In the sky

Looking almost like the St. Louis gateway arch— or maybe just a rainbow over the campus, the first beam of the as yet unnamed stadium stands alone.

The first two of 32 trusses were joined shortly after 8 p.m. Tuesday. But wind and rain Wednesday and Thursday prevented placement of any more beams. Once the weather permits, the beams will be installed at a pace of better than one per day.

On the move

Willis W. Rees is a competent, popular member of the Psychology Department faculty. But today, he finishes his final week in the classroom at the University of Idaho. Why?

Argonaut contributing editor Bruce Spotleson probed the Rees case and lays the blame for the teacher's impending departure on an antiquated tenure system. His interpretations, the conclusion of a two-part series, are in today's centerspread.

Veto upheld

New budget provides more money

After upholding a presidential veto of the ASUI budget passed last week, the senate passed a budget adding money to ASUI departments in several areas. ASUI President David Warnick said he was pleased his veto was upheld, and added that the first budget passed by the senate was "fiscally irresponsible."

The budget approved Tuesday provided more money for ASUI Promotions and Programs departments than was allotted in the previous vetoed budget. The new budget also provided an increase for the Vandaleers. The new budget leaves about $6000 in reserves for appropriations next year, about $5000 less than the vetoed budget had allocated.

The senate also approved the first part of an ASUI reorganization package that provides for two new ASUI departments and new procedures in hiring and firing ASUI officials.

Promotions and Cooperative Services were created under the terms of the package approved. Cooperative Services will be in charge of keeping track of student monies appropriated outside of the ASUI and promotions will handle ASUI public relations and lobbying activities.

Under the terms of the plan, policy for ASUI departments will be set by a student board and carried out by a student department manager. The plan stipulates that senate approval is needed before student managers and board members can be hired or fired by the ASUI president.

The reorganization plan was drawn up by the senate Rules and Regulations Committee and closely resembles one submitted earlier this year by Warnick.

A proposal to incorporate the ASUI was also endorsed Tuesday. The senate gave Warnick the authority to "negotiate" with the University administration to come up with an incorporation plan that would be acted upon by the Board of Regents.

Warnick said he didn't know what the administration's position on incorporation would be, but he said he thought they would be "open to the idea."

The senate failed to act on another measure that would establish a separate communications corporation which would include the Argonaut and KUOI. Warnick was given permission, however, to include the idea of a separate corporation in his negotiations with the administration and report back to the senate on the whole package before the question is put before the regents.

If approved, Warnick said, both corporation plans would give students more control over ASUI funds and more independence in policy making.

Although failing to pass a remodeling plan submitted by the communications department, the senate approved giving $90,000 in SUB bond reserves for new equipment. The remodeling plan would have created a communications complex on the third floor of the SUB.

A plan submitted by Gordon Slyter for SUB Board Chairman, and endorsed by the present SUB Board to reopen the creamery with bond reserve money was tabled by the senate.

ASUI Budget Director Tom Hayes told the senate that estimates from the University budget offices indicated it would be about three years before the creamery would break even. Hayes added that more information would be needed from the business office before the senate could make a decision on the creamery.

Slyter suggested the money be approved to open the creamery on a one year trial basis, but the senate did not act on the suggestion.

The senate will hear a report when it returns from summer break on proposed uses for bond reserves including the proposed complex, reopening of the creamery, remodeling the satellite SUB or using the funds for SUB maintenance.

A bill providing for the SUB budget was held in the senate finance committee which had not acted on it. The committee will probably take action on the bill this week, however, and finalize the SUB budget through a telephone survey of senate members.

In other business the senate approved a resolution that, if approved by the regents, would enable the ASUI Golf Course to obtain a beer license. Warnick told the senate he would try to get the regent's action on the proposal in August or September. The regents failed to approve a policy that would allow liquor on campus at their April meeting in Moscow.

Faculty Council amendment calls for student's name on evaluations

Students will be required to sign evaluations of their teachers, according to an amendment passed by the University faculty.

ASUI President David Warnick, who worked on the measure, said instructors ordinarily would not be able to see the signatures, since they would be detached from the forms.

However, he conceded the instructors could see the signatures, if their validity was questioned in a court case.

The amendment said the signatures "shall be held in confidence and released only on the order of the President of the University or on legal compulsion."

Students now do not sign the forms.

The amendment also allows "disinterested persons" to collect the evaluations, making the student tellers used in the past "not mandatory."

A further provision would make the results of the evaluation open for public use "under supervision." Currently, the results are available only to the instructor and people concerned with his or her review.

The amendment closed with the comment "the overall student rating of a teacher's competence shall not be made a substitute for such judgement by responsible parties."

Dead-week and finals week policy for next year has been passed also by the faculty. No athletic contests shall take place during finals, according to one bill. Another was a reaffirmation of dead week, during which there must not be exams or tests. Exceptions were made, however, for laboratory courses and speech and physical education classes.

The dead week proposal, however, did receive some opposition. Some faculty said they felt this rule infringed on their ability to run their classes.

The faculty also approved President Hartung's version of the revised alcohol code. Hartung's version said consumption of alcohol, or its sale, will be permitted "only if approved by the president or the president's designee" and if it conforms to local, state and national law.

KUID-TV receives funds for series on quintet

KUID-TV, the University of Idaho's public television station, has received a $1,717 grant from the Idaho Commission on the Arts and Humanities to fund a six-part series on the Northwest Woodwind Quintet.

"Anatomy of a Quintet" will be produced by Alan Bell and will focus on the personalities and performances of the musical groups made up of U of I School of music faculty members. The series will be aired on Idaho's three public television stations as well as member stations of the Rocky Mountain Network and is to be ready for distribution in the fall.

The quintet, now in its seventh year, is one of the Northwest's outstanding music groups, has been in residence at the University of Wisconsin Summer Music Clinic, and has given clinics and performances in all northwest states.

Plans readied for 1975 graduation

University of Idaho's Commencement Weekend, May 16 to 18, will climax the current school year. Many activities are planned for students and alumni which will make those last few days at the university more enjoyable.

Beginning on Friday, weekend events will include alumni registration at a special desk at the main entrance of the SUB and leisure activities for parents and alumni Friday afternoon.

At 6:30 p.m. Friday evening will be a dinner honoring the reunion classes of 1925, 1935 and 1950 in the Galena Room in the SUB followed by pictures taken of each class.

Saturday morning from 8 to 11:30 will be an alumni board of directors meeting in the SUB. A guided campus bus tour will be conducted from 9 to 11:00 a.m. for parents and alumni and will leave from the SUB. Everyone is invited to the annual luncheon and business meeting of the alumni association in the SUB. New directors will be elected and plans for the coming year will be announced at the noon gathering.

The finale of the year for students, parents and alumni will be the Commencement Banquet at 6:30 in the SUB Ballroom. Preceding the dinner will be socializing at St.

Augustine's Center beginning at 5:00 p.m. Tickets for the banquet are available from the Alumni office for $5.00 per person.

Featured at the banquet will be Mistress of Ceremonies Rep. Norma Dobler, the Vandaleers, presentation of awards to the Outstanding Men's and Women's Intramural Athletes for 1974-75, Alumni Hall of Fame, and Honorary Alumni recipients as well as retiring alumni board members and faculty.

Commencement ceremonies begin at 9:15 Sunday morning with the academic procession leaving from the Administration Building followed by the ceremonies in Memorial Gymnasium. This year's commencement address will be given by University of Idaho President Dr. Ernest W. Hartung.

Graduates may pick up their caps and gowns any time between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. May 15, 16 and 17, 1975, at the Alumni Center.

Mark Lotspeich was chosen Idaho's Joe Vandal for the U of I's 1975 football season.

U of I offers 3 outdoor courses

Basic training in wilderness skills is available this summer at the University of Idaho.

Physical education professors Chet Hall and Dr. Cal Lathen have designed and will run three courses for the summer session to give students instruction and practice in the fundamental outdoor skills necessary for responsible and safe use of wild lands and waters.

"River Canoeing," July 5-13, will involve three or four days of basic water and canoeing skills taught at the U of I Swim Center. During the last five or six days the class will take a trip down the Clearwater River from the junction of the Lochsa and Selway Rivers to where the Clearwater joins the Snake.

Students in "Wilderness Backpacking," July 21-30, will spend only one day in town, checking gear and supplies. The school furnishes backpacks if necessary, shelters and cooking gear but the students must bring their own sleeping bags. They will take a nine-day trip through the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness Area, with Hall and Lathen as their guides.

"Survival Education" August 4-9, will teach students how to maintain themselves in the wilds with a minimum of equipment. After 1 and one half days of classroom instruction, the group will head into the Selway-Bitterroot Area for the remaining time, first to be shown survival techniques and then, either alone or in groups of two or three, to live off the land for 48 hours.

Lathen and Hall said the courses included a wide variety of people last summer, the first time U of I offered all three programs. Students came from all over the U. S. and differed widely in age and skill. Almost all enjoyed it, Lathen said, and for those who did not the problem was usually inadequate preconditioning.

The purpose of all the courses is not to test physical endurance but to teach vital skills, Lathen said.

Alan Lee, a social studies teacher at Moscow Junior High, took all three courses last summer. He said the experiences were well tailored to the students' purpose.

"When you're down on a whitewater river in a canoe, you find out fast it's a lot rougher than it looked when you drove beside it in a car," he said.

Lee said the instructors prepared the students well and the smooth running courses reflected their preparation and organization.

Argonaut has last word

We're not through yet.

The last regularly-scheduled issue of the Argonaut will be published next Tuesday, May 13.

But to allow Argonaut staff members ample time to study for final examinations, early deadlines will be in effect. All letters to the editor must be received by 10 a.m. Monday and all news stories and items for the Events column must be received by noon that day. Anything received after those times will not be accepted.

Not many women apply for medical program

The number of Idaho women applying to medical school through the WAMI regional medical program is below the national average of female medical students, according to Dr. Guy Anderson.

Anderson, University of Idaho coordinator for the Washington, Alaska, Montana and Idaho medical education program, said only two Idaho women have applied for admission to the University of Washington

School of Medicine through the WAMI program this year, while 15 Idaho men have applied.

Since the WAMI program was instituted at the University of Idaho in 1972, the number of Idahoans admitted to UW medical school through the program has increased 300 per cent. Due to the low number of applications, only four women have been admitted to the program, said Anderson.

Year-end potluck benefit set for Christian Center

The Campus Christian Center will run a year-end benefit potluck for Teri Sobotka, a University of Idaho student seriously hurt in a toboggan accident on the school's golf course this past winter.

The potluck supper will be held Friday, May 16 beginning at 6:30 in the Coffee House of the Campus Christian Center and is open to all.

Contributions may be brought to the supper or mailed to the Campus Christian Center office, 822 Elm Street.

Checks should be made payable to the Campus Christian Center but designated for Teri. Doctors are hopeful that Teri will walk again but it will be a long and costly treatment.

And now a final word

Some long-suppressed complaints from a soon-to-be-graduated senior:

1. The high cost of graduation. It costs $10 for a diploma and $6.18 for a cap and gown — when a lot of seniors don't have jobs waiting for them when they get out. Somebody should pay them for all their anxieties.

2. The fact that by next fall the state of Idaho will have the only two colleges with covered football stadiums in the nation. And they will be occupied by two mediocre football teams.

3. Moscow's brown rotten water.

4. Four years ago, the campus had a journalism building. Leaky roof and peeling paint, it was still a journalism building. Now there isn't one. It's been taken over by the Women's Center — a service this female could easily do without.

5. Moscow's obscene weather. The clouds' senseless dripping on the Palouse Hills makes life in the spring unbearable.

6. The attitude of certain local businesses that all students are out to rip them off — when actually it's the other way around.

7. Sherman Carter gets a parking place at the Administration Building and I don't.

Despite its shortcomings, the University of Idaho isn't a bad place. Come to think of it, I might just miss it. —K.D.

Smoke gets in your eyes

To the editor:

"I'm sitting in the ASUI Senate meeting (of last Tuesday evening). My eyes are burning, my lungs are suffocating and my clothes are starting to reek."

No, the preceding conditions were not created by the burning issues discussed by the Senate and the Gallery, but rather by the cigarettes they smoke.

Let's face it. Cigarettes are smelly, irritating and dangerous (not only to the smoker, but also to those around him or her).

Consequently, they have already been banned in many public meeting places. Since the ASUI Senate meeting is open to the students (and supposedly the Senate wants to encourage student attendance and participation), a no-smoking policy should be initiated.

If Mike Helbling, Maureen McProud, Gary DeMeyer, Greg Lutman, Dick Stevenson and John Hecht (forgive me if I've overlooked anyone) insist on using a pacifier, then a more agreeable one should be substituted and their nicotine should be taken intravenously.

(If I may suggest a substitute to cigarettes, Gerber's Baby Foods Inc. puts out an excellent product with a large non-breakable plastic ring connected to a soft, chewy end shaped like a Macklin cartoon.)

Chokingly submitted,

Not practicing what they teach

To the editor:

The College of Education fails to practice what it preaches. The college encourages future educators to treat their students as individuals that deserve personal attention and positive reinforcement. I am just one of the many education majors that has been insulted, embarrassed and disregarded by the professors of the College of Education.

I am thinking specifically of an encounter I had with Dean Everett Samuelson this week. I approached the dean to talk to him about the University Year for Action program on campus which has been widely publicized.

He was unaware of the program, so I hoped to explain it to him so that I could participate in June. I was expecting him to be open to the idea of a year's experience in my field, which is highly recommended by the top universities in the nation and a requirement at Antioch College in Ohio.

But the dean looked at me in surprise and disgust. Before I had a chance to explain the program to him, he was demanding, over the telephone, to speak to someone who knew what they were talking about. I was awed by the rudeness of this "respected" educator who treated me as if I were "Just" a student who could not tell him anything he didn't already know.

Dean Samuelson rejected the idea even before he had a chance to talk to the University Year for Action chairman. How could he "give" someone credit for field work? This program merely reimburses the student for his or her room and board.

He implied that students should be paying for their education, not getting paid. He sent me away and told me to come back after he talked to the chairman; he didn't want to "jump to any conclusions."

I left his office barely five minutes after I first introduced myself. I am discouraged by the narrowmindedness and rudeness of a man who supposedly represents his college. He refused to give me any personal consideration at all and gave me nothing but negative feedback. When I returned the next day to ask him why he had rejected the program after he had talked to the chairman, he shouted at me in the lobby, "There is nothing to talk about," and disappeared into his office with two salesmen.

It was my life, my future, and my education and he said there was "nothing to talk about" if this were the only bad experience I had had with the education college maybe I could overlook it. But it is just the crowning blow after a long session of mistreatment.

I am now more convinced that my decision to transfer from the University of Idaho is the right one. I feel it is time to start getting an education from those who practice philosophy and don't just preach.

After all, don't we teach as we were taught?

Your heart's still beating... you must be fine

To the editor:

Recently, I had the unfortunate experience of having a physical examination at the Student Health Center.

To be more specific, it was unfortunate because I paid $7.50 to have very little done in the way of actual examination. The nurse checked my weight, blood pressure and pulse and the lab took urine and blood samples. The only thing the doctor did was listen to my heart.

From past experiences with physicals (once yearly) even I know that doctors (those in private practice, that is) always check the patient's ears, nose and throat and give vision and hearing tests. For women patients most doctors give a pelvic exam including a PAP smear in the past year.

I didn't expect an EEG and EKG, but I did expect a qualified physician to at least spend enough time with me to give me more than just an "educated guess" about my health.

I realize that for $7.50 I shouldn't have expected much, but I also believe that if the Health Center does not have the facilities to give this type of examination, which they obviously do not, they would refer students elsewhere and not offer the exam at all.

In my opinion one's health is invaluable. From now on I intend to visit a physician in private practice for my yearly examination who can and will give me a thorough physical and a responsible opinion concerning my health.

I strongly urge other students to do the same rather than wasting $7.50 on next to nothing.

The right to have a good time

We are writing in regard to the Blue Mountain Festival held at the University of Idaho in Moscow. We and many of our friends have enjoyed it very much for the last couple of years.

We do not feel that the Blue Mountain Festival should be put in jeopardy because of a few problems. Everything causes problems, but almost everything turns out OK in the long run. Just because rock festivals are not wanted by everyone, does it mean they should be banned.

Police Chief Hudson of Moscow and administrators are opposed to repeating the festival next year. They claim to have received many complaints, such as people parking on lawns. The truth is that almost everyone who attends, parks on the U of I campus where there are very few if any private homes.

The rock festival creates no more problems than any other event that attracts a lot of people. Why not ban the WSU-Uof I or Pullman-Moscow High football games? It makes just as much sense.

There have also been complaints about the size. We and most of the people that have attended did not feel overcrowded, not even last year when their was about 10,000 people. There was room for everyone.

The majority of the crowd was well behaved. A large percentage helped to keep the area somewhat clean. Everyone was friendly and got along beautifully.

Another item of talk is about changing the site. We feel the present site is just fine. There is plenty of room. The area is well protected and has a peaceful setting.

Sure there are problems, but the love, friendship and the good times that are generated by the festival make it well worth it. The Blue Mountain festival is a special time for certain people. We feel the police, U of I administration and the people of Moscow should be able to tolerate one day a year for a rock festival.

If not, maybe those people should also lose one important day each year that means something to them. The crowd that attends the rock festival has certain rights, too. Surely they can be allowed to have a good time once a year.

Experience lacking

To the editor:

The ASUI president is young and inexperienced. Had I known this, I would not have voted as I did in the last election.

After he lowers the percentage needed for recall of senators, he might be thinking of another amendment to raise the percentage needed for his own recall. Others have attempted such a ploy with substantially more finesse.

If the opposition disagrees, liquidate them. Should we advocate this kind of philosophy here?

P.S. That the Communications Board has used the Argonaut to inordinately push through its own goals may be a violation of the news media code of ethics. No proponent should exploit any medium of public information to enhance his side of a pending issue, especially one that he is interested in.

In striving for objectivity and accuracy, the other side of the story must also be told. Let's hear it!

Warnick not following rules

To the editor:

How can he make up the rules when he doesn't play the game?

After reading Mr. Warnick's editorials, columns and what not concerning Blue Mountain, it seems that his outdated 60's ideals and typical small-town paranoia are becoming evident. I'm beginning to wonder if his ideas about outdoor festivals were conceived from the flicks like "Gimme Shelter" and "Woodstock".

Indeed, ha,ha, ho, ho, relating our Blue Mountain with the peace picnics, cycle gangs, and quotes by James Hilton, not to mention the "red" star.

Secrecy, discipline, date changing— all necessary? I'd say don't make us all laugh but it's too late. What is necessary though is a representative student government, not an elite group with the proven ability to snowjob the student majority. What do we know anyhow?

Dave's column in the May 7 Lewiston Morning Tribune was named "A Festival Gets Rocky" but it seems that he is the only one who's rocking the boat.

Popular prof looking for employment

By BRUCE J. SPOTLESON of the Argonaut staff

At the barely ripe age of 41, entering a stage of life when most members of the academic profession are at the prime of their productivity and value, Willis W. Rees, who holds a Ph.D. in psychology, is out of a job.

The abrupt splice in Rees' career isn't attributable to the plight of the American economy and its cohort unemployment, nor are incompetence, University of Idaho budget changes or curriculum alterations to blame.

The powers that have retired Rees from his position on the staff of the Idaho Psychology Department rest in an outdated, inefficient system of academic tenure which, if fully exposed to the taxpayers who support public universities, might go the way of the ice wagon and the taffy pull.

Tenure, quite simply, is an educational institution's guarantee of employment to any given individual, most often an individual who teaches. Once granted, it bestows academic freedom, a kind of sanctifying grace that allows the individual to write and publish materials and publicly state ideas without fear of reprisal. One reprisal could be the loss of a job.

At the University of Idaho, most faculty members are considered for tenure automatically after they have been with their department for five years.

In Rees' case, such an automatic review resulted in an official "thumbs-down" from the University. Although granted the standard extra year's employment, Rees was told to get job applications in the mail, because he was being terminated as a member of the faculty of the University of Idaho.

Still, fully a year after an official hearing in which Rees appealed in vain his department's tenure denial (the first decision on granting or denying tenure is made by tenured members of the specific department, who simply vote yes or no) a series of events connected with the controversial case fully merit re-examination.

The University of Idaho, similar to many American four-year institutions, requires its faculty members not only to teach prior to promotion to tenured status, but to also give service to the college community — usually in the form of speeches and talks, and to conduct and publish research in areas where applicable. Psychology is one such area; research conducted in the field of psychology, however, must be published in a journal "referred" by professional psychologists in order for it to be officially recognized for the record.

It was this requirement that first brought Rees up for scrutiny. He gave talks, guest lectures and conducted and directed an impressive amount of graduate research. The problem was, as Idaho administrators saw it, he hadn't met the minimum requirement of getting five of his own research projects published in a referred journal since coming to the university.

But all things considered, it's a veritable wonder that Rees had time for anything but teaching. Which, according to the consensus of past students, is something he did fairly well.

Ironically, Rees came to Idaho after a position at Eastern Washington State College left him too little time for research in his area of expertise, which is comparative psychology.

Though his talents were worth considerably less monetarily at Idaho, Rees soon evolved into the workhorse of the psychology staff. He picked up some classes others wouldn't, on occasion to satisfy departmental needs, until gradually he had built up to more than 17 contact hours — hours spent in the classroom or lab — a week.

He laughed when people asked how he did it. Rees liked to teach, enjoyed the popularity of his students, and was proud about designing the framework for a new university course, Human Sexuality, which he taught to hundreds of students each time it was offered.

He was, nonetheless, spending far more time in the classroom than departmental colleagues. The rest of the psychology faculty was averaging roughly 7.5 contact hours a week from 1969-1974, while Rees was shouldering more than twice that — even though only a year prior to his appointment at Idaho he had been promised by Psychology Department head Victor E. Montgomery that he would be required to handle no more than nine hours a week.

There was, certainly, a problem with getting research completed. Prior to his arrival at Idaho, Rees says he was told of adequate departmental funding for aid in the pursuit of his specialized research. That research requires the use of animal subjects.

Rees says it wasn't long after his arrival at the Moscow campus that he realized the University's Small Animals Laboratory had "completely inadequate" facilities and was, in fact, legally unsanitary. And as far as funds went, there certainly didn't appear to be any for the purchase and maintenance of experimental animals.

Research was, in fact, shaping into a bit of an issue at Idaho. When he requested funds for traps to catch his own specimens, Rees was turned down. When he sought relief from a single lab class in order to spend time catching animals, he was told such activity should be carried out on his own time.

As he began his second year of employment with the U of I, in the fall of 1971, Rees' relationship with Montgomery became strained, and as some saw it, individual personalities began to clash. Rees has termed that stage of his Idaho career an "exceptionally stressful" period, resulting largely from what he has said were continual criticisms emanating from Montgomery.

He says he found himself being invited to Montgomery's office on a number of occasions for such encounters. However, prior to 1975, the Psychology Department only rarely kept minutes of meetings, and as a result, certain of Rees' charges are undocumented, a fact he readily concedes. Montgomery has also denied a large number of Rees' statements concerning himself and events alleged to have taken place.

Such encounters with Montgomery continued in the 1972-73 school year, and rumors were soon wafting among many psychology students that "Montgomery doesn't like Rees."

In April of 1973, Rees says he received somewhat of an ultimatum from Montgomery: publish anything at all and tenure would be virtually guaranteed, or publish nothing and apply for another job.

Rees stayed active in the area of service by lecturing and counseling, and indeed, he had completed several projects that referred journals, exercising their prerogative, decided not to publish. But he chose not to follow what he said was Montgomery's suggestion of publishing "anything at all," and opted to concentrate on research meaningful to him.

On Dec. 4, 1973, Rees received the news; a vote of the two tenured members of his department, Montgomery and Dr. James E. Crandall, had resulted in a tie, with Crandall supporting tenure for Rees. Montgomery had voted as a member of the department originally, but with the tie he could vote again, this time as a department chairman.

He voted negatively, making it 2-1 against Rees. An interoffice memo penned by Montgomery that same day stated that he could find "no adequate basis for recommending tenure."

Dean of Letters and Science Elmer Raunio reviewed the issue, and concurred with the vote of the Psychology Department. On January 3, 1974, Rees met with Raunio to examine reasons for the lack of support from his dean.

Rees says Raunio was awed by his teaching schedule, and told him he was unaware that anyone at the University had such a classroom load. But he referred to a sample conducted by Montgomery which showed Rees with, at best, 50 per cent student support.

Montgomery's sample was conducted on a face-to-face basis of questioning students. Two other samples that surfaced later showed Rees with no less than 83 per cent support for tenure among students who had taken classes from him.

A large group of students poured into Academic Vice President Robert Coonrod's office on February 13, 1974, seeking his intervention into the case. Thus prompted, Coonrod says he spoke with each individual member of the psychology faculty in the next six days. He said no supportive statements in favor of Rees surfaced.

"As a result of this procedure," Coonrod wrote in a February 21st memorandum for the record, "I have recommended to President Hartung, and he has approved, that Dr. Rees be notified that he will not be granted tenure at the University of Idaho."

On March 28, in the Agricultural Science Annex, Rees' appeal hearing convened before a rather large group of faculty members, students and University administrators. Alan Rose, a U of I French professor whose bout with his own department over promotion is a legend in itself, stepped into the role of spokesman-coordinator for Rees' last-ditch stand. Faculty members of the appeal board had been chosen at random by a computer.

The first area to come under attack was Montgomery's "random sample" of psychology students' opinions on the Rees matter. One psychology major Rose questioned, Donald J. Petersik, told the committee of the way his particular opinion was polled.

Rose: "Did Dr. Montgomery ask you your opinion on the Rees tenure decision?"

Petersik: "Yes."

Rose: "And did you feel free to reply in good conscience?"

Petersik: "No. Not at all."

Rose: "Would you explain why?"

Petersik: "The time that I was asked (sic) was when I was taking a course from Dr. Montgomery and it was right after an examination and I had completed my exam—not knowing how well I did on it—and as I left the room I was pulled to the side and asked my opinion. That was the occasion for the questions."

Petersik said that although he told Montgomery at the time that he was personally opposed to Rees getting tenure at Idaho, his response would "very definitely" have been different if the timing of the question were other than just after a test.

Rose next applied heat to the university's method of ranking a department's faculty members in competition with each other when analyzing student evaluation forms. (Such forms are submitted annually to students to use as a criterion for making curricular adjustments.)

Even though Rees was ranked 12th out of 15 teachers in an area such as "instructor availability and helpfulness" by students in his classes, the average student opinion ranged between "strongly agree" and "agree" that Rees was indeed available. Rose attacked the ranking system as "misleading," since Rees had roughly three times the number of students the rest of the Psychology Department had, and would therefore logically have less office time than the other teachers.

The audience at the second day of hearings heard Coonrod say that although he didn't regard Idaho as a "publish or perish institution" (a phrase referring to an institution that quickly terminates faculty members who fail to publish research under the approved guidelines), he admitted he felt research nd scholarly activity to be a "very essential means of determining that the instructor has control of his discipline and understanding of it."

A late-1973 statement by Raunio in which Rees' teaching and other contributions were rated as poor were quoted by Rose in the third day of hearings. Rose charged that rather than being true, Raunio's statement was made without all the input he was later to receive, and thus became a recommendation arrived at without sufficient background.

Rose contended that once such a recommendation is made in the lower administrative levels, "it becomes extremely difficult to change it at the top." He said the timing of documents is often as important as what they say—an obvious reference to the Raunio statement.

***

For the record, the 1971 University of Idaho Handbook of Policy and Procedure was officially deemed applicable in Rees' case. Although since revised, the 1971 Handbook stated that evaluation of a faculty member should be made in terms of the individual's potential effectiveness as a permanent member of the local academic community."

Though designed specifically to apply to the non-tenured faculty member coming up for tenure consideration, Rees' community contributions were taken into only the very least account.

Even though he had submitted to the appeal committee a number of strongly supportive letters and statements from present and former Moscow psychologists, physicians, drug abuse center personnel, professors, students, and concerned citizens, the committee chose to turn its head to the role Rees played in this community over the past years.

Then, too, is the matter of defining what the requirements for the post of associate professor exactly are. That was the promotion sought by Rees, one step up from his position of assistant professor. (Rees appealed the tenure decision, but declined to appeal the promotion denial.)

Appointees to the associate professorship, the Handbook says, "shall have demonstrated maturity and conclusive evidence of success as a teacher or researcher prior to appointment. Appointees to this rank should have demonstrated the ability to conceive, initiate, organize, and direct research in his special field that has resulted in quality publications or manuscripts of publishable value."

Rees contends that it is the use of the word "or" that should be noted in the handbook passage. He feels, and makes a very strong case in so doing, that the handbook doesn't state that he has to by any means "publish in a referred journal" to get tenure at the University of Idaho. He says his "manuscripts of a publishable value" are numerous.

The handbook provides more basic guidance in the area of promotions, which is, after all, what tenure often boils down to. Under the subheading of "Policy and Procedures for Promotions in Academic Rank," the following are listed as "significant considerations" for promotion:

1. Degrees and certificates held by the individual.

2. Ability and performance in teaching and/or assigned responsibilities.

3. Scholarship and creative activity (a record of research, performance and publications).

4. Other contributions to the profession and to the university (professional organizations, continuing education, faculty committees, etc.).

In most areas, Rees had the chips clearly on his side. But it was to no avail. The final appeal outcome upheld previous administrative decisions.

Rees still says that his chief gripe with the tenure system is that, in its present form, "it is totally unbecoming of intelligent people." But he has the appearance of a man who was beaten by forces not so cut-and-dried as the regulations spouted by bureaucrats during his appeal.

He appears to be a man relieved of his job by a chain of events that have very little—if any—bearing on his classroom performances. A classroom performance is the area with which students are—or indeed should be—most directly concerned.

Perhaps seen as being "different" in appearance and psychology, Rees was more individualistic than some contemporaries would have privately liked. And numerous statements attributed to his department chairman lead one to retrospectively infer that Rees' record might not have been the problem at all.

Montgomery will step down as department head of Psychology before the fall semester, in order to return to full-time duties as a professor.

Bill Rees will be forced into making some changes in his career, too, also by fall.

His home east of Moscow is a one-man marvel. Rees built nearly the whole thing by hand, using many different kinds of wood from around the area, much of it discarded by others. It's no secret that he had been hoping to call

No appeal planned by Rees

On May 2, 1975, Dr. Willis W. Rees sent a formal letter to the Idaho Board of Regents, the U of I administration, and the Department of Psychology.

Rees said in the letter that following an "extensive period of deliberation," he had decided not to appeal his case to the Board of Regents nor to pursue litigation at the present time.

Severely criticizing "the lack of concern for the welfare and future of the students at the University of Idaho," and charging "interinstitutional and in-

Moscow his home for a while; certainly his wife and two small children have been content here.

Perhaps he will continue to live in the Palouse—carpenters of his caliber are probably, as they say, always in demand.

But he surely won't continue to teach at the University of Idaho.

The Rees case is only one example of how the faculty tenure system can—and does—get distorted and twisted into becoming a means of controlling what kind of people get permanent positions and academic freedom at colleges and universities throughout the United States.

The watchdog of the status quo for colleges and universities there are few limitations in sight for the present tenure system. A new faculty dismissal policy for Idaho's four state schools could have implications on the institution of tenure, however.

The policy, thought to be the first of its kind in the nation, virtually eliminates peer group review of dismissal action. Adopted by the Board of Regents April 4, it does away with several academic review procedures that the regents felt made it almost impossible to fire a tenured faculty member.

It remains to be seen whether the new policy will have an effect on the inequities that exist when tenure is initially considered.

But there's no denying that the system of faculty tenure—looking in this case like an excuse for ostracizing a competent, popular member of the academic world supposedly dedicated to free thought—has stopped Bill Rees cold in his tracks.

terdepartmental jealousy," Rees says he is convinced that the system of tenure is "unbecoming of savants."

In his text, Rees enumerates "documentable" and "undocumentable" factors.

"I have stated heretofore that there is very little concern among the educators of Idaho for the future and welfare of future generations," Rees states near the conclusion of his seven-page letter.

"Like the greedy cancerous virus we have begun the slow process of destroying our planet and as a result of all our "efforts" we offer the future generations the bright prospects of pollution, starvation, overpopulation, the destruction of life supporting systems, the depletion of natural resources, war, and untold misery," Rees continues.

"In short," the letter states, "we offer the youth of the world the bright prospect of the end of humanity. One of the ways in which we can offer them life in lieu of death and extinction is through education. But, hardly anyone is concerned!

"I don't understand how parents and educators can look at the youth of today, including their own children and grandchildren, without feelings of guilt when they know damned good and well that these children will probably suffer the ghastly experience of seeing mankind's self execution."

A copy of Rees' letter may be reviewed in the Argonaut office during regular business hours until Wednesday of finals week.

Unemployed?

Self Business offers alternative

At the time when many of us are beginning to seriously consider what kind of jobs we might want, expect to find, finally be forced to accept—we often pause to contemplate a very lucrative alternative: business for ourselves.

The main problem driving most away from self-employment is the inherent insecurity. For many, the idea of having no one else to assist, praise, or direct their endeavors offsets the desire to set their own working hours and standards.

The recent Renaissance Fair II, however, showed many students at the U of I how several artists have managed to make or supplement a living through their individual crafts.

One such individual is Flint Carpenter. Flint graduated from the U of I with a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree and immediately went into business as a jeweler making rings, bracelets, and necklaces on commission.

Flint now resides in an idyllic setting, his comfortable wooden cabin overlooking an expansive valley in the hills near Moscow. He now has expensive equipment, and a business fully advertised by two friends, one a photographer, one a printer. His home is warmed by a wood stove, fed by wood he cut himself. Within yards of the cabin is a sauna.

In every way, he seems to be the stereotype of the successful self-made man. Yet, there were those initial moments of doubt. Flint wanted, and wants, first of all to be a sculptor. He just decided that, realistically, he was not ready to depend on the necessarily infrequent displays (always in larger cities) of that art. Jewelry, an occupation suggested by classes at the U of I, seemed compatible with the expressiveness of his first love, with the necessary direct financial gains.

one will be just fine, though." With that, he polished the last portion of the ring—an incredible red stone in an ornate silver setting.

Flint continues to get better. He now has stones to work with such as lapis, opal, moonstone, garnet; and the continuing growth of commissions happily forces him to expand into new areas, increasing his own selection of display rings.

Still, he would like to return to the U of I to work on his Master's, "in order to use the equipment there." "The U of I has an extremely good department in the areas I want to pursue. You see, schools are now what rich patrons once were—universities and government and even some industries—they support artists now and allow them to create."

As I left Flint, moving toward his sauna, I could not help but consider how unique his occupation is—the organic coupling of his natural skills in sculpture and design, the absolute satisfaction of working to exhaustion in both mental and physical effort, and the reward of seeing the self-expression solidified in stone, bronze, and marble. No, for sure not everyone could do it, but fortunately anyone can enjoy his work, even without being an artist.

Flint is showing a collection of his jewelry in the SUB (see the information desk for the room) this weekend—Saturday and Sunday from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m.—along with two other talented artists: Bill Cambell, a painter, and George Driscoll, who does wood carvings. Though many of the articles may be beyond our expense accounts at the moment, I think you will agree that the experience of viewing these art works is gratifying in itself.

What's happening

Since we are getting close to the end of the semester, the amount of entertainment for students is becoming very limited.

If you want a good laugh before finals week, Fantastic Flicks presents a Mel Brooks comedy, "The Producers" starring Gene Wilder and Zero Mostel which is a spoof about Broadway, Saturday May 10 in the Borah Theatre at 7 and 9 p.m. Admission is 75 cents.

The Moscow-Latah County Library's last film in the current series of Free Friday Flicks will be "The Maltese Falcon." This movie stars Humphrey Bogart as the private eye and the rogues' gallery includes Mary Astor, Sidney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre. This 1941 feature film will be shown tonight at 7:30 in the Council Chambers of Moscow City Hall.

Continuing this week at the Micro Moviehouse is the comedy featuring the Marx Brothers in "Horsefeathers." Starting Sunday and running through until Tuesday is the satirical classic "Catch 22" starring Alan Arkin, Orson Welles and Bob Newhart. The movie deals with chaos and terror of World War II and a squadron of B-25 bombers. Starting Wednesday is the weird love story of "Harold and Maude." The movie centers around a man who is 19 that is lonely and rich and a woman spinster who is 79. Showtimes Monday through Thursday are 5, 7:30, and 9:45, Friday and Saturday 5, 7:30, 9:45 and midnight and Sunday at 12:30, 2:45, 5, 7:30 and 9:45. Admission to 7:30 and 9:45 shows are $1.50 and all others are one dollar.

Playing at the Kenworthy Theatre this weekend is "The Godfather II" starring Al Pacino and Robert De Niro. A sequel to the Godfather that aptly follows suit to the original in its background. One showing nightly at 7:30. The Nu-Art is featuring Ellen Burstyn and Kris Kristofferson in the social comedy drama "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore" nightly at 7 and 9.

In Pullman at the Cordova Jack Nicholson and Faye Dunaway star in the detective story set in Los Angeles during the 1930's, "Chinatown." Shows nightly at 7 and 9:15. At the Audian John Wayne stars as a cop in "Brannigan" and shows daily at 7 and 9 p.m.

As for music, if you are into classical the University Wind Ensemble will perform in East City Park on Sunday May 11 at 2 p.m. weather permitting. Selections will include music from Strauss, Charles Ives and Gustav Holst.

For the more livelier set, Salooney Tunes from Spokane are now appearing at the Eagles Capricorn while the house favorite Applejack are boogying at the Rathskellar Inn.

Grass-fed beef has lean meat

Recent controversy over proposed changes in federal meat grading standards is mostly due to "misunderstanding among consumers," according to the head of the University of Idaho's animal industries department.

Dr. Jack E. McCroskey said the arguments of several consumer groups, which claim the new regulations would force shoppers to pay the same price for lower quality beef, are not supported by the facts. He said under the changed standards, which would allow meat with less marbling — fat content — to be graded "choice", consumers would get the same quality beef, and more of it, for the same price.

The Teac 360S. Following the leader.

Two years ago TEAC introduced the 450, a cassette deck so good a lot of reel-to-reel machines were suddenly out-performed, never mind other typical cassette decks.

The 360S is now following the leader. You still get the same advanced transport drive system that produces an incredible lack of wow and flutter (less than 0.07% WRMS). And all the other engineering accomplishments that first made cassette decks respectable in sophisticated systems.

Things like Dolby* circuitry, enhanced by a tone generator and calibration controls, peak indicator light, tape memory and automatic shut-off.

We'd be happy to give you a demonstration of the 360S. The major difference between it and the 450 is price. Which makes it a leader in its own right.

Chadband, Keilty are '75 grid co-captains

Fullback J.C. Chadband and safety Bill Keilty have been elected co-captains of the 1975 University of Idaho football squad, according to Vandal head coach Ed Troxel who revealed the squad vote at the annual spring picnic held over the weekend.

The 6-0, 200 pound Chadband, a native of Pocatello, and Keilty, a 6-1, 185 pounder from Glendora, Calif., succeed seniors Johnny Sims of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Mark Fredback of Seattle, Wash.

"The squad made an excellent selection," said Troxel. "J.C. and Bill have already demonstrated their leadership ability and have contributed vitally to squad morale. I look for them to lead the Vandals to a much improved season and record."

Chadband, first-team all-Big Sky Conference fullback in 1974, has carried the ball for 1,067 yards and 10 touchdowns during parts of two seasons. As a sophomore he gained for 309 yards in just four games before being sidelined by injury. In 1974 he picked up 758 yards in eight and one-half games.

With increased speed gained through Troxel's new conditioning program and freedom from injuries, Chadband is expected to become only the second U of I runner in history to surpass the 1,000 yard rushing record in one season. Former All-American Ray McDonald accomplished the trick in the 1960s while on his way to leading the nation in rushing.

Keilty transferred to Idaho a year ago from Mt. San Antonio Junior College (Calif.), and had an outstanding season. Last year his teammates selected him as the 1974 Defensive Player of the Year. He led the team in interceptions (5), assisted in one blocked punt (against Montana), had four punt returns and recovered two fumbles. He had 48 unassisted tackles and 49 assists including a team high of 17 against Utah State.

Two Idaho runners qualify for women's regional meet

Two University of Idaho women will enter the 1975 Northwest Regional College Women's Track and Field Championships slated for Friday and Saturday at the University of Oregon in Eugene.

Freshmen Helen Walkley and Terry Janusiewicz will compete in the meet which will feature over 20 colleges and universities.

Ms. Walkley will compete in the long jump, 100 and 220 yard dashes while Ms. Janusiewicz will enter the high jump. Walkley has also qualified for the national meet to be held in two weeks at Oregon State University in Corvallis. She reached 17-8 and a half earlier this year to qualify for the AIAW championships. Janusiewicz needs a jump of 5-2 to be able to accompany her teammate to the nationals. Her best leap has been 5-0, although she's gone over 5-3 in practice sessions.

Last weekend the team took part in the Northeastern District meet held at Whitworth College in Spokane, Wash. Walkley pushed her 220 time to 26.3, which is just one tenth of a second off the qualifying mark needed for the finals at Oregon State.

Distance runner Diane Partridge of Moscow bettered her two-mile time by 46 seconds in a 12:49.2 clocking giving her third place. She also ran the mile and finished seventh at 5:59.

COLLEGE CAN BE AN ADVENTURE... WITH A FUTURE

The Military Science Department at the University of Idaho offers a coed academic program leading to an Army Commission along with such activities as:

RAPPELLING FLIGHT TRAINING FLOAT TRIPS

CROSS COUNTRY SKIING SURVIVAL TRAINING
 SEARCH & RESCUE

Although the Department of Military Science does not offer a major or minor, courses do provide academic credit. You do not incur any military obligation for the first two years of the program. You are free to choose any academic major or minor and may start the program during your sophomore year. All students receive financial assistance (approximately $2500) during their junior and senior years. Additional activities are available if you wish to become involved in extra curricular affairs. If you decide to complete the program after trying it, you will receive a commission in the Army, and can earn $10,000 a year plus benefits upon graduation.

Registration for the Army Officer Education Program is accomplished when you register for your classes. For more information, call 885-6528, or stop by and talk with Carl Key or Joe King in room 101, Memorial Gym.

eight-year reign by the Vandals, but Idaho will be seeking the crown this year whether it's official or not.

The squad which is now 15-8 will close out the season this weekend at a tournament at the University of Montana held today and tomorrow.

Scheduled to play in the dual tourneys at Missoula are Boise State, Weber State, Montana State, Montana and Idaho. Idaho has faced Boise State twice this year and the Vandals have garnered victories both times.

Since the Big Sky dropped the sport from the title consideration last year, this year's championship will be "unofficial." Last year Boise State took the title and snapped an

Last weekend the Washington State Invitational was rained out. The match would have included Oregon, Oregon State, Idaho and WSU.

LCSC dumps Vandals

Lewis-Clark State College administered dual defeats to Idaho sweeping a double header 5-4 in the first game and 10-2 in the second Tuesday afternoon on Guy Wicks Field.

The Warriors darted to a 5-2 lead in the first contest and the Vandals were unable to rally past them. LCSC scored four of their runs in the first inning, but John Klimek singled in Bennett Eckhammer and Gary Plepkorn to make it 4-2.

Warrior Paul Zoebeck claimed his sixth homer of the year in the third inning with a slam over the center field wall.

The Vandals slugged right back in the sixth when Jim Elston slapped a two run homer over the 370 mark in right field. Idaho ace Steve Williams was credited with the loss when the Vandals failed to overcome the one point deficit. He is now 4-3 on the season.

The second game looked like a tight contest until Lewis-Clark broke lose with five runs in the third inning.

The Warriors jumped to 1-0 lead in the opening inning, but a single by Mike Ruscio tied for the Vandals in the bottom of the first.

LCSC picked up another tally in the second on a home run and then exploded in the third. The Warriors added three more runs in the fifth, while the Vandals could scrape only one more in the seventh.

Idaho's Ken Schrom was tagged with the loss, even though he was relieved by Jim Guy in the third.

Crucial league double headers were rained out last weekend at Seattle and Tacoma and could have hurt Vandal chances for high placement in the league.

League officials will await the results of first place Puget Sound's doubleheaders with second place Gonzaga and fourth place Idaho which will be played today and tomorrow, before deciding if another week of play will be necessary.

The Puget Sound Loggers are 14-2 in the conference while Gonzaga stands 11-5. A sweep of all four games this weekend would cinch the Loggers their second straight title, but if they lose Idaho and Gonzaga will have to trek to Seattle and Tacoma on May 16-17 to play the rained out double headers.

Idaho is 7-9 in the conference, but they could be the spoilers this weekend. This afternoon Seattle will invade the Palouse area followed by Puget Sound tomorrow. The twin bills are set to get under way at 1 p.m.

Thinclads to compete in Spokane

Nine Idaho spikers will compete in a meet being hosted by Washington State at Spokane Community College's all-weather facility.

Vandal thinclads qualifying include Glenn Bach, high hurdles; Pat Wilson, six mile; Doug Beckman and Kelly Bonney, mile; Mark Novak and Rick Bartlett, 880; Rich Brooks, three-mile; Mark Crull, shot put and discuss; Sam Read, shot; and Doug Fisher, discuss.

Idaho will also compete in the distance medley and two-mile relay.

Coach Mike Keller will take squad members that did not qualify for Saturday's contests to an all-comers meet on Friday afternoon, sponsored by Spokane Community College.

Five Vandal tracksters are currently rated in the top three in their events by the Big Sky standings. Doug Fisher and Mark Crull are first and second in the conference discus statistics. Crull is second in shot put ratings and teammate Sam Read is third.

Rick Bartlett is the Big Sky's third best in the 880 followed by Mark Novak who is fourth. Scott Knoblich is third in the mile.

DTD are intramural champions

Delta Tau Delta is the undisputed all-sports intramural Champion for 1974-75.

A 5-3 softball victory over Beta Theta Pi last Friday clinched the coveted trophy for the Deltas, who went on to grab the Greek softball championship by defeating Lambda Chi Alpha 12-11 Tuesday afternoon.

The Greek softball championship boosted the Deltas to an insurmountable 25 point lead over Alpha Tau Omega in the overall intramural race. The ATO's finished second in their softball league.

In the Greek championship, Lambda Chi Alpha jumped to a quick 7-0 lead, but the Deltas, behind the hitting of Rory Jones and Bob Mendiola, scored 12 runs in the final two innings to squeak by with a one point victory.

The Lambda Chi's protested an umpire's interference call, which rejected one of their runs, but the intramural protest board overruled the protest.

Upham Hall will be facing Delta Tau Delta today for the intramural softball championship. Upham defeated McConnell Hall yesterday in the independent play-offs 9-5.

WSU fraternity suspended

The Washington State chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity has been suspended for conducting a party which violated university and state laws concerning alcoholic beverages, according to WSU officials Wednesday.

The controversial greek living group has been on an unofficial probation since the incident involving the death of a pledge during initiation week which occurred earlier this year.

Dean of Students Arthur McCartan said an investigation revealed that the "water follies" function sponsored by the fraternity at its house April 25 violated state laws and university regulations on alcoholic beverages.

Some students on the WSU campus are speculating that the university singled the fraternity out for the violations, since so many other living groups have broken the rules. "I don't think the university singled us out, but we just happened to be the ones who got caught and they're using us as an example," stated

Wade Moline, public relations officer for the fraternity. Earlier this year on February 19 Jon Charles Asher of Vancouver, a pledge of the fraternity, died of bilateral pneumonia while participating in the TKE's initiation rites. Following Asher's death the fraternity was found innocent of fault by the university and the Whitman County prosecuting attorney.

Suspension of the fraternity means that the living group can no longer conduct any social functions, parties or programs for the remainder of the academic year. "We expect to be off suspension within a month or two," said Moline, after the fraternity had spoken with university officials.

However, until the suspension is lifted, the fraternity can't take in new pledges or initiate current pledges without authorization by the dean. If the suspension lasts for a long period of time it could mean the end of the WSU chapter, since no new members could be obtained. "We don't expect our rush to be hurt next year, because the suspension is meant as a warning to scare us," said Moline.

McCartan stated that he had discussed the water follies function with the fraternity before it began. He said he emphasized "the fraternity's responsibility to adhere to university and state laws for the safety and welfare of its members."

Investigations by the university, and city police of Pullman, along with verbal reports by fraternity members indicated that the fraternity was in violation of several university regulations and state laws concerning alcoholic beverages, according to McCartan.

He stated that the fraternity failed to check the age of those persons drinking alcoholic beverages at the function, and it had not obtained a banquet permit.

U of I Prof receives award

Dr. James D. Willett, associate professor of chemistry, has become the first University of Idaho faculty member to receive a prestigious career development award from the National Institute of Health.

The award will pay Willett's salary for five years and release him from all teaching responsibilities. The award is presented on the basis of high scientific merit to people wishing to do research in areas the institute feels hold high potential.

Willett will study aging in nematodes and control of nematode parasites. He will be assisted by six graduate students and will conduct his research at the U of I during the five-year period.

"I feel this research has high potential for developing a control of parasitic nematodes," Willett said. "This research could have great economic impact."

He said one type of nematode he will be studying has caused extensive damage to Idaho's sugar beet crop in recent years.

"I like to work at locations where there's a practical spin-off," he said, referring to Idaho's sugar beet nematode problem.

Separated, divorced couples often face deep depression

By TARL OLIASON

"What do you say to a divorcee, 'I'm sorry' or 'congratulations', and what do the divorcees expect?"

These questions are typical of the many problems facing recently separated people, according to Dr. James D. Morris, counseling psychologist at the U of I student counseling center.

"Partnership failure can be a devastating and earth-shaking experience," Morris said. To help "get people through the bad times" following a separation, Morris has been conducting group sessions for these people for the last two years.

The group sessions are for divorced people as well as unmarried people who have broken up after just living together, Morris said. He termed both of these situations "partnership failures" and said the victims of each type of separation are confronted with the same problems.

"The common problems these people face are personal devaluation—feeling less of one's self, anger toward one's partner and depression," Morris explained. "Women worry about re-establishing their own support, men suffer from the loss of the children and both people become anxious about the future, usually having to accept a substandard living."

To overcome these fears and anxieties, Morris' group sessions consist of a relatively unstructured rap session, he said, with the participants talking about whatever they wish, usually how to relate to other people. He explained that society has rituals for birth, maturing, marrying and dying, but none for divorce.

Morris cited four relationship problems which arise because of the lack of social divorce rituals: —people who have been friends with a person don't know how to relate or what to say when the person gets a divorce. —friends of a separated couple don't want to choose sides so they reject both persons. —women think of divorced men as free of some burden and "ready to hustle." —and men become overly aggressive towards divorced women, thinking they have been unfulfilled in their marriages.

"Our goal," Morris said, "is to get these people to pull themselves together and to establish a new identity—one other than that of a 'former spouse'."

Morris rejected the idea of having an observer sit in on one of the group sessions.

"There is a certain cohesiveness in a group like this—they are insiders—and people become very possessive about that group," he said. "The things we discuss are deeply confidential. They share things with the group that even their parents and closest friends don't know."

"In our sessions, everyone understands, and a sharing of ideas brings a sharing of strength. An observer would be an outsider and would inhibit these very deep kinds of sharing," Morris said.

After four semesters of working with victims of partnership failures, Morris views the project as quite successful. "Success comes with self-actualization and freedom from hang-ups," he said.

To help measure the results of his program, Morris gives a test to all participants before the semester-long sessions begin and after they end. In testing independence, sensitivity and self-worth, he said the latter scores were markedly higher than the former.

Morris qualified his results, admitting that he had no control group. The progress, he said, could not definitely be attributed to the group sessions. He is planning a transition group for this summer with which he will have a control group.

In another success test, Morris distributed a questionnaire to past group participants. Of 32 questionnaires distributed, 29 were returned. Seventy-five per cent of the people judged the overall experience as "extremely or very positive", he said.
