If you think no booze is bad, how 'bout no Blue Mountain?

Campus alcohol defeated

By KENTON BIRD
of the Argonaut Staff

The University of Idaho was left with an apparently unenforceable alcohol policy Friday when the Board of Regents turned down a proposal allowing the sale and consumption of alcoholic beverages on campus.

The board voted 5-3 against President Ernest Hartung's request, which would have allowed alcohol on campus, including living groups, if it was approved by the president, properly licensed and catered, and approved by law enforcement officials.

Hartung said a lawsuit from students could be possible because the University's present policy may be in conflict with Idaho's 19-year-old drinking law.

It is impossible for the University to enforce the ban on alcohol without a greatly expanded student personnel services, Hartung said. "We can't post police at all the doors," he explained.

"I wonder if the board is well-advised to invite a lawsuit," Hartung said.

Regent Ed Benoit agreed. "I don't want to walk into a lawsuit knowing that I'm going to lose," said Benoit, a Twin Falls attorney.

But Leno Seppi of Lava Hot Springs contended the question was indeed a moral issue and said he had received 15-20 telephone calls from southeastern Idaho residents opposing the new policy.

Roy Truby, state superintendent of public instruction and ex-officio board member, said permitting alcohol on campus "could seriously affect appropriations for higher education, as many people feel strongly about this issue."

Alford and Benoit were joined by Board President J.P. Munson of Sandpoint in supporting Hartung's proposal. Truby and Seppi, along with John Swartley of Boise, Janet Hay of Nampa and Clint Hoopes of Rexburg, voted no.

After the vote, Munson said, "We talked about the legal issue and the moral issue, but when it comes down to it, it's a political issue." He suggested the board seek a "friendly" lawsuit, however, to settle the legal question.

Following the vote on the change in policy, the board defeated on a tie vote a second proposal that would allow consumption and sale of alcohol only in the clubhouse of the ASUI golf course.

Hay changed sides on the question and was joined by Munson, Alford and Hay in supporting the second request. Seppi, Hoopes, Swartley and Truby were opposed.

The board took no action on whether to permit the Blue Mountain rock festival to take place on University property this year and left the decision in Hartung's hands.

Hartung had asked the board of advice and counsel, saying he didn't want to drop a bombshell in their lap if the festival took place and problems occurred.

A motion by Benoit that the Blue Mountain group be prohibited from using University property for such a festival died for lack of a second. Swartley said the board had confidence in Hartung's ability to control the situation.

Blue Mountain date, place arrangements uncertain

By BRUCE SPOTLESON

The Blue Mountain rock festival will most likely continue this year, but the annual spring event is so far shaping up as something different than in the past.

In fact, with the traditional first-Sunday-in-May creeping nearer and nearer, a location still hasn't been secured and the May 4 date is anything but definite.

If the concert is held May 4, one thing is certain: it won't be at the arboretum, the sunny site of last year's represent all campus Christian groups.

Officials in charge of on-campus facility scheduling say they never received an Arboretum use request from Blue Mountain organizers, so when the request from the Campus Christian Center group rolled in on Feb. 19, it wasn't long before it was granted.

Meanwhile, events that transpired last week gave the first concrete sign that there will indeed be a Blue Mountain concert this year. Up to that time, it had been anybody's guess as to the direction in which events would unfold.

At a Thursday noon meeting, the Moscow Chamber of Commerce made pleas for a smaller festival, and the Student Committee for an Outdoor Music Festival affirmed that all possible alternatives toward such an end were being examined.

Although the Chamber of Commerce is said to have refrained from endorsing the music festival, it also stopped short of condemning it.

The University's Board of Regents had been asked for advice as to the concert's on-campus future at its Friday meeting here by U of I President festival and its near 10,000 crowd, and the location of 3 1/2 of four Blue Mountains in history.

That Sunday has already been reserved by the Christian group, "The Seekers," which sports a name similar to some late - 60's recording stars who gave the world "Georgy Girl." The name duplication, however, is purely coincidental.

Billed as a "Christian gathering," about 300 people are expected to attend the Sunday musical performance by The Seekers, who say they

Whitby wants financial info, soy bean burgers

By BILL LEWIS
of the Argonaut staff

Financial Vice-President Sherman Carter has kept the ASUI "in the dark" about financial aspects of SUB operations, according to Pete Whitby new SUB Board Chairman.

The ASUI has never been allowed to have a copy of the SUB Bond Reserve Covenant, Whitby said. Such reserves are excess monies that could be used for SUB expansion or operations.

Whitby said that Bob Steele, Assistant University Business Manager has said that "we don't need that kind of information about University indebtedments floating around" bonds, Whitby said. It is essential that the ASUI President and Sub Board Chairman have information about bond reserves.

Some possible uses for the reserves, Whitby said are expansion of the satellite SUB, or bookstore, reopening of the creamery, remodeling the ASUI offices, or remodeling of SUB facilities used by ASUI Communications or Outdoor recreation. Whitby said the money might also be used for maintenance of the SUB.

He said ASUI President David Warnick sent a memo to Carter asking him to allow the ASUI to have a copy of the reserve covenant. Previously he said, ASUI officials have only been allowed to inspect bond reserve information.

In an interview yesterday, Whitby, President of the Resident Halls Association and Upham Hall, in addition to serving as SUB Board Chairman said that if the Idaho Board policy it could also change of Regents changed their liquor the financial outlook for the SUB.

Whitby said if the regents liquor policy was changed the SUB could serve wine and other liquor at banquets. He said serving liquor would probably increase the catering revenue brought in by the SUB.

Changing the liquor policy probably would not mean serving liquor to students in the SUB, Whitby said. "We'd have to change the entrance to the Dipper," if students were to be served liquor in the SUB, Whitby said. "This would be so people couldn't come in one entrance and go out another to take beer to friends who are under 19."

Arg writers win award

An Argonaut investigative story has taken top honors in a Northwest regional journalism contest sponsored by the Society for Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

The story, by staff writers Bruce Spotleson and Kenton Bird, dealt with alleged misuse of facilities at KUID-TV and was published April 2, 1974. It tied for first place in the category "best writing under press of deadline."

The award was presented Saturday night at the Region 10 conference of Sigma Delta Chi in Portland.

The judges described the Argonaut's story as "perhaps the technically most difficult to write story in the competition."

A reporter for the University of Washington Daily, Dean Paton, tied for first with a story on housing violations between a tenant and a landlord in an off-campus apartment. Ron Hauenstein from Washington State University's Daily Evergreen tied for third place.

The competition was among college journalists in the states of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana and Alaska. First place winners will be forwarded for entry in national competition.

Former Argonaut Editor Barb Baldus took first place in the region last year for best writing not under press of deadline.

The regents decided at their meeting in Moscow last week by a 5-3 vote not to change their present policy of not allowing liquor on campus.

Changes in SUB Board bylaws will make the SUB Board directly answerable to the ASUI President and Senate he said. The bylaws are to be approved tonight by the ASUI Senate.

Whitby's predecessor, Gordon Slyter had disagreements with Warnick over who controls the SUB budget. Slyter had contended that such control rested with the SUB Board and not the senate.

Provisions in the new SUB Board bylaws which give the President power to review budget and policy decisions "take the heat off the SUB Board" and gives added responsibilities to the senate.

SUB Board still retains "control" over the budget and policy decisions, Whitby said, but new provisions in SUB bylaws give the senate and president power to review board decisions.

Whitby said he didn't think it was necessary to separate the jobs of ASUI and SUB General

Managers. "We don't need more strain on our already strained budget," he said.

Whitby, who took over the SUB Board Chairmanship earlier this year said some pricing changes in the Blue Bucket would take place during his tenure.

Prices for beverages will be made more uniform, he said, with prices being according to the ounce. The SUB will also be introducing an inexpensive burger made with a soy substitute, he said.

Tenure, promotions granted to U of I faculty members

The University of Idaho Board of Regents granted tenure Friday to 19 U of I faculty members and approved promotions in rank for another 47.

Those granted tenure in the college of agriculture included Dr. Edgar L. Michalson, professor of agricultural economics; Dr. Charles L. Peterson, associate professor of agricultural engineering; Dr. John C. Miller, associate extension professor; Dr. Auttis M. Mullins, professor of animal industries and dean; Karen R. Davis, assistant research professor of home economics; Peggy Pletcher, assistant extension professor; and William H. Shane, associate extension professor.

In the college of business and economics, Dr. John H. Hallag was granted tenure as associate professor of business administration, while Dr. Norman C. Olson, dean, was granted tenure as a professor of business. Those awarded tenure in the College of Education were Dr. Mark Freer, assistant professor of education, and John G. Holup, assistant professor of education, while in the College of Forestry, Dr. George Klontz was granted tenure as professor of fisheries resources.

Those granted tenure in the college of letters and science included Dr. Dennis G. Brown, associate professor of chemistry; Dr. Don H. Coombs, professor of communication; Dr. Ronald E. McFarland, associate professor of English; Alfred W. Jensen, assistant professor of Spanish; Dorothy Barnes, assistant professor of voice; Dr. Philip Mohan, associate professor of psychology; and Dr. John E. Carlson, associate professor of sociology.

Promotions in rank approved for the college of agriculture included Dr. Merlyn A. Brusven, professor of entomology; Dr. J. Preston Jones, professor of soil sciences; Walter L. Moden, professor of agricultural engineering; Dr. A. Dean Howes, associate research professor, associate extension professor and extension feedlot specialist; and Dr. Norman Waters, associate research professor of entomology.

Promotions in the cooperative extension service included Charlee G. Painter, extension professor and extension soil specialist; Merle Samson, extension professor; Clarence E. Dallimore, associate extension professor and area potato specialist; William H. Shane, associate extension professor and associate professor of agricultural education; and James N. Hawkins, Janice Holwell, Neil Olson and Joan Parr, all assistant extension professors.

In the college of business and economics, promotions were granted to Dr. David Campbell and Dr. Michael J. DiNoto, both associate professors of economics. Those promoted in the college of education were Dr. Terry Armstrong and Dr. Lewis B. Smith, both professors of education; Calvin W. Lathen, associate professor of physical education and recreation; and Gwendolyn Kelly, assistant professor of education.

College of Engineering promotions included Dr. T. Alan Place and Henry W. Silha, both professors of mechanical engineering; Dr. William J. Thomson, professor of chemical engineering Dr. Wayne R. Hager, associate professor of chemical engineering and engineering science; Dr. James H. Milligan, associate professor of civil engineering; and Gary L. Clark, assistant professor of general engineering.

Darrell Dunham was named associate professor of law in the college of law, while in the college of forestry, wildlife and range sciences Dr. David L. Adams was promoted to professor of forest resources and Arland D. Hofstrand to associate professor of wood utilization. Carl Savage was named professor of geology in the College of Mines.

Promotions in the college of letters and sciences included Dr. J. Homer Ferguson and Dr. Donald R. Johnson, both professors of zoology; Dr. Demetrius J. Koubourlis, professor of foreign languages and literatures; Dr. James S. Malek, professor of English; Dr. Leila Old, professor of home economics; Dr. Robert H. Blank and Dr. Alwyn Rouyer, both associate professors of political science; Dr. Dennis G. Brown, associate professor of chemistry; Kathryn M. Foriyes, Dr. Teoman Sipahigil and Dr. Roger P. Wallins, all associate professors of English; Robert C. Probasco, Dr. Lynn J. Skinner and Robert J. Spevacek, all associate professors of music; Charles M. Tinder, associate prof of architecture; Anton A. Eder, assistant professor of architecture; and Cecil V. Gold, assistant professor of music.

John C. Morris of the center for native American development was promoted to assistant professor of native American affairs.

Senate to confer on fee bill

The ASUI Senate will confirm a resolution asking the Board of Regents to review the fee structure at the University of Idaho tonight. The resolution was passed by telephone vote last week.

The senate had been presented with the resolution at the request of Janet Hay, a member of the Board of Regents, during a meeting with the Committee for Student Rights.

According to Warnick, Hay had asked that the senate demonstrate their support for proposed fee structure changes

In other business the senate will be considering a bill introduced by Warnick asking that the ASUI receive funds from fees of part time and summer school students.

If the resolution is approved by the regents, Warnick said, fees would be redistributed to give the ASUI about $1.50 per credit hour for part time students and about $9 for summer school students.

In other business the senate will be presented with a memo from Edmund Chavez, drama department head. The memo denies that ASUI funds allocated to drama were spent inappropriately.

The Argonaut reported last week that a requisition from drama to appropriate ASUI funds to purchase a stethoscope had been found. Warnick said he has learned that the requisition was cancelled and ASUI funds were not used to purchase the item.

Chosen because he's a farmer

By JOHN HECHT
of the Argonaut Staff

A political scientist in agriculture? How does one get to another?

"It's easy," said newly appointed regent J. Clint Hoopes of Rexburg. "I graduated from Idaho in 1950 in polisci, and went back home. I started farming part of my father's land, and since then have become what some call 'a successful farmer.'"

"It's funny," he laughed, "I'm active in the Grange, and other farmers come up to me and ask 'Didn't we take ag econ together at the University?', and I have to answer 'No, I just took economics.'"

Hoopes went into the Army Air Corps during World War II. When he was discharged, he came to the U of I and lived with his parents in the 'Lambing Sheds.'

"That was what we called married student housing, which was located on the north side of town...old run down buildings," he said. "We were living on the G.I. Bill, which seemed to be a lot better than the veterans have gotten since."

Hoopes said he never before has held an elective office, but has been active in politics. "I honestly feel that I was appointed because I am a farmer," he said.

When asked about the elimination of the ISU architecture program by the board, which took place before he was appointed, he answered in terms of the finances of the state and its geography.

"Programs must be evaluated on whether we can get quality at reasonable prices. Each school cannot be best in all fields. However, the board must be consistent when it evaluates each area," he said.

Hoopes began his five-year term with some hot issues. Some he did not vote on, "I came into the middle on some

things, and didn't feel that I had enough background."

However, he did vote against the adoption of a new U of I alcohol policy, saying afterwards, "That's one subject that I know how strongly the persons around my area feel on. They just wouldn't go for students being allowed permission to drink on campus."

He has been appointed as a member of the U of I executive committee, and chairman of the Lewis-Clark State College executive committee.

Hay chosen regent head

Janet Hay of Nampa became the first women president of the Board of Regents in over 10 years. Hay was elected by her fellow members to serve until next April.

Joining her as officers are A.L. Alford, Jr., of Lewiston, vice president and Edward Benoit of Twin Falls as secretary. Alford was nominated for president, but declined, pleading the press of business. Benoit joked to the board, "I hope you realized that you have elected a male chavinist pig to serve under a woman president."

Hay began her term with action. She formed committees to begin investigation into a regent's position on a "single university bill", create a handbook for new board members and look into a plan now in effect in Oregon that requires graduating high school students to be tested in such areas as opening a bank account and filling out income tax forms.

Benoit was made chairman of the U of I Executive Committee, along with Alford, and newly sworn-in regent Clint Hoopes of Rexburg.

Affirmative Action, evaluation comes before Faculty Council

The Faculty Council will tackle two long awaited items this afternoon. Both the proposed Affirmative Action Policy and possible changes in Student Evaluations of Teachers have been set as special order agenda items.

The Affirmative Action policy was drawn up to comply with federal regulations, stating that any institution receiving federal funds must have an affirmative action policy. The proposed policy lays down guidelines in compliance with Equal Opportunity Employment and Education guidelines.

The proposal also sets down the functions of the University's Affirmative Action Office and staff.

Last week, the council changed the administration of the student evaluation program.

The program will be directed in the future by a professional manager rather than a graduate student appointee.

The points to be covered this afternoon include:

1. The use of the basic evaluation form will be universal and uniform throughout the University. It is understood that departments could, at their option, devise and use a special form in addition to the basic form.

2. Students will be required to sign the evaluations with the guarantee that the forms or copies returned to the instructor will not have the student's signatures on them. The signed forms will be held in confidence and will be released only by court order.

3. The use of student tellers will not be mandatory if it is found to be feasible to use the services of disinterested non-student personnel to administer, collect and deliver the evaluation forms.

4. Statistical summaries of evaluations will be identified with the teacher's name and be available in a central location for use under supervision. This would make it possible for students to decide on a certain teacher when several teach the same class.

Atlas, a game of political power

"If we form an alliance we'll have enough economic wealth to control the smaller countries, and enough nuclear missiles to destroy the more powerful ones," stated a convincing young statesman.

The eventual outcome was disastrous for the statesman's new partner however, as the clever young statesman double-crossed him in a game of world confrontation known as "Atlas."

This weekend the members of the NROTC unit on the University of Idaho campus will be emeshed in this instructional game which focuses on various psychological dimensions. The dimensions of trust, bargaining, threat, cooperation and competition that underlie and determine world power, are employed throughout the game.

According to the Atlas handbook distributed to each of the Idaho midshipmen, "the game is not intended to simulate actual world events, nor does it necessarily reflect primary cultural factors that affect the decisions of various nations. Atlas is an experience-based instrument of learning which provides participants with an increased appreciation for the complexity and subtlety of national and international confrontations."

The game of Atlas was developed by William Bergquist, former assistant professor of psychology, at the University of Idaho.

The primary goal of Bergquist's game is to accumulate political power. At the end of the game the person with the greatest accumulated political points is declared the winner.

However, other "secondary" goals have a marked influence on the game. Some of the participants with small nations may be seeking world peace, while others may have ambitions of acquiring additional land and wealth in hopes of becoming a super-power.

The midshipmen have the chance of using threats, extortion and various other means of persuasion to accomplish their goals.

Since the various nations in the game do not begin with the same amount of military or economic power, the smaller countries known as the "have nots" must employ any powers within their means to obtain their goals.

A time limit established at the beginning of the game determines the length of the entire competition. As strange as it may seem, political graft, double-dealing and payoffs run rampant during the closing moments of the game. At times it seems nothing is sacred, so most participants are suspicious of any last minute deals.

Editorial Drinking: regents all wet, students still dry

President Ernest Hartung clearly had the students at heart last Friday. It's too bad a majority of the Board of Regents didn't.

The board voted 5-3 against a new policy that would have allowed consumption and sale of alcohol on campus under certain restricted conditions. It defeated on a 4-4 tie vote a proposal that would permit alcohol only in the clubhouse of the ASUI golf course.

Just two years ago, Hartung went to the board with an alcohol policy that seemed mutually acceptable to the parties concerned. It restated the board's opposition to "possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages by students on the campuses of Idaho state institutions of higher education," but permitted it in a student's own domicile as long as it didn't interfere with the academic atmosphere.

That policy seemed to work well until a situation arose last fall involving a kegger in the lounge of a dormitory. Does alcohol disturb the academic atmosphere when all the members of the living group vote to have a party? The University Judicial Council ruled that it did not and said the policy was "vague and unenforceable."

So a three-month study involving students, faculty members, administrators and law enforcement personnel recommended that the policy be clarified by acknowledging reality and approving controlled drinking on campus.

Although Hartung realized he was "a burr under the board's saddle" on the question, he once again patiently and logically presented the reasoning for a change in alcohol policy.

"The University is faced with the problem that its student population is for the most part now well above the age at which the state legislature has authorized legal drinking," Hartung told the board. And Hartung warned the board of the possibility of a class-action lawsuit if the policy wasn't changed.

The board, however, didn't consider the question on its legal basis. Despite objections of regents A. L. Alford, Ed Benoit and J.P. Munson, the board plowed straight ahead and by doing so, set itself up for a possible costly lawsuit.

Remember Roy Truby, who sold himself as youth's candidate when running for state superintendent of public instruction? Good Ol' Roy voted no. Truby says he's concerned of a possible adverse affect on enrollment at Idaho

State University, which competes for students with Brigham Young University, Ricks College and the University of Utah. What Truby doesn't seem to understand is that Moscow is not Pocatello and that regulations adopted for the U of I don't automatically apply to ISU.

The arguments by board members opposed to campus drinking became even more ludicrous on the question of alcohol at the golf course. "If you have alcohol at the golf course, it makes sense to have it in the football stadium and the baseball diamond as well," board member John Swartley suggested facetiously. Swartley fails to make the distinction between four football games a year in the stadium and the year-round use of the clubhouse at the golf course would receive. Incidentally, the sale of beer at football games wouldn't be such a far-fetched idea.

Because of the board's action, it appears a lawsuit will be necessary to settle the question — and that might end up costing the University, and eventually us, some money. That wouldn't have been necessary if the board had accepted reality and the law instead of burying its head in the sand. —K.B.

Speak up against Blue Mountain

Last Tuesday the ASUI Senate took a monumental non-stand by endorsing the "concept of an outdoor music festival for spring of 1975." Some people might construe this decision as an endorsement of another Blue Mountain and yet again this "outdoor festival" might only be the Vandaleers practicing on the steps of Ridenbaugh Hall.

Every spring, the ASUI government puts off making a definitive decision on whether or not to stage the Blue Mountain event until the last possible moment. The result has been total anarchy, poor crowd control, uncertainty on the part of the organizers and only a sheer miracle that has prevented a limited accident rate. Unless the ASUI is forced to make a decision now, the same problems will arise again.

I fully realize it is extremely difficult for most politicians to make a definite decision on anything unless it is behind closed doors but I believe the Blue Mountain organizers have the right to know if they can look forward to having or be denied funding from the ASUI. This means that I want to see the ASUI people say definitely yes or no to the Blue Mountain. I for one, say no.

Blue Mountain has long been an emotional issue on this campus. The promoters for the most part have been vocal in their support of the event but many opponents of the Blue Mountain have hidden their dislike for the festival for fear of being branded as "non-hips", right wingers and dog haters.

I believe it is the duty of those Blue Mountain opponents to state why they despise the festival so that the proponents might at least see what they are up against because I at least respect these enthusiasts for their opinion.

It has been stated that we must have a Blue Mountain because the event has become almost institutionalized. The irony of that statement is pitiful. Rock festivals were once exhibited as the epitome of anti-establishment activity. Perhaps the real radicals on this campus are those who want to abolish this "tradition."

Nostalgia is a fairly big thing at this time. Some people might look at Blue Mountain as a return to a more pleasant time, such as the late '60's and early '70's. Yes, and what a peaceful time it was. We can look fondly back on those 'good old days' of Vietnam, riots, Kent State, bombings of Cambodia, assassinations and other such carefree events.

As for the idea that Blue Mountain constitutes a cultural activity, I say bunk. It is my impression that the festival is barely more than an excuse for a great number to get loaded without the fear of getting caught because of the volume of people involved. Sometimes it is the one day a year that many of our upstanding citizens go "slumming." No self-respecting freak would put up with that garbage.

Support and opposition for the Blue Mountain reminds me of the American Revolution; one third of the people are violently for it, one third are violently against it and the other third don't give a damn.

The size of the festival has also become a problem. It has been suggested that publicity be curtailed, therefore restricting the size of the event. We don't advertise in California or New York or Texas anyway but last year people came from those places. Direct publicity has little bearing on the crowd size. The culprit has been word of mouth or "loose lips sink rock festivals."

The real crusher, however, was included in the letter to the editor that Tallman House Director Bob Cameron wrote to the Argonaut. He mentioned the obvious dislike by the state legislature for the Blue Mountain and like it or not, those people control the purse-strings.

I'm not saying that every time the legislature frowns on one of the student body's actions we should bow to their will. I do believe that the time has come to give the rock festival concept the funeral that it has received so many years ago, everywhere else in this country.

So now, ASUI people, it is time to take a definite stand, not a milktoast endorsement of a so-called concept. If the Blue Mountain is wanted, okay the funding and get the ball rolling. If we don't want the festival, shoot the old dog where it lies. Speak now or forever bite your tongue.

Report rapes to improve accuracy

To the editor:
In response to the article "Rape rumors exaggerated" that appeared last Wednesday, I feel that understating the rape problem in Moscow can only do harm.

While it may be that there have been 15 reported rapes in the Moscow-Pullman area within the last year, the Rape Crisis Clinic (formed this semester) has become aware that this figure could easily be doubled to be accurate.

Research has shown that to obtain a more accurate assessment of incidence, one must multiply the reported rapes by from 3 to 10 times. Many women hesitate to call the police to report rape, and the police have been the only ones to keep any records on the incidence.

I do not intend to unduly alarm Moscow women, however, I feel that it is deceptive to indicate that rapes do not happen here. Women should take adequate precautions, as stated in last Wednesday's article, to keep their doors locked and travel in pairs at night.

We are hoping that women who are or have been raped will call Rape Crisis Clinic (through Nightline, 882-0320) for someone to talk with and help you. And, in this way, we are hoping to be able to tell the public a more accurate incidence rate for Moscow.

In defense of Sherman Carter

To the editor:
I am writing in response to David Neiwert's letter to the Editor in last Thursday's Argonaut that crucified Sherman Carter. Really, Mr. Neiwert! Can you blame the woes of the University and problems which are inherent in an organization on one individual? If this is so, let us by all means get rid of this man so we can realize our utopia.

The letter contained valid grievances concerning inadequacies in the fee structure, but such complaints can be dated back much further than Sherman Carter's term with the university.

If Mr. Neiwert is seriously concerned with how the fees are used, perhaps he should become active in the Committee for Student Rights. This seems a more positive approach than to "nail" someone who operates primarily upon recommendations given him by various committees and boards.

It is also true that Dr. Carter has made mistakes in the past, especially in the fall semester of 1974. It would be interesting to find out how many of these mistakes would be his if another name had been attached to the post of acting president. By the way, has anyone bothered to weigh the positive things Dr. Carter has done for the university and the students against his mistakes?

I do not know Sherman Carter personally, nor do I necessarily agree with all his decisions. I believe most have been made in good faith with a look to the future — maybe too far in the future. After all, what does Sherman Carter have to gain by "screwing" the students?

New program offered

A need for more specialized rehabilitation counselors in Idaho has resulted in a new graduate program offered at the University of Idaho.

According to Brent Snow, coordinator of an advanced course in rehabilitation counseling, the new program is designed to teach methods of better evaluating and understanding the severely handicapped—such as the blind, deaf and cerebral palsied.

Snow said a significant number of new rehabilitation counselors are needed for state vocational rehabilitation agencies in the Pacific Northwest area. He expects the demand to continue through the next decade.

"A genuine interest in people is the primary requirement for a counseling applicant to the program," Snow said. He described the course as focusing on medical aspects and skills needed to evaluate the psychological effects of the crippling diseases.

Advanced counseling techniques are included in the course to help counselors guide the handicapped in becoming self-directed, Snow said. The program also includes learning about using resources within a community to help the handicapped toward rehabilitation.

Practical experience for program participants is gained by working with some 100 U of I students that are state-aided for vocational rehabilitation, Snow said.

According to Snow, 15 tax-free grants that pay tuition and fees plus $2,400 per year will be offered students applying for the training program in the 1976-77 school year. Deadline for applying is March 1976, Snow said. Recipients of grants for the 1975-76 program have already been chosen.

Three win Bank scholarships

Three Idaho students won Bank of Idaho scholarships, annually awarded in accordance with the University of Idaho Student Financial Aids Committee.

John I. Mitz, assistant Vice-president and manager of the Moscow office, presented the grants totaling $1,000.

Mushlitz congratulated the winners, saying, "The Bank of Idaho is very pleased to be of assistance in furthering the education of these three fine Idaho business students. We recognize that in these days of increased costs in education, as well as almost every other area, it is often difficult for students and their families to absorb the extra expense. We hope our contribution will assist a number of students in the College of Business and Economics to graduate and become active in their field of endeavor."

The winners are Richard K. Linville, a sophomore marketing and real estate major; Terry Olin, a junior business management major, a member of Delta Sigma Phi fraternity; and Brenda Martin, a senior finance major.

We invite our researchers to ask more questions than they can answer.

Making your mark in business used to mean carving a comfortable niche for yourself and staying there. Promotion was simply a matter of time, provided you could spend 20 years in the process. But, today, business depends on technology. Technology that can't wait a moment if it's going to keep pace with what's happening.

That's why, at Kodak, our basic reliance on scientific research makes the need for creative young minds more demanding than ever. We must have people with drive and ambition, impatient to put what they've learned into practice. People who get all the freedom and responsibility they can handle, and tackle our problems with their ideas.

Which, we're happy to say, has helped many of our scientists yield important discoveries. For example:

The woman on the left has devised new and improved photographic materials for specialized scientific applications in fields such as astronomy and holography. The young man is an expert on surface analysis. His work in photoelectron spectroscopy helps to identify unknown substances. The woman on the right has a dual background in gas chromatography and trace metal analysis, which she's applied to analyzing pollution in rivers and streams.

They came up with new problems while solving some of our old ones. But they've uncovered some promising answers, too. As they continue their research, you may read about them again. The oldest is just over 30.

Why do we give young men and women so much room to test their ideas? Because good ideas often lead to better products. Which are good for business. And we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own business interests, we also further society's interests. Which makes good sense.

After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.

Philippine Diary

Culture and values differ from U.S.

By DAVID HASKELL

The country of the Philippines is a group of several hundred islands gathered in an archipelago, which is located in that part of the World called Southeast Asia.

Because it is an island nation, the people living on each island gain an entity of their own. They tend to think of themselves more in relation to their island than to being a citizen of the Philippine nation.

Five major dialects are spoken, and each of these has many sub-dialects. Philippines from other islands are recognized by their peculiar pronunciation of the local dialect and the cultural attributes of their island. "That fellow is a Boholano (from the island of Bohol), and he is kind of a tight (selfish) person". Each island seems to have its own micro-culture.

However, there is a group of values and attitudes that most Philippines have in common. As I have already mentioned Philippine society centers around the social interaction within the extended family (Godparents, in-laws) and close friends. A Filipino is known by his family and its position in the community. A successful uncle or grandmother is expected to share the wealth with the rest of the family, and his aura of respect is extended to all his relatives.

An attack on one family member is an attack on all, and their loyalties are strong. A relative in a high position is expected to help other relations get jobs, loans, or special favors.

As you might suspect under such a system, a person's occupation is less important than his social relationships.

A job is generally looked upon as a means of getting money or respect, and satisfaction from the work itself is not important. A Filipino will work harder helping a relative than for an employer who is not related to him.

The Philippine concept of masculinity and femininity is quite different from our own. Since God is thought of as being a male, life's light shines brightest on the men. He is always the most important thing, self-centered, and always pleased with himself. Never expected to stand alone, the male represents the emotional element in Philippine culture.

From our American cultural view-point, the Philippines is much easier to appreciate. She represents the stable element and is the guardian of moral and religious virtues. Hardworking, capable, a good mother, the Philippines handles the money, while still keeping the female images of beauty and femininity.

Philippines share with us the ideals of love and matrimony but with some important exceptions. Marriage is generally for life, with divorce possible only in special situations, but frowned upon by the populace. The man brings home his paycheck and gives it to his wife, sneaking a little for himself. His wife manages the money and raises the children so efficiently that she sometimes threatens his masculinity. This problem is offset by occasional, culturally acceptable, acts of infidelity by the male to re-establish his dominance and control.

Philippines differ from us in that they don't believe the male-female relationship in a marriage is the ultimate human association. Matrimony is looked upon as the best way of extending one's social relationships, having children, gaining companionship and sex.

His respect, friends and sons are the most important things to a Filipino while the Philippines values her family and friends and wants to get ahead economically while still remaining faithful to her husband.

I have attempted to give a picture of some of the basic features of Philippine culture. These, of course, are generalities and there will be exceptions. But the average Philippines operates on these key assumptions and goals.

Using the concepts as a cultural reference point, I will examine the fundamental aspects of American culture in the subsequent articles.

Interviews for student-faculty committees set for next week

Student-faculty committees, one of the quickest and most effective ways to become involved in ASUI affairs, are searching for members.

Ralph Fortunato, ASUI academic manager appointee said, "If students were not on these committees, it will be administrators that will make the decisions that affect students."

IT'S LATER THAN YOU THINK.

On May 1, time runs out for you to enroll in the 2-year Air Force ROTC Program. Here's what you'll miss:

- $100 a month, tax-free, during your junior and senior years.
- the chance to win a full Air Force scholarship (including tuition, lab fees, the works).
- a challenging job as an Air Force officer upon graduation.
- a future where the sky is no limit.

Contact Professor of Aerospace Studies, Air Force Officer Education Program at the University of Idaho.

Fortunato said that "any student" can apply. "Usually we have more openings than we have students," he explained.

Interviews are being held April 14 and April 16 in the Wallace Complex Conference room, and April 15 in the ASUI offices in the SUB. Students may attend the interviews 7-9 p.m. or inquire at the ASUI office between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

There will also be an interview Monday for the student position on the Moscow Recycling Center Board of Directors.

Students who are serving on committees at this time, and wish to continue their positions are urged to do so, and also must reapply.

Faculty-student committees with openings are: academic hearing board, affirmative action committee, borah foundation committee, campus planning, commencement committee, computer services advisory, cultural exchange, faculty awards, fine arts, general studies, international student affairs, Juntura, library affairs, museum affairs, officer education, recreation, student financial aids, traffic committee, bookstore advisory, University curriculum, University judicial council, University relations and University safety committee.

Art show features old towns

An art exhibit featuring the work of Muriel Sibell Wolle will be presented at the University of Idaho College of Mines, April 7-18.

In her paintings, the artist recaptures scenes from historic mining towns throughout Idaho. Her work has received many awards from museums and art associations across the country.

Wolle formerly headed the Fine Arts Department at the University of Colorado. She is the author of numerous books and magazine articles and is listed in Who's Who. The public is invited to view the exhibit 8 a.m.-5 p.m. in the top floor hallway of the College of Mines Building.

Sponsoring the exhibit are the Department of History, the College of Mines and the University Museum. A price list for the paintings will be provided by the University Museum.

Winners named in photo contest

The fourth annual University of Idaho Photo contest exhibit opened Monday with first places going to Carol Bosse, Gary Gadwa and Mark LaMoreaux.

Four categories were open in the photo show, black and white, color prints, slides and experimental. No first place was given in the color division.

Carol Bosse won first in black and white with an untitled picture. In the slide division Gary won both first and second place with two slides titled "Old Timer" and "Morning Dew." The experimental division had only one place taken, that of first place by Mark LaMoreaux with a photo titled x-2.

The judges for this show were Raymond Wilson, Randy Kalisek, and Ed Briedenbach. All three work in the photo department of the audio-visual center of the university.

Photos were judged on technique, subject matter, composition, and contrast and darkroom quality.

Regents pass controversial policy on faculty dismissal

Two months of faculty protests were to no avail, and the Board of Regents passed their controversial policy on dismissals last Friday.

The regents unveiled the plan two months ago, and faculty governments have been attempting since that time to alter it. The most objectionable aspect of the policy has been the elimination of "peer review", in which faculty members judge each other on dismissal.

Faculty Council Chairman Tony Rigas, engineering, said Friday, "I feel like I am on a sinking ship. The faculty will find it unacceptable and will not be a party to it."

He clarified his remarks Monday. "We did not want to be part of the policy, but since the board passed it, I am sure that the faculty will work with it. Hopefully, we can try to make revisions a year from now, or even in the near future."

Regent John Swarley, of Boise commented, "This is not a closed issue. In the future, the faculties can bring their suggested changes. But we will give this one a trial of a year."

Rigas commented, "It is ironic. The students have their bill of rights, staff personnel have a code of conduct that calls for peer review, but yet the faculty is singled out."

Russian exile to speak Friday

A man who for years lived the life described in Solzhenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago" will speak in the Borah Theatre Friday at 8 p.m.

Roman Brackman was born in Moscow, Russia and was attending the Moscow Oriental Institute when he was arrested in 1950 for circulating anti-Soviet propaganda and attempting to flee Russia. He was released in 1955 and left Russia four years later.

After arriving in the United States in 1962, Brackman earned a doctorate in Russian and Middle East foreign policy, and wrote numerous articles about the Middle East and other aspects of foreign policy.

Brackman also has written a book about his experiences in prison camp, "Joseph Stalin and His Enemy", which may be published soon.

Blue Mountain on shaky ground

Ernest Hartung, but instead passed the buck back to him.

So almost by default, the Blue Mountain Rock Festival again looms on the horizon. But where on the horizon and when?

Midway through March, 14 bands had been slated to play for free among them a trio of Seattle's finest. Some of the bands had mapped out tours through the area as far back as two months ago, and one idea presently being talked about will almost certainly leave some musicians holding the bag.

That idea calls for a change in the Blue Mountain date, with an announcement of the new day waiting until just prior to the event. That might cause some fairly serious scheduling problems, but students on the outdoor festival committee espouse ideas for a smaller festival and feel this to be one avenue open to them.

The fewer bands, they say, the better. At least, as far as the present toning-down program is concerned. And should there be too few of the scheduled bands able to make the change, one committee member said there are plenty of others who would jump at the chance.

At any rate, the concert won't last as long this year as last year, when it continued into darkness, and it has been said that rough number of nine or 10 bands would make the crucial negotiating parties sufficiently pleased at this point.

A location may be more difficult to find. Already, the administration lawn has been ruled out, after having long been considered a possibility. Other sites have been eliminated because of being too-easily seen from the city, too small, or virtually impossible because of electrical power requirements.

The search for a site has led Blue Mountain advocates, in a more-or-less roundabout way, back to the arboretum. The date, however, will almost certainly have to change and the Blue Mountain Rock Festival may break precedent this year by being held in April, rather than the first weekend in May, as in four previous years.

As I see it

John Hawley

What kind of spring is this? It's been about three weeks since I've seen that thing called the sun, but snow in April is a bit too much to handle.

The football teams' scrimmage scheduled for last Saturday had to be scratched because there was two inches of snow on the ground. Needless to say the baseball team had to postpone all their games this weekend and Intramural softball games were called off yesterday because the fields were too muddy.

The track and tennis teams were the only ones able to compete this weekend, but before any events could be run for the track meet at Spokane, snow had to be plowed out of the way.

I overheard a couple of guys the other day who were arguing about who was to blame for this disgusting weather. One said since storms and other foul weather are called "acts of God" then maybe someone should arrest all the priests and bishops in town and jail them until some good weather arrives.

About the only positive side of this gross weather is that it leaves the student no excuse not to study, but it's getting pretty bad when one has to study because there is nothing else to do. Last spring was just about as bad, but at least the sun was out occasionally.

As it looks now everyone will be walking around campus with the famous Palouse coy "cloud tan." Don't pack away any of your winter clothing, it looks like you'll be needing it until finals in May.

Coach Troxel said yesterday he might have to rename the annual silver-gold spring football scrimmage — the mud bowl, but that's only if no snow is on the ground.

Weather keeps intramurals inside

Mud fields caused all intramural softball action to be cancelled yesterday, and unless the fields dry considerably, today's games will probably be scratched also.

Paddleball and horseshoe competition began yesterday, and weight lifting is under way all this week and next. Monday night, the 137 lb. or less category pushed the iron, and tonight it will be the 148 lb. class. Wednesday weight lifting will be the 165 lb. class, Thursday, 181 lbs. and Monday the 198 lb. men will compete. Next Tuesday anyone over 198 lbs. will be lifting.

All weight lifting will take place in the basement of Memorial Gym in the weight room.

Idaho netters remain victorious

The Vandal tennis team rolled to another victory Sunday, thrashing North Idaho Junior College 8 to 1. Idaho's season record is now 8-2.

The Vandal netters won every match except one doubles match on their home court. Vandals Dan Keiner and Bill Benson bettered their season records to 7 wins 2 losses each, while Steve Davis and John Griffen are now 6-3 each on the season.

In doubles, the team of Davis and Rod Leonard won back to back sets 6 to 1 and 6 to 3 for Idaho and teammates Bill Ferranti and Cliff Fitzsimmons downed their doubles opponents 6 to 0 and 6 to 0.

The Vandals will be on the road for their next eight matches against Spokane Falls Community College, Whitman, Boise State, Utah State, Nevada, Oregon, Oregon State and Portland.

Vandal runners set career records at Spokane contest

When Vandal track coach, Mike Keller, got up Saturday morning the snow on the ground must have made the track meet scheduled for the afternoon seem like an impossibility.

Nevertheless, he gathered a handful of his harriers and drove to Spokane and the results were well worth it. Idaho's Mark Crull scored an amazing double victory taking first in the shot put and first in the discus.

Jeff Day ran a lifetime best mile (4:12.8) to garner first and three other Vandals turned in lifetime bests in that event although they didn't place. Marty Gwinn ran a 4:15.4 mile while teammates Kelly Bonney and Nathan Neisinger clocked in at 4:17 and 4:19 respectively.

Idaho's Rick Bartlett charged from behind to claim an upset victory in the 880 while teammate Mark Novak, who usually runs only the distance events grabbed third. Bartlett clocked in at 1:52.6 and Novak finished at 1:52.9.

Freshman Glenn Bach surprisingly raced to a second place finish in the high hurdles for the Vandals and Scott Knoblich took second in the three mile run with a 14:13.1 clocking.

Vandal Sam Read took second in the shot behind the brilliant performance of Crull and Pavlov placed second in the high jump with a 6-3 and 1/2 effort.

Coach Keller was pleased with his team's performance because he had left many of the team members behind. "Times were more important than placing this weekend and many of the men had lifetime bests," he said.

Keller was especially happy with the distance and the mid distance runners.

"Rick Ward, who is running for the Vandal Track Club as a redshirt this season, beat his previous lifetime best time by 30 seconds in a fine three mile run."

Next weekend the Vandals will face stiff competition at the University of Washington. Other teams participating will be Club Northwest, which is mostly college graduates no longer eligible, and the British Columbia Provincial team. The next home meet for the Vandals will be May 3 against Montana.

Grants for women passed

The Board of Regents approved Friday the funding of athletic grants for women at the University of Idaho.

Kathy Clark, director of women's athletics, recommended that out-of-state tuition be waived for up to six women athletes, and financial grants to pay student fees ($200 per semester) be allotted for each of 12 women athletes.

These grants will be paid from the budget allocation for women's intercollegiate athletics.

Several members of the drama department go through their acts as they prepare for the upcoming presentation of "Company."

Best Musical of 1971 is scheduled for Parent's Weekend

"Company," a bright new musical comedy with lyrics and music by Stephen Sondheim, will be presented at the University of Idaho Performing Arts Center April 9-12, at 8 p.m., during annual Parent's Weekend.

Midtown Manhattan provides the sleek setting for the show. "Company's" pivotal figure is Bobby, a 35-year-old bachelor, wary of marriage as he samples it vicariously with his 10 best married friends. The husbands are envious of his freedom and the wives imagine him dying of loneliness.

Sondheim's witty, tuneful songs illuminate the dialogue and advance the action of a sophisticated show that critic Douglas Watt called "Broadway's first musical treatment of nerve ends."

Since collaborating with Leonard Bernstein in "West Side Story" in 1957, Sondheim has supplied the words, music or both for seven Broadway musicals, among them "Gypsy," "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "Follies" and the currently touring "A Little Night Music."

The U of I theatre production of the 1970 Broadway hit, originally produced by Harold Prince, features a cast of 18 music and theatre arts majors all doing their own singing and dancing. Carl Petrick, director of Ballet Folk and choreographer for the show, said there are no set presentational numbers done by a chorus of singers or dancers because "Company" is an ensemble musical.

Winner of both the Tony and

New York Drama Critics' Circle Awards as best musical of 1970-71, "Company" is directed by Forrest Sears, associate theatre arts professor, and Charles Walton, professor of music. Robert Chambers is technical director.

Tickets, available at the U Student Union, are $2.50 for non-students and $1 for students with activity cards.

Harry Harrison, creator of the controversial film Soylent Green, will be at the U of I April

Harry Harrison

30th for a lecture appearance. His movie, Soylent Green, will be shown at the SUB April 29.

Harrison is known for his numerous science fiction novels such as "The Stainless Steel Rat's Revenge" and "Plague From Space". The authors current novel, "Make Room! Make Room!" is currently being used on many college campuses as a sociology text. As a futurist, Harrison believes that, "Man must come to terms with his changing environment and work on the quality of life. I'm not an optimist. Nor am I a pessimist. I'm a realist."

Beginning his career as a free lance artist, Harrison illustrated and edited the popular Flash Gordon comic strip, which he wrote for ten years. Harrison stated that, "... the visual sense that years of drawing gave me has always stood behind my stories, enabling me to see scenes in all their color and detail and to then describe them to the reader."

As a speaker, Harrison's engagements include lectures at Stanford University, California State University at Fullerton, as well as Cambridge and Oxford Universities in England. In addition, he teaches his own graduate course in the study of science fiction at San Diego State University.

Ecologist Ian McHarg will speak on planning and environment

Ian McHarg, a well known architect and ecologist, will speak about his ideas on city planning, man's environment and many other related topics tomorrow night in the agricultural science auditorium. ## Craft items to be sold at homemakers meeting

Interested in selling or displaying some of your craft items? Then go to the Northern District Homemakers' Meeting at the SUB on April 10th.

The Homemakers' Meeting will be split into two parts: a "Yesteryear Market" which will take place on the 10th, and a series of talks and a fashion show, which will take place on the 11th.

Among the items wanted for the "Yesteryear Market" are quilting, jewelry making, butter churning, glass blowing, a plant booth and breadmaking. For those interested in selling their items will be charged $1.50 per space.

The "Yesteryear Market" will begin at 10 a.m. and will run to 5 p.m. Displays will not be responsible for lost, broken, or damaged items.

The program on the 11th will involve talks on "Stretching

Your Clothing Budget in Inflationary Times," "Is Your Problem Too Much Month Left at the End of the Money?", and a talk on health foods. In addition, there will also be a fashion show.

McHarg has written numerous books in which he discusses ecological problems and landscape architecture. A few of his works are "The Place of Nature in the City of Man", "Ecology of the City", and "Man and Environment."
