

Ambassador from Lesotho

African dignitary visits UI campus

The Ambassador from the Kingdom of Lesotho, a small all black country landlocked by South Africa, will pay an official visit to the University of Idaho Tuesday and Wednesday.

His Excellency Mothusi T. Mashologu, is the Ambassador to the United States from Lesotho, High Commissioner to Canada and a former ambassador to the United Nations. The ambassador was educated at the London University of Economics.

The Kingdom of Lesotho, an all black nation a little larger than Maryland, has been a Constitutional Monarchy, independent with the Commonwealth since Oct. 4, 1966.

Prior to that time Lesotho was known as the British High Commission Territory of Basutoland.

Also on Oct. 4, 1966 the nations' paramount chief, Moshoeshe II became king and took the oath of office for life.

Lesotho's principal economic pursuits are subsistence agriculture and stock raising. The nation, which has a population of approximately 850,000 people, has a per capita income of $60 a year.

Approximately 70 per cent of the people are literate. The two principle languages spoke are English and Sesotho.

Ambassador Mashologu and his wife will arrive in Spokane at noon on Tuesday. The couple will be met there and be driven to Coeur d'Alene for a short stop. They will then proceed to Moscow and to President Hartung's house where they will be staying.

Also on Tuesday will be a dinner in the IUB at 6 p.m. and an Academic Seminar in the Cataldo Room at 7 p.m. The panel, which will discuss Lesotho's relation to South Africa and Africa in general, will be open to the public.

Wednesday the ambassador will visit Dworshak Dam, Orofino and the State Fish Hatchery. Wednesday evening there will be a formal reception and at 8 p.m. a Banquet for Ambassador and Mrs. Mashologu.

Cultural week begins Sunday

The Black Student Union (BSU) has planned a Black Cultural Week April 9-15 to acquaint those unfamiliar with its meaning with the black way of life.

"The program is for the university and the community, not for us. We already know what it's like," said Robert Williams, BSU member.

Highlighting the week of activities is a live concert by the Stylistics Sat., April 15, 9 p.m. at Memorial Gym. Advance tickets, available at Memorial Gym ticket office, are $2.50 for students and $3 for adults. Cost at the door is $3 and $3.50.

Kicking off the week Sun., April 9 will be a Soul Dinner, a barbecue-type affair with a black touch. Speakers and entertainment will be provided. The dinner will begin at 6 p.m. at St. Augustines Catholic Center. Cost is $1.75 per plate.

Monday will feature an open house at 8 p.m. at the BSU, located across the street from the SUB. The film "The Lost Man" starring Sidney Portier will show at 7 and 9 p.m. at the SUB Borah Theatre Tuesday.

The U of I BSU basketball game challenge against the WSU BSU will be played off Wed., 8 p.m. at Memorial Gym. Admission is free.

A black poetry session will feature original poems by Jay Wheeler, U of I student, Thursday in the SUB Dipper. Various BSU members will also speak.

St. Augustines Center is the setting for a talent and fashion show and a record session. The show, to be held in a nightclub atmosphere, is Friday at 7:30 p.m.

"I think this week can be quite a success, and we invite everyone to come," said Williams.

Earth Scope

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lobbyist Dita Davis Beard told a California congressman she wrote a disputed memo linking a commitment of at least $200,000 by International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. to the Republican National Convention and the out-of-court settlement of antitrust suits pending against the conglomerate, according to the transcript of a newspaper interview released Thursday by Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif.

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho (AP) — Four out of five persons committed to Idaho mental hospitals from Kootenai County during the past two years have walked away because of poor security, Pros. Atty. Gary Haman said yesterday.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Egypt is breaking off diplomatic relations with Jordan, according to a Cairo announcement heard by U.S. radio monitors today.

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — The State Supreme Court gave a green light Thursday to the mandatory busing plan for racial intergration adopted in 1970 by the Seattle School Board.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The President and Mrs. Nixon will visit Iran May 30-31 following an eight-day stay in the Soviet Union, the White House announced yesterday.

DORAVILLE, Ga. (AP) — An explosion rocked a refinery tank farm in this northeast Atlanta suburb yesterday, killing one man and injuring at least four others.

SAIGON (AP) — Scores of the U.S. warplanes began massive strikes inside North Vietnam yesterday in retaliation for the Communist offensive across the demilitarized zone, the U.S. Command announced.

Campus Democrats will meet at noon today in the SUB.

Application for Argonaut editor, Gem editor, Photography manager and Graphic Arts manager must be turned in at the SUB Information Desk by 5 p.m. today.

A sign-up and information table for Rose Bowman, U.S. Senate candidate will be set up Friday and Saturday from 8 to 9 a.m. in the SUB near the cafeteria.

Today is the final day for seniors, graduate students and faculty to arrange for caps and gowns at the bookstore.

The Draft Information Center is open Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 3-5 p.m. in the ASUI Attorney General's office.

MBA candidates (completing their course work or graduating this spring, summer or fall) are invited to an informal meeting with Dean Olson and faculty members of the College of Business and Economics Tuesday from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in Ad 313. Coffee and doughnuts will be served. Discussion will concern needed changes in the MBA curriculum and the general nature of the MBA oral examination.

Psychiatrists say alienation not widespread

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Two psychiatrists say they were surprised to find that more than 270 college students they studied were more concerned about school work than drugs, and that alienation wasn't as widespread as they expected.

Dr. Jerome Winer of the University of Chicago and Walter Dorus of the University of Pennsylvania told the American College Health Association Wednesday that their report was based on case histories of students at the University of Chicago's student mental health clinic.

"It was an unexpected finding," they said, "to discover that, contrary to popular current notions about the orientation of modern college students, nearly one-half of all those applying to our clinic expressed concern or dissatisfaction with their academic achievement."

At a time "when according to many authorities, alienation of the student is considered one of the most interesting, if not most worrisome concerns of teachers and mental health workers in school settings," they said, "the 12.5 per cent of the students reporting this symptom was a smaller group than we had expected."

They added that all but two of these students "reported some feeling in themselves and not in the external world that was the source and concern" of their complaints.

They said 6.6 per cent of the students professed a drug problem.

A caucus for supporters of Shirley Chisholm will be Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the SUB. All interested persons are invited.

The Patsy Mink for President Committee will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the SUB. All interested persons are invited.

A University Christian Symposium will be held Saturday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. in the FOB Lounge.

Nightline is open for crisis and information calls from 2:30 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. The number is 882-0320.

U of I Chess Club will meet Sunday at 2 p.m. in the SUB. Everyone is invited.

Rights Commission to hear three cases

The Idaho Human Rights Commission will meet in Lewiston today and Saturday to consider three discrimination complaints.

Two cases involving alleged housing discrimination in Lapwai will be heard this evening at 8 p.m. The hearings will be at the Idaho First National Bank.

Allen vs. Meyers, a case involving alleged discrimination in hiring practices will be heard Saturday morning at 9:30 a.m. All three hearings as well as the meeting of the commission are open to the public unless a party involved in a hearing objects.

A noon luncheon will follow the Saturday hearing. The commission will then proceed at 1:15 p.m. with its general meeting.

Reports on recent legislation of concern to the commission, rules and regulations and a budget report will be included under old business. A review of cases handled by the commission will be given at 2:15 p.m. followed at 4:30 p.m. by new business. This will include a report on the commitments made to minorities by Idaho education.

All interested persons are invited to attend.

Publisher, attorney general featured at journalism conference

Robert B. Miller Jr., Idaho Statesman publisher from Boise, is keynote speaker for the 26th Annual High School Journalism Conference being held through Saturday.

Miller will speak today at 9:30 a.m. at the Student Union Building East Ballroom on the responsibility of newspapers.

Other major speakers include Leo Jeffres, former Peace Corps volunteer and journalism teacher in the Philippines now with the Lewiston Tribune, at today's noon luncheon for the Idaho Journalism Advisors Association; and Richard Charnock, United Press International, Boise, who will discuss "Four Letter Words in the News" at tonight's banquet.

Idaho Attorney General Tony Park will participate in a discussion concerning freedom of the high school press and in a press conference interview as part of a news writing contest.

Other members of the media and of the university staff assisting with the conference are Jay Shelledy, Associated Press, Boise; Ted Stanton, managing editor, and Phil Feinstein, photographer, both of the Daily Idahoian; Jim Manders, sports editor, Lewiston Morning Tribune and Joyce B. Campbell, production director and assistant professor, Department of Radio Television.

D. Mike Lundstrom, university photographer; Bert C. Cross, associate professor and chairman, and James K. Van Leuvan, assistant professor, both of the journalism department, are also participating in the conference.

Three yearbook company consultants will lead workshops as will Louise Jones, journalism teacher and advisor, New Meadows.

Juntura committee requests more blacks, native Americans

The Juntura Committee, a committee specializing in minority and underprivileged persons within the university met this week and sent out a proposal urging better representation of blacks and native Americans in the university faculty.

The committee discussed the point that Afro-Americans and Native Americans aren't too well represented at the university and formulated a proposal that the University hire more Afro-Americans and Native Americans to teach students about Black and Indian culture. In this way, the members agreed, students could gain a better understanding from real experiences. They made it clear that it wasn't absolutely necessary to have a black teacher teach about black culture but they specified the point that more Afro-Americans and Native Americans be hired to teach.

Ken Johnson, black instructor, had the floor and stated he felt the university should first establish the structure and curriculum of a program such as this and then start hiring for the program. All agreed and the proposal was passed.

The second issue brought up was that of the Park Village pre-fabs. The committee members investigated the situation and concluded that the rationale for their decision to tear down the huts wasn't sound. The reason given was that about half of the apartments are in good condition and about half are in poor condition.

Disaster area

The Board of Regents, it was stated at the meeting, decided to tear down the huts before the area had been declared a disaster area by the federal government. With federal financial aid the huts could be repaired and the families residing in them wouldn't have to move out in May and look for more expensive apartments next year.

The committee wanted President Hartung to recognize the fact that the Board of Regents acted before realizing that the federal funds could prevent tearing them down, but the committee felt there was little hope in any proposal to prevent tearing down the houses. It was therefore decided to drop the issue.

The third issue didn't really get off the ground because further investigation was needed. It concerned financial aid to poor students at the university. Corky Bush and Jack Ridley are studying this problem and are to reach a conclusion about such aid and help formulate a clear and definite policy for the future. This financial aid will be the main topic for next week's Juntura Committee.

Graduate Council: who what why

Editor's note: This is one of a continuous series of articles describing the faculty's committees, their power and structure.

The Graduate Council represents and acts for the graduate faculty. It reports to the graduate faculty, which retains the right to review, amend or rescind Graduate Council action. Functions of Council include coordinating and promoting graduate instruction and research, and formulating policies and long-range plans for the graduate program.

It also acts on catalog changes proposed by the constituent graduate faculties of other academic divisions of the university. The Council is empowered to review and act on appeals and petitions from students, which involve exceptions to the accepted regulations and procedures of the Graduate School.

Each graduate faculty of each college or similar academic division with graduate students elects members to the council. Four faculty members-at-large are appointed by the president.

Christian symposium Saturday in FOB

Christian students of all denominations will gather on Saturday, April 8, to conduct a University Christian Symposium. Under the direction of Jim Sedore, the program will run from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. in the FOB lounge.

The symposium is being sponsored so that Christians will have an opportunity to share their faith with others according to Sedore. Several campus Christian groups will be involved in presenting the program. These include Campus Crusade for Christ, Concern, Inter-Varsity, Marva's Thursday Night Bible Study, The Tuesday Noon Bible Study, Navigators, and Searchers.

In the afternoon, the group will visit convalescent centers of Moscow and also God's Garage. Transportation on these trips will be provided.

Moscow mayor Larry Merk will discuss "Does being a Christian Make a Difference?" at 7:30 p.m. The evening will conclude with singing provided by various Christian groups.

All faculty, students, staff and residents of Moscow are welcome to attend.

One graduate student from the humanities and sciences, respectively, sit on the Council. The dean and associate dean of the Graduate School make up the remaining persons on the Council.

Complaint challenges gift checkbook offer

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — A Bellingham, Wash., man and a gift coupon organization are defendants in a voluntary compliance motion filed here under Idaho's new Consumer Protection Act.

If approved in District Court here, the University Gift Checkbook Club and Chet Mathison, Bellingham, Wash., would agree not to continue using allegedly deceptive practices. The state then would not pursue the matter in court.

Idaho Atty. Gen. Tony Park charged the club offered a gift coupon book to parents of University of Idaho students for $5 and claimed services and merchandise available from using the book were valued at $67.

But Park said some merchants placed limitations on merchandise and services. In addition, the agreement pending court approval says the $5 cost of the coupon books was "far in excess" of the printing and distribution costs the fee was to have covered.

IKs to Utah for convention

Officers from the U of I chapter of the Intercollegiate Knights and the chapter's duchess, Joan Harrison, will attend the IK's 48th Annual Grand Convention in Logan, Utah April 10-14.

Editorial Opinion

Rapport with the ASUI

A bit of the colloquialism traditional to the ASUI seems to have left it with the advent of the new administration, Roy Eiguren chief coordinator has admirably dismissed the traditional forms of ASUI politics, nitpicking, backstabbing and bullying for a more sophisticated form of management employing an organization and a good deal of public relations.

The watchword these days is rapport, a repore with the president of the ASUI in particular. A criterion for selection of personnel has been how well the person selected can get along with ASUI officials. This is all well and fine. You could even say it was practical. After all, what better way to get things done than to appoint people you know will cooperate with you?

Actually, Eiguren seems to be the only one who knows whats going on besides possibly a couple of ex-senators he's appointed as department heads. The tendency seems to be that if you don't know what to do ask Roy what he thinks. The new senate, in particular, appears particularly sensitive to Eiguren's wishes. Tuesday's senate meeting was scattered, with "Roy says" and "Roy seems to think".

All that might not be too bad as long as the senators learn eventually, after they've had some time in office, to speak for themselves. As Eiguren pointed out himself at Tuesday's meeting, he cannot overrule a decision made by the senate. Eiguren was careful to clarify his veto powers Tuesday in regards to decisions made by department boards. He however, should have little trouble in agreeing with his handpicked board of directors, many of whom are good friends.

One in particular may be very agreeable. Eiguren's appointment as Communications director is a fraternity brother and appears to have been picked or drafted out of the blue in Eiguren's haste to get a malfunctioning Communications board in order. Upon first impression the new director sounded as though he would dutifully fulfill each executive request with little heed to the members of Comm board at least until Eiguren can appoint people to that board with whom he has a little more "rapport".

One hesitates to criticize the new administration especially in light of some really fine things it is doing in terms of organization and budget. The ASUI, it has been generally agreed, needed some revamping badly, much of which Eiguren has undertaken. The new appointments of course, too, must be judged as they perform. It just seems that Eiguren has definite goals and he is insuring that few people will be around to disagree with those goals. Room should still exist for controversy and disagreement within an administration even if it takes on a less political nature and becomes efficiency oriented. People still exist who should get in the way of getting things done for the sake of clarifying and testing issues.

What's this - A study in relevancy?

Editor, Arg:

Kumquat, New Jersey. 1-17-72

Climaxing a stormy 3 months ownership of the Kumquat Horsemanship Center here, Dr. Gregory L. Green, former U. of I. physics teacher, today announced its permanent closure and his plans to return to university life. The final days of the horsemanship school were marked by threats of criminal prosecution from the office of the attorney for this posh Boston suburb; three lawsuits filed by students for injuries allegedly sustained while attending classes, and a statement of confidence by Dr. Green's loyal graduate helper who served as arena instructor.

An investigating committee headed by city attorney Cambian R. May, charged that "Dr. Green's lectures were in no way meshed with the so-called laboratory activities conducted by his graduate teacher of the arena."

Students supported the investigating committee's contention that the school's troubles stemmed from a lack of co-ordination between lectures and lab. Three students, claiming damages, one from a broken arm, one for a mashed shoulder and another for a twisted neck, testified that during the week when Dr. Green was lecturing them with overhead projector on the musculature of the horse's back and the conformation characteristics of the leather saddle, that his "lab" instructor, P. Smith had already progressed to jumps 4 feet high and to Cossack type revolving beneath the horse's belly at a run. Fourteen other students, some complaining of lesser injuries, testified that when they remonstrated with P. Smith that their studies had not prepared them for such advanced work, Smith informed them that they were being graded on a curve and that one was no more disadvantaged than another. Dr. Green, too, gave them the brush-off, they said.

P. Smith, who served under Dr. Green at the U. of I. as laboratory instructor in physics, told newsmen that his "experiments" were set up university fashion at the beginning of the course and carried out on schedule. The revolutionary horsemanship venture, he maintained, would have succeeded but for the "subjectivity" of the students.

Dr. Gregory L. Green served at the University of Idaho in association with the late Dr. Levin R. Acheson, of the department of Chemistry, who became nationally known for his Modern School of Carpentry, founded on University teaching methods. Dr. Acheson perished last July when an apartment which his lab students were constructing, collapsed.

Eiguren states policies and makes appointments

Providing programs for the average student will be a major objective of Roy Eiguren's ASUI president, administration.

In a policy statement addressed to the new senate before spring break Eiguren announced re-organization plans which he termed "simple and basic." He challenged the senators to consider his changes and offer suggestions.

Eiguren announced the appointment of Doug Oppenheimer to the newly created post of administrative assistant and Oppenheimer will do personnel research and public relations, replacing the personnel director.

"This position isn't funded at this time," Eiguren said.

A report to the president and senate on local, state, and national affairs was created, eliminating the community relations department.

The scholarship and academic departments were combined.

Dick Baranco and Chris Van Schuyler will direct community relations and scholarship, respectively, until their departments are re-organized.

A budget analysis committee was created. Scott Clements is serving as acting budget director, assisted by Stan Schaff and Hank Boomer.

The creation of an academic council headed by Steve Seale was announced. This body is to insure student input at the highest levels of academic policy decision making.

Eiguren announced the appointments in the five areas of ASUI Service. He said "priority must be given to programs the university is unwilling or unable to provide."

Bob Lukins, member of the student judicial council and member of the law school review was named ASUI attorney general.

Other programs will include legal aid, headed by Dave Savage, draft information, headed by John Hendrickson, and the newly created consumer complaints center, headed by George Daniel.

Hugh Cooke was named recreation board director. Robie Russell, former ASUI senator was named SUB board chairman. Eiguren said he plans to request a survey of SUB utilization and management to guide in a more efficient future use.

The new Communications Board director will be Chris Cook. Mary Wickstrom was named student services director. She will coordinate entertainment and cultural enrichment programs on campus.

Eiguren also announced the development of an ASUI health and education program, encompassing areas such as birth control, venereal disease, and drug information. Chris Oakley was named coordinator of this program.

Regarding representation, Eiguren said, "The key to success is credibility and respectability." He emphasized the necessity to maintain rapport with the state, alumni, administration and regents, faculty, and the community.

Eiguren said he wouldn't personally endorse any political candidates and any official support representing the student body would have to be through the senate. He said he hopes to involve students through the issues and forums program and more intensive voter registration drives next year.

He voiced support for the Idaho Student Lobby and said more trips to the legislature for the senate were being considered.

Student Code Completed

The Student Code of Conduct is one step closer to reality, but further action may be delayed until next year.

Campus Affairs Committee completed their work Monday on the document which will be forwarded to Faculty Council. However, according to Dr. Duane LeTourneau, chairman of the committee, it has been indicated that Faculty Council might delay action pending a report from their judicial review committee.

The committee had been considering two versions of the Code. One submitted by the ASUI Senate and the other drafted by Harry Davey, dean of men, and Tom Richardson, vice-president of the administrative services.

The Davey-Richardson preamble of the Code was adopted. With some modification the committee adopted the senate versions of most articles.

Controversy over range of sanctions
Article XI regarding the range of sanctions created some controversy in a pre-break session. Only seven members were present at that session. According to the committee's by-laws, official action could be taken only if all seven voted for the measure.

Vote on the senate version was defeated with a negative vote by Jean Hill, dean of women.

Jean Hill, dean of women, voted against it arguing for the alternate version which included denial of registration as an official sanction, if fines or restitution weren't paid.

In Monday's session, the committee again considered this article and approved the senate version by a vote of 7-2.

Visitation change

In other action, the committee approved the concept to change the present visitation regulations. In an information report to the senate submitted several months ago, the residence halls association had proposed that the maximum hours within which visitation could take place would be twenty-four hours, seven days per week.

The committee voted to eliminate the third paragraph on page 49 of the student hand book regarding visitation hours, and adopted the RHA proposal.

The code was then sent to Faculty Council.

Program Budgeting what where why

There are many different ways to prepare budgets. They can be allocated by item expenditures, organization classification or by returns of the program. In recent years there has been a trend to plan budgets by basing them on returns. This type of budgeting is called program budgeting.

Program budgeting

Dr. Sherman Carter explained the concept of program budgeting "as focusing the budget on things to be done rather than items to be bought. It involves budget classifications which show why money is being spent rather than what specific things are being bought; for example, budgeting in terms of recreation and big name entertainment, etc., rather than in terms of numbers of balls and bats to be purchased, etc. At some point, all budgeting involves specific things to be bought, that is, line item budgeting. However, at legislative and higher executive levels, budgeting by programs is more meaningful."

The university is presently using a program budget, Carter said. Funds are requested from nine programs — library, physical plant, instruction, department research, etc. Each of these is subdivided into sub-programs.

In explaining the present system, Carter said that the programs fit with the approved budget formula of the Board of Regents and State Board of Education. All state universities use this formula to arrive at the amount they can seek from the legislature. There are nine formulas to conform with the nine programs.

Discussion over best type of budgeting

There is continual discussion about the best form of budgeting. The critical problems involve deciding on the most meaningful classifications and in retaining an ability to distribute money in accordance with established organizational structure, said Carter. The classification must permit answering questions which are most likely to be asked; with a budget program structure a university can accumulate accounting data to show the cost of educating each class/year, freshmen, sophomores, etc., or design programs to show the cost of teaching specific areas as mining, engineering or agriculture.

With specific reference to the need to budget in terms of organizational structure, specific people must be given the responsibility of getting given jobs done within the funding levels provided.

Reasons and advantages of budgeting

Carter stated that the primary purposes for budgeting are to facilitate planning and coordination and to permit financial control. He said that our present system is fulfilling these purposes but that there are always ways to make improvements. The primary difficulty with the present budgetary system followed by the University of Idaho, according to Carter, apart from not having enough money to budget, is the inability of the University to determine sufficiently far in advance the amounts of funds to be available.

Senators assigned portfolios

ASUI Senate portfolios have been assigned to each of the 13 senate members.

These portfolios are intended to provide in-depth information regarding various ASUI functions and areas of student interest. Senators were given a choice of subjects and provided with information regarding people to contact. They were also told where to find background material.

Requirements for the projects were listed by the ASUI administration, including meetings to attend, extent of involvement, and reports to the senate. Due dates for completion were also given.

Projects were assigned as follows:

Clive Strong — Idaho Student Government, National Student Association, and Associated Student Governments.

Mike Krieg — Golf Course
Mark Falconer — Housing and Big Name Entertainment.

Mike Moore — University Finances and Big Name Entertainment
Tom Hill — Campus Affairs
Phyllis Lord — Alumni Relations
Greg Casey — University Student Services

Kathy Brannard — Faculty Council
Michael D'Antonio — Fund for the Performing Arts Center and Athletic Complex

Ron Cuff — Consumer Protection Center, Idaho Student Lobby, and Political Action

Mike Roach — Athletics
Bob Nowierski — Environmental
Ed Litteneker — Long Range Planning

Student representation hurt by council's action

By Dave Johnson

The Faculty Council tabled the revised draft of Policies on Academic Freedom and Tenure, Tuesday, and sent it to the Faculty Affairs Committee for further revisions. By doing this, the first test of student Senate Resolution No. 29, which calls for student representation on all committees making tenuring, hiring and firing recommendations, has been delayed.

Just before spring vacation the council passed the resolution "in principle" by a close vote of 9 to 7. However, the matter was then sent to the Faculty Affairs Committee so the necessary policy statements could be prepared.

After the March 21 council meeting, Mary Ruth Mann, former ASUI president and author of the resolution was very optimistic about the resolution. She said "The first and most important step had been taken in the quest for student representation on University decision making committees."

Student representation hangs in limbo

Now with the Tenure draft joining resolution No. 29 in the Faculty Affairs Committee, formal student representation on recommendation making committees again hangs in a state of limbo.

The revised tenure draft states, "committees to review faculty members for tenure will consist of all tenured faculty of the candidates department and at least one non-tenured faculty member." It then states that student representatives on such committees is at the "discretion of the department faculty," and not mandatory.

This is where the first test of resolution No. 29 would have taken place. If the council had passed the tenure draft as it now reads their decision would have conflicted with the student representation policy spelled out in resolution No. 29.

The council was not satisfied with various parts of the tenure draft but made no mention of the conflict in committee representation prior to tabling the draft.

Parish interviewed

In an interview the following day, William R. Parish, Council chairman, said he did not feel a test of resolution No. 29 had been delayed by the Council.

"The council found many small things wrong with specific policy statements in both the tenure draft and resolution No. 29," said Parish, "and rather than taking the time to hash the matters over in the council meeting we decided to send them to the committee which was formed to take care of these matters."

Parish said the council was not trying to avoid the issue of student representation. "This is a matter that has to be approached carefully," he said and added it is not a simple matter because it may involve many changes in present University policy.

Parish agreed that student representation stems from the now, somewhat forgotten and complicated concept of Community government.

He said, "Students want a formal written policy giving them representation on the decision making committees, but in reality student input has always been of great importance to the faculty council and has been very beneficial."

In conclusion, Parish said "the faculty council is relatively liberal on such matters and students should realize the close vote for passage of resolution No. 29 may be an indication of the controversy that could come about when the slightly more conservative bodies like the general faculty are faced with the resolution."

Educators disagree why

College grades rising steadily

(reprinted in part from the New York Times, March 19, 1972)

College grades are rising steadily and perhaps at an accelerating rate on campuses across the country, although teachers and professors do not agree on the reasons why.

This "grade inflation" — the phrase belongs to David Reisman, the Harvard sociologist — is adding to the growing debate among students, teachers and administrators over the usefulness and real meaning of the A's, B's, C's, D's and F's that have traditionally spelled the difference between success and failure for students seeking scholarships or hoping to get into graduate school, or looking for a good job after graduation.

Part of the reason lies in the liberalized curriculums and grading systems of the last decade. But teachers and other educators with differing feelings about the grade rise believe the changing attitudes towards students and the role of the university, particularly among young teachers have led to more generous grading.

"No question about it," a senior at the University of Wisconsin said recently, "I never go to school anymore and I get wonderful grades. There's a consensus here that its a lot easier to get good grades.

On a numerical grade scale where 4 is an A and zero represents F over all the student averages at the student's Madison campus went from 2.5 in the 1965-66 school year to 2.8 in 1970-71. A Northwestern University in Evanston Illinois the rise had been from 2.7 in 1967 to 3.0 last year, a shift from a high C to a B minus.

Similar trends are present in each of a dozen other universities queried. At Harvard, just over half the class of 1961 graduated with honors; last spring, the figure was over two-thirds.

Correspondingly fewer students at the University of Illinois are flunking out or being put on academic probation. During the 1964-65 school year, the university reported 16 per cent of the undergraduates were either expelled or put on probation for low grades, last year just 3.7 per cent fell into that category.

These trends reflect the findings of a study of 435 colleges and universities conducted last year by Leroy S. Burwen, director of Institutional Research at San Francisco State College. Burwen found that the overall undergraduate grade rise was from 2.4 in 1960 to 2.56 in 1969, and was accelerating — that is, the rise from 1968 to 1969 was equal to the rise of the previous four years.

The pattern applied to big and small colleges, public and private, urban and rural, Burwen found. Only southern colleges and universities showed a slower rate of rising grades.

What's it like?

Womens' halls with visitation

In walking through almost any women's residence hall, a person can be assured to hear the combined voices of both men and women coming from the individual rooms. This is because of a ruling passed by the regents a little less than a year ago which allowed for visitation.

Before visitation was passed, men in a woman's room was forbidden. Males were restricted to the lounge and then had to be accompanied by an escort. In the second semester of last year, the halls tried an experiment which would allow men in the rooms on the weekends. Then in April of 1972, the Regents passed the present visitation standards.

Maximum visitation for women's residence halls is noon to 11 a.m. on weekdays, noon to 1 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, and noon to midnight on Sunday. Each hall must decide if it wants to have visitation and then it sets up hours within the maximum allowed. Seventy-five per cent of the women in the hall must approve the visitation before it goes into effect. This voting must be done once each semester.

Almost all the women's halls have taken advantage of the visitation. The women's residences in the tower, with the exception of one, and those in the Wallace Complex, except for Campbell and Carter Halls, all have the maximum hours. The women of Campbell and Carter have set their weekday hours from noon until 10:30 p.m., but according to Mrs. Bradbury, the head resident, they usually don't manage to get their guys out until 11 p.m.

Smiley Corners

According to the rules set up by the Regents, there must be living space available where no visitation is allowed. Smiley Corners, a residence in the tower, is such a place. Girls live in this hall by choice, and no man can set foot beyond its doors.

Penalties can be assessed to those who disregard the visitation laws. Fines ranging up to $25 may be given to a man found wandering around women's halls after hours or to a girl caught with a man in her room after the permitted time. These fines are given by the Standard Judicial Board.

Enforcing the visitation rules sometimes presents a problem. Many girls don't like to see guys in the hall after hours but they don't want to turn them in. According to Nancy Sterling, Resident Assistant to Hays Hall, it is up to the women of the hall to maintain the visitation standards. If the hours aren't enforced it is because the women really don't care.

Good reception

The present visitation is well liked and accepted by most of the women in the residence halls. Some would like to see it extended, yet they also like to have their privacy. The girls like to know when men are in the halls so they can be aware of when not to rush out of their rooms wearing only the bare essentials. This is a major problem in the tower where the bathrooms are apart from the private rooms.

It takes a lot of power to look into a troubled heart.

New methods of accurately diagnosing and treating troubled hearts is a new technology at work in Medical Centers all over the country.

Even banks of computers print out everything from prescription labels to this week's payroll.

Versatile electricity is what keeps these things going.

Medicine, education, law enforcement, name almost any field, the new electric technology has arrived.

With twice as much electricity needed in the next ten years, new generating facilities must be built compatible with our environment.

We'll continue working to do this. But we need your understanding today to meet tomorrow's needs.

Law student comments

Amendment could change men-women relations

The United States Constitution as it stands today neglects over half of the country's population. 53 per cent of Americans now depend solely on the good will and charity of others but will finally receive government protection when three fourths of the states ratify amendment 27.

The proposal guarantees equal rights regardless of sex, the first and only amendment in United States history to fight sexual discrimination.

Second year law student, Dolores Cooper, explains the potential of the law which Idaho and several other states recently ratified.

ARGONAUT: How would the amendment help women?

Cooper: This amendment will result not only in equal rights for women, but for men too. Probably many men who view the amendment with suspicion or hostility will find that it will result in emancipating them from many areas of the law which discriminate against them.

ARGONAUT: Can you list some examples?

Cooper: Laws regarding the duty of a man to support his wife, child custody, alimony, and child support will probably be looked at in the light of this amendment. Questions regarding which party should have custody of the children will probably be decided, not on the basis of the mother automatically getting the children, but rather on the basis of what is best for the child. That is, both spouses will be equally regarded as being potential custodians of the children, not just one. In this way, fathers will not be arbitrarily ruled out of having custody of their children as is the current trend in the law.

ARGONAUT: What other marriage laws would be affected?

Cooper: As a result of this amendment, the management of the community property will probably be more equitably distributed between the spouses. As it now stands, the husband now has management. For all practical purposes, ownership without management is a hollow possession. The essence of ownership is the ability to control, to manage.

ARGONAUT: What about discrimination in occupations?

Cooper: The amendment will knock down a lot of discrimination restrictions in many job fields. People will be hired, not on what they are, but on what they can do.

ARGONAUT: If this constitutional amendment is ratified, what happens to existing state laws that may conflict?

Cooper: If the amendment is ratified by all necessary states, much of the current state law will have to be changed to conform to the amendment. This process will take a number of years because the philosophy of sexism is pervasive through many facets of our legal system and all of society.

ARGONAUT: Why has such a proposal taken so long?

Cooper: It's been tied up in Congressional committees for around 50 years with one man holding it down. But it's a constant, integral part of the United States Constitution. A belief in democracy is inherent in the American people — it has to do with "fair play."

ARGONAUT: Is there opposition to the equal rights amendment?

Cooper: I don't know the extent of opposition although Oklahoma did refuse to ratify it.

Any politicians against equal rights have got to recognize women's importance. If they don't pay attention to this, they'll pay dearly with the female vote.

Students prepare for 2000 AD

Adolf Huxley's brave new world may not be far away, but at least some psychology students will be prepared.

Members of Social Psychology 320 are currently involved in project reports preparing the university and its students for the year 2000.

The eight-member project teams serve two purposes, according to Prof. William Bergquist, instructor for the course. First, they hope to increase awareness of future needs of the university for the students as well as instructors and the administrators. They also hope to gain experience in working with task groups.

Bergquist paralleled the idea of the projects as revolving around Alvin Toffler's "Future Shock." Its theme concludes that such a rapid change in culture and technology will occur that our society will be unable to adjust at the same rate. Unless prepared for, such a rapid turnover may result in "future shock".

"We are in constant change," said Bergquist, and as a result, "we can never make definite plans for more than ten years in the future." He noted many persons are already living behind the times. Certain elements here at the university, he said, were still "in 1935".

After analysis of some aspects of the university (vocational education, student housing, etc.), the project teams will make recommendations for specific changes in areas like structure, policy or curriculum. Bergquist said the results will be read and evaluated by members of the university administration, and may affect the over-all direction the university moves in the future.

The degree of effect the projects have, Bergquist said, will depend partly on the manner of presentation and the amount of personal involvement by the students. He noted that greater interests should evolve from a more lively presentation, as a play or video tape recording.

Because of work loads evolving from other classes, Bergquist feels the students may not give the full attention their project requires. However, Bergquist has "careful optimism" towards the projects. A consultant for one of the groups felt that member response concerning the projects was favorable.

19-year-old drinking

The bar opens in July

by Rod B. Gramer

July has usually been known as a month for firecrackers, picnics, and the month man first landed on the moon. But this year it may mean something new. At least in Idaho.

July the new 19 year old drinking law will go into effect. Thousands of young people and many bar managers are anxiously awaiting July with anticipation.

"I am very much in favor of the new law. I figure anybody old enough to fight for his country should be able to drink a beer," said Mr. Guy W. DeVaney, owner of the Spruce tavern.

Many students agree with Mr. DeVaney.

"I always used to drink and it didn't bother my parents at all," added a student. "Laws are all determined by the culture. Therefore, anyone who can handle it should be able to drink. Even a 14-year-old who has one drink and walks out is better than a 30-year-old who gets bombed and walks out and kills someone. There should be more of a limit on the amount you can drink rather than age."

Mr. DeVaney thinks there will be no repercussions because of the new law. "Young people have always been able to get alcohol if they want it. I don't think this will cause more people to drink."

But there should be a boom in business for the first couple of months he noted.

Many people think it's a psychological thing. The excitement of buying it legally may entice a lot of young people at first, but after the first few months it will wear off.

A beer drinker at the Alley tavern commented, "it's like the neighbor's wife. If you can't have it, you want it. Stolen fruit always tastes better; at least in your mind."

"When I was in Spokane when it was illegal for Indians to drink alcohol, everywhere I looked I saw drunk Indians. If the Indians did get alcohol, they had to drink it right away or lose it. After the law was changed so they could consume it legally, I saw very few drunk Indians," recounted the drinker.

Even though most are in favor of the new law there are a few critics. Surprisingly, one of them is DeVaney's son, Jim DeVaney. He is the manager of the Alley tavern.

"As a businessman I am very happy with the new law. It's a beautiful law. But personally I am dead against it and I have good reason," confessed the younger DeVaney.

"From now on, every time you drive the highway between Moscow and Pullman, you'll be conscious of what I mean," he added. "That road should have been improved years ago, now they might just have to improve it."

DeVaney says that there will be about 5,000 more car trips from Pullman to Idaho because of the drinking law.

Surveys reveal reasons for many women drop-outs

"You've come a long way, baby," a phrase coining woman's liberation may hold true for cigarettes, but not for academic opportunities here at the University.

The current dropout rate of women students over a period of years at the University of Idaho is 50 percent, compared to three percent from the men students. This figure seems alarmingly high to many, among them, Jean Hill, dean of women.

As a result, a president's ad hoc committee, including Hill, made an attempt to evaluate reasons for women students' withdrawals so as to develop more effective means of working with students while still on campus.

Results from a survey of women dropouts revealed that "conflict with self" in terms of goals, feeling, interests, and personal confusion was by far their primary reason for withdrawal. Interestingly enough, marriage was an insignificant factor.

Another survey regarding the attitudes of women students here at the university revealed that 70 percent made their final career plans during their college years, 40 percent changing their career plans after entering college.

A survey of the faculty concerning the educational and occupational opportunities for women in their academic areas, indicated that faculty and staff are generally aware of these opportunities, but aware of the students are not always informed. This suggests that faculty is not actively advising female students of the available careers or opportunities. The survey also indicated the faculty felt discrimination does exist in employment, salaries and promotion.

Miss Hill is optimistic on developing programs aiding women students with their career goals and the educational and vocational opportunities available to them upon entering college. A program already underway is a recruitment brochure issued to various high schools listing the career opportunities available to women in all professions.

Art evolution

Exhibit traces style growth of major American painting

An exhibition representing some of the major developments in American art from the turn of the century to the late forties will be at the University of Idaho Museum 1-5 p.m. daily, through April 16.

Called "American Painting: 1900-1950," the collection of 29 original paintings is on loan from International Business Machines Corp. (IBM).

This will be the last major traveling exhibition at the museum for some time. During the final two weeks of April, the museum will be moved into the former Chrisman Hall dining room adjacent to areas now used by the Department of Sociology/Anthropology. The aim of the move is to consolidate the museum facilities with the museum needs of the anthropologists.

The museum will continue to display its permanent collection as well as occasional small touring shows.

The IBM show displays an evolution in American painting. At the beginning of this century most American artists

Painted in a natural style reminiscent of the Hudson River School and other painters of an earlier generation. But before the end of the first decade an art revolution had been started by such artists as Robert Henri, Everett Shinn, John Sloan and George Luks, whose realistic, unromanticized paintings of everyday urban life so shocked the public that they were dubbed the Ash Can School.

• From then on there was constant change not only in subject matter, but in the introduction of a broad spectrum of styles and approaches to art, from a reinvigorated naturalism to various modes of expressionism and abstraction.

This exhibition contains works by some of the leading artists of the period, among them Edward Hopper, Max Weber, Thomas Hart Benton, Reginald Marsh, Jack Levine and George L. K. Morris, as well as the members of the Ash Can School.

Student directed plays featured at u-hut

"Lovers," Brian Friel's 1968 Broadway hit which starred Art Carney, will be presented as a student-directed show at 8 p.m. tonight and tomorrow night at the University of Idaho U-Hut Studio Theatre.

Directors for the two-act play are junior drama majors Val Molkenbuhr III and Terri J. Parker. Molkenbuhr directs "Winners," the act which portrays the final day in the life of two young lovers. Miss Parker directs "Losers," the story of a man and woman who marry late in life, then go to live with her mother.

"The play is a tragi-comedy with an ironic theme. The winners are freed by death while the losers are trapped by life," the directors noted.

Each act has four characters. The winners are Mag, played by Jan A. Downing and Joe, played by Thomas E. Donahoe. The narrators who comment on the action will be played by Nancy E. Jones and Debbi A. Stephenson.

The losers are Hanna, played by Joanna B. Mueller and Andy, played by Paul D. Gussenhoven. Mrs. Wilson, Hanna's mother, will be done by Mary L. Chase, while her friend Sissy Cassidy will be done by Pamela Nyman.

There is no charge for the production.

Faculty art goes on display

The annual faculty show by members of the art department at the University of Idaho will go on display Monday at the University Art Gallery located in the Department of Art and Architecture complex.

It is expected that every member of the department will contribute art work for the show. Sculpture, painting, drawing, prints, jewelry and possibly pottery will be displayed.

What's happening

By Mark Fritzier

Ingmar Bergman has said, "Cinema and music have a great deal in common — both appeal to the senses directly." He compares this sensual effect to literature which requires reading and interpretation before it can be felt. Bergman's philosophy was readily apparent in last Monday's showing of his film "Shame", by the Film Society.

This was another example of the fine series of films that the Society has been providing us with this semester. They will be showing another next Sunday and Monday evenings at 7:00 and 9:00 p.m. in the Borah Theatre. The feature this time will be a full length W.C. Fields' opus, "Poppy". The film will be good and the society could use your attendance (and financial support). You will find it well worth the time and money. This effort should be actively supported as a definite plus to the life of the university. So get yourself up and come on in for some direct sense appeal through the efforts of the Idaho Film Society.

Another film for the weekend will be "Grand Prix" starring James Garner, among others. To be shown tonight and tomorrow night at 7:00 and 9:00 p.m. in the SUB, this film details the life, and work of international race drivers. I believe that "Grand Prix" received an Oscar for special effects in the filming of the race action. The plot, low-grade romance tales of the drivers, seemed to be inserted gratuitously and needlessly. The cars themselves along with the fantastic action sequences are story enough. Audiences don't really need love stories to keep them in their seats, if the basic premise is good, dear directors and producers.

Rumor Cont'd — Christ

More on a rumor, folks. "Jesus Christ, Superstar" may or may not be descending on Moscow. It seems that the telephone call from the play's "agent" in San Francisco is a bit of a mystery now. He was willing to send the company here on no guarantee of admission receipts. He claimed to be willing to take the risk. Another call, after the first story reached us, was from another alleged "agent" who said he had heard we were interested in seeing the play. He claimed he wanted a $10,000 minimum guarantee. Upon questioning, he seemed to say that the two companies these two "agents" represented were really one. Maybe. We've had no further calls and the whole project is up in the air.

Something smells pretty fishy here, fans. It may all be legitimate and be worked out satisfactorily, in time, or else there's a catch somewhere. Personally, I'm a little suspicious. Maybe someone thinks that they can pull a fast one on all of us backwoods types in far north Idaho. We've all heard of the play, of course, and just maybe the Idaho hicks might jump at a chance to buy a bootleg performance of the play to see it. A little profitable side action for some out-of-work understudies. We're not all that credulous and I think we would all really like to see the play. We just want to know we're getting the real thing and not some rip-off. This is just conjecture and maybe it is all on the up-and-up — merely a communication problem. However, I think we need to know a lot more before we get our juices up. I'll be reporting the latest info in this column as we get it. Stay tuned.

Ambassador Visit

I understand that we will be host to the Ambassador of Lesotho soon. It seems that he was tired of just seeing America a la' Washington, D.C. and New York. He wanted to see some of the other America. So, saying this to a friend of Bob Serrano, a trip to Idaho was quickly arranged. Now, I think that this is a great idea but there seem to be implications tinged with danger in the growing arrangements here. The danger is that the hosts, in leaping to the challenge of so prestigious a guest may try to give him the whole official treatment. Set it up so that he will never know that he is not in Washington, D.C. or New York when he is not out-of-doors. Now, come on, folks. He wants to see us little folk and how we live. I challenge the hosts to arrange a time for him to have dinner with lowly students or common citizens in their homes, like real people.

I speak from some experience on this point. Having been a foreign guest myself overseas, I got damned tired of having visits I was able to make turned into official receptions complete with endless speeches and presentations by the local petty bureaucrats. I really valued the times I was able to spend with local families in informal, intimate settings. Of course, the local leaders want to make a good impression but I learned a great deal more about the people when I could actually be with them.

In the case of our visiting ambassador, I realize it is problem of maximum exposure to maximum people. But is this for our benefit or his? Whose priorities should we consider? Should things appear to him as some of us think they ought, or as they really are? All these things can be done in good taste and with maximum courtesy. Official people often grow tired of having others impose an imagined proper official world around them. So let's stop playing Walter Mitty protocol officers and stop worrying that it ain't enough to be just us.

Foul play looks good in Big Sky

Fans for years have felt their teams only receive a fair shake from the officials while at home, while the traveling team is destined to have twice as many calls made against it as the "home" team. This is entirely untrue, according to a recent survey by the Big Sky Conference office.

Taking into consideration both conference and non-conference games, it was discovered that teams committed 1775 miscues at home, while 1954 were whistled against members on the road. In non-conference games, the home team made 557 mistakes while the visitors committed 695. In conference games, 876 fouls were recorded against the home team, with the visiting team registering 980.

Breaking these figures down to a per-game average, in non-conference games the home team had 16.8 fouls per game called against them, while the visiting team committed 17.8 fouls per game. For conference games, the home clubs were called 17.8 times per game, the visitors 20.8 times a contest. Summing up a total of both conference and non-conference, the end results in 17.3 calls per game against the hosts, while 18.9 calls were made against the guests.

The "bonus" free throw appeared to play a slightly larger role at home, but still on a relatively even basis. The home team attempted 2591 shots from the charity stripe during the season, while the visitors had 2215 chances for the one pointers.

Big Sky Conference Commissioner John Roning said, "I am very pleased with the results of this survey. Although we are always seeking ways to improve our officiating, I feel that this report proves there has been relative equality for all teams, away from home as well as on their own courts."

The Commissioner pointed out that there are numerous factors that must be taken into consideration in analyzing the number of fouls committed and the number of fouls attempted. "The traveling team is under more physical strain, is in strange environs, and therefore could be more prone to committing fouls," he said. "Also, the hometown fans play a big part on the performance of a player at the line; when the bonus free throw is a factor," Roning said. The visitor is understandably under more pressure than the home player, who enjoys the cheering support the fans provide.

Turf's up for Idaho golfsters

The University of Idaho Vandal Golf Team is avenging its miserable number two place showing last year in Big Sky. Last year that poor team of ringers hired by Weber State put the Vandals down. This year they'll be hitting the bunkers, as the Vandals make their way down the fairways and onto the greens. Perhaps the crowds will see such sights as aspiring young political candidates beaming their fellow students. It all comes at the monstrous cost of a free pass, as things swing from golf course to golf course throughout the Northwest.

The biggie of this week is the tournament in Walla Walla. Washington will feel the brunt of Vandalism in the form of a top quality Idaho offensive. Under the direction of the old standard professional, Richard Snyder, the team attempts to prove this article a gross underrating of putter power. Sports Illustrated will be busy with the big leagues, but the Big Sky will battle its way to the top, making even the Argonaut print their power.

The biggest spectator sport of them all is featuring Jeff Thomas, the state amateur champion, as its main character. Also in the cast are Ken Kirkland, number two man, a two year letterman adding experience, Mike Krieg, Bill Herron, Greg Thomas, and Mike Moore, all making their bids for letters. Pushing these allstars are Howie Crosby, Bill Reeser, Bill Stone, and last but with no better place, Mike Last.

Next week will be big for the ivy halls of Goldom. The University of Idaho travels to Boise for the Boise Invitational. A 36 hole, 2 day match, the players will get their chances at hustling Boise State's fair maidens. There should be some amazing strokes made this weekend, both on and off the course. For extra added incentive, the winners of the Boise State Invitational get to go home.

The only tournament played so far this year was the Banana Belt Invitational, where the U. of I. Vandals only placed fourth out of eight. It's always a disgrace to lose to such unheard of teams as Oregon's, Washington State's, and Oregon State's. Maybe punishment isn't the answer. Maybe the team should be subjected to such inspiration as sixteen hours of Arnold Palmer films would give them. And then again, maybe the student body will stop being such a sand trap and offer support. Go team go! Rah Rah Rah! Kill! Rape! Win?

Intramurals

Campus Sports

After spring break, intramural sports have once again resumed. The "B" basketball games are progressing well with the championship games being played this week. Out of 100 teams that started, there are only 5 teams left that are in the contention for the championship. They are: ATO 1&3, TMA 3&11, and Sigma Gamma Chi.

The Softball started Tuesday, horseshoes and paddleball will start April 10. Weight lifting takes place the week of April 17. The weight classes will be: 137, 148, 165, 181, 198, and heavyweight. The track meet starts April 29th, and ends May 1.

On March 4, the ski meet took place with Graham Hall taking first place with combined total times of 2:16.8. Following in the standings were Delta Tau Delta, Sigma Chi, Gault Hall, Phi Gamma Delta, Beta Theta Pi, Theta Chi, Alpha Tau Omega, Delta Sigma Phi, and Town Men's Association. Graham Hall and Delta Tau Delta swept the top 4 times in the meet, as Brian Davies and Dave Sailor came in at 68.2, 68.6 for Graham Hall and Mike Bayless and Jerry Rowe arrived at 69.3 and 70.2 respectively for Delta Tau Delta. Theta Chi's Jim Thorpe came in 5th at 70.4.
