While the University Judicial Council (above) discussed ramifications of alcohol on campus Thursday afternoon, students outside demonstrated against current restrictive alcohol regulations.

Alcohol regulations debated

By BRUCE SPOTLESON
of the Argonaut Staff

The University Judicial Council was told Thursday that a Student Code of Conduct article pertaining to the use of alcohol on campus is ambiguous, vague and in need of clarification.

ASUI Attorney General Gary Cooper, acting in defense of Borah Hall president Dick Boerger, said in a hearing at the College of Law that language used in Article VIII of the Code is "uncertain". Cooper added that prohibition of alcohol possession and use on campus should only be in cases where the "pursuit of knowledge" and other educational aspects of the University are affected.

Boerger in an unprecedented disciplinary action, has been charged with violating the Code by possessing and consuming alcoholic beverages at a "kegger" held within the Wallace Complex dormitory. Boerger pleaded "not guilty" at Thursday's hearing, and has decided to make a "test case" out of Article VIII because he feels the present policy is "nebulous."

Approximately 30 other living-group members demonstrated peacefully in front of the law school prior to the hearing, reaffirming support of Boerger's action.

Article VIII of the Code of Conduct reads, in part, that "The primary role of the University in handling matters involving the use or potential use of drugs or alcohol by its students is that of counseling."

The article goes on to state that "jeopardizing the academic operation or interests of the university community through drug or alcohol use is a violation of this code."

Both of the above sections of the article came under fire by Boerger's defense Thursday.

Judiciary action against Boerger resulted from a Halloween party held in the Borah Hall lounge. More than a hundred persons in the courtroom listened to prosecutor Brian Cherneck, a legal intern at the U of I, tell the Council that Article VIII was intended to be a "disciplinary regulation" when it was written.

Cherneck said that the Judicial Council was empowered to make decisions as to the interests of the academic community, and he asked action on the matter. Cherneck contended that Boerger be merely warned about any such further violations of the alcohol policy, and asked for "special consideration" of the defendant in the case, which is the first adjudication of this matter in U of I history.

Cooper argued that "pursuit of knowledge" hadn't been obstructed by the party, and said that by prohibiting further after-class on-campus parties, the University would be acting as a "regulator" rather than a counselor, as prescribed in the Code of Conduct. At intermit-

Seeking fame

The Argonaut needs something to put on its front page for the last issue of the semester so we're looking for a distinguished citizen to honor. Find out how you can become person of the year on page 4.

Seeking fortune

Collective bargaining for college professors is looming on the horizon and what form it will take probably depends on the efforts of two organizations, the American Federation of Teachers and the American Association of University Professors. Page 7.

Seeking victory

Boise State's Broncos have their eye on an upcoming Division II playoff game and that might be to the benefit of Idaho. The Vandals head south Saturday for their final contest of the season and Kevin Kelleher has details on page 10.

Golf course receives more funds from senate

The golf course received $1950 for driving range improvements at last Tuesday's Senate Meeting. Asked the reason for the improvements, Senator Bill Fay said that the driving range had to be brought up the hill. He added, however, that revenue would probably be increased after the improvements.

Part of the money will go toward spreaders to smooth out the lawn, and part will go toward two mowers, with $150 going toward minor driving range improvements.

The final composition of the Stadium Board was determined at the meeting. It was reaffirmed that all five members of the board would be students. Greg Casey suggested that one or two of the members be faculty people, to provide continuity. "The stadium manager already does that," pointed out Mark Beatty, "besides, the faculty people would dominate the conversation. And we paid for the stadium, we should decide what happens to it."

Provision was also made for two or three senators to serve on the board.

The concept of a new special investigator for the University's assistant judicial advisor was approved at the meeting. Senate approval was not required for the appointment, but it was asked by Ed Chernecke, Assistant Judicial Advisor. Emily Hansen, who submitted the bill, said, "All it does is release the Advisor for other duties." Greg Casey added that it would allow the University to conduct investigations by itself without calling in outside help. Despite some opposition, the resolution passed.

The Senate registered its opposition to prioritizing certain graduate programs. The Faculty Council had considered reducing or eliminating certain programs, such as History and Home Economics. Grant Burgoyne wanted prioritization struck down; as he put it, "a Ph.D. program is not separable from its undergraduate program." The Senate as a whole concurred; it passed a resolution opposing the Faculty Council plan.

The Senate passed a resolution also urging the unification of two Idaho Student groups, the Idaho Student Lobby and the Idaho Student Government Association. There was some opposition to the union; as Casey pointed out, one lobby for all Idaho Colleges could lead to disension within the lobby. "The U of I certainly doesn't agree with, say, Rick's College on alcohol on campus," said one Senator. But others said that on common issues the colleges' unity could give them each great strength, and the resolution passed.

Finally, a bill to reimburse Dean Johnson for money he spent toward the Blue Mountain IV project, $57 worth of extension cords, was considered. Bill Fay, Finance chairman, said Johnson has bought the five extension cords on assurances of Denny Eichorn that the ASUI would reimburse him. Finance department procedure states that the Senate has to approve all expenses before they are granted. Fay said that if this bill was passed, all procedures for obtaining funds might be destroyed. Burgoyne pointed out that Eichorn did not have authority to give Johnson the funds.

But Greg Lutman said that Johnson had worked with the Blue Mountain project and built the ASUI stage free of cost. Mark Beatty said that "this is a personal thing. We're dealing with the credibility of ASUI...When government becomes inflexible, it becomes impersonal." The bill failed to pass.

School on Wednesday

Classes will be held next Wednesday, despite what the U of I catalog says.

The time schedule gives the correct semester schedule, which includes classes on Wednesday. The Faculty Council changed the schedule last semester, on request from the Board of Regents.

The change did not come in time for the catalog's publication.

Last day to withdraw

According to Faculty Secretary Bruce Bray, today is the last day that students may withdraw from classes with a grade of "W". Withdrawals after today's deadline will have to be made through the office of the dean of the college in which the student who is withdrawing is enrolled.

Such withdrawal will have to demonstrate that there is a compelling reason for withdrawal. Academic-Vice President Robert Coonrod said "death in the family or very serious illness are examples of such compelling reasons."

Affirmative action gets go ahead on equal employment

Faculty Council designated the University's Affirmative Action Committee to monitor and advance equal opportunity employment programs at the the University, at their Tuesday meeting.

The committee will work closely with the university administration, and is charged with reporting periodically to the Faculty Council on Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action programs.

In other business, the council heard a report on a conference of Deans of the school of engineering of the three major Idaho Universities; referred to committee a motion by a faculty member to eliminate mid-semester grades; eliminated the Recreation Complex Board of Control, giving control over athletic facilities, including the stadium and swimming pool to an ASUI Senate committee; and discussed the possibility of having a faculty member on the Alumni Board.

Council Chairman Anthony Rigas, reported on a conference on education engineering at Boise State and Idaho State University, and the University of Idaho. The meeting according to Rigas, "left the door wide open to BSU and ISU to propose new engineering programs to the regents." Rigas said that while the other two schools were recommending new program the U of I has been eliminating some programs in the school of engineering.

Rigas said the meeting, which he termed, "very disappointing," was requested by the Idaho Board of Regents, but no Board members were present, during presentations of the Deans of the various colleges of engineering. Rigas added, however that some Board members were present during engineering discussion programs.

A proposal submitted to the General Faculty earlier in the month to do away with mid-semester grades was referred to the University Curriculum Committee by the council.

The council approved a proposal eliminating the recreation Complex Board of Control, which was replaced by an ASUI Senate committee, approved at their Tuesday meeting. The new committee will be in charge of the management of all University recreation complexes, including the stadium, swimming pool, tennis and handball courts.

The council told alumni association director Dick Johnston that it would be willing to draw up methods for selecting a faculty member for the Alumni Board, if the alumni were willing to seat such a member. Johnston said some Alumni Board member wanted a faculty member on the board to keep the faculty informed on alumni activities.

Casey wants more cooperation

ASWSU President Paul Casey thinks the ASUI and the ASWSU can cooperate "basically on programming—cultural events, speakers and concerts."

The student body president at Washington State University pointed out in an interview this week, "Idaho has the same problems we have here—it's so expensive to bring people to an area."

ASUI President Dirk Kempthorne approached Casey about the possibility of sharing expenses for speakers and having them appear at both campuses. They have also discussed the possibility of ASUI/ASWSU Performing Arts cooperation.

"I think one possibility," said the Washington State student, "is to let ASUI programs use the coliseum. A lot of people are against that, but I'd have no qualms on the matter." He was referring to the possibility of the ASUI using the Washington State Performing Arts Center for a big concert.

There has been some speculation the scheduling of concerts in the same time period at WSU and the U of I has been a deliberate plot. According to Casey, this feeling is evidently mutual, but really "it's purely coincidental."

Paul Casey

He said that both student organizations must insure that it does not happen again. "The market here is not too large—and things like that would destroy whatever we have."

In an aside on the subject, the ASWSU President mentioned, "Most people here think you're getting the better concerts—like Fleetwood Mac."

On other subjects, Casey told about Washington students attempt to make sure students are included as an interested third party in collective bargaining between the administration and faculty members. Casey pointed out how students are really a very concerned third party, since student fees might need to be raised to meet some salary settlements between professors and administrators.

He hopes that the legal machinery can be developed to include students as an interested third party, or else not included at all. "If we can't be included in a meaningful role, I don't think we want to be included as observers or something like—we want to be able to have other means of recourse."

He pointed out how the facu-ty members at Green River Community College in western Washington went on strike, since they were working under a "a form of collective bargaining agreement." The faculty walked out during the middle of the semester, and students tried to get an injunction to get them back on the jobs—but were unsuccessful. Thus students were held up in their education.

Due to a different fee structure, the ASWSU operates on a budget a little more than a third of the ASUI. According to Casey, the organization budgets about $90,000 which comes from a $3 fee per student per semester, and the profits from the class lecture notes program.

Student publications and the Compton Union Building are funded separately.

The ASUI is not the only student organization having problems with their golf course—ASWSU lost $7,000 in operating its two years ago, but now they are breaking even.

The ASWSU President hopes North-South Ski Bowl which the organization owns can do as well, since it lost $7,000 last year.

Pruitt replaces Fry as programs director

"I want to bring off the programs and activities that students want and need," said Steve Pruitt, who recently replaced Lance Fry as ASUI Programs Director.

Pruitt said that he wants to work more closely with the SUB board in making up his plans. "They should be integrated," he said, "because so many of our activities center around the SUB."

"We want to get the off-campus people down here more," he said, adding that many programs committees will be interviewing people next year. "But I'd like people to stop by my office anytime."

His plans for programs include the return of Special Events, largely consisting of week-long or three or four day long activities spotlighting campus groups and activities. He said that such programs were conducted two years ago, and that they seemed to work.

Pruitt said the structure of several committees is now in flux, including the Issues and Forums Committee which Mike Hogan formerly headed. "Mike Faraday has more or less been acting in a leadership position, but so far it is unofficial," he said.

Pruitt said that one of his programs may be centered around the construction in SUB, with special days devoted to the new concessions stand and other services.

Pruitt also said the Graphics Committee is designing an ASUI logo, saying that he hoped it would be ready for presentation before Christmas. "This way, when the ASUI sponsors a program, students will know about it."

Nominate now

The end of 1974 is fast approaching and that means it's time for the Argonaut staff to begin its search for a deserving soul to honor as the Argonaut's person of the year.

The competition, based on a Time magazine contest of a similar but more chauvinistic name, began last year when we selected student Ken Buxton for the award. Buxton, as you may recall, went on to make news after a charade on the Ad lawn in the garb of the KKK (which, depending on your point of view, meant either "Ku Klux Klan" or "Kenny's Korner Klub").

Buxton has faded from the campus scene but there are probably other unsung heroes in the University of Idaho community equally deserving of recognition. Some possible nominees:

—ASUI Sen. Bill Fay, who showed President Dirk Kempthorne who was in the driver's seat.

—Another senator, Greg Lutman, who has championed causes ranging from ASUI funds for the Black Student Union to reimbursing students who buy extension cords for rock festivals.

—Political candidates Glen Miles and Mike Hogan, who led a student landslide at the polls by capturing 39 and 35 per cent of the vote, respectively.

Of course, it's possible our choice could honor some feats of a more exemplary nature.

—Perhaps Ron Hoene, a student who risked the wrath of the University bureaucracy by daring to take a tape recorder to class.

—Or Salt Lake City industrialist, William Kibbie, who contributed a cool $300,000 for our stadium roof, which may or may not have helped out the students' cause.

—Or maybe the Argonaut's no. 1 investigative reporter, Bruce Spotleson, whose zeal for a story resulted in breaking his own ankle, not once but twice (the first accidental, the second intentional.)

The list of possibilities is long and ranges from a lowly freshman to the Board of Regents. Send your nominations to the Argonaut, c/o the Student Union Building.

Labor unfair

Faculty interested in collective bargaining have so far made no attempts to include a very interested third party—students.

ASWSU President Paul Casey suggested one solution in an interview—that legal machinery be developed to include students in negotiations between administration and faculty.

Too often, in labor disputes, it's the consumers who get hurt. It could happen again in this case.

Certainly a simple two-way bargaining procedure between faculty and the administration (or Board of Regents) would be wrong.

THERE WILL BE NO RECESSION. THERE WILL BE NO RECESSION. THERE WILL BE NO RECESSION. THERE WILL BE NO RECESSION...

Car 212, where were you?

The year was 1930, near election day, and Republican candidate for Governor, John McMurray, was waging a battle for the statehouse against Canyon County Democrat Ben Ross. In the final weeks of the campaign McMurray drove through Boise on his way to a speech in north Idaho. He sensed that he was ahead in the race, and suspected that the presence of other big GOP names on the ticket - like Senator William E. Borah - would help pull him into office.

Then it happened. In Boise his car broke down, and in a thoughtless moment he drove a state car 212 miles from Boise to Lewiston.

The Democrats, behind the wily Ben Ross, immediately seized upon the incident. Here was a politician campaigning for office on state funds. "A fraud against the people!" they cried. "A misappropriation of tax dollars!"

Well, it was, and it worked. That seemingly small incident turned a winning campaign into a fatal nosedive from which it never recovered. Idaho in 1930 elected a Republican senator, two Republican congressmen, but a Democratic governor.

It's difficult in the wake of Watergate to comprehend the indignation that the "car 212" incident evoked in Idaho voters of 1930. At most a few dollars were involved. Today it doesn't seem like anything to get excited about.

And yet, to place the "car 212" affair in perspective it is only necessary to pick up this week's newspapers. Last Saturday Governor Andrus flew down to South Carolina to attend the pleasure-filled and politics-packed National Democratic Governor's Conference. The only problem was that he flew down in a National Guard plane, which means the tax payers picked up the bill for a private, political junket.

Back in 1930 a few state bucks spent on politicking cost a man his shot at the statehouse. There was honest anger that tax dollars would be spent on such a private project. Today, when tax dollars fly a Governor to a sojourn in the sunny south we think of Watergate and shrug.

That's a shame, and what's more, perhaps that's some of the attitude that allowed Watergate-type of activities to go so far before people said "enough." We accepted the little bits and pieces of corruption until like a jig-saw puzzle we suddenly saw them forming a large and frightening picture. Watergate shocked a lot of people into realizing that the difference between local statehouse cronyism and Nixon deception was more a difference of quantity than of quality.

In short the principle involved was the same. Whether in Washington or in Idaho it's just plain wrong to divert state funds to personal uses. No matter how big or small the diversion it's still wrong.

Now it's highly inconceivable that Governor Andrus made any conscious decision to bilk the taxpayers. In the first place he's not that kind of guy. In the second place he's got enough on the ball that if he wanted to "go crooked" he could end up with a deed to Ada County, which makes the plane fare sort of pale in comparison.

What probably happened was that the Governor hopped into car 212 just like John McMurray did without giving it a second thought. It seemed to be one of the prerequisites of the job.

But it isn't. And maybe we ought to take a moment to remind ourselves and our elected officials of that fact.

Director threatened, resigns

Two men pointing at each other, saying "You lie..."

When Lance Fry, with the approval of the programs board fired Mike Hogan from his position as Chairman of Issues and Forums, he set a chain of events into motion that led to his own resignation. He surely must have had some idea that this would happen; Hogan was a popular committee head, fairly successful in his work. Besides that, he was a candidate for county office, which meant some prestige for the ASUI.

In the face of all this, Hogan was fired. Why?

Dean Vettrus, among others, said in the Idahonian (November 1) that the firing was not over finances, but revolved around a personality conflict. In his official explanation for Hogan, Fry gave four reasons behind the firing: a disregard for communication, lack of organization and planning, poor committee organization and incidents impeding smooth operations. All are blown up generalizations; Fry did not supply any details in the explanation.

The most immediate traceable cause occurred October 19, when

Randy Stapilus

Hogan declared that he was stepping down as Issues and Forums chairman. A note to that effect had already been sent to Fry's desk.

Fry waited until October 23 to react to the announcement, when he sent a demand for resignation to Hogan.

Fry had not apparently even warned Hogan that he was to be fired, and did not give him a chance to work out differences. Hogan did not file a formal appeal through the ASUI, but he did get a vote of confidence from his Issues and Forums committee. And while the Programs Board upheld Fry's right to carry out this action, they did not approve the action itself.

On November 1, someone tipped off the Idahonian that Hogan had been fired. The article itself stated no source for the original information; Dean Vettrus and Hogan gave information in reply to the original leak. Fry has said that he did not do it and does not know who did, and there is no real evidence to suggest that he leaked it. But there was clearly a plan somewhere to hurt Hogan's campaign.

There is some evidence to suggest that plans were hatched on the other side of the fence as well. Fry told the Argonaut a week ago that one ASUI officer walked up to him one day shortly after Hogan's resignation and threatened to try to remove him from office. Fry went on to say that he heard several people talk about impeaching him, using the Hogan situation as part of the prosecutor's case.

A simple conflict of personalities and policies was probably the beginning of this problem, but it developed into a virtual Watergate. There's enough blame to go round. Hopefully the new people in the Programs Department will get along better and free themselves of office politics.

Christians, Muslims, Jews can live in peace

By A. Mannan Sheikh

Anybody who reads Jack Anderson's columns knows how frequently he has written about the Middle-East with a one-track mind. He is a well-known Zionist—a person who supports the creation, existence and continuous extension of Israel—directly or indirectly.

It almost has become the second habit of the Zionist columnist to blame the Arab Muslims and Christians alike for all the world problems and particularly the United States' problems. If anybody disagrees with them, first; one cannot afford to disagree because the price is too high, and second; if someone does, he has to suffer the expressions of "anti-Semitic," "anti-Jewish," a "narrow-minded reactionary," which are used to vilify anyone who legitimately criticizes the Israeli government.

Good examples are provided by the left and right of the political spectrum of the United States: Senator Goldwater in 1964; Senator McGovern in 1972; and recently Senator Fulbright, Bob Smith (defeated candidate for U.S. Senate from Idaho), and Rabbi Elmer Berger. Only last week General Brown was to be hanged for expressing his true feelings about the Israeli supporters.

I hope the reader will not be misled by my writing "Zionist" that I am against Jews, or Judaism. Jews are closest to my religion, they believe in the same God and above all they believe in the revealed holy book "Torah." But I am against the Zionist whose political ideology and philosophy is to promote the concept of "Greater Israel," a country under Jewish rule from Nile (Egypt) to Euphrates (Iraq).

No one expects from Anderson's column true information of any journalistic value. A poisonous venom against the Arabs is openly put into the minds of the United States people to mislead them as much as possible.

In 1971 he was criticizing Pakistan for keeping Bangladesh people suppressed and unfed and was helping to liberate them. Now their hunger is blamed on the Arabs. If India can make atomic bombs, and cannot solve the food problem, let us blame the Arabs!

So let us talk about some facts. The sugar shortage is created by the Arabs. If the United States economy is controlled so much by the Arabs—we should have more friendly towards them. Who can believe the sugar shortage is caused by the oil situation? Especially when the United States buys only 6 per cent of its oil from Arab countries. Anderson is hereby invited to write fact, and not false propaganda.

This year, there was a drought in the Mid-west.

Who was responsible for the drought? Arabs? Do Arabs control the production of soy beans? Corn?

Anderson should know that the sugar companies made 500 per cent higher profits—not the Arabs. The price of sugar has gone from 80 cents to $3.50 for five pounds.

Has the price for Arab oil at American gas stations gone from 40 cents per gallon to $1.20 per gallon? Anderson should thank the Arabs that they are not following the example of the American sugar industry.

Is it not true the prices of all commodities have gone up from 100 to 150 per cent? Let us consider gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc and other metal prices. Arabs do not produce even one per cent of the world production of these metals. Why are the prices going up? Because of Arabs? How about wheat?

If yes, let us have a detente with the Muslims and Christian Arabs who are the closest to the people and republic of United States in religion and philosophy. Muslims and Christians are the two major people (800 million Christians and 700 million Muslims) and they can keep the world as it is or destroy it.

The United States is isolated since the Ramadan War (October War) from the rest of the world in accepting the Palestinians right to live in their own country where they have lived for centuries. Six million Palestinian people cannot be made homeless, countryless, and helpless forever. According to Ben Gurion, first prime minister of Israel, Israel has to the Palestinians if she wants to live peacefully. The Holy Land belongs to all people—it's not reserved for one group of people.

Let us help to strengthen the ties between the Jews, Christians, and Muslims to live together as they have lived in the past—with mutual respect and equality. If we want to have a world with equality, then let us help to organize a Palestine State where Jews, Christians, and Muslims (with common father Abraham—peace be upon him) can live democratically with equal rights.

Election results final

It appears Republicans captured all three of the extremely close legislative races in the Nov. 5 general election.

Aides in the secretary of state's office have been working to compile official election results from reports turned in by county clerks.

Chief Deputy Secretary of State Jerry N. Hill said Thursday it appears now that Republicans C.W. Neider of Coeur d'Alene, David Little of Emmett and B.E. Bud Lewis of St. Maries all slipped by their Democratic opponents.

The results still are subject to verification by the State Board of Canvassers but that is little more than a formality. The board is supposed to certify election results by Nov. 20 but the session has been postponed because Treasurer Marjorie R. Moon and Auditor Joe R. Williams are in Alabama for a convention.

That means the makeup of the 1975-76 Idaho Legislature will include two more Democrats in the Senate and eight more Democrats in the House than the last session. But Republicans remain firmly in control of both houses.

Hill said the unofficial tally shows 21 Republicans and 14 Democrats in the Senate and 43 Republicans to 27 Democrats in the House.

The closest legislative race apparently occurred in Legislative District 2, where Rep. Gary Ingram, R-Post Falls, and Neider won.

Hill said the tally shows Ingram had 3,989 votes, Neider 3,814, Democrat Ray Bedine had 3,782 and Frances Heard trailed with 3,680.

In a small paradox, the district ousted one-term incumbent Sen. Ivan Hansen, a Republican, in favor of Art Manley of Coeur d'Alene, a former Democratic state senator. Manley won by 519 votes.

In District 3, Rep. Emery E. Hedlund, D-St. Maries won with 3,749 votes, followed by Lewis, 3,251; Democrat John Cooper with 3,159 and Dolly Hartman, 2,367.

In another close contest, Little, Idaho Republican national committeeman, won a state senate seat by 68 votes over Woodrow W. Bean of Cascade, a former state legislator. Hill said the tally shows Little got 4,475 votes to 4,407 for Bean.

The seat was vacated by Sen. Warren Brown, R-McCall, who did not run for re-election.

College unions seek academic freedom

By CHRISTA ZAHN
of the Argonaut Staff

Most students may not know it, but like in other professions there are associations and unions which college faculty can belong to. On the University of Idaho campus, the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) are the most active.

The AFT is a union, while the AAUP is termed a professional organization. Both groups were formed to help the teacher, but they use different methods.

"The idea of a faculty union is new in the United States," Nicholas Gier, President of the AFT explained. Salaries and tenure are the primary reasons for a faculty union.

Gier emphasized that university salaries barely keep up with the standard of living increases. Their salaries have remained the same, with some even going down from the past years. At the University of Denver, a top private school, the starting salaries were from $12,000 to $13,000 a year, now they are from $8,000 to $9,000. Schools are able to pay their teachers less because of the surplus of PHDs around, Gier explained.

In the 60's colleges were expanding and it was easy to get a job, so many people became teachers. Then the Vietnam War and the recession tightened the economy, and it is now too hard to get a job. "The academic market has become like a meat market, you sell yourself to the highest bidder!" Gier exclaimed.

The controversy over tenure also started in the 60's. It was given out freely then and now it is very tight and controversial.

A legislator from Soda Springs wants to abolish tenure completely, but faculties agree that tenure shouldn't be abolished, Gier said. It is the only thing that approaches a contract for teachers. Their letter of acceptance is their contract, even though it could be termed as nothing more than a verbal contract. "If we could bargain for a legally binding contract, then we would be completely immune from the legislature," Gier added.

He concluded that tenure

with accountability, at least a five year competency review board, should remain.

The AFT advocates collective bargaining as a method of attaining changes. Collective bargaining is when the management must bargain in good faith with the employees "Right now in Idaho public employees don't have the right to bargain," Gier said, "but as soon as the legislature passes a bill allowing it, the AFT would call for an election."

In an election, the faculty would vote either for the AFT, AAUP, or the NEA (another faculty group which has two members on campus) as their bargaining agent, or vote not to bargain at all. After the election. If they go for bargaining, the agent would bargain with the Administration, the Board of Regents, and probably the legislature.

Gier feels that the old traditional model of collective bargaining needs to be tailored to the university. In the traditional model there are managers, workers, and products, but in the university the products are human. In the East the students have revolted against collective bargaining, because they aren't represented.

At the Massachusetts State colleges students, faculty, administration and even some nonprofessionals all are represented in bargaining. Gier personally feels that all the advances made in the 60's would be gone if strict collective bargaining is done.

"The AAUP laid out principles to protect academic freedom and tenure and have done many other good things," Gier added, "but they see the university different from industry. They see the faculty as co-managers of an academic institution, and are afraid collective bargaining could destroy academic traditions. The AFT doesn't hesitate about collective bargaining."

The AFT has 40 members, but Gier considers that to be a modest success for their 10 1/2 months of existence in Moscow. They are mainly members. "We aren't radicals, although we have some radical members among us; on the whole we are very moderate," Gier added.

The main problem recruiting members for the AFT is its affiliation with the AFL-CIO.

"Unions have gotten a bad image because they have abused some of their privileges," Gier explained. He emphasized though that each AFT local is autonomous and gets the majority of its $5 a month dues. But they also get legal and financial aid from the national.

Gier concluded, "The AAUP is a medieval model of shared authority; the faculty have meetings, make decisions, but they are just recommendations. The regents can do what they want. We are instructed to educate students in democracy, but we ourselves aren't democratic. That is why our slogan is 'Democracy in Education-Education for Democracy.'"

"Our way of operating is different from the AFT's," Barbara Meldrum, President of AAUP explained. "We incorporate principles into guidelines, set examples, and give advice to campuses, but we don't dictate what they must do. The AAUP promotes solutions and the administrations of many campuses turn to the AAUP for advice. So we are quite a force for setting standards in the profession."

The AAUP has served the faculty for 60 years and has around 70 members on campus. The AAUP will answer questions, give advice, and work with the individual and his problems, even if he isn't a member. Their problems can include from not being reappointed to being denied tenure or promotion.

The AAUP has initiated several programs, including review of competency for tenure, working with the legislature, and salary studies.

"Tenure was never designed to protect incompetency," Meldrum emphasized. The AAUP started the move toward the competency review, but the regents jumped the gun and started the board before they had a chance to work out the details. She added that the review of competency should remain with the university; in other words, the university must prove the individual incompetent, not the individual proving his competency.

On the involvement of students in tenure review she said that they have an important role in providing information, but shouldn't be involved in the actual decision.

The AAUP started the drive for a legislative consultant. The State Council of AAUP started donations for the hiring of a full time consultant, and after they got some support the Chairmen of the Faculty Councils took over and now there is the Council of Higher Education Faculties. Meldrum added that Bob Hosack, who was elected to the legislature this year, is a former AAUP President.

The AAUP also conducts an Annual Salary Analysis. Each year a survey of the entire country's salaries for faculty is taken and the results are an accepted means of publicizing faculty salaries. "(The survey shows that Idaho is one of the lowest of the lowest.)"

The AAUP does participate in collective bargaining and has been in 38 elections during the past two years. They won 20 and lost 18 of the elections, but of the 18 they lost, only 5 were to rival organizations. The rest were when the faculties decided not to bargain.

Meldrum explained that the dues are paid to the national organization and the benefit here is indirect, but if they charged the amount that the AFT does, they would have more locally. She added though that if collective bargaining was eminent the dues would go up and the local would get the money.

Errors discovered in faculty salaries

A list of U of I faculty and administrative salaries, showing increases from 1973-74 to 1974-75, was released this week by the local branch of the American Federation of Teachers.

The salary breakdown included several errors, however, Nick Gier, president of the group, said.

Under "average 10 months salaries" for the College of Forestry, correct figures are professor, $17,501.82; associate professor, $15,101; assistant professor, $13,066; instructor, $9,955.62.

For professional staff, salary figures for five persons were omitted and a sixth person was omitted. Correct salaries for 1973 are followed by that for 1974 with the difference in parenthesis:

Joann Baldrige, $13,125, $14,136 ($1,011); Elbert M. Barton, $15,225, $16,200 ($975); Douglas A. Bell, $9,828, $10,399 ($571); Lee Elliott, $11,078, $11,616 ($538); Glenn D. Blaisdell, $25,200, $26,233 ($1,033); B.O. Blake, $18,278, $19,027 ($749).

Bruce Bray, faculty secretary, is no longer a member of the music department, Gier said.

Five professors listed under agricultural economics should be listed under forestry: Howard Loewenstein, Craig MacPhee, Minoru Hironaka, Franklin H. Pitkin and Kenneth Sowles.

Fleetwood Mac restores image

By DAVID WEEKS
of the Argonaut Staff

"We're the original Fleetwood Mac, and that's no jive!" The group was more than half-way through their concert when Bob Welch, lead singer/guitarist, made this exclamation, and by then no one in the gym had any doubts.

For awhile, however, there were many people who thought that once again they had been burned. Last year, a sham Fleetwood Mac appeared in certain sections of Idaho; some of their oldest fans still haven't recovered fully from that disappointment. And Monday night it seemed, at first, that something was going wrong again.

First of all, the scheduled back-up group, "Triumverat," was dropped, the stated reason being that their drummer was ill. But the Argonaut has learned that the band had been dropped from the tour because of conflicts with other tour members. Thus, instead of having a rock-group to precede the main act, there was a solo performer from Pullman named Gary Ball. Gary played his own compositions and some Jim Croce numbers for about thirty minutes to an unreceptive audience, then departed. For the next hour or so, everyone listened to recorded music, and grew more and more restless. Finally, Fleetwood Mac arrived from Missoula (their previous stop) and immediately went on stage. The prolonged wait was soon forgotten as the five members played more than an hour and a half of mostly high-energy rock music. They played songs from the old albums, including "Green Manalishi," "Rattlesnake Shake," "Black Magic Woman" (Santana adapted their version from this Fleetwood Mac original), and "Oh Well." Songs from their more recent albums included "Hypnotized," "Spare Me a Little of Your Love," and "Future Games." And there were several tunes from their newest album ("Heroes Are Hard to Find"): "Angel," "Burmuda Triangle." Perhaps the most interesting aspects of these renditions were the additional comments Welch made about the composition of the songs—the story behind the Burmuda Triangle, the Beaujolais-induced writing of "Future Games."

Apart from the songs, the main points of interest were the lights and the physical appearance of the group. The lights, varying combinations of colors, were well-coordinated with solos and high points in songs, and added greatly to the mood of the performance. In addition, the traditionally bland stage setting in the gym was somewhat relieved by the artificial plants the group had brought with them.

There was a marked contrast between the members of the group as the concert proceeded. Christine (keyboards) and John (bass) wore a modified vest, a baseball cap turned backwards, and knee-length pants. The audience responded well to Fleetwood Mac, and clapped long enough to encourage one encore (although Welch said they had gone off-stage to get their salt pills). The only criticism I heard was that the lyrics were unintelligible, but then most people who were familiar with the group already had the words memorized anyway.

Fleetwood (drums) were in constant motion. Fleetwood's outfit was particularly enticing: he wore a modified vest, a baseball cap turned backwards, and knee-length pants.

Life of a small boy

The French film-maker Francois Truffaut has been responsible for such masterpieces as "Wild Child" and "Jules and Jim." He has even directed an English-language film, "Fahrenheit 451." Originally, Truffaut was a movie critic for a French magazine, "Cahiers Du Cinema," along with Jean-Luc Godard, Claude Chabral, and Eric Rohmer.

Critics launched an all-out attack on the then popular French directors who represented the so-called "Tradition of French Quality." However, they were not content with simply putting their ideas on paper. They carried their protest against the French film establishment one step further by making their own movies. Soon afterwards, the press labeled this group the "new wave" (a title which Truffaut did not agree with).

Truffaut's first feature film, which many critics considered to be the best of the "new wave" was "The 400 Blows." With this film (made in 1959), the 27-year-old Truffaut established himself as one of the leading geniuses of the cinema.

"The 400 Blows" is the moving story of a young boy turned outcast. It is a frank examination of the life of a tough Parisian kid as he moves through the lonely stages of disintegration at home and at school. Antoine, aged 12 (played by Jean-Pierre Leaud) is rejected by his parents, and eventually ends up in reform school. It has been said that "The 400 Blows" is autobiographical (Truffaut himself did indeed go to reform school).

This may explain why, as Bosley Crowther of the New York Times says, "one gets a profound impression of being personally involved—a hard-by observer, if not participant, in the small joys and sorrows of the boy."

"The 400 Blows" won the Director's Prize at the 1959 Cannes Film Festival, and the New York Critics Award. The present version of the movie is slightly different from the original—Truffaut has re-edited it (but not drastically). It features a fine musical score by Jean Constantin, and is characterized by the literal and factual camera style of Truffaut.

The dialogue is in French, but the English sub-titles by Herman G. Weinberg are better than most.

"The 400 Blows" will be shown by the Film Society at 7 p.m. on Monday in the Borah Theater. Admission will be 75 cents per person.

Keep evaluations honest

If students see violations of teacher evaluation policies, they should be reported to Reich Baldo, at 885-6171.

"The professor is not to be in the room when students are filling out the evaluation forms," Baldo said in describing the policy governing evaluations.

He pointed out the faculty member's presence generally biases the results of the evaluation. In addition, to insure student evaluations do not affect their grades, the results are held in Baldo's office until after final grades are assigned.

"A student teller, acceptable to the class, must administer the evaluation and return the forms to the Placement Center (in the basement of the Faculty Office Building)," Baldo said.

"All forms have to be filled out in pencil," the coordinator also stressed. The computer which scans the form only reacts to pencil.

Trox wants Boise for Christmas

The Vandals close out the '74 football season tomorrow, when they face awesome Boise State, in Bronco Stadium. The interstate clash is scheduled for 12:30 p.m. Moscow time.

The game will be seen on regional television throughout much of the West, but it will not be aired in Moscow. Technical difficulties make live broadcasting a total impossibility. The game will be aired on Wednesday, November 27, in the Moscow area.

This is the most important game of the year for the Vandals, the crux of its importance being the difference between a good season and a disaster. Troxel says, "It would be great to win this one, I couldn't ask for a better Christmas gift".

The Vandals have the privilege of being the last team to beat Boise in Bronco stadium. Last minute heroics by Dave Comstock in 1972 pulled out a 22-21 victory for Idaho. Since then the Broncos have not lost on their home field, and they revenged their loss to the Vandals by pulverizing them in Moscow 47-24 last year. Comstock won't start this week due to a reinjured shoulder, but he didn't start two years ago either.

Troxel is going with senior quarterback Dennis Ballock. Ballock has played off and on this year, and he almost led the Vandals to a great comeback victory in Northern Illinois last week.

The Vandal running backs will be Fredback and Chadband; Brantley, Nash and Dean will probably see some action.

Brantley will probably alternate with Fredback. The Vandals will probably pass more than they have in the past. They will have to keep control of the football, and a diversified attack is a must.

According to Troxel, "The main thing we have to do is keep them from dominating the football game. We can't let them control the football. That will be quite a chore. In addition to dominating league standings, Boise State also tops conference statistics on both a team and individual basis. The Broncos lead in total offense (510 yards per game), total defense allowing only 278 yards per game, and are number one in stopping the rushing games of opponents.

BSU quarterback Jim McMillan heads the total offense category on an individual basis, averaging 306.1

yards per game. He leads the nation's small college statistics in that category. He also leads the Big Sky in passing, averaging over 285 yards per game. McMillan will be facing the best pass defense in the conference when he looks across at the Vandal defense.

Troxel is going to incorporate an extra defensive halfback in his defense and widen his ends in hopes of putting pressure on Bronco passing machine. Montana tried it last week and McMillan threw six touchdown passes and scampered for another. Quite frankly the Vandals will have to put out a super effort. Mistakes will kill any hope of the upset. The Vandals will have to execute their game plan to sterling perfection.

The Broncos are a big, tough, physical football team with a devastating offensive attack, and a smashing good defense. Troxel says, "They're one of the finest teams I've ever seen." The Bronco record speaks for itself 9-1, and two straight conference titles.

There is a possibility that the Broncos won't be up for this game. The city of Boise and the students obviously will be hot, but the football team has won a berth in the division playoffs, and consequently could be looking ahead to their game with Central Michigan. Tony Knap said earlier this week, "Idaho may be more motivated than we are. I think the people and the town are more excited about the Idaho game than the players."

A defeat of Boise State will make the season for the Idaho football Vandals. Moreover, a shocking whipping would put a little respect back in the Moscow Institution, and guarantee Ed Troxel a Merry Christmas.

THE HYDROSODIUMS HAVE BEEN CAUGHT IN THE ACT OF TAKING BACK THEIR SPACECRAFT, WHICH UNKNOWN TO THEM, IS NOW UNDER "NEW OWNERSHIP."

Former Oregon inmate faces trial in Spokane

Idaho state prison officials say they are ready to send Carl Cletus Bowles to Spokane, Washington, to face two murder charges.

"As far as we're concerned, medically and physically, he's ready to go," said State Prison Warden Richard Anderson.

Bowles, 33, a former inmate at the Oregon state prison, faces two charges of first-degree murder in the deaths last June of Earl and Viola Hunter of Eugene, Ore. The couple's bodies were found in a wooded thicket south of Spokane in July.

He fled from custody while on a special pass and eventually was captured near Post Falls, Idaho, June 16. He currently is serving a 75-year prison term for kidnaping three persons while attempting to escape.

Proceedings against the man at Spokane have been delayed while he recovered from gunshot wounds suffered at Post Falls.

"The only further operation he now needs is a colostomy and that doesn't have to be done for six to nine months," Anderson said.

He said Bowles has been recovering from earlier operations and now is allowed to exercise two to three hours per day.

Deputy Atty. Gen. James Hargis said he is working with Spokane authorities to arrange for the transfer.

"It should be soon but we don't know exactly when," Hargis said.

Bowles' niece, Jean Coberly, was sentenced Monday to three years in prison for hindering prosecution by aiding Bowles' escape last May. The woman told authorities she drove Bowles from a Salem motel to Portland.

By JENNY SNODGRASS
of the Argonaut Staff

It all started at an innocent Sadie Hawkins party a couple of weeks ago, with hay, pumpkins and two kegs scattered about the stereo lounge of Borah Hall in the Wallace Complex.

The side effects of the pumpkins and hay were great, but the after effects of the kegs of beer resulted as a lingering hangover for the participants.

The Resident Advisor of the hall submitted an incident report of the affair to the Student Advisory Services which, after all was his job, and the report floated upward to the chief justice of the University Judicial Council, Dan Poole. Poole declared this to be a test case to clarify the Board of Regents policy of alcohol in the dorms and Dick Boerger, president, represented his floor in court Thursday afternoon.

Boerger went to the Idaho Law School Courtroom to plead guilty for the possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages within the dorm, (violation of Article VIII) but decided on "contesting the entire alcoholic policy because it is nebulous," he stated.

"We want the regents to set down definite guidelines," he added. "We want greater freedom."

The administration stresses preserving an academic atmosphere, and since alcohol has the reputation of not preserving the urge to study, it is prohibited on campus. Revolt is in the air.

According to many of the students living in the Borah and Olsen Halls, these functions have enhanced social and academic life.

Rhonda Wing, a junior in Olsen Hall agreed to Borah flings. "They enhance social life 100 per cent. When Borah has a kegger, everyone goes! Social life revolves around the keg."

John Fowld, a sophomore living in Borah hall stated, "It seems ridiculous. By the time people come to college they are adults and shouldn't be treated like children."

Boerger responded, "Alcohol just fits in the social scheme. I don't think people would show up if we served cider." He questioned Wing. "If we were to serve ice cream and cider would the girls in Olsen Hall come?"

"No way," she replied.

To possess (alcohol) or not to possess has just added to the segregation of the Greeks and the independents. Some of the fraternities and sororities that own the land they are built on may have the asset of alcohol, therefore, the independents feel the need for some clarification on the alcoholic barrier since "the parties are well organized and people have a good time," according to Gary Go, Borah's social chairman and instigator of the parties.

Because of this, Boerger walked into the courtroom as the representative of his hall with the idea that "no guts; no glory," should be Borah Halls motto.

tent stages of defense testimony, the phraseology of Article VIII came under fire.

"There are so many different interpretations to this section," Cooper said. "No statute should be so vague."

"The key issue, as seen by the defense, is whether the use of alcohol at the party "impaired the dissemination of knowledge."

The defense also contended that the Board of Regents policy governing the use of alcohol on campus is based on "parents' interests" rather than students' interests, and that Regent policy was never intended to "prohibit" the use of alcoholic beverages.

The Council accepted briefs filed by the defense, and said it should be ready to act on the matter prior to Thanksgiving, if council members' schedules permitted.

Many of the demonstrators in front of the Law School argued that the U of I liquor laws need to be changed in their entirety. Several were also quick to point out that the Halloween party from which this test case has resulted wasn't destructive or "rip-roaring."

"There was no money taken from out of hall funds, and the party was only for those people who wanted it," said Borah Hall resident Richard Aric.

One of the prosecution arguments presented was that Article VIII allows for prevention of any damage or injury to students before it happens, "rather than a waiting until it happens."

Chernecke went on to add, that as far as the Regents' motives for making the decision in the first place were concerned, such motives shouldn't be looked at, but only the decision itself.

The prosecution argued that the Code applies to the campus as a whole, and it was agreed by the Council that Greek living groups would also be affected by any change in policy stemming from the case.

The defense summed up its position by saying that the Council does indeed have the power to review Article VIII and decide if it is too vague, from which point a change in the policy or its semantics would follow.

The Council made "no promises" that it would decide on the matter prior to Thanksgiving.
