest."

Bounty offered for conviction of U.S. bald eagle killers

The National Wildlife Federation has announced a $500 bounty for information leading to the conviction of anyone shooting a bald eagle anywhere in the United States.

The bald eagle, America's national bird and emblem, is in serious trouble from hard pesticides and diminishing habitat. The southern race of bald eagle found in the eastern half of the U.S. is classified as an endangered species by the U.S. Interior Department. The total bald eagle population in the lower forty-eight states may contain as few as three to four thousand birds.

Since 1940 it has been against Federal law to shoot or otherwise molest bald eagles, but as their numbers decline, illegal shooting is becoming a more important factor working against the bird's survival. A national furor was raised when recent testimony before a Senate subcommittee in Washington revealed that air-borne sharpshooters were hired by local ranchers in Rawlins, Wyoming, area to slaughter eagles and other wildlife. More than 65 golden and bald eagles were reported in a pile at one ranch.

The claimant must request the reward in writing to the National Wildlife Federation, 1412 16th Street, NW, Washington, D.C. 20036, within six months after conviction. If more than one bald eagle was shot by the convicted person, $500 will be awarded for one bird representing the total number shot.

Biggest drug problem?

Alcohol and students

By Doris Urbahn

Alcohol abuse is not a serious problem on the University of Idaho campus, according to university officials and local police. While weekend drinkers sometimes create disturbances, few students reach the point of being alcoholics.

"It takes an older person to be a real alcoholic; it takes several years. College-age people haven't drunk long enough to be confirmed alcoholics," said Dr. William D. Fitzgerald, director of student health services.

Dr. Fitzgerald said, however, that when a patient admits to having an alcohol problem he is advised of the medical repercussions of heavy drinking. If, following discussion with a university physician, the person feels he needs professional help of some sort, he can be referred to a psychiatrist, minister or other aid. The Student Health Center, said Dr. Fitzgerald, is not equipped to handle serious drinking problems and therefore does not itself have a withdrawal program.

"In my view, it's pretty darn rare," said Harry E. Davey, dean of men. There have been a few serious cases of alcohol abuse in the past and most of the individuals involved usually ended up separating themselves from the university. The university, he said, did not expel them; they left because they couldn't handle themselves academically. He noted that academic troubles sometimes led to the abuse, but that undoubtedly other problems were involved.

His office rarely is brought into matters concerning drinking in men's residences, Davey said. Usually hall advisors are able, with the support of the hall officers, to handle any problems that arise. Only when the officers are unable or fail to handle behavioral problems does Dean Davey or any other student affairs official become involved. In most cases, it's hard to tell how alcohol is involved in dorm problems, Davey said.

When the environment of the residence seems to be starting to deteriorate, then advisors are to step in and "close in on the problem" Davey said. "I'd guess that four out of five cases are solved before they get to me," he added. Advisors are not policemen but are there to serve as counselors; they don't run to Student Affairs with hall or individual problems, said Davey.

"Alcohol is not a major problem with students. The problem is surprisingly small considering the number of students," said Clark Hudson, Moscow police chief. The department's greatest problem is with underage drinkers, he said. During the school year, only about a half dozen calls are received concerning disturbances such as fights near the bars or noisy groups going through residential areas. Complaints about noisy parties are made concerning equal numbers of townspeople and students, said Hudson. The heavy drinkers, he added, are mostly local people who stay out of trouble and generally don't get drunk or don't drink in public. They department doesn't have too much trouble with drunks though he said the most trouble comes from the occasional drinker who has too much.

The infirmary comes more in contact with those who have gotten sick or injured as a result of drinking than those with serious drinking problems said Dr. Fitzgerald. He said he didn't know the extent of alcohol abuse on campus and added that most people who have a problem try to hide it. It's hard for them, he said, to see other people who can handle their drinking.

Students who feel they may have a problem can go to the Health Center, the Drug House, the Counseling Center, or Alcoholics Anonymous. Like the Health Center, the Talisman House volunteers advise rather than treat abuse problems.

"When someone comes to us, we try to build some kind of rapport with them. It can take some time for the problem to come out; they'd be testing us. We'd try to get from them what they feel would be most helpful to them," said Bob Cameron, head of the Drug Squad. The house is located at 615 West Sixth Street.

The person would then be given the opportunity to have medical help or going to Alcoholics Anonymous (AA). The squad is trying to make itself aware of all services both in and out of Moscow which drug and alcohol abusers could turn to.

Because the people at Talisman House are not trained counselors, they try to stay away from saying they are counselors. "It's a kind of counseling in that we get to know them and build up their trust but, because of professional counseling standards, we can't claim to be counselors," said Cameron.

The Counseling Center, (top floor UCC) has trained counselors available for students. They are qualified to listen to and advise students. Like Talisman House and the Health Center, records are confidential.

There have been students in Alcoholics Anonymous but none belong now. AA is open to anyone who feels he has a problem, according to an AA spokesman. A person must contact AA himself; AA will not contact someone because a friend or relative requests it. AA is a mutual-help organization which uses group therapy to solve their common problem and help others recover from alcoholism. The only requirement for membership is a desire to stop drinking. There are no dues or fees.

All four of the groups mentioned can be contacted by phone. To get the Talisman House, a student may call 885-6738; the Health Center, 885-6511; the Counseling Center, 885-6716; and Alcoholics Anonymous, 882-5266.
