Imagine this situation. You can't speak English but go to a English speaking university and can't adapt; then because you can't communicate you have a problem with a student who lives in your

by Rod Gramer

hall. Then to make things worse you are short of money to go on in school so you have to go through the rigorous procedure of getting out of this maze-like environment. You may not be jinx enough to have all these problems at one time, but many student have one or more of them.

If this were you would you know where to go for help?

Probably not, and that's why Jean Hill, the Dean for Student Advisory Services thinks public relations is the biggest problem for her agency. She says about the only time a student knows that her agency exists is when they have a problem.

Hill who seems to know whats happening and seems like the type of person who can make things happen says, in the future they hope to set up a committee made up of hall and house officers and Pan-Hellenic and RHA members. She hopes that a committee like this would help communication not only between the living groups but also between her agency and the rest of the community.

Foreign students have problems which her agency handles. Sometimes they have trouble adapting to the university or the university with them. In this case the advisory service will direct them to another agency that will help them.

The new approach to the old problems must be successful because 50-75 students per day enter the doors of the advisory service office for a variety of problems.

For example Hill says many students don't know when they want to leave school where to go. "Students are really bitter about dropping out of school because its so hard," says Hill. "Sometimes its harder to get out of here then in." Students used to have to make 15 stops now they only have to make two; one at the advisory service and the other with their dean.

Many of the students who want or need to drop out do it because of financial reasons; sometimes short term money problems. If a student has one of these financial pinches he can apply for a emergency student loan.

Go between agency

Actually, the advisory service is a go between other agencies according to Hill. Dean Davey compares the advisory service to a railroad interchange. "When a student goes to the advisory service he is usually looking for specialized aid and the information he needs can be attained at the service.

For example, if a student has an emotional problem he will be advised to go to the counseling center or if a student has trouble with a teacher many times the advisory service will intercede by talking to the professor.

The Student Advisory Services has just gone through a complete rehauling in the scope of its tasks and the way it approaches student problems.

"This is a year of change," says Hill, who was sitting in her office surrounded by social psychology and theories of personality books. "We don't have a dean of women this year and by next year Davey won't be dean of men any longer."

The major change in the advisory service seems to be one of philosophy. This year they deal with the same old problems but in new ways. "The humanistic approach is our new approach," said Hill. When asked if this would be more personal she smiled, and said, "yes."

One of the old jobs of the service but still an important one is the selecting of resident advisers. In a group interview officers, students and staff members will interview an adviser prospect. Then Hill will interview him personally then she will find out whether or not the future adviser is compatible with members of the perspective hall to which he'll be assigned.

Hall problems

"For the most part we have good communication with the halls, but its different with the fraternity and sororities," says Hill.

The advisory services only have part time advisers for the fraternities and sororities. Asked if it was that big of a problem Hill said, "it sure is, as a matter of fact just last night I met with house presidents to talk about just this problem."

Change and flux have been the keynotes of the story of Student Advisory services around the nation according to Harry Davey, dean of men at the U. of I.

The former Naval ROTC recruiter, who gave up the service to become assistant dean of students in 1966 said he had seen "tremendous changes in the social atmosphere on campuses both at the U of I and around the nation."

"As a result, student advisory services have been embattled organizations throughout the last five years," said Davey. "We've had to go through wholesale reorganization, and we've found out that the old things that we used to do are out. They're as dead as dodoses."

Davey, whose position as dean of men may be faded out within the next three years, said that his responsibilities will be delegated to a number of people as the University moves towards a "unisex" dean of students system.

No particulars

"We really haven't got the particulars planned out yet, though each member of the staff seems to know in which direction they would like the services to move," said Davey. "We've scheduled a full day retreat for everyone in the advisory services to mesh out a program which we can all get behind one hundred per cent."

by Bill Fitzgerald

"My responsibility while I've been dean of men has been generally to deal with everything in the extra-academic life of students," Davey said. "That covers a lot of ground."

One of the major changes in the advisory services has been a sharp swing from regulatory activity to helping activities.

"The need for university regulation has to a large extent disappeared," said Davey. "Today we are treating the students as adults."

Davey said that the advisory services would get involved if things did go "too radically askew".

"We deal with students in the Dormitories, in the Fraternities and the Sororities, and with students off-campus when they want us and when we can get ahold of the situation," said Davey.

End hassles

Davey said the major goal of the student advisory services during the last five years has been to reduce the general hassling that students get from the institutions.

"For instance we now handle all the problems of withdrawing students," Davey said. "Instead of going to all of his professors and about a dozen other administrators, all he has only to is contact me and his dean. I then deal with all his professors directly for him." By dealing with the problem this way Davey believes he has been able to convince several students to remain in college.

Easy to talk

"It's a lot easier to talk to them before they have already committed themselves through that long withdrawal process," Davey said.

Davey said that he deals with administrators, the student government and the faculty, referring students to the people who will get them the results they desire.

"Many students come in here with a problem which we may not be able to solve by ourselves, but we can sure tell the student where he can take his problem to get results," Davey said.

a movin'

"Today we are getting more feedback from that great silent majority of students," Davey said. "In the past few years we have been hearing from the minorities, for instance the drug cult was prominent a few years ago."

"Now we are hearing from the great bulk of students who had been quiet. They are talking and talking loud," said Davey.

One arm of the student advisory services which will continue the dual role of regulator of student life and student advisor, according to Davey, will be the dormitory advisers.

"I don't have the problem that some people seem to have, that the dorm adviser must either be the university cop or the friend of students," Davey said. "I see the dorm adviser as a man who stands up and speaks his mind about what needs to be done."

Dual role

Dormitory advisers must play the dual roles and be comfortable with both of them, according to Davey.

"They don't have to be polarized one way or another, instead they must act as manager and leader who tries always to be a friend but has to know when to say no," said Davey.

Political rally set for Monday

The Associated Students of the University of Idaho have invited U.S. Senate and House and state legislative candidates to appear on campus Oct. 9 as part of a Columbus Day Political Forum.

Roy Eiguren, ASUI president, said the day-long program would be "in keeping with the tradition of informing the students of everything that concerns them both as students and as citizens."

All speakers will appear in the Student Union Building Ballroom. The day's events include:

— an appearance by Dr. William E. (Bud) Davis, Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate, at 9:30 a.m.

— a report on activities by the Re-elect the President Committee given by former Gov. Robert E. Smylie, Boise, at 10:30 a.m.

— an appearance by Ed Williams, Democratic candidate for Congress from the first district, at 11:30 a.m.

— a discussion of McGovern for President Committee activities given by Rose Bowman, Boise, at 12:15 p.m.

— an appearance by Steve Symms, Republican candidate for Congress from the first district, at 1:30 p.m.

— brief speeches by local legislative candidates at 2:30 p.m., followed by an open panel debate.

— an open forum at 4 p.m. featuring any candidate or student who wishes to make a statement.

— and an appearance by Rep. James McClure, R-Idaho, Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, at 7:30 p.m.

In addition, display booths for candidates and interest groups will be set up in the Ballroom.

Students will be dismissed from most classes other than the Law school according to authorization of Faculty Council this week. Members of classes which are not cancelled will be excused at their own individual request to participate in the political rally.

Housing service lists rentals

The University of Idaho Housing Referral Service is alive and well in the SUB and currently has a list of all rentals in the Moscow area, according to Jennifer Bergquist who is heading the program.

"At present we have over a hundred listings of rented apartments," Bergquist said. "Since the program is not funded to hire a person to investigate rentals in the area, we must rely on students to provide this information," she explained.

The referral service also keeps a list of apartments, houses, trailers and rooms that are currently available to rent.

"A few landlords in the area have already contacted us," Bergquist commented. "As soon as the service is better publicized, we hope that more will list their rentals with us."

Service needed

The need for this kind of service has long been expressed by students, Bergquist added. "In most college towns, and Moscow is no exception, the housing situation is principally a landlord's game," she said. "The state of Idaho is additionally hampered by the fact that there are no existing laws to adequately protect the tenant."

The HRS will not be a legal service, however. If students have a tenant-landlord problem, they should contact Legal Aid or the Consumer Protection Service, according to Bergquist.

The potential for HRS is tremendous if student support and demand for it is great enough, Bergquist felt, but it's going "to take time and money to set it up properly."

Many colleges and universities have such programs and they have developed into significant service agencies within the communities, the director said.

"Like Legal Aid and the Consumer Protection Service, the Housing Referral Service has been set up by the ASUI primarily to serve the U of I student, although it is hoped that the community will benefit from the service as well," she said.

Located in SUB

The HRS is located in the SUB in the Consumer Protection Service office. Office hours for the program are Monday and Tuesday from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Other days people can contact the ASUI office for information.

If all students currently renting an apartment, house, trailer or room would fill out this form and drop it by, or mail it to the ASUI office in the SUB, it would help the effectiveness of this program, Bergquist explained.

Included on the form is a place to write comments so the tenant can provide information such as whether or not the landlord imposes unrealistic restrictions; is fair about returning deposits; prompt about making repairs, etc. Conversely if a landlord is particularly fair-minded and responsive to tenant complaints, that information should be noted, Bergquist said.

Health Center gives information

Student health services at the University of Idaho cover just about everything from laryngitis to sex information. These services are open to all students.

In general, the health services provide treatment and advice for physical and mental health, emergency treatment for acute illness, and limited surgery.

Each student is entitled to seven days of hospital care in the health center during each semester. There is a charge of $3.00 per day after that. Meals for hospitalized students are $1.00 per meal.

There is an optional student health and accident insurance program available to students. Dues range from $15.30 per student for nine months to $86.15 for student, spouse, and children for twelve months.

The student health services do not include pregnancy, childbirth, attempted suicide, or "declared or undeclared war or any act there of."

A division of the student health services is the Sex Information Center. It is located in Room 119 of the infirmary. The room is used for ASUI health education, family planning, and study room for medical students.

Sex Information Center

The Sex Information Center provides information on birth control methods, costs and procedures. There is also free literature on venereal diseases, family planning, dieting, and "sexual adjustment in marriage."

Hours of the Sex Information Center are 10 a.m. to noon, Monday through Friday. It is open to all students.

Job-seeks find aid at Placement Center

Want a job when you leave the U of I? That's why you're here; to graduate and get a job. Right?

According to the staff at the University's Placement Center, not enough people realize early enough that the Placement Center can be a great help when students go job-hunting.

Every student should have contacted the office within at least two semesters of when they plan to graduate, said Eloise Frank, placement assistant at the center. Students especially should take advantage of the registration program for graduating persons (seniors and graduate students) and alumni, she said. The registration form gives pertinent data about the person and has a section for references.

Services Beyond Issuing Forms

The center's services extend far beyond filing and issuing the forms to potential employers. A career library has been set up in the center's new headquarters by the faculty lounge in the Faculty Office Building. The library includes catalogs from other schools especially from graduate divisions. It also has company brochures and compilations of job openings in schools and industries. The library is open for browsing and much of the information can be taken out, Frank said. The center has a photocopier for reprinting needed material.

Other services of the center include information on civil service positions, consultation on how to write resumes and a computer matching program. With this latter system, a student fills out a computer form which matches him up with companies in contact with the center. The computer tells if and when each company will be interviewing on campus.

Fewer Companies Interviewing

Frank noted that fewer companies have been sending representatives around to interview. School districts still rely primarily on this method, but many companies in the last two years have cut back their recruitment and now write asking for information on graduates rather than interview on campus. This makes it essential that students have their files at the center and up to date, she added.

Early registration was stressed by Educational Assistant Kathie Swinehart. "If a student comes in on May 31 and says 'Get me a job!' we can't help much."

The earlier they come in, even as juniors, the better," said Frank.

Planning For Underclassmen

Career planning is available to underclassmen. They can obtain this service either individually or in a group. Sidney W. Miller, director of the center, conducts these planning sessions which are designed to give a student an idea of what jobs are available and what jobs his major is preparing him for.

Directories available at the center include Patterson's Guide, a nationwide directory of school districts and the College Placement Annual which gives names and addresses of companies, what personnel they need, the background applicants should have, plus information about the company's size and other characteristics.

A student may interview any time during the last two semesters before graduation.

Industries, Frank said, generally interview in the fall and early spring with November and February being the busiest months. Swinehart said March and early April are the months when most school districts interview.

Each month in the center, a schedule of companies which will be on campus to interview is posted. The list includes information on when and where the company is interviewing and what backgrounds are required.

Mostly Free Services

Most services are free. The center will send five sets of credentials to employers after graduation free. Each additional set costs $1 to cover production and mailing costs. After that one year, the cost is $5 for each five sets and $1 for each additional set sent during that year. This does not apply to veterans.

Further information can be obtained from the Placement Center and from its bulletin "Career Planning and Placement Center."

Voter drive set for next week

Most voters will have a chance to register and request absentee ballots for the November 7 General Election during a drive on campus next Monday and Tuesday.

Absentee registration forms will be available for anyone wishing to register in any of the 43 Idaho counties. Senator Mike D'Antario, who is the ASUI organizer for the drive, noted that there is essentially no residence requirement to register to vote in any Idaho county.

Booths will be set up both days at the following locations and hours: East and West entrances of the Gault, Upham, and Wallace Complex cafeterias, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.; Administration Building and Physical Science Building, 8 a.m. to 12 a.m. and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.; and the SUB from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Also the Spurs will be delivering absentee registration forms to fraternities and sororities during the lunch hours of both days.

D'Antario stressed that the registration forms must be signed in the presence of a notary public. Notaries Public will be stationed at each of the booths, and the forms must be brought to them and signed in their presence or they become void.

The absentee ballot requests, which will be sent out by the ASUI, do not need to be notarized unless they are to go to the state of Montana. The forms are valid for the states of Idaho, Hawaii, Alaska, Washington, Oregon, California, Utah, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, and Montana.

D'Antario noted that if a student was from a state where the form was void, and still wanted to vote, he could vote in Latah County (by registering here.)

When the absentee ballots are received, some will have to be notarized also. Two notaries on campus will be available for that service: Adam Everson of Student Services-Loans in the Administration Annex, Room 208; and Leo McGarvey of Student Services-Affairs, UCC 228.

The following dates should be noted so no deadlines will be missed:

- October 27—last day to register with precinct registrar
- October 31—last day to register by absentee registration request
- November 4—last day to register with county clerk
- November 6—last day to request absentee ballots
- November 7, 8 p.m.—absentee ballots must be in—election day

the people speak

Symms supporter replies.

Time has come for a more logical and reasonable approach. The public ear has been bent by hysterical half truths about Steven D. Symms, Republican candidate for first district congress, for too long. The most peculiar aspect about these attacks is typified by the latest letter to the editor featured in the October third Idaho Argonaut. Specifically it uses no direct or full quotes made by Symms, and uses a series of implied truths, which, in fact, are not true. It uses an undated editorial from an undated edition of the Lewiston Morning Tribune as its only source of documentation, this being somewhat less than valid as a resource for fact, but then, that wasn't what was being looked for.

Not true

The most exploited attack, is that directed at the stand on education supposedly made by Symms. The Letter in the Argonaut, and firstly the Tribune, said that Symms wants to turn the college of forestry over to Boise Cascade, and the college of mines over to Anaconda Copper. This is not really true. We should utilize their knowledge in education, however, for who knows more about forestry than Boise Cascade. If a person were to do work for Boise Cascade or Anaconda Copper, or work with them on some project, and this person's major is in some related field, then why shouldn't he receive credit for that practical experience, such as is done by the political science department today. You could hardly call that "turning the college over." The letter also says Symms likes tuition. With the recent court rulings about out of state tuition being unconstitutional, the state of Idaho could be facing a tremendous financial crisis. It has been said that if this does come about, "Idaho could face bankruptcy." He is no more in favor of tuition than I, yet he wants to look ahead. He is in favor of many things that would make student fees less expensive, so that if the tuition charge does come about, it will become less of a burden. These programs are deleted from the Argonaut letter. Further, one must realize that the man can be quoted directly, instead of some undated implied truth, as wanting to "upgrade education" and "motivate students and equip them to live in a modern world." You can't say Symms is opposed to education, as the Arg titled the letter, when he specifically states he is concerned over the quality of our education. The letter fails to present a full representation of the story. It becomes even further removed as a major issue

Likes Talisman House issue

The Sept. 29 issue of the Argonaut, put together by people associated with the Talisman House, was undoubtedly the best issue I've seen in the year I've been in Moscow.

The articles were relevant, that is, immensely interesting, humorous and/or when one realizes that the job of a federal congressman doesn't directly involve what form of education the individual states subscribe to, and if it did, Mr. Symms' intentions are to give students a larger role in determining their own goals and objectives.

Milk to Babies

The idea that Symms does not support medical care or hospitals is something of an unusual invention. Here, again, it is not true. I didn't know how to answer this mysterious fallacy, except to forecast that eventually they will say he wants to deny milk to babies.

The October third letter made quite a point of saying that Symms would not fit into the group in the Idaho-Washington D.C. team. The author said "Williams fits into the Andrus-Church mold," and that Symms is probably too much his own man. There is an old saying that if two men agree on something then one isn't needed. It is taken for granted by the author that just because Church and Symms won't always agree, that they will not be able to get along in Washington. I think that may be a bit presumptuous on the authors part, because anyone who is familiar with Symms knows he is an easy man to get along with and very reasonable. The idea of no unity in the congressional team is absurd, matters of concern to this state are as important to Symms as any other member of the delegation. I also do not think that the cause of democracy would best be served by a carbon copy, "mold" form of representation.

Look at Statements

The article mentioned "that all one can do is take a look at the statements of both candidates." I agree completely. I only wish the people in the Williams camp would worry more about what Williams will do instead of talking about what he won't do.

I hope the public does fully explore the truth. If everyone knew what Symms is really saying without the interpreted versions of this areas predominately Democratic newspapers, then once and for all this hysteria tactic could be stopped by reality, and we could release ourselves from this pointless political nonsense. Then all would know that Symms is no less a "champion" for education than Williams. Let us get down to the serious issues that are here now, instead of trying to make new ones.

Thank's for the crap

As a political science graduate student, and having received my undergraduate diploma from the University, I have seen several of the last six Senates do many good and some not so good things for student betterment. However, I believe I have finally seen what tops them all, and needless to say, it was the Senate's action on the supposed appearance of Jerry Rubin. I knew that all Senates had legislative power but I begin to wonder about ours when they begin to act as a court to tell all us dear little children whom we can and cannot hear. I was especially pleased at the open-minded remark made by Tom Hill. As quoted in the Argonaut, Mr. Hill said: "I don't see how anybody of this point of view can do any service to anyone." Right on pal. I guess that to be different is wrong. Or at

Let Rubin sing

The ASUI Senate continues to generate controversy. They upset one group when deciding not to have Jerry-Rubin speak. They upset another group when deciding to have The Grassroots play. As we are a body of rational people entering adulthood and the world, could there not be compromise? Let the Senate arrange to have Jerry Rubin sing onstage with the Grassroots, and to have the Grassroots discuss politics in an open forum with Jerry Rubin. I venture to guess it might be a pregnant day. It would probably draw an audience that would otherwise be mutually exclusive. Optimistically thinking, it perhaps might break even, thus encouraging such events in the future.

least Mr. Hill must think so. Towards this action just let me make a couple of remarks of my own.

I don't know how many students were at Idaho when Thomas Haydn and Phillip Abbott Luce were here but I assure you that the Ballroom had more people for these two men than any of the other speakers. Now stop to think as to why that might have been Mr. Hill. My hypothesis brings me to think that it just might have been because students did want to hear the opposite point of view so they might have an opportunity to weigh the issues and decide for themselves. Now we can't even do that because Big Brother is our censor. Keep it up guys- You really did it all for us this time. I just can't find the words to thank you other than what a bunch of crap.

A new play by N. Richard Nash, author of "The Rainmaker" and "110 in the Shade," will receive its third production Oct. 12-14 at the University Auditorium.

Open school offers ABC's in the country

A new educational concept is being offered to the parents of the Moscow-Pullman area, with the opening of the Auroral Skies Center; an open school.

The nonprofit center is located 22 miles from Moscow, approximately seven miles North of Palouse, Washington. The center doesn't look like a school, or for that matter like a center. It is located on 22 acres of land on the lower slopes of Ladow Butte, in a tranquil country setting. There is an older two story farm house which is being reconditioned, with a new addition constructed. There is a machine shed that is being improved to be used as a learning center and a large red barn which will house animals.

The center has been described as an existentially based (person centered) gestalt awareness community, where the individual students interest and desires are of primary concern.

Martin Treon, Director of Auroral Skies, and a member of the faculty of Washington State University, says that the living and learning at the school is "Self defined, self initiated, self paced and directed and self evaluated; where each person can come into open interaction and relationship with her or his physical and social environment."

According to Treon, the school will have person-centered presentations, workshops, interactions, and instructional periods that creatively relate the acquisition of basic academic skills of reading, writing, spelling, and arithmetic, to the lives of those involved.

Treon said safe and reliable transportation will be provided for all students. The tuition, which ranges from $35 to $75 per month, is determined by yearly family income. The tuition covers the cost of books, materials, supplies and transportation.

"Echoes" is being made available to college and university theaters and professional theaters outside a 100-mile radius of New York City by the American Playwrights' Theatre (APT).

Previous APT offerings presented at the university were "Summertime" and "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," both well received.

Members of the three-person cast are Deborah McGee as Tilda; Lou Rofrano, as Sam; and Dick St. George as "The Person."

According to student play director, Linda McDonald, the setting is indefinite, the characters somewhat abstract and the situations timeless. While those attributes are typical of theater of the absurd drama, the play as a whole is not because its themes are recognizable. "The audience can identify with the conflict of generations, the dilemma of illusion and reality, and the poignant love story that exists within the play," McDonald said.

"The play is not comic, tragic or melodramatic alone but all three at once," she said, adding that the audience must participate emotionally in the production.

Tickets go on sale Monday, Oct. 9, for the production which will be a feature of the Parents Association Weekend. Tickets are $2 for non-students and $1 for elementary and secondary students. University students may obtain tickets with their ASUI activities card. Tickets will be sold at the Student Union Building and at Carter's Drug.

What's happening

Fall is a cabaret

by Mark Fritzier

Gorgeous! Have you paused for just a moment these last few days to absorb the incredibly delicious colors of fall in this town? I've been several autumn seasons here but this one has to be the most beautiful yet. Birches and maples stand ignited in a golden flame whenever light touches them. Elms, oaks, even willows offer up their own hues in counterpoint. All hell has broken loose quietly above our heads following the touch of the recent burning frosts. Look up.

Much has been written about the colors and feelings of fall by too many people, so I won't carry on at length here, but I can't stop relishing the view. Just try a drive in the afternoon (late afternoon sunlight is the best) along Jefferson Street or east, up First Street. You'll be amply rewarded. Practically everywhere in town has color so just wander. Fall is an electric song and the trees of Moscow are singing in technicolor.

Cabaret nightclub

The big news this weekend is the "Cabaret Club" in the SUB after the Idaho-WSU game. This is a unique offering by the Program Board in an effort to provide alternative entertainment possibilities to the students. The people on the Program Board have proven themselves capable of producing excellent events and a great deal of work has gone into this one.

The Cabaret will feature the traditional Baron of Beef buffet beginning at 6:30, lasting to 8:00 p.m. Background entertainment will be provided by local talent from the Music School and the Coffeehouse. The theme is that of a real nightclub with quality food and entertainment.

The feature entertainment will be excellent, judging from the reviews. Bruce and Dixie Lee Innes, the original performers of "One Tin Soldier" with the old "Original Cast" group, will stage their show from a specially constructed stage, set among the Cabaret patrons. These two singers are extremely popular in Canada and are catching on in the States.

The dinner and show will cost $3.00 for students and $3.50 for non-students. If you just want the show, it will cost $1.50. I recommend strongly that you consider taking in the Cabaret when you try to think of something different and exciting to do this weekend.

What's up, Portnoy?

Movies are offering a little something for everyone. In Moscow we have Richard Benjamin and Karen Black in "Portnoy's Complaint". If you wonder what Portnoy has to complain about, have a look. Playing next door to Portnoy is "What's Up Doc". (Rather significant title when you find out what Portnoy bitches about). "Doc" is a good, old-fashioned comedy complete with chase scene through the streets of San Francisco a la "Mad, Mad World". Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand pull the fast ones, or rather Barbra does with O'Neal trailing dumbly along. The whole movie is worth the last line, if you saw "Love Story".

Pullman is featuring Clint Eastwood in "Joe Kidd." What can you say about "Joe Kidd, or Eastwood, for that matter? Goldie Hawn tries again in "Butterflies are Free". This is a story of a married and divorced 19 year old who moves next door to a blind would-be guitar player. Oppenheimer says its great.

Dancing pledges

We have some dances for the shuckers and jivers. The pledges are doing it this weekend in a couple of numbers in the SUB. Check the information Desk for times and places. They're free and open to all comers.

The Black Student Union is offering a record dance in the SUB Ballroom at 9 p.m. tonight.

Oh, yes, the SUB is offering a film tonight and tomorrow night in the Borah Theatre at 7 and 9:00 p.m. Anthony Quinn as a French military officer suffers through the recent fall of the French colonial empire in Indo-China and Algeria in this military pot boiler.

Chess is with us. If you're interested, or if the recent World Chess play-off piqued your curiosity, the Chess Club is meeting in the Blue Room of the SUB at 2:00 p.m. Sunday. Bring your pieces if you want to play.

Idaho state bar exam; criticized, defended

by Kimi Kondo

Amid controversy surrounding the 1972 Idaho State Bar Examination, widely divergent opinions have been expressed regarding the purpose and necessity for the exam.

Strong criticism arose last week after results of the bar exam were published and only 38 of 86 taking it passed.

Administered by the Idaho State Bar Association under the supervision of the State Supreme Court, the exam was seen by some as a method of limiting the number of attorneys in the state by those practicing attorneys who might have a vested interest in protecting the field from newcomers.

"It's rigged," contended one third-year law student who declined to be identified.

Reports have circulated that the test stressed specialized areas of Idaho law which even some practicing lawyers might not have been able to answer.

Historically the bar exam has functioned as a means of ensuring some standardization of quality of attorneys permitted into the field.

"Before the case method was used at Harvard in 1870, law school training wasn't widespread, and until the last few years, an exam of this sort was needed as many new lawyers trained under the supervision of another practicing attorney," explained Scott Higginbottom, undergraduate pre-law advisor.

"A good law school does not prepare a student for bar exams." — Higginbottom

Now many question whether an exam of this sort is actually needed in light of increasingly rigorous training in all law schools; some have also felt that a different type of test should be administered.

"A good law school does not prepare a student for bar exams," said Higginbottom.

"The best law schools are ones that stress basic attitudes, concepts, and skills. The problem now is that there isn't any comprehensive culminating test other than this exam," he said.

Higginbottom said that perhaps the law school itself might administer this exam, while a separate specialized test might be required specifically to demonstrate competence on Idaho law.

Law School Dean Albert R. Menard, Jr. tended to disagree, saying that he believed these exams were necessary.

"Every law student should have a comprehensive exam and review to pull things together. It is also an 'outside audit' and verification of what we've done within the law school," said Menard.

He also said he didn't believe that the test was meant to limit the number of lawyers practicing in the state.

"We haven't seen copies of the test and so can't comment on the contentions that some areas were too specialized," he explained. "However, I also see a difference between localized questions and specialized questions."

"If the exam was specialized, then that isn't desirable. However, localized knowledge of some aspects of a state's law are necessary to protect the public," he said. "I see this as the consumer movement at it's best."

Law Professor Robert Jones agreed saying, "this is the best practical way of determining the applicant's qualifications to practice law."

He also explained that a character investigation is conducted for each applicant and letters of recommendation play a large part in determination of qualification.

"Every law student should have a comprehensive exam and review to pull things together." — Dean Menard

"The candidate must pass the character examination before he is allowed to take the written one. There was one case that I know of this year, and possibly others, where the applicant was denied permission to take the written test on the basis of the character exam."

Jones also didn't see the test as weighted in favor of Idaho law school graduates. (Twenty-four out of 40 University of Idaho students passed the bar, while only 14 of 46 out of state graduates succeeded.)

In addition, there was a correlation between class standing of the graduating Idaho class and test results on the bar exam.

Jones saw an additional factor beyond possible weaknesses in the exam structure.

"Among the lower part of the class are people who quit studying in their senior year in law school and failed," he asserted.

Last year all University of Idaho graduates passed the exam.

Menard said, "We didn't do everything wrong here. We provided 45 per cent of the people who took the exam, and 60 per cent of our people passed."

That is a total of 24 successful students out of 40 who graduated from the law school in 1972.

Another third year student who also declined to be identified said he was worried about his impending exam, but did plan to practice in Idaho when he finished school.

"If there is some limitation planned, it doesn't seem right to put out that many graduates," he observed.

Referring to the new College of Law now under construction, he added, "If more students are to be admitted, they should put a guy on notice from the first day that a good percentage won't pass the bar exam anyway."

Responding to remarks made by John Sharp, president of the Idaho Bar Association, who said that the high failure rate was due to educational permissiveness at the law school, second-year student Mike Hannaher said "He should come up here and take some of these classes."

Jones also disagreed, and said, "We certainly don't have permissive education at Idaho or at any other accredited law school that I know about."

First year law student Ron Kerl, said he wasn't too worried yet. "It's something you can kind of put off, but I will look at my standing after the first year and may decide not to stay."

"If more students are to be admitted, they should put a guy on notice from the first day that a good percentage won't pass the bar exam anyway." — student

Echoing this, another first year student, Hank Boomer, said he felt that if any limiting of practicing attorneys was being done, it might be better that it be done at the law school level before $8,000 was invested in an education.

Boomer said he thought the school might stiffen its standards, but said he doubted if this would happen.

"They have to justify the new law building and fill it up," he said.

Menard said he foresaw no change in either admission or retention policies of the law school.

Women's volleyball meets

Plans are underway for the women's intercollegiate volleyball team to travel to the Eastern Area College Women's Sports Association Volleyball Tournament at the University of Montana.

This meet, at Missoula Nov. 3, 4, and 5, will be followed by the Northwest College Women's Volleyball Tournament in Pullman Dec. 1 and 2.

Team practice sessions are being held Oct. 17, 18, and 19 at 4:15 p.m. in the

Frosh football game set

The Idaho freshman football team will play the Boise State College frosh at 1:30 Monday afternoon in the new Idaho stadium. All students will be admitted on cards.

The south side stands will be used and the southeast gate is the only point of entry. Fans are requested to remain in the center five sections.

Water poloists open '72 season

The Vandal water polo team will participate in the Northwest Invitational meet at Portland, Ore. this weekend. First home action will come Oct. 13 against Gonzaga University at the Idaho Swimming Center.

Another big home date will be a match with Washington State. That will be Oct. 27, the Friday evening of Homecoming Weekend.

At present the tough goalie position apparently belongs to sophomore Jere Johnston. Center forward and right forward starters will be seniors John Aspell and Kim Kirkland. The left forward spot is a battle between sophomores Burt Stratton and Chris Gordon.

Two juniors, Larry Kupper and Scott MacFarland, will be at left and right guard. At center back there is another toss up between juniors Darwin Horn and Frank Dehoney.

Injury and illness has taken its toll as Peter Lungren, a sophomore guard, is out with a shoulder injury. Jeff Comfort was working toward a starting spot at center back when he developed mononucleosis, putting him out for the season.

Other names that will be prominent in water polo at Idaho this year include Greg Witt, a capable scorer as the back-up center forward.
