people at the ASUI Outdoor Program mean just that.

The Outdoor Program, new to the University this year, sponsors such activities as rafting, hiking, backpacking, rock climbing, ski touring, biking, kayaking and snowshoeing. The center also rents much of the equipment that is necessary for these activities including tents, rafts, sleeping bags, snowshoes, backpacks, cross-country skis and climbing gear.

"I guess you can say that I started the Outdoor Program," Jim Rennie, program director, said. "I first suggested that the University start such a project.'

Rennie originally submitted the proposal to the University in October 1972. The idea was discussed through the winter and in May of this year was accepted. Applications for the job of coordinator were accepted and Rennie was chosen.

Rennie explained that the purpose of the Outdoor Program is to provide individuals with the opportunity to get out into the wilderness and enjoy the natural environment.

'We do anything in the general outdoor field," Rennie noted. "One guideline is that the activities are to be of a nonmotorized and non-competitive nature, so people who want to play tennis and football are sent somewhere else.'

The program started with the beginning of summer school and is continuing through the regular school year. Summer school students enjoyed many receational activities set up by the Outdoor Program and many more such activities are

Summer activities included a hike to Sand Mountain in the St. Joe National Forest, a three-day backpack to Oregon's planned for the current school year, Wallowa Mountains, a float down the St. Blue Mountains and rafting adventures down the Lower Selway River.

More activities are planned for the fall

"We are open to all kinds of suggestions on what we can do as far as outdoor activities go," Rennie commented. "If you have any ideas come in and we'll see what we can do.'

He noted that the Outdoor Program has programmed activities but will help set up individual and group activities separate from those conducted by the Outdoor office.

"Many individuals and living groups ask us to set up a weekend or day trip," he noted. "We help them set up the place and help them locate equipment that they need. Then they can go out by themselves to enjoy the environment."

The Outdoor Program also offers structured trips such as weekend backpacking and rafting trips. In these instances, the office plans where to go, the equipment needed, and transportation, then takes a group of interested people along.

"Everyone who is interested in taking these trips with us is welcome," Rennie "Faculty, staff, students and community people can come along."

He said that all scheduled and planned trips will be posted on the bulletin board in the Outdoor Program Office (in the basement of the SUB). Anyone interested in a particular activity should then sign up on the list. No phone call acceptances are permitted, he noted.

"People should check the boards in the office to see what's up each week,' Rennie said. "The weather is so questionable here we may have to reschedule an event so it is advisable to check once a week.'

Included in the plans for the fall

Christmas vacation. Rennie said that the two week tour beginning Dec. 30, will cost $120. This includes accommodations, transportation, food and other odds and

"We tried to schedule some real good cross-country skiing at a reasonably low cost," Rennie said. "Colorado has good skiing and good accommodations for a good amount. There will be cabins to stay in for those who want, or they can camp out in sleeping bags if they prefer." The Outdoor Program is also conducting a basic outdoor course which is designed to insure the comfort and safety of the participants. The course will consist of four evening seminars that will discuss equipment and techniques.

Evening slide shows and film strips are presented every Wednesday night and include such subjects as the American Wilderness, Grand Canyon, and skiing.

The ASUI Senate and the SUB Board provide the funds for operating the Outdoor Program, each contributing onehalf of the money.

Rennie said that he receives a salary for his job of coordinator. The office also has a secretary who works 10 hours a week on irregular help. There is a workstudy position still open which will handle the renting out of equipment.

"There is equipment here for rental to anyone who needs it," Rennie said. "The cost is minimal. The idea is to make the equipment available at a low cost, not to make money. We'll be glad to break even. The whole idea is that the equipment will pay for itself by the time it wears out. If we come out a little ahead, the money will go back into the outdoor program.'

General Faculty Rejects Tenure Proposal 138-14

" By Kenton Bird Argonaut Political Writer

After being conditionally approved by the Faculty Council on Tuesday, a working draft of a revised tenure policy was overwhelmingly rejected by the General Faculty yesterday afternoon.

Following a 20 minute oration by Law Professor Bob Jones attacking the proposal, the General Faculty voted 138-14 to send the working draft back to the Faculty Council for revision. In addition, the Faculty directed that a letter originally intended as a cover letter to accompany the policy revision be sent to the Regents outlining the Faculty's objections to the Regents' new guidelines on tenure.

At Tuesday's meeting, the council had voted 12-3 to transmit the proposed revision to the General Faculty, indicating that the Faculty Council approved of the document except for the exceptions as noted in the (then) cover letter and requesting the General Faculty to transmit the policy revision and the cover letter to the Regents.

(Actions of the Faculty Council must be approved by the General Faculty prior to their transmittal to the Regents).

Critics of the tenure policy revision argued that inclusion of students and nondepartmental personnel on tenure review committees would shift the responsibility for tenure decisions away from that department's tenured faculty, and this objection was pointed up in the cover letter, which had been drafted by a Faculty Council subcommittee.

"The effect of adding the irreducible minimum of one person in each category (students, non-tenured faculty and faculty from another department) as required by the Board will be to make the tenured department faculty either a minority or at most exactly one-half of the voting members of the committee in as many as fourteen departments at the University of Idaho: in three more departments the tenured faculty hold a majority of one," the letter states.

'This problem is further compounded when the committee functions on competency reviews; in seventeen departments the tenured faculty would not even have a majority vote," the report continued. "By long-standing traditional practice among universities the decision on tenure rests primarily with the tenured members of the faculty....These well-established principles lead us to protest granting a vote to non-tenured and non-departmental faculty as well as students.'

The Faculty Council letter takes issue with the State Board's guidelines in several other areas.

The new guidelines call for the elimination of the "tenure or out" concept, under which a faculty member who isn't granted tenure is dismissed. "Its elimination," the report argues, "tends to negate the concept of a thorough performance evaluation leading to a clear decision after a reasonable probationary

In addition, it contends, the Regents' directive contradicts the nationallyrecognized AAUP policy (American Association of University Professors) which states that a faculty member whose appointments have been renewed for seven years is automatically regarded as having obtained tenure status.

The Faculty Council covering letter also objects to the Board's mandate of holding competency reviews every fifthyear rather than every seventh year (as supported by the faculty) as well as disagreeing with the Regents' determination of dismissal procedures.

The letter notes, "We believe that our tenure system, when it is allowed to work properly, will assure that in virtually all cases, only the most competent faculty will receive tenure....

We are aware that no system is apt to be perfect; our efforts to improve our policies are evident in the numerous revisions made since tenure was first adopted by the University in 1967. We will continue to revise to achieve improvements; but we do ask that revisions not be forced upon us which in fact undercut the very goals we share.'

the report concludes. In a substantive change from an earlier draft, the Faculty Council voted 9-8 on Tuesday to remove a controversial section on the review of the continuing competency of tenured faculty members.

As the proposal originally read, "For the tenure policy to function properly, it is necessary that faculty members takeseriously not only their obligation to recommend the granting of tenure to professionally competent colleagues, but also their professional obligation carefully to appraise the continuing competency of tenured colleagues.

Physics Professor Edson Peck, among others, had opposed this passage, arguing it would promote "mutual distrust" among faculty members. Peck also is against inclusion of students on faculty review committees.

As the proposal had been originally presented to the Faculty, there were provisions for two committees in the proposed tenure system - a universitywide competency review committee and departmental tenure-recommending / review committees - both of which would include voting student members.

Inclusion of students on tenure committees was mandated by the Regents as part of a major change in tenure guidelines passed at their June meeting.

The four state four-year colleges were directed to prepare a proposed revision of their institution's tenure policy for presentation to the State Board at their meeting in Twin Falls Oct. 9-12.

Turning the Channel. to New Programs

Since the flop of the Valdy concert last weekend an unnoticeable but rather tense vibration has been surfacing periodically around the ASUI establishment. No one admits it publicly, but on the one-to-one level the critical tone is "there is something wrong in the area of programs."

The problem in that area was not as noticeable last year because of the efficient Mary Wickstrom-Steve Smith team who did an outstanding job coordinating activities. Although, even last year certain problems that are now evident were creeping up on that department.

One of the reasons the Valdy concert drew only a flicker of a crowd instead of a fire is the downfall of many activities at this University — student apathy.

Perhaps students are just too busy doing the routine things like beer drinking to do the creative and unusual things like supporting cabarets, speakers, and performers.

Perhaps it is because most of the students are satisfied with the typical boredom of Moscow that too often cramps them; or maybe they are too uncultured to support the unnamed but rising stars.

But even after these assumptions are made there is more wrong with programs than the fact that students are apathetic. There are many things that come off around here that are not big. Last year's Cabaret was a success, so was Occult week and Marat Sade, a drama production that was so packed everynight, many students could not see it.

There must then be a missing ingredient that this year's program department, under the directorship of Steve Smith, doesn't fulfill. The ingredient which Smith fails to sustain in his department is publicity.

This, however, is only an outgrowth of the cancer that is eating away the rest of Smith's department. Smith has too many irons in the fire and they are all burning him out.

Since the unofficial departure of Ken Buxton in entertainment, Smith has been trying to handle both program director and his old job of entertainment coordinator. Neither of these major jobs were made for the same person to handle, but stubbornly Smith tries.

There has been no attempt on Smith's part to negotiate with Buxton or hire a competent PR man for entertainment.

This is exactly where programs falls short this year. You can not, as Smith would like, blame KUOI, KUID, The Idahonian or The Argonaut for not publicizing his programs.

None of these are public relations Bureaus, they are professional or semi-professional media.

If communication failed on Valdy and if it fails in the future, the fault can only rest within Smith's department.

No one can wear too many hats and do any one job efficiently; and no matter how well Smith handled entertainment last year he can't attempt to be the big boss in two areas this year.

Programs will continue to fail if more publicity and organization does not come from that office. That department has the people it needs to make programs go, but it lacks the foresight of what the students need.

And what the students need is information and more information until there arises a frenzy of excitement to support the people like Valdy. —GRAMER

A leading ASUI bureaucrat, John Hecht, has confessed to writing several letters to the Argonaut under an assumed Hecht, the chairman of the ASUI Issues and Forums committee, a member of the Communications Board and its subcommittee for the Argonaut, and a member of the Officer Education Program (formerly ROTC) committee, disclosed that he submitted two letters signed "Oban Samesa Espajenenia, Animal Husbandry Major," one of which was published Oct. 27, 1972, and the other which appeared in last Tuesday's issue (Sept. 25).

Both letters dealt with Big Name Entertainment and Hecht contends the deception was necessary partly because of his involvement with other areas of

After the letter was received this week commenting on last Saturday's Valdy concert, several Argonaut staff members observed that the style was similar to several other letters on the same subject received in the past.

A check of last year's Args revealed a letter on the Grass Roots concert signed by "Oban" and a trip to the registrar's office showed that no one by that name is, or ever has been, registered at the University of Idaho.

Hecht would write.

When confronted with the evidence, Hecht told the Argonaut that yes, he was Oban Samesa Espajenenia.

His letter of last fall made implications that Jimmy Page, guitarist for Led Zeppelin, was attempting to arrange to "jam" with the Grass Roots during their concert here. Oban's letter requested the ASUI to hold the Grass Roots to their contract. (Hecht also confessed to starting the rumor that Led Zeppelin was to be playing in Spokane the night before the Grass Roots' appearance here, to make Page's proposal seem probable.)

Hecht said the purpose of this letter was to create more interest in the Grass Roots' concert and believe that from 200 to 300 more students attended the concert student government.

In addition, Hecht has expressed opinions vocally similar to those reflected in the letters and several of us on the staff agreed that they sounded like something

But Hecht explained his reasons for the use of an alias.

Criticisms and Coonrods

"The student evaluation system has been getting a number of criticisms." -Vice-President Robert Coonrod Criticisms can get results. The editor's column last issue has inspired such understatements as the above. The column did an excellent job bringing out several problems with student evaluation.

But to keep from flattering the boss, I disagree that student evaluations have never led to an improvement in teaching. Such a statement is another "sand castle which can be easily smashed."

Evidently, some of the problems with the system can also be smashed. One problem lies with the administration of student evaluations. According to present policy, students are supposed to administer the actual administration of the evaluation.

Professors are supposed to ...

Sig Rolland, chairman of faculty council, stated that professors are supposed to appoint a student who makes sure that plenty of time is allowed for the evaluations, and turns them in to the graduate assistant in psychology who

This isn't always being done - Clifford Dobler, professor of business law, told about a faculty member who collected them himself, inspected them before turning them in, and destroyed one that said he should retire.

prepares them for the computer.

But al least he carried out the evaluation. No one is really sure that all faculty members do. The present policy allows for a department to substitute its own procedurer for the standard University evaluation, such as biology and foreign languages have done. These are not run through the computer with all the rest, they're immediately distributed to the various department heads.

Examine and inspect

The department heads can inspect them and then the evaluations and computer print-outs are turned over to the specific faculty members. No one else nessarily gets to examine a department chairman's evaluation.

The policy states that the evaluations go through the academic vice-president's office, but he said, "Physically they don't, they go directly from the computer to the department head." Coonrod went on to say that students should report any violations in the policy to his office, since they aren't set up to spot violations.

Students should have some place to register alleged violations, and get action on their complaints.

Other changes

But other changes are needed. Evaluations should be moved up earlier in the semester. Instead of having them come out shortly before finals, they should be given in a one-week period shortly after mid-terms.

Some type of computer print-out should be given to higher administrators. Sutdents are feeding their remarks into a computer which feeds them right back to the guy who may have been 10 feet away when they were writing them down. How can administrators adequately judge someone without looking at this information?

The administration of the system becomes doubly important as students gain more voice in the tenure procedure. Sig Rolland put it this way, "We've got a system, now let's make it work."

But there's no point in stopping there some changes are needed in the basic system. The next episode of "Changes and Criticisms and Computers and Coonrods" will suggest some.

Will the Real John Hecht Please Stand Up on just the slim hope that Page might be there.

Kenton Bird

In Tuesday's letter, Oban attacked student apathy and the poor attendance at the Valdy concert and theorized that maybe WSU (mistakenly identified as Washington State College, obviously in an attempt by Hecht to make a "foreign student's" letter credible) could provide all the entertainment for the area.

Hecht explained that he will be writing material for the Argonaut this fall, both reviews for the arts and entertainment section and commentaries for the "oredit" page, and he "felt use of a different name on the editorial page would give the opinions a better perspective."

He said some of his opponents have criticized him for his involvement in many different student activities and with his name in several different areas, he wouldn't want to be considered spreading himself too thin. (Hecht says he isn't.)

"I felt the use of a pen-name pointed up the issue the letter raised rather than stressing the authorship of the author's personal involvement with the issue, Hecht commented.

When asked whether he thought use of a false name was an acceptable technique. Hecht replied "It's a decent vehicle for getting opinions through."

A somewhat similar letter on entertainment following last spring's Blood Sweat & Tears concert was signed "Raoul Mendez." (The registrar again confirmed that no such person has ever attended the U of I.).

But Hecht "categorically denies" that he was also Raoul. However, he conceded he had an idea who it was.

"I have a strong suspicion who it is... I think it's another student... in a similar situation... who feels the need to express his opinion," he said.

Where did he get the name "Oban Samesa Espajenenia?" Loosely translated it means "hoax, exrement of taurion" in Russian ("bullshit" in simple

Now that Oban has been exposed, Hecht says that won't preclude him from writing other letters under an assumed name in the future. "I may use my own name though — it's unfortunate that my identity was revealed — it will make it more difficult for anonymy."

Walsh Concert Report Hit and Hit Again

The critique that you read about the Joe Walsh concert in last Tuesday's edition probably left many people with the wrong impression. The article that you read was the end result of editing and space limitations.

The story should not have ended with the thought that Joe Walsh and Barnstorm played a few songs in the name of stardom and called it quits. The last part of the article pointed this out before it was edited

As a matter of fact, I'm sure that printed somewhere on those Septemberfest tickets were the words, "The Crowd Shall Dictate." In this case all 5,000 screamers got their way and Joe Walsh, a man of explosive talent and enormous crowd appeal, came back on stage for not one but two encores. At that point, the crowd reaches an inseparably orgasmic state as the Joe and Barnstorm oscillate them with an old Jeff Beck riffer, "Rock Me Baby." Then, showing no mercy at all, stings the vibrating crowd with an old-Gang special, "Funk

'You Need Clarification'

Though I admire Craig Marshall's use of words and assessment of the WSU Performing Arts Center, the small crowd and certain problems in production, I believe the review of Septemberfest needs some clarification.

Marshall dismissed "Barnstorm" much too easily and spent too much time saying negative things about "Sories." They needed to be said but not to such a great extent. Marshall used a column and a half to put them down while giving the main act barely a column.

With an assortment of eerie synthesized sounds, bluesy rhythms, mellowing percussion and clear ringing guitar fiffs, Walsh and his group had the less than halfed filled auditorium moving on the same wavelength. They're not just a basic rock band with guitars and drummer but also employ synthesizer, gong, tympani, congas, organ, a grand piano (complete with candles) and flute, all with innovation. Marshall said Joe Walsh is Barnstorm but even though he could've dominated the performance he didn't let Marshall said, "They do about an hour of shit from their new decide to call it quits." However, they also did two James Gang songs instantly reacted to by the audience - "Tend My Garden" and "Funk No. 49." They didn't just call it quits either. The audience brought them back for two encores.

I mostly agree with Marshall's evaluation of "Stories" though I believe Ian Lloyd's voice is not that poor an imitation of Rod Stewart. It's just not as wholesomely raspy as Stewart's. And "Brother Louie" deserves mention. (Perhaps you missed it, Craig, when you 'went to take a piss"). I don't usually like Top 40 songs but this one has nice interplay between piano and lead guitar and good lyrics.

It is too bad about the attendence isn't it, Craig? It was such a bargain, too, at $1.50, $2.50 and $3. Perhaps the suckers will fill the place for Three Dog Night at $4.50 and $5. A fellow music lover, J. Paul Roy

This writer had forecast the step was one of the most detrimental ever taken by the legislators and would precipitate an increasingly bitter fight on higher education funding. The present argument on senior status is only one small chapter of a volume of acrimonious squabbling to follow.

This is casting no opprobrium on BSC, except that the U of I. and Idaho State University were long established fourvear state institutions long before BSC came on the scene.

As has been repeatedly proven, Idaho with its present population can only support two institutions of higher learning, not three.

The only remedy, perhaps, is when Idaho's population exceeds a million and when its tax base correspondingly

Perhaps the U of I should have been located at Boise in the 1890's but it wasn't and those millions of dollars of buildings can't be moved from Moscow.

Boise's politicians at that time decided to pick the Idaho State Prison instead of the state university, a grevious mistake that Boiseans must now suffer.

BSC's educational quality now suffers because of lack of funds and adequate buildings. The Boise legislators, despite representing the largest population center in the state, face the combined opposition of most of the remainder of the state in attempting to promote its college and other Boise-oriented ventures. East and North Idaho join up in opposition frequently in these petty regional iealousies.

Every neighboring state has only two major state universities, all of them of much larger size than Idaho except Montana, which is about the same size. and Wyoming, which has only one state university.

In many cases, the large state universities are not located in the large population center. In Oregon, the major universities are located at the comparatively small communities at Salem and Corvallis, not Portland; in Washington State, WSU is situated at-Pullman, only nine miles from Moscow; in Colorado, at Ft. Collins and Boulder, not Denver; in Wyoming, at Laramie, not Chevenne.

The plan proposed by Milton Small, director of Higher Education, would designate the U of I as the primary research center among the four institutions of higher learning. On the face of it, it would place U of I at top, with ISU and BSC in the second level, and the fourth institution, Lewis-Clark State College at Lewiston, at a third level. His plan is commendable and based on historical and factual realities.

ISU President Dr. William E. (Bud) Davis objects to the plan, as can be expected; likely Dr. John Barnes. President of BSC, has the same feeling.

Even Gov. Cecil D. Andrus jumps into this sensitive area and indicates opposition, terming the Small proposal 'as one man's plan." He describes the plan as one smacking of a one university (chancellor) system which he opposes.

Yet, such states as California and Texas, two of the largest and most progressive, have this system. Under such, the institutions would be named as the University of Idaho at Moscow, University of Idaho at Pocatello and University Of Idaho at Boise — and it may come to pass some day.

There were a few legislative votes from east Idaho that helped to get BSC on the. higher education system, such as former State Sen. Orval Hansen, R-Idaho Falls, now a congressman and a U of I graduate; and former State Reps. Pat K. Harwood, R-Rigby, now a J.R. Simplot executive at Caldwell and who is eying the lieutenant governorship. Even Dr. Ernest Hartung, U of I president, offered no objection, saying at that time a financial formula had been devised that would assure the U of I with adequate funding.

His naive assessment has caused him since to change his mind. The Boise legislators said they only wanted BSC to be on the higher education system, that funds would not be needed immediately. Many of the legislators bought this foolish

Of course, the Boise legislators asked for substantial state funds the following session and have been clamoring for increased appropriation even since, as can be expected.

Both ISU and BSC fear the senior status for the U of I will limit their growth and place them in a secondary status. ISU is really the innocent sufferer.

Such is the dilemma brought about by BSC's early admittance and the entire state is now suffering. In fact, BSC is primarily a Boise Valley college, drawing comparatively few students from other sections of the state. Yet the remainder of the state helps support it, thanks to the short-sighted legislature of eight years

The University of Idaho was founded in 1889 and until recently did not have to battle to get its portion of higher education funds. But since that the establishment of Boise State College as a four year institution the funds war has been firing across the state. Many times the war between the three institutions has been caused by petty jealousies.

Is Not Second Class

ISU renamed Southeastern Idaho State University? Boise State College renamed Southwestern Idaho State University? And both reduced to second-class citizenship under an elitist University of Idaho?

It will happen if a proposal by Milton Small, director of higher education, is adopted by the State Board of Education. In his proposal Small recommends that the University of Idaho "be designated the senior university of the State." Under it would fall Lewis-Clark State College, Boise State College, and ISU. The U of I would become "the chief research center for the State of Idaho and the chief center for research-oriented graduate education." In addition, most of the graduate studies and professional training would be located there.

ISU and BSC, according to Small, would maintain their present programs with emphasis mainly on undergraduate liberal arts and sciences. No researchoriented graduate programs would be initiated, and "only very special circumstances could justify the establishment of new doctoral programs at either

The folly in the proposal is painfully obvious.

First, it relegates ISU and BSC to a second-class status that neither institution deserves. In BSC's case it holds out a dangling carrot reward of university status which that school has so long deserved. But, in our case the proposal is a demeaning rip-off. That second-class citizenship would mean that all ISU degrees — past, present, and future — would be just that — second class. And here's why:

The proposal limits ISU's growth in three ways. First, it demands that no research be done here. That would tend to force the better professors and the better students to look elsewhere for a complete university. Secondly, the proposal states almost flat out that no more doctoral programs will be begun here. No growth, in other words. Thirdly, with the U of I as the senior institution, the legislature would be appropriating the hog's share of the higher education budget to it. That would, in effect, leave ISU, BSC, and Lewis-Clark scrambling for the crumbs. Those crumbs would not allow for a new library or other expensive growing pains. Those crumbs could even force ISU to cut back some of its existing programs, thereby becoming less attractive to prospective students.

A degree only commands the respect given the institution granting it. Second-class status means secondclass respect.

The Small proposal also suffers from another basic flaw — the designation of the U of I as the senior institution for the state. Small cites five reasons for the choice — "its constitutional status, its age, its history, its land-grant status, and its present structure." The first three mean simply that the U of I is old, not that it is worthy of the designation. "Its land-grant status" means only that it was built on land donated by the Federal government on the condition that it offer courses in agriculture and the mechanical arts. Still, no reason for an approximate the designation. So, it comes down to its "present structure." And, what does that mean? Does it mean that the U of I has newer buildings than BSC or ISU? Not true. Or does it mean that the U of I is a better academic institution than others in the state. Again, not true. A comparison, department by department, should prove that ISU can measure up to the U of I.

Still, there are even more reasons not to have the U of I designated the senior institution. First, population. The center for the largest population in the state is Boise, the biggest city. The next largest group of people is centered around Pocatello. Then, running third is the U of I (Moscow-Lewiston) area. Now, the second reason is transportation. While Boise and Pocatello are both easily accessible by air and car, Moscow is neither. Between Boise and Moscow (310 miles) there is not a mile of freeway. The airline schedules are what one might expect for a town of 10,000. So, why the U of I? It is neither the center of population for the state, nor is it easily reached by a majority of Idahoans, nor is it automatically the best institution in the state.

Another very important consideration is enrollment. For the last few years, ISU and BSC have struggled for top honors in that category while the U of I has placed a

With such fatal flaws as these, the proposal would seem destined to remain simply a proposal. But State Board of Education President John Swartley wants to adopt it as an official policy statement. If that occurs the board will fly in the face of logic to the detriment of the great majority of citizens and students who do not deserve second-class treatment. Society movie won award

From Here to Eternity will be shown Monday, Oct. 1st, at 7 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom. Admission is by season ticket or by a fee of 75 cents at the door. This movie was directed by Fred Zinneman and won the Academy Award, The New York Film Critic's Award and the Screen Director's Guild Award for the best picture of 1953. The film's cast include; Montgomery Clift, Burt Lancaster, Frank Sinatra and Deborah Kerr.

From Here to Eternity is not so much a story of events as it is a representation of an archtypal conflict; the conflict of an individual exercising his free will against a community seeking to preserve its unity. The collision takes place among the members of an army platoon stationed at Pearl Harbor just prior to World War II. Within the military life of coercive regimentation, one soldier, Private Prewitt, insists on his own value system. "If a man don't go his own way, he's nothin," explains Prewitt. Although he is physically and mentally pressured to become a "joiner", he lives by his personally formulated standards. Unlike most popular Hollywood movies, Eternity does not solve its heros problems by converting him into a socially accepted leader, nor does the movie sanction. Prewitt's attitude by reducing the issues of the conflict to black and white.

Our "Supreme System" is a best buy by anyone's standards.

With our Advent-Harman/Kardon-Pioneer-ADC system you can either fill an auditorium at hippie freak volumes, or you can play it soft and cozy while you and your date are studying the finer things in life—either way you get all the music.

The outstanding performance of this system is made possible by the famous Advent Loudspeakers, which time and time again have been compared more than favorably with speakers costing several times as much. In fact, the Absolute Sound, an audiophile magazine which accepts no manufacturers ads (and hence can't be bought) stated that "you have to spend at least $250 per speaker to even come close to the Advents? The Stereocraft, another perfectionist, no-advertising magazine says that the Advent is the most accurate speaker they have ever heard

To fully realize the incredible deep bass performance of the Advents, we suggest the Harman Kardon 630 twin powered AM-FM receiver. rated the 630 tops in its class over many worthy competitors, including Marantz, Pioneer, Sherwood, Sony, Sansui and several others. The extended bass performance of the Harman Kardon-Advent combination demands a quiet turntable. The Pioneer PL12D is no less than remarkable at its price of $99,95. Equipped with the high performing ADC 250XE elliptical cartridge, the Pioneer will track cleanly at one gram.

Separately, each of these components is an outstanding value. Together they are mind-boggling-both soundwise and valuewise. Retail prices total $729, but at Stereocraft you can take complete system home for $599-and that includes our own lifetime warranty on the Advents.

Traditional Battle

By Kim Crompton Argonaut Sports Editor

The traditional "Battle of the Palouse" takes place this weekend for those hearty fans who are enthusiastic enough to pay admission to see the game being played again in Pullman

The Washington State Cougars, who are 0-2 for the season with losses to Kansas and Arizona State, are extremely hungry for a victory and will undoubtedly be hoping to vent some of their frustrations on the downtrodden Vandals.

Also, playing the Vandals should seem like a breather to the Cougars who face tough Ohio State and top-ranked USC on the following two weekends.

Hope for upset Although the Wazzu club has to start thinking seriously about those two contests, they must be careful not to overlook the Vandals who will certainly be bent on upsetting a team that was touted so highly in pre-season news columns.

Even Coach Robbins has got into the act by calling the Cougars "probably the best 0-2 team in the nation."

Obviously, he must also be thinking, or hoping, that the Idaho squad isn't as bad as their last two game outputs have

In those games, the Vandals gave up 95 points while only scoring a total of 24. Of course, this had it's effects on conference statistics in the Big Sky which show Idaho second to last in total defense as they have given up a game average of 340 yards, which isn't exactly stopping the opponent dead in their tracks.

Bad defense

The main area where they have lacked "ability and finesse" is in pass defense where they rank dead last in the conference, allowing 190.3 yards through the air per game. On the other hand, the Vandals haven't fared too badly on rush defense where a young but experienced line has held opponents to 149.6 yards per game on the ground.

Thanks to their opening massacre of the UTEP Miners, the Vandals are still tops in rushing offense statistics for the Big Sky, with an average of 227.7 yards per game. In total offense, they rank second behind Boise State with an average of 343.7 offensive yards per game.

Once again, that average could take a severe drop unless the Vandals are able to open holes through the Cougars strong defensive line.

Good defense

Washington State is touted to have a very quick and agile defense which means the Vandals may be going to the air more often this weekend in an effort to keep the Cougars on their

In any event, they are going to have to play error-free football and add a little bit of pizazz to their offense if they plan on even staying in the game. The Cougars were supreme in last year's "Battle of the Palouse", aiding their 7-4 winning season with a 35-14 rout of

They currently hold a lopsided 53-14-3 edge in the all-time ries between the two teams and both teams would like to up

It should be interesting to see whether the Vandal secondary can handle the WSU style of play which will undoubtedly include alot of aerial work. Hopefully, Idaho's highly-regarded defensive back, Randy Hall, has learned a few lessons over the past two weeks and won't allow any second-string receiver to "burn him" for a long gain or touchdown. The rest of the secondary will have to be on their toes, too.

Idaho's defensive front four has been fairly consistent through the first three games and should prove to be a tough line for Cougar running backs to break.

Top team Washington State was touted as one of the top teams in the Pac-8 Conference in pre-season publicity. Playboy magazine even used up three or four precious paragraphs to describe the excellent job of recruiting that has been done by Coach Sweeney and his staff. Coach Robbins even added his praise in a recent interview, saying, "I think that they have a fine staff over there and they do a real good job of coaching." Despite all of the praise that has been dumped on the Cougars in the early football season, they have not as yet proved those statements to be true but will undoubtedly be putting forth their best effort Saturday in Pullman.

"Their strength is in their defense," Coach Robbins described. "They're very big and they come at ya hard. Besides being big, they are real fast and move good along the

While Coach Robbins was praising the Cougars, at the same time he was bemoaning mistakes that have cost the Vandals their last two games.

Turnovers over We have had 13 turnovers in the last two games and that is just too many if you plan on winning the game. Our main goal is just to perfect what we are doing, eliminate our mistakes, and to run the veer option like it's supposed to be run. They have a great defense, three great linebackers. and we have just gotta play better ball if we wanna win," Robbins continued. Robbins also said that several changes have been made on the offensive lineup while the defense will remain the same. Craig Pritchard, the Vandal center who was out with an injury, will be starting against the Cougars as will Jerry Sinclair at left tackle, who was also out with an injury. Mike Kramer had been filling in for Pritchard at center while John Adams did a good job replacing Sinclair at tackle.

Also starting offensively for the Vandals will be Tim Coles at split end; Pat Fee, left guard; Kurt Nelson, right guard; Bob Van Duyne, right tackle; Bill Kashetta, tight end; Kirk Dennis, flanker; and Rick Seefried calling the signals. J. C. Chadband and Mark Fredback will start at running back. Two injured

Two Vandals have been lost due to injuries, Robbins said. They are Clarence Hough, offensive guard, out with a minor injury and linebacker Bill Kirtland, who broke a leg in last week's disaster against Iowa State.

Student tickets for the game are now on sale at the SUB Information Desk at $1.50 each. The seats are in the West End Zone Bleachers. Students should enter through the northwest gate of the stadium.

It seems kind of amusing and not at all unreasonable, that Idaho students have grown tired of making that seven mile traditional walk to Pullman. Students at Wazzu are undoubtedly grateful for this long rest....their team hasn't lost and they haven't had to make the walk for five years!

Undefeated Broncos Big Sky--Tie

For the first time this year a tie was declared when it came to picking the Big Sky Conference Defensive Player of the Week, while the Offensive Player was a clear choice.

Three Big Sky players were named Defensive Players of the Week for their efforts last Saturday. They are Weber State's Ken McEachern a senior cornerback. McEachern blocked two punts, one of which was for a safety, and the other set up a Wildcat touchdown in their win over Northern Arizona.

The other two defensive stars were Idaho State's Joe Mattie, a senior linebacker, who had a total of 26 tackles in Idaho State's loss to Cal Poly (SLO), and Ron Ueland from Montana State who had 18 tackles, nine unassisted against Boise State. Ueland also picked off two Bronco

The Offensive Player of the Week is Weber State's fullback Brian Gladwell, a 6-0, 193 lb. junior. He had 15 carries for 140 yards. He also made a 73 yard run for

The offensive honorable mention players were Gary Galati from Northern Arizona who kicked a 55 yard field goal against Weber State. That field goal is the third longest in Conference history.

The Boise State Broncos and the Weber-State Wildcats remain the lone undefeated schools in Conference play after last Saturday night's action. The Bronco's defeated defending Big Sky champion Montana State 27-17 while the Wildcats defeated Northern Arizona 25-13.

Montana, who lost to Rice 21-10 Saturday, will have their first league clash this coming Saturday against Northern Arizona in Flagstaff. Idaho State, who lost to Cal Poly (SLQ) 20-10 does not play a league game until October 6th when they face Montana State in Fullerton is hosted by Weber State. Boise State took over the lead in total offense, now averaging 419 yards a game while Montana is the top defensive team in the Big Sky and is allowing their opponents just 239 yards an encounter. Brian Gladwell of Weber State is the top rusher in the league with a game average of 108 yards. He is followed by Wayne Edwards of Montana State at 92.6 yards a game on the ground.

The top passer is Dave Mendez of Northern Arizona with a game average of 160 yards a game. He is followed by Boise State's Ron Autele at 127.5 yards a game. Autele is also the top total offense leader with a game average of 162 yards. Second in total offense is Montana State's Mike Dunbar.

In the kicking department, Weber's Ralph Parish is tops with a 42.3 yard average for his 10 punts. Two men top the receiving list. They are Boise State's Dick Donohoe with 10 catches for 172 yards and three scores, and Tim Cole from Idaho with 10 for 101 yards.

Montana State's talented kicker Pat Bolton leads league scorers with 26 points followed closely by Idaho's Marshall Brantley with 24. Steve Tanner from Idaho has 20 points for the year.

Vandalbabes

The Idaho Vandalbabes, junior varsity football team, took advantage of mistakes by the Boise State JV's and squeezed out a 14-7 victory last Monday night in Boise.

Idaho scored early in the first quarter of the rain-drenched game when they recovered a fumbled punt on the Boise State seven yard line. After two running plays failed to gain any yardage, quarterback Ken Schrom threw a touchdown pass to Kevin McAfee. The Vandalbabes again moved in to threaten to score in the second quarter but were stopped by the stubborn Colt defense with less than a yard to go for the touchdown. The Colts then drove the length of the field, 99 yards, before Ray Mittleider tossed a 39 yard pass to Art Tolman for the Boise score.

The winning touchdown for the Vandalbabes was scored in the second quarter, also, when monster back Joe White intercepted a Mittleider pass and returned it 27 yards to score.

Neither team was able to move in for a score in the second half of the game.

Co-Respondents Group Deal with Women, Equality

The Co-Respondents, a feminist theatrical group from Olympia, Wash., presented a series of readings last Tuesday night as part of Women's Week on the University of Idaho campus.

The Co-Respondents are three women who travel throughout the Northwest performing readings by and about women. Two of them, Long and Sandra Lewis Nisbet are both trained and experienced in drama. The third member of the group, Denise Livingston, is a vocalist and guitarist.

They presented two programs, one that dealt with women and equality entitled "Enter Laughing"; and the second program, referred to as "Fun and Games", was concerned with women and marriage.

"Enter Laughing" is an historical approach to equal rights for women-today's arguments heard as echos from over a century of controversy relating to "Women's roles." The Co-Respondents took material from such noted people as Moliere, President Grover Cleveland, George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde, Virginia Woolf and Sojourner Truth. The readings were interspersed with lines from Bob Dylan's song, "I Shall Be Released."

The readings started off on a satirical, yet humorous note about women remaining "pure and true", written by Moliere in 1662. As "Enter Laughing" progressed, the tone became serious. A reading of the Seneca Falls Declaration of Sentiments was followed by a reading from a report by the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor. As they neared the end of "Enter Laughing", they began to drive home their point of men and women being

The second set of readings, "Fun and Games", concerned the dreams of courtship and the effects of the roles that men and women play during courtship. Readings from material by Chaucer, George Bernard Shaw, John Stuart Mill, Sophie Treadwell and others were used.

This part of the program was less humorous than "Enter Laughing" because they were dealing with a more serious subject: the position that women are caught in before, during and after marriage. Many of the readings dealt with women who are neglected by their husbands. Other topics had to do with a husband not being punished by society for cheating on his wife whereas if a wife cheated on her husband, she would be considered an outcast by society. During these readings, it was quite evident that the Co-Respondents were really involved in their material and that they had gotten their point across to the audience.

"Enter Laughing" and "Fun and Games" is the funniest, most satirical, yet most serious and informative presentation of material on behalf of women's equality that has been presented in some time. The Co-Respondents are a very talented trio of women who are a credit to their sex. They should be heard more often by members of the opposite sex to let the men of the world know that they aren't necessarily the masters of the

The cost of friendly UI promotion

By Charlie Spencer Argonaut Sports Writer

Bob Maker must really like his position as Sports Information Director at the University of Idaho.

He has a zeal that is impressive as far as the output from his office goes. But he has a zeal, and a position to go a lot farther, virtually unchecked, than good conscience and U of I funds should permit.

Bob Maker puts out a tremendous amount of work. His duties are journalistic, public relations related, and athletic related.

He has contact with and is continually being contacted by all other sorts of media too. For example, he put up with this reporter for nearly two hours on a busy afternoon this week. I found this a gracious move on his part, considering his list of duties prior to the all important Battle of the Palouse,

But then, Bob Maker cannot afford to be too aloof. He is too susceptible.

Beyond that, however, I found him to be quite open and much more cooperative than I expected — consistent with what I have found so far this year with most of the athletic department. I am thankful for this; but again I must wonder if the friendliness, the voluntary openness, is just a result of an increasingly cautious department.

The department is cautious because people are watching them closely. For example, this reporter learned that Bob Maker left for the Iowa State game the previous Monday evening. Sure, there are a lot of things involved in "fronting" an away game. But did they require that much time? I wanted to find out.

Maker explained that every major university required a huge amount of front work — from the visiting SID the week before a football game. He went through the agenda which he will have to follow before the Idaho- U of W game November 10 in Seattle.

On November 5, Monday morning, Maker will have to meet the U of W SID. After that, armed with slides, film clips, and speeches he will face three straight days of confrontation with news media from Tacoma to Everett.

Thursday, he will make phone calls back to Moscow, and more press front work will be required.

Friday, he will meet the team and the writers and photographers which accompany it to away games. Friday night, he will probably meet with alumni, and will probably have to meet them Saturday morning too.

Promotion, promotion. Maker promotes our team. And it can pay off. At Ames, Iowa last week, the largest opening-day crowd in Iowa State's history witnessed the Saturday afternoon game. Maker must have helped that happen.

What this brief rundown indicates is that Bob Maker has a complex, hard, nerve-racking job each week before each fall football game. What it also indicates, to me anyway, is that Maker could be spending a lot of time and money which might not be particularly applicable to the promotion of U of I athletics, at least within NCAA limits.

promotion of U of I athletics, at least within NCAA limits.

This is not an accusation. It is merely a reiteration that Bob Maker is susceptible.

But not as susceptible as he could be. He told me that his expenses are included —or hidden away— in the total athletic budget. He said that photographic expenses relating to his office are the only category listed separately. He seems safe moneywise — for the present at least

It is worth noting, for Maker's sake, that in the words of Jay Shelledy, "In all probability, Idaho has one of the straightest athletic departments in the country."

In an article in the Lewiston Morning Tribune, September 19, Shelledy noted how Idaho's new. "enemies" ISU and Boise State have both been recently guilty of improper conduct. Most everybody knows about how Eric Guthrie starred for Boise State for several years, while being signed into professional baseball all the time. He also noted how ISU's baseball team came to the Banana Belt Tournament last spring: "Instead of sticking to the sport for which the taxpayers of Idaho were paying their way through school, the team members got roaring drunk and inflicted some damage on a Lewis-Clark State College dorm."

It is also worth noting that the U of I, while being on Big Sky probation for issuing too many scholarships, committed no NCAA violations while doing so. Realistically, anticipation of leaving the Big Sky, and its scholarship limitations, was strong when the decision was made to issue the athletic scholarships. Still, a violation occurred

To return to Bob Maker; I will note that it is impossible for me to learn of all his necessary activities, much less give a good picture in writing. I can refer, however, to one of the products of his typewriter, a copy of which he generously gave to me this week.

It was an article in Coach and Athlete, a monthly publication for "coaches, players, trainers, and officials."

Quoting his article from that March, 1973 issue:

"Idaho also has a great student backing in all forms of athletics. Just a year ago a student vote was taken to advise the president as to what direction to aim the athletic programming at Idaho. Students voted overwhelmingly to keep the program at the 'University' level and improve the program wherever possible. It was a fine vote of confidence of Knecht and his fine department of coaches and administrators."

That particular pole, conducted in the fall of 1971, made no mention of a "university" level. "Preference in terms of the present funding of sports" for the crucial football program .was: Increase 21.9 percent, maintain 47.5 percent, and decrease 22.3 percent.

In the same article, Maker noted how the football stadium was completed, and said, "Idaho cannot afford economically to remain in the (Big Sky) conference under these rules — referring to scholarship limitations. It is the new hope of Idaho officials that they may be able to drop the conference affiliation and keep their 'University' status and join the Pacific Coast Athletic Association in the near future."

This looks like Maker went beyond any theoretical limits which might be placed on an SID. Maybe he didn't. But he has a job which I would not particularly want, and a past record which I personally would not want either.

Cross-Country Opens Saturday At Spokane

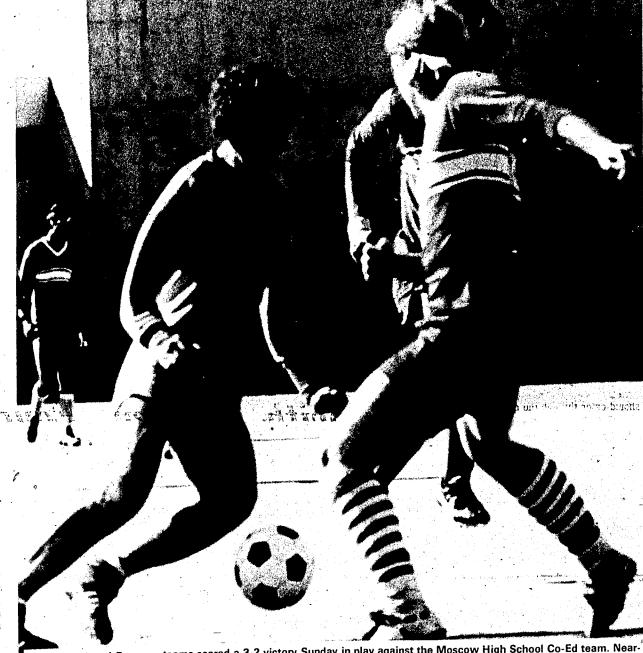

Bill Koss, cross-country coach for the Idaho Vandals, said today that he planned to take a team of at least 10 runners to Spokane on Saturday to compete in the Arnie Pelleur open cross-country meet.

"This will be the first competition for the team and with many of the top northwest colleges and universities sending teams to compete, we can expect some good times in this opening meet," Koss said.

"This meet will be run over the fourmile course and it should show our team just how far along they are in their training routines for this season. We have had two intra-spuad meets so far on the Idaho course in Moscow, and I have been pleased with the times and the condition

Koss said that his squad would include veterans Mark Novak, Junior from San Diego; Kelly Bonney, junior from Salem, Ore.; Al Ramack, senior from Alhambra, Ill.; Wendell Hercules, sophomore from St. Vincent, Trinidad; Shane Sorrey, sophomore, and Rich Brooks, sophomore, both from Spokane. Newcomers to the team are Robert Walkowiak, sophomore from Hopkins, Minn., and freshmen Rick Fields, Bonita Vista, Calif., Nathan Nisinger, McCall, and Alan Galbraith from Idaho Falls.

The Saturday meet is scheduled for 11 a.m. and following this week's action in Spokane, the harriers will next see action in the Idaho Invitational meet at Moscow on Oct 6

The Idaho A and B soccer teams scored a 3-2 victory Sunday in play against the Moscow High School Co-Ed team. Nearing the end of the game with a score of 3-0 both teams crowded more players on the field to allow everyone the opportunity to play and even up the game.

"If you base it on past performances we'd

He noted that Boise has all of last year's team returning plus several new exceptional players.

"Boise puts more money into their tennis program so they can afford to get some good players," Williams noted. "We only have one scholarship for tennis and some out-of-state tuition waivers, but not enough money that the kids would like to

Winning tradition

"We have a tradition to uphold and this can get the team's spirits up," Williams noted. "This will probably be our toughest season. The players will have to have more desire to win. With the desire to win, the players ability, and if I coach them right, we probably can win the championship again."

Williams has won the Big Sky Tennis Coach of the Year Award in each of his three years of coaching at Idaho. Before he took over the job of Tennis Coach, Williams won three singles and three doubles championships as a Vandal player.

similar to the one planned for Moscow.

The people planning this Center have decided to work with the Good

Samaritans. The Samaritans are asking for ten to twenty acres of land for the facility which they will build at a cost of about $2,000,000. The Moscow Retirement

Center Committee, however, must come up with less that 10 percent of the cost.

The Retirement Center would serve many purposes. First and foremost, it would be a comfortable, modern home for

'retired' and 'senior' citizens to live in privacy and dignity. You would not have to be a sixty year old millionaire to live at the Center, though you would need some savings. It is important to remember that the facility would not be operated for a profit. The facility, however, will have to pay for itself. The rents levied on people at the center will be as low as possible.

The proposed Center is geared to caring for sixty elderly invalids, in separate facilities from those living in the apartments. In the Moscow area we already have two nursing homes, Latah

County Convalescent Center and Paradise

Villa, providing care for the elderly who are seriously ill. It is no secret that some elderly who have no place to go and are not ill spend their last years one of these places. This is an abhorent situation, where the elderly victims of to live with the terminally ill, hour by

too. They are seeking no Federal funding, but are asking for donations. On Sept. 13, their fund drive began - weeks before, they already had over $40,000 in donations. For a handfull of local citizens to investigate, plan, and work toward such a large goal, this was quite an undertaking. These people are not young entrepreneurs out of college, but rather farmers, salesmen, housewives, retired janitors and bookkeepers - just ordinary people. Mrs. Harney, for instance, retired from the University two years ago as a clerk in the Registrar's Office. She has Reasonable? You bet.

Wait, don't throw those old issues of the Argonaut out the window, re-cycle them!

The University has recently taken the opportunity to participate in what appears to be a somewhat extensive recycling program, and indications are it will be one of the more worthwhile programs to be found anywhere on campus. Involved are huge masses of paper, bottles and cans from every corner of the school, from the cafeteria to the football

Moscow's re-cycling center has recently stepped up operations to include a more thorough servicing of offices and dorms on campus. Everything is properly prepared for pick-up at the University, except for the sorting of cans and bottles and a quite lengthy paper salvage which takes in several sites and a fair amount of time.

"We're trying to show that we can cut the school's garbage collection costs," explained Thom Marti, managing director of the two and one-half year old center. "We work for a somewhat lower wage than do union trash collection people."

Indeed, an integral part of the working system has been the help provided by a number of volunteers. More are needed, however, as the amount of gathered material has reached some pretty large dimensions. The center is handling from eight to twelve tons a week, about three tons from the University. Up to one ton alone is collected in the stadium after

The non-profit center is being paid to service dorms, which have been supplied with blue barrels in their incinerator rooms. These are specifically for cans and bottles, and are serviced twice weekly. As yet, fraternities and sororities haven't been fully organized, but, as Marti noted, these need to be set up annually. A new member of the board of directors of the center may be chosen from one of these groups. Presently, the board is made up of city, county and community people, with Dick Rice representing the U of I.

In the past ten months, the center has been self-sufficient, collecting enough matter to meet expenses and pay salaries of a sort to regular full and part time nelp. A bright spot in recycling's future in the Moscow area is a $10,000 city/county grant that has been promised upon incorporation of the center, which should be later this month.

a small street tax would cover the cost. Mann has lived in Moscow since 1948 and attended the University of Idaho in the 1930's. He and his wife, Elsie, have five children. Two of them are also graduates of the U of I and two are currently enrolled here.

Shirley Mix, who believes she is the first woman to ever run for mayor in Moscow's history, also boasts many qualifications which would make her a capable leader in the cities highest

Mix has a background in communications, advertising, and public relations as well as being active in state and national elections. She has been a resident of Moscow for the last five years and is a member of the Moscow Chamber of Commerce, Gritman Hospital Auxiliary, and the Repulbican Party.

Like her opponent, Mix believes there should be one way traffic through main street and a regional airport. However. she is also concerned with the youth in the community. Mix believes there should be more attention given to the city park and the recreation program and that they should be expanded further.

She is also an advocator of "planned progress for the city." She believes that local businesses should be supported so that the tax bag can be broadened. Mrs. Mix said she believes fair competition is good business and "believes it can make Moscow the shopping center of the Palouse.

Although she is not a strong womens liberationist, she does believe in women's rights and believes the gap between Moscow's civic interests and the people should be joined.

Mix feels that the people of Moscow should not consider the university separate from the rest of the community because of the immense revenue the businesses receive from the students and the cultural facilities offered at the

"Give and Let Live" is the theme for the U of I Blood Drive to be Oct. 2 and 3. Students may donate on both days from 9 to 12 and 1 to 4 in the SUB Ballroom.

The quota is 500 pints and also this year a special request has been made for donations to replace the blood used by the late Dr. Sidwell Smith. Dr. Smith was Dean of Engineering and recently passed away. Seventy-five pints are needed to replace the blood used.

In order to donate you must be 18 years old, weigh at least 110 pounds and also be in general good health.

Trophies will be given to the mens and womens living groups with the highest percentage of donations.

Retirement Center to be in Moscow organization is over fifty years old and

Through the efforts of a small group of retired people here in Moscow, many other retired persons will soon find life much better. For over a year Mrs. Archie Harney and Mr. Tom White have been spearheading a drive to bring a Retirement Center to Moscow. With the help of other local people, facilities and organizations concerning senior citizens across the nation were investigated. Mrs. Harney, who is by now the Resident Expert on Retirement Centers, will finally see her work bear results. Firm plans are now being laid for a. facility strictly for retired people in the Palouse Empire. The facility, to be located at Moscow, will have sixty nursing beds and sixty apartments. There will also be recreational areas, hobby rooms, and gardens. The Center is keyed for both the healthy and ill. Transportation in the form of buses will be provided so that the people living at the center can go on short tours and shopping trips. ...

The Moscow area citizens who have worked for this goal also investigated a foundation based in South Dakota - the Good Samaritans, a non-profit group. This Fullbright, McGovern chosenfor part of Borah Symposium.

The Borah Foundation Committee met last Tuesday to discuss possible guest speakers for next spring's Borah ose theme will concern. "The rise of presidential powers, particularly war powers.

The nine member committee, taking its. budget into consideration agreed to select the single most widely known speaker possible, (who will come at a high price), as the feature speaker. The remainder of the committees' funds will be spent on as wide a range of more affordable speakers as possible. In agreement with the committee, Chairman Harry Caldwell added, "I think this way the symposium can have wide appeal, but still be good."

The committee's first choice for feature speaker was Senator J. W. Fullbright, D-Ark. Because of the difficulty involved in making arrangements with a speaker's booking agency Senators George McGovern, D-S.D., Charles Percy, R-N.Y., and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore. were selected as back up choices, in that order. They are all members of the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee, and strong opponents of concentrated power in the executive branch of government.

Senator Frank Church, D-Ida., was also considered, but Caldwell, a personal friend of Church, asked that his name be kept off the list. Caldwell explained, "I would like to leave Church off the list, and invite him out of courtesy - and maybe get him for free." He expressed certainty that Sen. Church would attend, if at all possible, and his suggestion was accepted.

Other possible speakers discussed by the committee include Nicholas Johnson, former FCC and Maritime Commission member; Daniel Ellsburg, Pentagon Papers defendant; Senator Jacob Javitts, R-N.Y.; Hugh Sidey, presidential affairs columnist for Time magazine; John Osborne, columnist for New Republic magazine; and William F. Buckley Jr.; host of PBS television's "Firing Line"

No definite date has been set for the symposium yet. However, Chairman Caldwell told the committee that it will probably be shortly after spring vacation.

And the people that are working so hard for it don't even want specially colored wind-breakers...
