

Richardson says political morality remains unchanged

Elliot Richardson

By KENTON BIRD
of the Argonaut staff

The political morality in America is largely unchanged despite Richard Nixon's resignation, former U.S. Attorney General Elliot Richardson said here Friday.

Many people had hoped that the end of Watergate would lead to a new era in politics but this hasn't happened, Richardson noted.

"It is not a post-Watergate morality," he said, "but a post-Watergate behavior designed to look like morality."

Richardson spoke to a standing-room-only crowd at the SUB Ballroom Friday morning and answered newsmen's questions at a press conference following.

His trip to Idaho was originally planned to campaign for Congressman Orval Hansen of Idaho's second district. But Hansen was defeated in the August primary so Richardson planned to spend the weekend fishing with the incumbent congressman instead.

Both Richardson and Hansen poked fun at each other's inability to hold a job, although Hansen pointed out he managed to hang on to his for six years.

Richardson was fired as attorney general Oct. 20, 1973 when he refused an order from then-President Nixon to fire Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox. The series of events, which also cost deputy attorney general William Ruckelshaus his job, came to be known as the "Saturday Night Massacre."

In addition to his justice department position, Richardson also served as undersecretary of state, secretary of defense and secretary of health, education and welfare during the Nixon administration.

As close as he was to the former president, however, Richardson said he did not believe Nixon knew about the Watergate break-in in advance. "There's no evidence to support this," he said.

But the Saturday Night Massacre marked the beginning of the end of Nixon's public support. "It was the turning point," Richardson said.

And during the press conference, Richardson affirmed his confidence in the American system which resulted in Nixon's removal from office. "I think we should rejoice that it does work."

Richardson said he has not been offered a cabinet position or other post in President Ford's administration. "I can neither accept nor decline offers which haven't been made," he quipped.

Day care center

Students of tomorrow get early training

By CAROLYN HARADA
of the Argonaut Staff

Children's happy voices, pitter patter of tiny feet and smiling faces begin each day at the U of I Day Care Center which opened Sept 5.

The center is set up as an aid to parents. Usually there is a student father and a working mother or vice versa, but it is basically set up for the working mother.

Santiago Estrada, assistant dean for the student advisory services, stressed that parents will have the freedom to go back to school or work knowing their children will be left in a loving atmosphere.

"We're trying to provide the same thing that 2 1/2 to 5 year olds have if the mother did not have to work," commented Lorri Edwards director of the center.

"We also try to encourage children to do independent activity. Part of our concern is that as occurs in the home, some However, our day care center is going to do its best to keep parents involved and provide basic development skills," said Estrada.

Estrada expressed that they have been fortunate to have parents interested and supportive of the program.

The center is not designed to be a school, but to provide the same experience of nursery school or kindergarten.

As part of the daily activities, 30 to 45 minute classes will be held three days a week for the four to five year olds and two days a week for the two to three year olds.

Edwards explained that the four to five year old classes include activities somewhat like nursery school and kindergarten. Activities deal with preparing the child for first grade.

As for the two to three year olds, it is a first sit-down procedure acquainting them with doing the same activity at the same time with the other two to three year olds.

A Spanish class began Sept 24 with Carmen Loera, student teacher.

"Carmen is the first one, but we expect to have three or four different teachers as the year progresses. Twenty of our children will be enrolled," noted Edwards.

Estrada is excited about what the center is doing. He said they were teaching them basic Spanish such as numbers, colors, and names of families.

"Previously we asked their parents if they were interested in having their kids learn Spanish, 95 per cent said yes," said Estrada.

Starting Monday, Sept. 30, Toni Pike, a local mother, will volunteer to do some creative movement (dancing, exercises) with the children five days a week for half an hour, commented Edwards.

"Later on, we hope to get more departments involved in the Center. Perhaps the drama department would like to do children's plays," suggested Estrada.

Each day begins with a reception time where the center greets the child. From then on free time, snack time, clean-up, lunch time, naptime and class time are interwoven throughout the day.

"During free time, the children have a chance to go where they want. Outside is where they have physical activity. Certain restrictions are posted for the safety of all.

"General limitations are set up because with 36 kids, we cannot tolerate if they all do it at once," advised Edwards.

Upstairs is another place they can go, if they want affection. This area is kept as home like as possible for most of the day. It is a place where the kids can observe adult behavior such as sewing, knitting, or vacuuming.

"Downstairs is where they have activity centers for stimulation. It is more structured, with a few more rules, but within these rules, the child can go from center to center anytime.

"Activities change some every week and we try to keep the ones that work the best and get rid of the ones that didn't seem to work very well. We constantly change so the kids don't get tired of particular activities," Edwards said.

The Center operates from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Five adults supervise at all times including a myriad of work study and 201 students that come in and out during the day.

"Basically now, people are trying to give the children the experience to becoming more sensitive to themselves and to other kids. It is also a learning experience for anybody that is going to work with pre-school children," Estrada said.

The seven student teachers are Marilyn Pratt, Education (Ed.); Bryon Yankey, Ed.; Marily Weingardner, Ed.; Connie Perkins, Home Economics (H.Ec.); Roneta Watts, H. Ec.; Suzanne Echinique, H. Ec.; and Marge Nornington, H. Ec.

In addition to these, there are four work study students, five Education 201 students, four teacher aides and two math aides.

"We are fortunate to have the staff that we have this year. They are even working extra hours on the weekends," pointed out Estrada.

The Center is open to anybody to stop by and say hello. Lorri and the staff would like people to come and visit the center.

"We want it to be something we can all be proud of, for the future lies on children and the people who teach the children.

"The center is trying to be self-supporting and would charge fees in the area of $70 a month. Financial backing may cut enrollment costs, but funding does not look real promising at the time. We probably have to grin and bear it for a few months, but as time progresses, we'll probably be in more solid ground," Estrada said.

People interested in enrolling their child can contact Pat Olson at 885-6571 or Lorri Edwards at 885-6414.

Rees wants formal hearing

Dr. Willis Rees, assistant professor of psychology, has requested a formal hearing before the State Board of Education, Board of Regents, to appeal his denial of tenure by the University administration.

According to Lyle Montgomery, chairman of a student group which supports Dr. Rees, "he is an outstanding professor, one of the most creative and inovative classroom instructors in the entire University."

Montgomery, a senior majoring in psychology, claimed that, "Rees was denied tenure because this University doesn't give a damn about students and thus has no use for professors who consider teaching to be their primary responsibility."

"Rees isn't the first victim of this University's contempt for student needs," Montgomery added. "The Regents and legislature have been concerned about the tenure situation in higher educati,n for some years now."

"We intend to show both the Regents and the legislature that Dr. Rees' only crime was to be a first-rate teacher at a university where most of the faculty put you to sleep."

Montgomery said there were nearly 70 students actively involved in the student organization supporting Rees, and that over 1000 students had signed petitions asking that Rees be granted tenure. "The response of the University administration," Montgomery said, "was somewhere between indifference and a slap in the face."

Rees, who was unavailable for comment, will be represented in his appeal to the Board of Regents by University student John Orwick.

When asked about the appeal, Orwick would say only, "After I have thoroughly examined the nearly 100 pages of documents and nearly 15 hours of audio tapes I will have something to say, and not before."

Orwick did say that he "is representing Dr. Rees, not the student organization. Their efforts are independent of mine, though related," he said.

That's one of the biggest benefits from becoming an Argonaut advertising representative.

If you need a part-time job or just want to pick up some extra spending money, there may be a place for you on the Argonaut's advertising staff. It pays on a commission basis, so you get as much out of the job as you put into it.

And if you're interested in a career in advertising, here's a chance to pick up some valuable experience. You get to follow an ad through three stages: selling it, creating it and producing it.

Experience would be helpful but isn't necessary. There's only one catch — you need your own car.

Pint of blood

Today and tomorrow a debt can be repaid you may never have known you owed.

Rep. Harold Snow has given his lifeblood for the University Of Idaho during 22 years of service in the Idaho Legislature. During the blood drive, you can give some back.

Rep. Snow (a Republican, not to be confused with one-term State Senator Orval Snow, a Democrat) served the U of I well. He has been influential on the University's behalf from such positions as assistant majority leader, chairman of the state affairs committee, and co-chairman of the executive reorganization committee.

Snow Hall was named after him during his own lifetime as a mark of his outstanding service.

During the past months, a blood disease has caused his retirement. It's also resulted in numerous transfusions from local blood banks.

Today and tomorrow at the SUB, we can repay him. We urge you to donate a pint of blood in the name of Rep. Harold Snow.

Calm the thirst

The greens often dry out on the ASUI golf course.

But they aren't the only things with a thirst. Going up in the world takes on a whole new meaning on the gentle cliffs of the course.

But after working up that thirst, golfers must calm it with coke machine pop, or go elsewhere.

But now the ASUI Senate wants to change all that, and rightly so. An enterprise like the ASUI Golf Course should not be penalized in its operation just because it happens to be student-owned.

We certainly hope that the Board of Regents go along with the Senate recommendation to request a beer license for the course.

Then the golf course budget won't be quite so thirsty either.

Students should decide issue

To the editor:

The point in the editorial of your issue of September 27 that I promised the students last spring that the stadium could be roofed without increasing student fees is absolutely wrong. What I did tell the ASUI, the Regents, and everybody I talked with about this matter was that a) the plan which we had then come up with for financing the roof on the stadium did not include any increase in student fees, b) we had done our very best not to cause any fee increase for roofing the stadium, c) the stadium could be roofed without any increase in student fees if bids came in within the architect's cost estimates.

I said that if the low bids were over the estimate, I could make no prediction about what would happen. We tried to get realistic cost estimates which would fully consider inflationary increases, but those increases were simply more than our architects and engineers estimated the increases would be.

An editorial in a newspaper which I read yesterday indicated that the ASUI Senate should now hold firm and not support a $5 fee increase to roof the stadium, and that the University Administration should seek funding from the state legislature to finance the roof. A more realistic recommendation would be for the University Administration just to bag the whole idea of roofing the stadium at this time, if the ASUI does not want the $5 fee increase, and then, in about four years to ask the ASUI if it would support a fee increase of about $25 per semester to roof the stadium — this is probably about what the increased cost of roofing the stadium at that time would require.

Friends, the moment of truth when the go or no go decision is going to be made on roofing the stadium will be this November. It is completely inconceivable that legislative funding could be obtained prior to the time when commitments on the stadium roof must be made. In fact, the practical likelihood of legislative financing for the roof of the stadium at a later time is extremely remote.

The University of Idaho has already submitted a request for over $10 million for construction funding by the state for next fiscal year. Other institutions within the state have submitted requests of comparable magnitude. From priorities established by the Regents, we may be lucky to get $740,000 of the $10 million we requested. The possibility of legislative funding for the roof for the stadium might also be judge by the fact that, to the best of my knowledge, the women's old gymnasium building here on campus, built about 1900, was the last athletic facility constructed on the campus with state funds.

If I am instructed to seek funding from the legislature for roofing the stadium I shall do my best to obtain such funding. However, the probability of solving the immediate problem we have on the stadium in this way is a little less than the probability of me solving the University's financial problems by panning for gold in Paradise Creek. Legislators are becoming increasingly aware of, and concerned about, the overall fee situation and the comparability of student fees here and elsewhere which I believe are now as follows:

Annual Student Fees

University of Nevada - Las Vegas $556

University of Nevada - Reno 519

Washington State University 564

University of Oregon 509

University of Washington 495

University of Utah 480

University of Montana 471

University of Idaho 380

Further, we get money from the federal government for student support partially on the basis of how much it costs students to attend school here. It costs less here than elsewhere and so more federal funds for student assistance are sent elsewhere.

We are doing what we can to consider all alternatives for financing the roof of the stadium. It may be that further economies can be made in the design. However, it is virtually impossible that the problem can be solved completely in this way, since we have tried all along in the design to minimize the present requirement for funding. It is also possible that the University Development Office may be able to obtain gifts to help with the funding; however, it would not be prudent to assume that the required funding is going to be obtained in that way. Very candidly and sincerely, we did already consider all of the alternatives possible for funding the roof when we came up with the financing already projected to be available for the stadium project. Since then there have been no massive enrollment increases or other developments to make significantly more funds available than projected in our previous forecasts.

I shall not recommend that the Regents institute any fee increase for roofing the stadium unless such action has the overwhelming support of the ASUI. However, the student body should now consider this question and reach some kind of consensus by early November — Is completing the roof and related work at this time worth $5 per semester per student or should we just leave the stadium like it is for the indefinite future while prices continue to increase and while we try to find funding for this project?

It is likely that prices would increase faster than we could increase money available for this project — the cost for the roof has gone up about 35 within the past two years. We can still make it with a $5 increase if the bids we get in November are not higher than the ones we got this month. If they are, it is going to take more than $5, from someplace.

Money doubles, brings inflation

For every dollar in currency and checking accounts in 1960, there are now two dollars in circulation. That is, since 1960 the government has increased the money supply by 100 per cent.

But I don't think this is as unbelievable as the fact that the federal government, having doubled the money supply in 14 years, now sits about stroking its collective chin and musing, "Hmm, wonder how come prices are rising?"

Their wonder is to say the least, feigned.

It was thus with great relief that I read Congressman Steve Symms' recent article in the Idahonian. He said that inflation "is one of the most simple and basic of all economic phenomena." Symms, who studied economics and law at the U of I, correctly defines inflation as "the process of increasing the volume of currency (and credit) in circulation."

Give it some thought. When the supply of any good is greatly increased, doesn't the value of a single unit of it decrease? In the case of an increase in the supply of dollars, the value ("purchasing power") of each single dollar decreases. And this is reflected in rising prices.

You might ask: If this crippling inflation is as simple as Symms says it is, then how in heaven's name has it happened? There is a simple two-word answer: deficit spending.

Deficit spending occurs when the federal government pays out more than it takes in.

In the 1950's the federal government paid out $12 billion more than it taxed. Why didn't it raise its taxes? Oh it had, it had.

But see how big the spending was and is. If, during Eisenhower's last year in office the federal government had taxed away every last dime of income above the $25,000 level, it would only have been able to pay for twelve days worth of its many programs. Twelve days.

Consider: This was before the New Frontier and the Great Society and the War on Poverty and the Vietnam war and the recent Nixonomics. Yearly federal spending has tripled in the 15 years since Eisenhower.

Thus the deficits grew from $12 billion in the fifties to $57 billion in the sixties to $140 billion (at the present dizzying rate) during the seventies.

This is why the money supply doubled. This is why the value of the dollar plummeted.

I never tire of recommending as a primer on inflation Andrew Dickson White's 89-page easy reading classic, "Fiat Money Inflation in France." It positively boggles the mind.

Mr. White tells the story of how, beginning in 1789, the French National Assembly tried to solve their economic problems by increasing the money supply. The "cure" got a bit out of hand. In six years the supply of money increased a hundredfold and became worthless. Obviously the economy collapsed, and in due course Napoleon seized power "to save the republic."

The same thing happened in Germany in the twenties. There the government printed money by the truckload in order to pay off its debts. Prices skyrocketed by a trillionfold. And a new "Napoleon" emerged.

Now in terms of consumer prices, the dollar is only worth 55 of what it was worth 14 years ago.

Symms points out that "everyone in Washington, D.C. says deficit spending is bad, yet Congress votes to spend ever more inflationary dollars. Measures such as I have introduced calling for a Constitutional Amendment to stop deficit spending and to balance the budget are bottled up in committees."

Symms is still trying to talk common sense with those who refuse to listen. As a result of the lack of listening and the resulting deficits and the sinking value of the dollar, the outlook is gloomy for our ship of state.

No less esteemed an economist than Milton Friedman has predicted a collapse greater in intensity than that of the thirties.

On the one hand, maybe Symms' common sense talking will succeed. On the other hand, as long as we've got to sail on the Titanic, it's nice to know that at least one of our Congressmen is going first class.

Bigtime football

Wasting time, chasing windmills

By Peter Harriman

The author is an instructional assistant in the English Department.

Years ago the Chicago White Sox had an outfielder named Minnie Minoso, whose thing was crashing into walls.

For the fans, Minnie softened the blow of even an opponent's most towering home run by hurling headlong into brick retainers attempting to snatch balls out of upper decks. It was a good show, though probably a hard way to make a living.

Watching him carried from the field on a stretcher a person could mutter, "That Minnie, he sure tries." In a lot of ways he resembles the Idaho football program.

Sept. 14's 37 to 0 drubbing at the hands of the Air Force underscores the point. Those Vandals, they sure try, but Idaho had no more chance of winning that game than Minoso had of catching a Mantle line drive blasted to Racine, Wisconsin.

The odds of Idaho's defeating Villinova or Washington State were probably about the same and one wonders if the pain of crashing into those gridiron brick walls is worth the effort.

And the meager four-game home slate is hardly the way to engender the rabid fan support that helps make college football, according to Woody Hayes, "the most wholesome activity on campus." Somehow, in the general run of things, its more fun to curl up under a blanket on a Saturday afternoon in the fall and watch the team knock heads with Boise than it is to read about their performance on the East Coast Monday morning in the Lewiston Tribune. At least when Michigan goes to Stanford the folks in Ann Arbor can watch them on T.V.

Idaho has an image problem with it's football team, and a torn piece of poster in the weight room in the gym may symbolize it best. The poster, an ad for season tickets, bills Idaho as, "major college football." Its the sort of hype USC, or Nebraska would never have to consider.

In the same vein, Darryl Royal never had to justify Texas Stadium as a great place to have a concert, a tennis match, or a dance. Notwithstanding nebulous assumptions that "if the roll-up turf don't get 'em, the roof will," and glowing visions of Simpsons, Pages, and Mannings flocking to campus once the stadium is domed (though what is so special about playing under a roof?), Idaho's facility is going to have to do more business than an American Legion hall in a small town to pay it's way.

Of course it is possible to play big time college football at a school of less than 12,000. Ara Parsegian has done it with success at Miami of Ohio, Northwestern, and Notre Dame. But Moscow isn't Oxford, Evanston, or South Bend. It doesn't have the talent pool, the economic support, or the football tradition of those places. In college football lore, the I Tower just isn't up there with the gold dome, and Gipper hasn't made it west of the Mississippi.

Latah County is grass roots, and while the people of Idaho pony up a couple of times each season to send their team jetting off to Colorado, or Pennsylvania, it's the kind of team that is more in character bussing across the mountains to Missoula for an away game.

At what point does the realization that your major college credentials consist of being a patsy opener for somebody, an easy homecoming victory, or a last ditch filler of an open schedule begin to hurt your pride? It surely can't help a team's mental attitude, and it raises the question whether Idaho's ultimate goal is winning the Big Sky championship, or being smashed 50 to 0 by Alabama.

The rivalry with WSU is geographically plausible, and the chances of victory against the Cougars slim enough to satisfy Idaho's apparent penchant to be known as a giant killer. It could be all the big games Idaho needs in one season. However, an odd win here shouldn't go to the head either. Idaho ought to take counsel from that most famous giant killer, David. Even he quit before his luck ran out.

If a literary critic can intrude here,

Northrup Frye has a sentence in "Fables of Identity," which bears on the discussion. He writes, "the conventions of literature contain the experience; their formal laws hold everywhere; and from this point of view there is no difference between the scholarly and the popular in the world of words"

Roughly paraphrased, it means, winning feels like winning whether you beat the national champion, or Podunk State.

The prospect of a couple of 7-3 seasons, against lesser competition, is more entertaining than a year punctuated with "they sure try," against teams hopelessly out of Idaho's league.

As long as Idaho continues to play bona fide football powers, the team can be labeled Quixotic, reaching after that impossible win against horrendous odds. But perhaps it is time for Idaho to realize there is also value in small things and a certain grace in knowing one's limitations.

Professors doubt us?

"Generally, students bend over backward and give incompetent professors the benefit of the doubt," says one U of I official.

Doubts are evidently what students are giving some professors. At least some procedures outlined by various departments for including student decision-making are unusual at best. Last term the Board of Regents approved a policy providing for committees to review the competency of instructors, before and after they receive tenure.

The board passed a general guideline providing for departmental committees made up of tenured faculty, non-tenured faculty, a person from outside the department, and students.

At least "25 per cent and not more than 50 per cent of the committee membership shall be students"

Sounds good. But the problems arise when examining each department's specific regulations. All the departments have conformed though with the "letter" of the Regents' guideline.

But the "spirit" is another matter.

For instance, who should choose the students? The only other Regents' guideline on students is that they have "had experience in the department with which the faculty member being evaluated is associated."

Most departments provided student members would be selected by departmental groups. Which is fine when that membership reflects departmental students, and entrance requirements aren't prohibitive.

But some have no departmental group, like accounting.

The accounting department provides students will be selected by lot from the instructor's class lists of the previous semester. (Several other departments also use selection by lot.)

Inevitably a question mark is pulled out of a lottery. The question being—shouldn't students have some assurance that their representatives are qualified and interested?

Bruce Budge, accounting department chairman, wrote:

"We have no objection to student responsibility for selection of student members, but believe this cannot be done responsibly on a departmental basis. Were there some university student committee, this might work."

Perhaps Budge has never heard of the ASUI organization.

But regulations should not be so restrictive as to just get a certain type of student. Forestry overdoes it in providing "one (student) member and one alternate shall be selected by lot from senior students in the College who have a cumulative GPA of 2.0 or higher."

Here selection by lot may be better than some systems. The English department has the undergraduate English organization nominate three English majors, and the faculty on the the committee will select one of them.

The problems mentioned above may be only random examples. But they should be corrected before next spring, when the President reports to the Regents on the new process.

If you're interested in finding out how to get involved in the "tenure recommending/competency review" of instructors, contact your departmental office, or the ASUI.

Bad breaks plague Vandals

By KEVIN KELLEHER
of the Argonaut Staff

The Vandals dropped their third straight game to the Villanova Wildcats 15-7 in a torrential rainstorm before a meager sized homecoming crowd in far away Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Villanova led most of the game on two second quarter field goals. Late in the third quarter the Wildcats found themselves trailing by one point after an Idaho interception and a Vandal score.

Joe White intercepted a Villanova pass and returned it 45 yards to set up the lone Vandal score, and Steve Tanner's conversion gave the Vandals a one point edge.

The rain fell heavily in the final period and it looked as though the Vandal defense was going to contain the Wildcats. Late in the quarter, the Vandals forced the Wildcats to punt near mid-field. Under the direct instruction of Coach Troxel the Vandal receivers were not to attempt to catch the ball because the weather conditions could make fielding the football dangerous. The Vandal deep backs watched the ball sail over their heads and bounce dead near the Idaho ten yard line.

The Vandal offense was unable to move the ball against the aggressive Villanova defense and were forced to punt deep in their own territory, with only 2:34 remaining in the final quarter. Steve Tanner stood in the Idaho end zone awaiting the snap from center, but the snap was low and Tanner couldn't escape the wave of purple jerseys that descended upon him, trapping him in the end zone for a two point safety.

Villanova scored a touchdown about a minute later, but it was an irrelevant score because the two point safety had already broken the Vandals back.

Once again the Vandal offensive efforts were thwarted by penalties and fumbles. Week after week the defense plays superb football forcing turnovers and containing the opposition's efforts - to a point.

One can only speculate what will happen if the defense continues to perfect itself, and the offense finally discovers its potential to become an awesome threat instead of constant distress.

Conference play, for Idaho, begins this weekend when the Vandals continue their seemingly unending road schedule and travel to Pocatello to tangle with the ISU Bengals. The "exhibition season" is over although not a disaster. The previous three were morale games. The upcoming games are largely conference games and each one counts.

The Vandal offense will have to get on track for conference play if the Vandals hope to win the Big Sky.

Tickets for Vandal game available

Tickets for the Idaho vs Idaho State football game in Pocatello next Saturday can be purchased by students at the SUB information desk, or at the Athletic Ticket Office in Memorial gymnasium.

Students must present their ID cards prior to purchasing their tickets. Cost of the student ticket is one dollar. All interested persons should purchase tickets before 5 p.m. Wednesday afternoon.

The Athletic Ticket Office also has tickets available for the West Texas and Montana home games.

Novak leads win in cross country

The U of I Cross Country squad chalked up another stunning win by grabbing first place at the annual Bellevue Invitational Saturday. The Vandal harriers scored nine points, the minimum total possible, while Club Northwest finished second with 33 points.

Mark Novak set fire to the Stuart Park course in taking first place for Idaho. He clocked in at 20:10, a new course record and his teammate Shane Sorey snatched second for the Vandals. Kelly Bonney took seventh place for the Vandal Track Club, which also participated.

The Vandal harriers who defeated Air Force three weeks ago have the potential and certainly the speed to go undefeated this year.

Music dept. features french horn recital

An experimental piece by Robert Schumann, "Adagio and Allegro", will be the first number in the french horn recital of Bruce Matthews set for tonight at 8 p.m. in the music building.

"This Schumann piece is probably one of the most difficult in the horn world—difficult in terms of plain endurance," Matthews said.

When Schumann composed the piece back in the 19th century, the valved French horn had just come into being.

"Schumann didn't know much about the horn. He just assumed that the artist could play forever," Matthews said, "so getting through the piece is the hardest part."

Arnold Cooke's "Five Nocturnes," is his second number because Matthews has been interested in the combination of voice and horn.

"The voice and horn have exceptionally compatible timbres," Matthews said. This piece, composed in 1962, is unique for "portraying text in music," he added. (In this case, that means the horn will be making sounds which resemble the cries of owls and the croaks of frogs.)

The entire last half of the program is the modern piece—Lennox Berkeley's "Trio for Violin, Horn and Piano" which Matthews and his wife performed three years ago at the University of Wisconsin.

Accompanying Matthews will be pianist Madeline Richardson, soprano Dorothy Barnes, and violinist Susan Matthews, Matthew's wife.

Matthews, a former student of the late John Barrows, is a member of the Northwest Wind Quintet and the Spokane Symphony. He is also an instructor of French horn at the University of Idaho.

The recital is open to the public without charge.

● Alpha Phi Omega will be holding interviews for prospective members Thursday, from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. in the SUB.

Blood drive group hopes to draw large turnout

With "Give Blood and Let Live" as the theme and 500 Pints as the goal, the U of I blood drive will go into full swing today and end tomorrow.

The drive will be held in the SUB Ballroom from 9-12 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. both days.

The blood will go to the Boise Red Cross chapter. Total pints last year exceeded the 500 mark; 507 pints donated last fall, and 546 last spring.

Free cookies and punch will be served.

Senate to recommend tuition reduction

The ASUI Senate will consider recommending to the State Board of Regents that all student fees for veterans be eliminated and that out of state tuition be reduced, at their 7:00 p.m. meeting tonight.

In an apparent answer to the resolution, the Senate will also have under consideration a resolution resubmitted by Mary Morris recommending the waiver of fees and tuition for women.

The veterans' resolution introduced by Grant Burgoyne, states that such a fee waiver is needed because present federal payments are "insufficient to support veterans," and further, "the people of the State of Idaho owe a debt of gratitude to veterans for their sacrifices."

In other business, the Senate will also be considering an appropriation of $675 to the Argonaut for the purchase of a character display unit. Appropriations to the Idaho Student Government Association and the Idaho Student Lobby for payment of membership fees will also be under consideration.

Applications needed today

Students interested in Fulbright and Rhodes scholarships will meet today at noon in the Pow Wow room of the SUB with the foreign scholarship committee.

Fulbright applicants should bring their completed applications to the meeting and interviews will be scheduled.

Campus chairman for the scholarships is Phil Deutchman, whose office is located in room 6 of the physical science building.

Fee increase proposed for SUB

By SUE THOMAS
of the Argonaut Staff

Students may be faced with a four or five dollar fee increase in order to help out with the financial troubles of the Student Union Building.

"I won't pay it!" said one disgruntled student when informed of the possibility of paying more money.

Dean Vettrus, ASUI general manager, said there has been no formal action taken yet concerning the fee increase but he feels there is a need for an increase, and the administration thinks so too. The increase, if approved by the ASUI President and the Board of Regents would take effect next semester.

The recommendation of Vettrus is for an increase of four dollars per student per semester for the SUB and a two dollar increase for the ASUI. This recommendation was made because of an $8,000 deficit in SUB operations.

"We've never raised prices so many times during one year," said Vettrus in response to the rising food costs that the cafeteria has incurred as well as the students.

"Last year we borrowed $28,000 from our bond monies, which we need to pay off," said Vettrus.

Vettrus feels the money should go for paying off the debt, to boost their reserve, for additional programs, and to make necessary salary adjustments.

If a recommendation for the fee increase of four dollars is passed, it will bring in a total of about $23,000 not quite enough to pay off the bond debt.

ASUI Budget Director George Inverso does not support the fee increase and feels that an efficiency audit needs to be performed. Inverso said that the SUB is about the most expensive place to eat, and "this needs to be looked into." Inverso was pessimistic that an audit would take place.

Don Amos, University business manager, has recommended in a letter to Tom Richardson, vice president for student and administrative services be instituted next semester.

The Regents generally follow student recommendations and thus far ASUI President Dirk Kempthorne hasn't committed himself.

"We're giving it a serious look," said Kempthorne. As far as the efficiency audit is concerned, Kempthorne said he is working with Bob Steele, University auditor, trying to find out what the situation is and if a fee increase is necessary. "We don't have the answers, but we're looking, one of the ways of doing that is through Steele," commented Kempthorne.

SUB Board chairman Gordon Slyter said he is the consultation stage concerning the fee increase. "SUB board is planning to have a definite proposal next week, Tuesday or Wednesday. We're leaning in the direction of the fee increase but there hasn't been a definite decision," said Slyter.

Kempthorne wasn't sure that an efficiency audit would be necessary, but he didn't rule out the possibility. Inverso suggested that the fee increase only last for a semester in order to pay off the bond loan. So far the suggestion as been taken fairly lightly by many ASUI officials.

ASUI Senator Grant Burgoyne stated emphatically that he would not support a SUB fee increase unless he could be shown just where the money was needed. He also said he would support an efficiency audit.

"At this point in time we do not need an increase," said Burgoyne.

Two-credit course to run in Idahonian

Last year 13 people earned U of I college credit by reading 20 articles, one a week in The Idahonian. Across the U.S., the same 20 articles appeared in 258 other newspapers as part of a novel college course on the American experience offered to millions of readers through the columns of their local newspaper.

This year another 18-week, two-credit course will begin running in The Idahonian October 3. This year's topic, "In Search of the American Dream," will be an exploration of the utopian spirit that animated this country's beginnings, according to Dr. Ronnal Lee, U of I assistant professor of sociology and local coordinator of the program.

Lectures printed each week will be by authors such as Pulitzer Prize winners Robert Penn Warren, Michael Kammen and William Goetzman.

Anyone can monitor the course, however, last year over 400 persons opted to receive college credit by registering with one of 182 colleges and universities affiliated with the program.

Those taking the course for credit took two tests, a mid-term and a final. In last years tests U of I participants scored slightly higher than the average for the 182 schools combined.

Those interested in U of I credit for this year's course may register in person or by mail for Sociology 404 extension course through the Office of Continuing Education. Idaho residents pay $20 per credit, non-residents $25 per credit.

Those taking the course for credit must also buy a $4.50 reader and a $2.50 study guide. They will come to campus twice during the course to meet with Lee in group seminars.

The course, distributed by Copley News Service, is administered by the University of California at San Diego extension program.

Silent Film to be shown

On Friday, Sept. 27, the Film Society will present the classic silent comedy "College." It will be shown at the Ballroom of the SUB at 7 and 9 p.m. This wild farce stars Buster Keaton as a college bookworm who attempts to impress his sweetheart (played by Ann Cornwall) by taking up athletics.

He has his painfully funny experiences in baseball, hurdles, hurling the javelin, throwing the discus, putting the shot, and finally (after you would think he had enough) is foisted onto the college regatta crew as coxswain, setting the stage for a hilarious finale. Snitz Edwards is also very funny as the college dean.

In addition to this full-length motion picture, a Harold Lloyd short will be shown. Admission is 75 per person, or season ticket. Season tickets (which will let you into all 11 shows in this semester's series) are still on sale for $4 (single) and $6 (couples) at the SUB information desk.

Senate seat vacant

A selection committee will be formed to make three recommendations to fill the Senate seat of Patty Hull who recently resigned. Applications are available in the ASUI offices for persons interested in applying for the vacant seat.

The applications must be turned in by noon, Oct 2. Applicants will be contacted and interviewed Oct 3.

Arthur Miller play set for next week

Americans, being optimistic, have never had as much interest in tragedy on the stage as have people of other nations. But all the same one tragedy has become an outstanding hit of our time and it is to be given on the stage of the Idaho Performing Arts Center for six performances October 10-11-12, and 17-18-19 at 8:00 p.m.

This is the play by Arthur Miller called Death Of A Salesman, which, when it was first produced in New York in 1949 carried off both the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Drama Critics Circle Award, only the third play in the history of the American theatre to achieve this double honor. Death Of A Salesman is the story of a time-beaten drummer who, as his son says at his funeral at the end of the play, "never knew who he was." He had clung all his life to a cheerful delusion that he was a successful "big man." But when, on the threshold of old age, the hard facts of existence make it impossible for him any longer to continue this self-deception, he cannot accept the new picture of himself that he is forced to see.

John Naples will portray the role that Frederic March had in the movie version of this play, the once-debonair, now forlorn travelling salesman. Peggy Mead as his merciful wife, Bruce Gooch and Rick Houlberg as the sons he spoiled who now resent him brutally, Rex Rabold as his fabulously successful brother, Jamie Lewis and Howard Swain as more solidly comfortable but sympathetic neighbors, and others make up the cast, who have been directed by Forrest Lears, associate professor of theatre arts. Scene design and lighting are created by Robert Chambers, assistant professor of theatre arts.

Tickets are available at the ticket desk in the Student Union Building. U of I students are admitted free with ASUI card.
