Student ID cards invalid-confiscated

by Randy Stapilus
of the Argonaut Staff

Student identification cards have been confiscated at the Kibbie Dome - including cards owned by "bona-fide" full time students, according to Stadium officials, the Argonaut has learned.

A conference of stadium, athletic and administrative personnel is scheduled to meet today to discuss the problem which Vice President for Students and Administrative Services, Tom Richardson, admitted may have no easy answers.

During the last football game, several registered, fulltime students have had un-revalidated cards confiscated. Cards which have lost their validation stamp or were not validated during registration (Cards which have lost their validation stamp or were not validated during registration)

Un-validated cards held by full-time registered students have been seized, along with cards held by alumni, or cards held by non-students which students had loaned or given to them.

"It was never our intent," said Richardson, "to deprive a bona fide student... I just don't have any answers on how to technically correct the validation problem at this time."

The university's policy in the past, according to several documents and a recent memo written by Financial Vice President Sherman Carter, has been to confiscate expired cards and cards which have not been properly validated.

"Should a person refuse to turn in an expired card," Carter recently wrote to an Athletics Department official, "the administration will join in pressing criminal charges against that person for fraudulent use of the card."

None of the university officials contacted knew of any action yet taken against anyone with an invalidated card.

However, Latah County Prosecuting Attorney William Hamlett wrote in an opinion to a member of the Athletic department that "it would not be inconsistent" with current law if a police officer or other authorized official seized the false ID as evidence.

However, Hamlett did not mention the problem of seizing cards correctly held by full time students, but which were not revalidated.

The law Hamlett cited in his opinion was Moscow City Code 6-1-19, which states "it shall be unlawful for any person to fraudulently enter without payment of proper admission fees" any public event that requires fees for entry.

Cards are still being held by university and other officials, and where the cards were valid and proper, Richardson said, efforts are being made to restore them to their rightful owners.

Reports have been circulating to the effect that some students denied entrance but with proper cards paid to enter the games.

Stadium board chairman Mark Beatty said "we will try to reimburse those who paid to get in that did not have to." Ticket Manager John Ikeda was unavailable for comment, but his office said that is standard policy.

Candidates & petitions

Byline correction

Last issue's centerspread article was written by Jackie Storm. Unfortunately, her name was deleted during the final production stages. We apologize.

One of the pictures was also incorrectly labeled, we apologize for this also.

Five people have picked up petitions to run in University of Idaho student body elections Nov. 19.

Petitions were made available Monday in the ASUI office at the Student Union Building. To have his name placed on the ballot, a candidate must return his petition by 5 p.m. Nov. 5 with 75 signatures on his petition, say ASUI officials.

Thom Kinchloe and David Warnick have taken petitions to run for president and Brian Kincaid has taken one to run for vice president.

Those who have petitions for the Senate include Brit Groom, Mark Limbaugh and Gene Barton.

Argonaut today

The Idaho Vandals didn't fare too well this weekend when they went against the Montana Grizzlies in Missoula. Turnovers were frequent during the 14-3 loss. The story is on page 8.

"Up With People!" And they meant it literally this weekend when the Up With People group visited Idaho, and gave an excellent performance. David Morrissey has the story on page 11.

Registration requirements clarified

Registering to vote in Moscow is usually an easy thing to do. You walk into city hall, read and sign the oath that says you are a resident, and take note of the fact that if you've been convicted of several "infamous crimes," you will be denied the franchise.

But an information sheet prepared by the city of Moscow on local registration procedures has caused some students to wonder if they are not being encouraged to vote "in their home town."

The purpose of this one page hand-out, according to city officials, "is to let students know they can vote here or in the town they were living in before they came here."

The confusion seems to stem from the next to last paragraph of the information sheet. That paragraph reads:

"For those students who have moved to Moscow and intend to leave after they complete school, we would suggest that you may register to vote in your home town. For the convenience of these University students, the City of Moscow will make registration forms available and send them to the City Clerk (registrar) of their home town."

The implication some students have received seems to be that Moscow is not their "real" place of residence. This feeling has been further heightened by city clerks who have given the information page only to university residents. "We give them only to students, but they're available for the public at large," one clerk said.

Seeking further information on the status of the information sheet the Argonaut called Jerry Hill, Deputy Secretary of State, in Boise. Hill, who is in charge of the Election's Division of the Secretary's office, said that "students should be advised of both their options, of voting in Moscow or in some other place, but no effort should be made to encourage them to vote in any particular town."

Hill also noted that "the intent to reside is subjective, it is determined by the voter, not the election clerk."

The information sheet is not required by Idaho law, and is prepared as a service for the voters of Moscow. In this regard it is a useful tool. But it tends to discourage a particular group of persons from voting in Moscow then the hand-out is working counter to the city's intention in providing it, and perhaps counter to the election laws of Idaho.

Kincaid candidate for Veep

Brian Kincaid, a sophomore journalism major, has announced his candidacy for ASUI vice-president.

Kincaid is the first student to take out a nominating petition for the vice-presidential seat currently held by Mark Beatty.

Kincaid's tentative platform includes planks on the Blue Mountain Music festival, campus alcohol policy and what to do with the site of the U. of I. field house when it is razed.

He says about 70 per cent of the students are in favor of having Blue Mountain in one form or another.

Kincaid mentioned he had helped with the beverage container policy for ASUI Kibbie Dome. Alcohol isn't detrimental to the academic community because students are responsible enough to handle it, he said. He notes that he doesn't agree with the present alcohol policy.

When the field house is razed, there will be several options on what to do with the property where it stands. Leon Green, athletic director, has recommended that it be used for tennis courts. An expansion of the arboretum, which might perhaps include an outdoor symphonic orchestra shell, is the option Kincaid is backing.

Kincaid has stressed aid to the handicapped as a personal concern in campus life.

An Army veteran, Kincaid helped organize the Western Regional Veterans Conference, which was instrumental in passing a new GI bill.

He served on the Issues and Forums Committee, as Argonaut reporter for Faculty Council and on the ad hoc committee for student evaluations.

He notes that a major issue on campus is the resignation of three law students from the Senate. Law students are part of the ASUI, and a $5 fee which is paid by all students at registration for the Education Building should be transferred to help pay for law facilities when the education building is paid for in 1977 or 1978, Kincaid said. He also thought the ASUI officers need more student input and notes that he's running because he's interested.

Guest series to begin

Students can save $7 by purchasing season tickets for the U of I Guest Artist Series, until Nov. 4.

Students pay $8 to view three shows by professional actors, while non-students pay $12 for season tickets, commented Florence Roberts, U of I Theatre Arts publicity director.

General admission at the door is $5 per performance.

The season ticket holder has the advantage of selecting their own seats which are reserved for each of the three performances.

Tickets can be purchased at the U-Hut weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., except during noon. Tickets can also be ordered by mail from the U of I Theatre Arts Department. After Nov. 4 no season tickets will be sold, noted Roberts.

The guest artist series includes Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn who appear on Nov. 4. This husband and wife team will present "The Many Faces of Love" in all its myriad aspects, from authors as diverse as Shakespeare, Robert Frost, and Ogden Nash.

On January 24, Geoffrey Holder, a new talent who recently walked away with two Tony awards for directing and costume designing for "The Wiz," will sing, mime, dance, and entertain in his program of "Instant Theatre."

Search on for symposium speakers

The Annual Borah Symposium on the causes of war and peace won't be held until next March, but the symposium committee is already hard at work.

According to Jeanette Driskell, this year's chairperson, the committee is now soliciting nominations for speakers. Planning is also underway to televise the program once again, and also bring in visiting high school students.

The Borah Foundation was established in 1929 with a grant by Salmon O. Levinson, a Chicago attorney, who strongly admired Idaho Senator William H. Borah and his efforts to prevent war.

The theme of this year's symposium will be "Access to Power: A Citizen Prevention of War." The program will include several sub-topics, including "Democratization of the Military," "Electoral - Legislative Control of the Military," "Civil Disobedience," "Cultural Change," and "The Nuclear Trigger."

Some speakers have already been contacted concerning the program, but other names are needed to balance out the program. Persons from all parts of the University community are urged to contact the committee with their suggestions.

"We are especially interested in finding scholars and authorities who have a depth of knowledge in fields related to the theme," Driskell said. She pointed out that the committee desires these persons to have a "unique point of view."

"We are making an effort to bring forth information so that people can have an informed point of view," Driskell said. "We also need persons who can speak to a general audience."

The symposium will be held March 30, 31, and April 1 next year. The symposium committee meetings are held each Thursday in the Russet Room of the SUB, at 4:10 p.m. The public is invited to attend and give their views.

Another aspect of this year's symposium will be the continuation of the high school visitation program. Living groups interested in hosting students from out-of-town schools who are attending the program are asked to contact Ted Argyle, a student committee member, at Delta Sigma Phi, 885-7213.

Jobs available for engineers

An unusually large number of companies will interview prospective employees the next several days.

These interviews are primarily held for seniors looking for career employment. They should already be registered at the placement center.

Engineers, as has been the case all semester, are most in demand today. Various engineering majors will be interviewed all day by the FMC Corporation (involved in manufacturing industrial equipment), the Getty Oil Company (accepting all degrees but concentrating on degrees helpful in the oil industry), the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, and the Boeing Co. (concentrating on people familiar with computer science.)

Accounting majors may also go for interviews that same day with the U.S. General Accounting office. They're not particular about the exact wording of the degree but they do want a 2.9 overall GPA.

Wednesday, Chemical and Mechanical engineers are in demand by the Bechtel Corporation, the Dow Chemical Co., and the General Electric Co. All three will accept only U.S. citizens.

Thursday, more engineers will be interviewed. Continental Oil Company (Conoco) and Proctor and Gamble Manufacturing Co. both want Chemical Engineers; Consolidated Oil Company (Consol) wants civil and electrical engineers.

The only break that day comes with the Army Medical Specialist Corps, who want majors with "A degree within the food-nutrition program."

Maybe there's yet hope for those who aren't engineering majors.

Priceless booklet donated to University library

One of the first samples of printing in the Northwest, a palm-sized booklet of 27 hymns in the Nez Perce language, has been donated to the U of I Library by Carroll and Lois Brock, of Orofino.

The booklet, printed by Henry Spalding at Lapwai in 1843, was accompanied by two manuscript notebooks of scriptural passages, which are believed to have been written by Spalding, according to Warren Owen, U of I Library dean.

"Since the book was from the first press in this part of the country, and the third in the entire West, we view it as a significant and priceless gift," Owen said.

A leather box is being constructed for the tattered, darkened book, said Charles Webbert, U of I head of special collections.

"Spalding intended these books for distribution and use among the Indians, who were learning to read their language in the roman alphabet," Webbert said.

The press, which printed the hymn booklet, is currently in the collections of the Oregon Historical Society in Portland, Ore.

According to Robert Wentz, in his "Eleven Western Presses," a history of printing, the press was brought to the wilderness mission following Spalding's request to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Brock, who donated the gift from his private collection of books and other relics of the Old West, is an accountant and longtime member of the U of I Library Associates Organization.

Trekkie shirts!

Second edition Star Trek T-shirts will be available at the Talisman House this week from 3-5 p.m.

These shirts were made through a special printing process, according to Captain Mark Lotspeich.

A meeting of the Star Trek Club will take place at 12:02 Wednesday, in the SUB. Planet will be posted.

Slide show on U of I scheduled for Thursday

The U of I will be the subject of a slide show to be held in the Borah Theatre, Thursday, at noon.

"It doesn't have a title," according to Jim Barnes, one of the film's producers. "It is informative," and is multi-media discussion of the University's several colleges and services.

Originally it was designed specifically for student recruitment, Barnes said, but now it is also for alumni and students at the University.

The show lasts about 13 minutes, and "we may show it two to three times" if enough people want to see it. "We encourage all to come," Barnes said.

The program was produced by Barnes, and Dick Johnson, director of alumni, with assistance from John Mix and Gary Cummings of KRPL Radio, and Leon Ames of the University Publications office.

Opinion

Argonaut

No endorsements

The Argonaut will not endorse any candidates running for an elected ASUI position in the November election.

As a student publication I believe it is the duty of the newspaper to keep the students informed, and for this service the students subsidize its operation.

When it comes to political campaigns and candidates, I don't feel the Argonaut is obligated to dictate in any manner its desires in the area of ASUI political leadership. Columnists and editorial writers have their own opinions on the people they feel should be elected, but I am of the opinion that the issues are more important than the campaigns.

The Argonaut is not a privately owned publication, and therefore it should not suggest to the readers its choice for election. If the paper was a private operation I feel it would have the right to make an endorsement for the candidate it supported.

Last year the Argonaut endorsed ASUI candidates, but these opinions were expressed by a single individual, the editor. This year, the editor also has his own opinion, but he's going to keep it to himself.

The Argonaut will present the candidate's announcement to run for office and their platform. The readers can determine from the candidate's stand on the issues, and also from any personal contact by the candidate, as to whom they wish to vote for.

Too often in the past, disappointed politicians have blamed the Argonaut for their loss. We won't be the scapegoats, and we will be as fair as possible while providing coverage of the election.

Sorority women thanked

To the Editor:

At the request of the County Health Department, the Kappa Sigma Fraternity undertook a community service project in order to raise funds for a local youth afflicted with cerebral palsy. The boy required a hearing aid and his family was unable to provide him with one. On the basis of this information, the men of Kappa Sigma organized a "slave sale" and auctioned themselves off at the nine sororities on campus.

We wish to publicly express our thanks to the young women affiliated with the U of I greek system for their enthusiastic support for this charitable cause. Due to their overwhelming generosity, we were able to raise sufficient funds to completely cover the cost of the hearing aid and obtain one year's insurance for the instrument. As in the case of Campus Chest Week, the Moscow United Way, and countless other worthy causes; the sorority girls of Idaho have once again demonstrated selfless effort in behalf of charity. We thank them.

Signed,

Pat O'Malley

Project child find needs help

To the Editor:

Dr. Roy Truby, State Superintendent of Public Instruction and Governor Cecil Andrus urge you to join and support Idaho Project Child Find. Project Child Find is a statewide effort to locate and identify children with physical, mental, or emotional handicaps who are presently not enrolled in school or any educational program.

By law, all school-age children must receive an educational opportunity. In addition, educational programs provided at an early age can help prevent later handicaps in school.

If you know of a preschool child who needs special help, call or write your regional Child Development Center, Department of Health and Welfare.

If you are a parent or a friend of a school-age handicapped child who is not enrolled in school or any educational program, call or write your local school district, or write:

bombard the gonads of passing students, causing them (the gonads) to quaver vigorously but unnoticeably. This quavering apparently interferes with sex hormone production in the gonads to such a degree, that sexual energy and desire are diminished.

No where in the documents is it explicitly stated why the university would want to reduce student sexual ardor, although it is believed that by coding the conspiracy "PROJECT EUNUCH", implies that perhaps the university was hoping to effect a more accommodating and acquiescent student body by suing student instinctual energies.

It all would have worked too, except for a minor oversight on the part of the conspirators.

That is, since only a minute portion of students here ever use the library, the bulk of students have not been affected by the pernicious rays. So all that time and money was for nothing. Wasted. But then it wasn't the first time, nor will it, I suspect, be the last.

And on with the show

Again it comes, and again we balk in rejection at the once annual spectacle, now made bi-annual to cause us dual consternation. In fair warning--be prepared. ASUI elections are upon us again.

Consider if you will the campaign fanfare to engulf us in the next few weeks. The campus will be bombarded with an array of posters in big bright colors with catchy key phrases to make an imprint on the mind of the viewer. Flyers will abound, proclaiming the virtues and abilities of the various political hopefuls, and thinly veiled comments derogatory, of course, will be slung campus wide with great abandon. Candidates will give their carefully prepared informal campaign speeches to living groups of various attentiveness.

And to what purpose? For the show, of course. After all, what kind of an election would it be without a show? Of course there will be those candidates who refuse to taint their values by all this garb. You know the kind, "candidates of the people." Yet even they will make a pretty ostentatious event of their anti-campaign campaigns.

Unfortunately, the masses are largely unaware of the back room wheelings and dealings even now in operation. Little do we know the price paid for the endorsement of the politically powerful personalities on this campus. Little do we realize the impact these clandestine offers and deals will have on the final outcome of the ASUI leadership. Odd though it may seem, major political machines are alive and well on this small campus in Moscow.

The greek side will rally behind the candidates it has to offer with concise instruction in voting procedure for the remaining candidates in contention. And with proper incentive, those hopefuls for the presidency and vice presidency will earn block votes from selected fraternities with strength in size and numbers. But don't think the Greeks are the only one with a little organization.

Not long ago one of the finest political machines ever, that still has its rudiment foundations intact, was developed in the halls. And politicians that they are, these same individuals will undoubtedly rise to the cause that they see fit.

It's almost as though the campaigning is worthless, as so many students are shepherded by their individual leaders into a predetermined vote. An election as such is almost unnecessary.

A candidate could conceivably have his votes counted like this: Four houses, seven dorms, and 37 independents votes, for a total of 48. This obviously would throw the outcome of the election into the hands of the off campus students. Perhaps then the campaigns would take on a greater meaning. Perhaps then candidates would really have to make an honest appeal to the masses instead of sell themselves to the powerful few. We still vote individually, we still hold the right to secret ballot, and we still have the option to exercise our own independent decisions. Perhaps we will. Perhaps in such an early election as this the organization will be inept and the outcome will be unpredictable. As always, we shall see.

The great conspiracy revealed?

Over the weekend, a team of private detectives hired by S.A.N.E. (Students Against No good Executives) to investigate reported misdeeds by U of I administrators, discovered and photographed documents in the Administration Building's basement vault that indicates certain U of I officials have been tampering with student libidos. That is, the papers show that various university personnel united to plan and subsequently institute measures to curb the sexual appetites of U of I students. This was accomplished through the installation of the so called book detector in the U of I library over a year ago.

The documents reveal that that device is in no way connected to the detection of purloined library materials, but is instead a diabolical contraption invented by blackguard German physicist and endocrinologist Dork van Shlawm to inhibit the human sex urge. The Shlawm Synocopator, as it is called, works, according to a letter from Dr. Shlawm found among the batch of photographed documents, by discharging a series of high frequency laser-type rays from a cathode tube-like emitter. These rays then

Half the sky

By Donna Granville

Twelve women from the University of Idaho-Washington State University attended the Northwest Regional Women's Studies Conference last Friday and Saturday. Approximately 300 women gathered to discuss Women's Studies classes offered at the various schools, exchanged resources, looked at feminist research in areas such as women's lives, female sexuality, women's origins, women's culture, and topics and issues including lesbian women, Third World women, women in Science Fiction, Feminist Literary Criticism, Women's Centers and Women's Studies in the High School.

Movies and performing groups were also part of the program. After the movie, "Emerging Woman" which dealt with early feminist activities in the United States, the statement was heard over and over - "the faces of those women were so strong - and faces here in Portland have the same look!"

The term "strong woman" has many meanings. It can mean a look that is present in the faces of women on the farm who have done hard physical labor, or in the eyes of poor women who are struggling for their very survival. Usually the term is a combination of both, but essentially this "look" describes eyes that are tired, mixed with a strength that states they are ready to do battle again if necessary.

Many of the women attending the Conference have been involved in the Women's Movement for several years. Some were active on the streets for abortion rights, others were struggling at Universities to offer Women's Studies Courses, to change sexist language or demanding equal pay with male Ph. D's., and most are still struggling to retain the few gains they have made.

Coming together as they did last weekend was both an intellectual and emotional exchange of strength. Gloria Steinem stated the need for such groups when she wrote "Any woman who chooses to behave like a full human being should be warned that the armies of the status quo will treat her as something of a dirty joke; that's their natural and first weapon. She will need sisterhood."

The strength and sisterhood that was obvious at the Conference is a part of our female heritage. Women involved in the movement may not face prison or beatings as often as our fore mothers, but a struggle that takes a mental and physical toll is still very much with us. The more we learn about this inner strength that we possess the stronger we become, and that strength directed at injustice can cause social change.

Thanks Dad, for everything

"I shall pass this way but once. Therefore, if there is any good I can do, let me do it now for I shall not pass this way again."

As our world becomes smaller, each of us begins to be more aware of our responsibility to our fellow man. We hear a great deal about the rights of others. The obligations of the "haves to the have nots."

In these times of change, the dignity of our fellow man has taken on a new meaning. Law students are fortunate to be where they are at this time. The opportunities to being to the practice of law, a greater awareness of the legal profession and its contributions to and for mankind has never been greater.

The history of civilization is heavily embossed with the footsteps of your predecessors, the betterment of our world is illuminated by those in your profession who cared.

As you begin to formalize your career, one or two people, who for one reason or another will create a standard of excellence you will want to emulate. As you select those individuals, you may look far and wide. Often to find you have overlooked someone in your every day life.

I know of one man who has lived by the philosophy, "I shall pass this way but once, therefore let me do what I can, for I shall not pass this way again."

I have watched this man give his heart and soul to his fellow man. His rewards have not been monetary. You will see only a few hints of the contributions he has made, and of his devotion to excellence. You may notice a small plaque naming him "boss of the year", or perhaps a thank you from the "Future Farmers of America" or perhaps you will see a note somewhere telling that he was a Vice President of the Boy Scouts of America, or his L.L.D.

Unless you know the man as I do, you wouldn't know he went back to night school while in public relations for a multi-billion dollar corporation. You will never know the hardships he went through to fulfill his ambitions.

You will probably never know that in his fifties, he accepted the challenge of change and again returned to the college campus, as a student.

You probably wouldn't know that through all this, he was a devoted husband, and father. You wouldn't know that he raised four sons and a daughter. And, through it all, never lost the ability to love and care. To be there when he was needed, and to always understand.

I know this man better than most. I have the privilege of his counsel. I have the benefit of his strength and compassion.

Typewriters for all

Dear Editor:

I don't own a typewriter, and I don't type that well either. I cringe everytime I hear a teacher make an assignment that "must be typed." I know that means I will spend hours in the typing room of the library feeding quarters into sub-standard machines. (The one on the left "throws Caps", and the one on the right skips outside the left-hand margin.)

Can you imagine my joy, then, when I discovered the brand-new free typewriters with the accompanying signs announcing the machines have been furnished by ASUI? The signs already have graffiti on them -- most of them say "Thanks a lot!" or "Alright!" This letter then, is just to add publicly my "Thanks a lot!"

I don't often agree with ASUI expenditures but this one is the best use of student funds to

Regardless of the changes in our world, we need men who will accept the challenge to do what must be done. We need people who appreciate their fellow man, for who and what they are.

Yes, as you shape your career, as you develop your ideals, as you look for those who represent what is good and honest, as you look for those who know strength tempered with compassion, do not overlook someone in your midst who understands where you are today, because he was there yesterday.

My world is a better place today because I know such a man. You may know him as "wondering Walt" - I know him as "Dad."

Concert praised

Dear Editor:

At this time, I'd like to thank those who attended the Stecher and Horowitz Community Concert, Sunday. I heard many students comment on the excellence of the performance, after the pianists were given a standing-ovation.

Also, looking to the future, the ASUI-Community Concerts Association has scheduled Carole Farley, a home-town Moscow operatic singer to perform Sunday November 9. In March, a Czechoslovakian Folk Ballet will perform some ethnic dances in the Memorial Gym.

SAS slammed

To the Editor:

After reading Vice-President Richardson's report in the Argonaut, concerning the evaluation of Student Advisory Services, we felt a need to comment. Having been Resident Advisors for a total of four years experience, we are somewhat acquainted with SAS. From our experiences, we cannot concur with Richardson's report.

Last year SAS and Housing shifted the personnel structure, and now in each residence hall there is a Resident Advisor and a Resident Manager. In making their change, none of the Advisors (everyone had the same title last year) were contacted initially to see what they thought of the new program. Instead, the advisors independently called their own meeting to voice their criticisms and comments of the proposed change. Their views were then proposed before the upper echelon of SAS and Housing, but alas, were completely ignored. This is not only a poor management practice, but a terrible management practice. The Resident Advisors and Managers are the closest people to the students, and they are the most poorly used.

They know the students needs better than anyone else, but instead policy is set primarily by people who have little or no experience in residence halls, or by people who have their own interests in mind first, and the students' interests second. (There are of course, exceptions to this general statement.)

The present managerial structure does not do the students justice. Resident Advisors and Managers need to work together and not be set apart. To say that Housing and SAS work together for the students would be a gross understatement. From our vantage point, each is struggling to assert themselves with the students being used as pawns in the process.

Housing now has control of one-half of the advisors and what teamwork between advisors that had existed in the past has diminished considerably. Any student of management would tell you that any organization should be run by a single management instead of two; in this case, housing and SAS operating the residence hall system.

In the operation of the residence halls, policies have been formulated which attempt to please everyone, and in effect have no substance to them. The alcohol policy is such an example. The policy is strict enough on paper to please the Board of Regents, but vague enough that the students ignore it and the advisors can do nothing. We are not taking sides on the alcohol controversy, but believe that SAS should set a firm definite policy with student participation. This matter needs to be resolved once and for all, so that all sides, the administration, the advisors, and the students know where they stand.

In the evaluation of Richardson's, we would be concerned to know exactly what SAS has done for the students lately. Programming, especially in the residence halls clearly isn't a strong point. This function is almost strictly performed by the Resident Advisor. However, these people are only part-time employees and full-time students. They can only do so much within their own living group.

More programming emphasis should be placed on an overall living group basis such as leadership training conferences, judicial board workshops, and other programs which can only be effective through the efforts of the full-time staff who are specifically trained in these areas. In our experiences, most of these programs are either neglected or brought off in a half-hearted, spur of the moment attempt. We would like to see the full-time staff to be able to justify their large salaries by working with the students instead of keeping their own personal interests in mind. Vice-President Richardson should take another look and this time look seriously. And while he's at it, he should take a look at housing and how effectively it works with SAS and the students. (The students should be so lucky!)

Last year an ad hoc committee was formed to "evaluate" student services. We were quite disappointed to learn that all that was accomplished from the committee's hearings, was to "rubber stamp" or approve what student services had done in the past. This is a fine example of our present university bureaucracy, and the effort to justify programs which are useless to the majority of students.

Another fact that ought to concern Dr. Richardson is why there was such a high turnover rate of advisors this past year. Many of these people were evaluated as doing a good job, and were even hired to return for this academic year. Could a reason be that dissatisfaction with the present system we now contend with, was being voiced?

And finally, in the article, there was mention of some "superstars" on the staff. Yes, we thought the secretaries in SAS did a fine job, also!

For the students who still reside in the halls, the resident advisors and managers we left behind, and the new area coordinators who stumbled into this mess,

We are,

French House overcomes difficulties with growth

by Tarl Oliason
of the Argonaut Staff

French House, currently in the recovery stages from a few equipment and maintenance problems last semester, is now waiting to see if campus attitudes concerning the house have changed for the better.

French House, located in the basement of the guest residence center in old Forney Hall, is a set of rooms in which French majors and those interested in French may live. While living there, only French is spoken.

Tom Lapoint, who lived in French House last semester, recently aired some problems he incurred at the house last year and the beginning of this semester, which ultimately led to his leaving.

Lapointe said he spent three weeks at the beginning of last semester sleeping on the floor because no beds were provided. He also said French House had to purchase its own phone. Both these services are readily provided for people living in the dorms, Lapointe said.

Citing problems with the general situation at French

House last year, Lapointe said the rooms were "cell-like" and in our case you had to walk through one person's room to get to another's. He said the house often had problems with mail and checks downtown getting confused with French Hall, located in Theophilus Tower.

All these factors aided Lapointe's decision to leave French House, he said, but the final blow came when there was a mix-up in room assignments this semester. After moving off campus, Lapointe was informed that the mix-up in rooms had been a mistake.

According to French House president Carl Reynolds, all these problems last year were the result of an overall poor attitude towards French House by the campus, especially in the housing department. Reynolds cited the examples that last year book shelves were requested in January, but not received until March. The house only recently got a phone, he said, and even now it is restricted to on-campus calls.

However, Reynolds tempered his remarks by saying that this year things have been going much more smoothly.

He said that attitudes may have changed, but he would have to wait until the end of the semester to really tell.

Meanwhile, the faculty advisor for French House, Paul Kuetner, said, "Last year's problems with acquiring things no longer exist. The problems have been resolved, and the housing department has been one of the chief helpers."

Kuetner said that, administratively, things always take a while, and said the home economics department has also been helping French House this year with its budget and menus.

In spite of any problems French House had last semester or earlier this year, all the students participating in the project, including Lapointe, said the house had "great organization and tremendous possibilities. There is no other way to really learn French other than going to France."

Both Lapointe and Reynolds said the ideal situation for French House would be to get an entire house, either on or off campus, in which the French living situation could exist. Kuetner, too, said this would be the ideal. Though not a possibility he foresees in the near future, Kuetner said he can see it happening some day.

Student health insurance under senate investigation

A student group health insurance policy is being investigated by a senate appointed ad hoc committee in an attempt to discover if such a policy is necessary to secure the financial safety of U of I students.

The purpose of group insurance is to protect students who have little or no coverage from the overwhelming medical expenses resulting from unexpected illness or major accident. This group policy would provide far greater coverage than the present optional insurance. Its cost would be incorporated into registration fees and could be quickly refunded if so desired. It is not mandatory.

The most significant benefit of group insurance is greater coverage for less cost. Rates could be reduced by 40-45 per cent or more, due to increased participation. An unquotable estimate would be $20 a semester.

The increased coverage would include mental health, out-patient care, inter-collegiate and intramural sports, and ASUI club fees for such groups as soccer, wrestling, and boxing, etc. These are not included in the present policy. Married students and dependents also would receive wider and more in-depth benefits.

Economical benefits also exist. Although students would see and feel the $20 increase at registration, they actually would be reimbursed indirectly. For example:

1. Students subsidize the P.E. department in paying the $200 insurance cost per football player. The group policy would cover the players and thus reduce departmental expenses and possibly its finance. In addition, all students, not just football players, would share the insurance benefits.

2. The ASUI club sports insurance is more expensive per unit. Club coverage also comes under the group policy, allowing ASUI fee money to go to other needy areas or to increased activities. This could circumvent a possible fee increase.

The group policy could be claimed as an educational expense and included in a financial aids program, permitting foreign exchange and other students to be subsidized for the insurance by their sponsors.

This method of group insurance would require students to take positive action not to receive it. Its cost would be included in registration. Those not desiring the insurance would be refunded in full in 3 to 4 weeks by an in-state claiming system. Refund forms could be completed and filed at registration. The administrative costs of such refunds would be inconsequential.

Overall, the group insurance policy is designed to give students greater health insurance benefits for drastically reduced rates and to prevent them from being saddled with rapacious medical bills. It attempts to fulfill the health needs of the students in hopes of enhancing their academic career.

Faculty Council and Senate representatives will be speaking to living groups on the insurance issue. Student responses and comments are greatly appreciated. For further information, contact Diane Lacy or Bill Butts, ASUI Senate office.

Honors learning topic of talk

A highly placed representative of the National Collegiate Honors Council (NCHC) will be addressing interested persons this Thursday at 4 p.m. in the SUB Galena room, on the subject of "Honors Learning in the Seventies."

Dean C. Grey Austin, executive secretary-treasurer of the NCHC, and director of the honors program at Ohio State University, has been invited to speak at the U of I by the college of letters and science.

Honors programs are designed to enrich learning by allowing students to go beyond the limits of regular course offerings and by permitting them to explore disciplines outside their major, according to Elmer Raunio, dean of letters and science.

The coordinator of the honors program development, Ronnal Lee, conducted a survey at the fall registration among the students in the 16 departments in L and S.

"Of an estimated 2000 enrollees surveyed, nearly three-quarters returned the questionnaires," Lee said, adding that 65 per cent of those answering indicated interest in participating in an honors program.

Almost all of the 207 letters and science faculty also indicated interest.

"It's especially gratifying to note that there is an adequate number of faculty in each and every department to teach honors seminars if the seminars were developed and funded," Lee said.

An honors program received unanimous support from the ASUI Senate. In a resolution submitted by ASUI President David Warnick, the senate called upon "the University of Idaho administration to take the necessary steps to find (the program) financial, spatial and moral support."

Painting prescribed for emotions

by Carolyn Harada
of the Argonaut Staff

Painting can strengthen a person emotionally seems to be the philosophy of Audrey Barr's and Nora Tisdale's instructors of a group painting class, whose paintings are being displayed on the East SUB Wall.

According to Barr, who began the group painting sessions around 1969, "If anybody comes to me and has problems, it seems like after painting for a while the trouble disappears. The person becomes stronger somehow."

Any creative thing is therapeutic, generalizes Barr. Painting is very much so with the concentration it requires.

"All thoughts go out of their minds, thus all troubles disappear and pretty soon they can handle those problems."

"They aren't so emotional about their problems. Concentrating rests the mind. Painting rests the mind."

Concentration is like meditation, adds Barr. Barr claims that some painters experience their hearts beating slower and their breathing is reduced. "It is almost like bio-feedback," said Barr. Barr is currently working on her Master of Arts Degree.

Tisdale, who holds a U of I 1960 Master of Arts Degree, agrees with Barr's philosophy that painting is good therapy.

Tisdale now is the instructor for the amateur painter group of staff wives, farm wives, or housewives, since Barr had to quit and go with her husband on sabbatical leave around the world in 1971.

Tisdale has taught the oils class for the past two years, but Barr occasionally instructs.

Some of the works displayed in the SUB were done under Barr's supervision.

This "friendly art group who just like to paint" was started by mutual consent, explained

Barr. In 1969, Ann Driscoll, a Troy wife, and her daughter, fashioned the idea of a group paint session, because they wanted painting lessons. Barr consented and later the class painted in the Latah County grain growers building, after the group outgrew her basement. At that time, the class contained 13 to 14 students and was heard of by word-of-mouth.

Tisdale noted that the group consists now of from four to six people because of the limited facilities.

Each artist paints the subjects he wants to paint. The instructor helps the students with their composition, but does not influence the painter's choice of subject, explained Tisdale.

The students include Barbara Haupt, wife of Dr. Harold Haupt of Forestry; Jean Fitzsimmons, wife of Dr. Delbert W. Fitzsimmons of Agricultural Engineering; Erna Stubbs, wife of Merle Stubbs, deceased Moscow business manager; Mary Duncombe, wife of Dr. Sidney Duncombe of Political Science Dept.; Donna DeWitt, wife of Melvin DeWitt, farm superintendent for U of I; Norah Tisdale, wife of Emeritus Tisdale, retired professor of Forestry; and occasionally, Audrey Barr, wife of William F. Barr, Professor of Entomology.

Classes are usually held Wednesday, at 9 a.m., in the Harold Haupt's basement.

There is a nominal fee for the class, added Tisdale. Barr hopes to start an evening class because of the added interest of those who have to work during the day. Classes are open to students, according to Barr. Contact Tisdale for further information.

Barr finds painting and instructing very rewarding. She is pleased if people like her work, but she stresses that painting is not something to sell, but as something one has to need to express or see. However, one should be able to express and sell it too, summarized Barr.

Tisdale said that if people inquire about purchasing the paintings, they can be sold. "Several of them have been sold already," commented Tisdale. The prices range from $10 and up.

Barr said she has sold a good many of her paintings on a commission basis. She even has some of her work displayed in Australia, England, and possibly Denmark for she gives her paintings as gifts to relatives in those countries.

Barr enjoys portraits because comparing them to still life and landscape, she does them the best. She said it is difficult to paint portraits, for she sees a certain facet that the model does not and the painting might become a reject. "And I've had a few," joked Barr.

"There is no greater thrill than to finish a portrait and have it spring to life," she said.

She finds this is especially true of the portrait's eyes, for as the saying goes, "the eyes are the windows of the soul."

The paintings will be on display until Oct. 22.

"Still sits the schoolhouse"

Whittier created a nostalgic word picture of his boyhood school. Modest as it was, it was almost palatial compared to the early schools of the Western frontier.

At first, classes were held in a mission or church or the corner of some settler's cabin. Then, perhaps, a one room log house with all grades and just about anyone with "larnin" enough to serve as teacher.

But education was a symbol of the better life these people sought and it held high priority. Families who had the barest means of living scrimped and shared to sustain their precious school.

Changes have been dramatic and for the better but the importance of good schooling is still unchallenged. Like any good thing, education doesn't come easy nor cheap. Boarding the teacher and passing the hat has long since given way to school support by taxing bodies.

Tax revenues, like any others, depend on the productivity of people and industry. The economy of our country, and indeed the world, depends on energy. Now, with a serious energy crisis upon us, industry efforts to bring new power plants on the line are being blocked. Public understanding of the problem and support of power plant construction is today's urgent need. The bell is ringing. The hour is late.

Mistakes cost Idaho

Grizzlies maul Vandals, 14-3

by John Hawley
of the Argonaut Staff

The Vandals suffered six turnovers and lost to Montana 14-3 Saturday afternoon, in a Big Sky contest they should have won.

Idaho fumbled ten times, retaining only half of them, and had one interception, which was returned for a touchdown.

Montana, which had a tough time moving against the rugged Vandal defense, took advantage of two Idaho errors and converted them into points.

A homecoming crowd of about 7,800 witnessed the error-ridden battle at Dornblaser Stadium, in Missoula.

The loss chops Idaho out of contention for the Big Sky crown and drops them to a 1-4-1 record which is frighteningly similar to their record of a year ago at this time. Standing at 1-2-1 in the conference, the

Vandals still have to face Montana State and the weak Weber State, not to mention non-conference foes like Nevada-Las Vegas (this weekend) Washington State, and Northern Illinois.

Statistically, Idaho crushed the Grizzlies, outgaining them 376 to 221 in total offensive yards, and picking up 20 first downs to their 13. In effect, the Vandals defeated themselves with highly expensive mistakes which illuminated the shakiness of the "veer" offense.

Right from the start, Idaho had fans cringing. Ken Petticola's pounced on a fumble, ending Montana's opening drive, and, on the first offensive play, quarterback Dave Comstock fumbled the ball. Luckily it was ruled dead, nullifying a Grizzly recovery.

The Vandal offense then clicked and, surviving an illegal motion penalty which threatened to halt the drive, marched all the way to the Montana 11 yardline. There, a pitchout to Tim Lappano went wild, and the Grizzlies recovered.

The Vandal defense stacked up Van Troxel and his offensive machine, forcing them to punt. Robert Brooks cut loose for a healthy gain, which was nullified by an offside call, but Comstock hit Monty Nash on a brilliantly executed screen pass to get the squad moving. Brooks added two long runs and suddenly the Vandals were threatening, this time from the Grizzly nine yard line. They advanced to the five before the Grizzlies collared Monty Nash for a loss back to the eight. A field goal attempt went wide and the game remained a scoreless stalemate.

In the second quarter, reserve quarterback Ken Schrom took over, but on a pitchout, he caught Lappano unaware, and the ball bounced off his back shortly before Montana pounced on it.

After forcing the Grizzlies to punt, the Vandal defense went to the sidelines, but it wasn't long before they were recalled to duty. Brooks fumbled on Montana 30 and replacement quarterback Dan Accomando guided the Grizzlies to Idaho's eight yard line.

Mike Mickey ripped almost to the goal line, but lost the ball, and Mike Siva recovered for Idaho. The Vandal offense then put together its only scoring drive.

Passing from his own end-zone, Comstock hit tightend Steve Duncanson for a big gainer, all the way to the Montana 46. He then hit wide receiver Jeff McCarthy for eleven more, and a few plays later the Vandals had a first down on the 19.

Four plays later, Bill Keilty was summoned to try for a three pointer. It was good from 37 yards against the wind and Vandals carried the 3-0 lead to the locker room at halftime.

In the third quarter, a Vandal fumble proved fatal. Nash bobbled a Comstock handoff and Montana's Tom Clift recovered on the Idaho 13. The Vandal defense held strong for the next three plays, but were overpowered by the wishbone attack when half-back Paul Fiskness crunched over from the three to give the Grizzlies a 7-3 edge.

Late in the period, the Vandal defense scooped a fumble, giving the offense a great opportunity on the Montana 21. The Grizzly defense was too stingy to give up the lead and Keilty came out to try a 37 yard field goal. The wind caught it and sent it wide.

Idaho came right back in the fourth quarter, driving to the Grizzly 32, before another fumble. Comstock was attempting to pass when he was hit and the ball bounced into a Grizzly's grip.

Montana worked down into field goal range, but missed on the attempt. Idaho couldn't get going against the Grizzly defense and punted, only to watch an outstanding return.

The Vandal defense, realizing they were still very much in the contest, made a heroic stand, and the Grizzlies were stopped a the Idaho one on a fourth down TD attempt.

A few plays later, Clift got his second turnover of the day, intercepting a Comstock aerial, and returning it 27 yards for a game-clenching touchdown, with just 2:53 left on the clock.

The Vandal defense played an exceptional game. Spearheaded by tackles Joe Pelligrini and Craig Crnick, end Kjel Kelsgaard, and linebacker Petticolas, they stopped the Big Sky's most productive offense.

Coach Ed Troxel was disturbed by the frustrating loss and couldn't explain why the Vandals failed to capitalize on the numerous scoring opportunities.

"Our defense played a super game. They deserve a lot of credit and if it wasn't for the mistakes, they would have shut out Montana," he said.

Idaho must trek to Las Vegas next Saturday to take on the Runnin' Rebels, who will be far from friendly after losing to three Big Sky squads this season, including Boise State last weekend, 34-21. Nevada-Las Vegas hasn't lost at home in 19 consecutive games.

Volleyball scores

The women's volleyball team came out 3-2 at the Northwest Nazarene Invitational Tournament in Nampa, this past weekend.

Idaho beat Northwest Nazarene, Blue Mountain Community College, and Boise State, winning in two games against each of them (a match consists of winning two out of three games). Idaho lost to University of Montana 12-15, 19-17, and 8-15, a team Idaho has already beat twice this season. Idaho also lost to Eastern Oregon 14-16, 15-7, and 6-15. Last year, Eastern Oregon took third in the Northwest and went to the ASIAW Nationals.

The Vandal volleyball season record is now 9-7. Tonight the Idaho B team travels to Lewiston to play Lewis & Clark State College. The team has a home match Thursday against Northwest Nazarene College at 8 p.m. in WHEB 210.

Next weekend the volleyball team travels to Portland for the Portland State Invitational Tournament.

Up With People awes with powerful dance and song

by David Morrissey of the Argonaut Staff

After their Saturday night performance I wouldn't recommend that anyone buy an Up With People album.

I recommend instead that they make an all out effort to catch one of the group's concerts, for if you only hear the album's music you are missing one of the finest dance and song presentations I have seen in some time.

An evening with Up With People is really more than just a concert, it's an experience that involves the audience as much as it does the performers. The only analogy that comes to mind would be a hootenanny of the 1960's, when groups like the New Christy Minstrels would wander into the audience, until everyone was clapping their hands and singing the refrain.

In a way, though, perhaps that's a weakness of Up With People. These are the seventies, not the sixties. The early innocence of ten and fifteen years ago, when people believed that merely singing about love would ensure its presence, has been replaced with a cynicism that comes from being burned. It's a little hard today not to wonder if a group that sings about peace and brotherhood isn't a little bit naive.

Still, it's difficult not to enjoy a 'people' concert. In an evening of music that may spring from as many as a dozen countries, the 30 odd singers choreograph some powerful dancing with voices of superb quality.

It's hard, for instance, not to be awed by the range and power of the voice that rises and swells from Pat Berry, a diminutive young woman from Toledo, Ohio. Yet, when you suggest that she could cut her own record, she merely laughs and says she's happy with "people."

And then there's Lou Colby from Denver, whose voice you would swear was that of Helen Reddy if you didn't see her there on the stage singing.

After the music from international sources, there was a switch to a set of tunes from the American music scene. In the process, the 33 dancers and singers pulled off one heck of a sharp Bill Haley and the Comets imitation. During this act the only real problem is that the rock and roll dancers are too good. Back in high school anyone who could dance like that would be elected class president...well, at least chairman of the entertainment committee.

And watch out for the medley on country music - square dancing. During this part of the show you'll see executed some high kicking dance steps that would put to shame any self-respecting cowboy stepping out at the Idaho City Saturday night stamp.

Overall, going to an Up With People Concert is a very physical thing. There is so much dancing and singing going on that you work up a sweat just watching.

And when halfway through the performance the singers leave the stage and wander into the audience - forming a chain of 30 people that rock and sway to a sexy South American beat - it's damn near impossible not to finally lose yourself in the pulsing rhythm.

And that's really the point of the whole thing, losing yourself in the music and feeling a little bit more open toward the guy sitting next to you. It's a good feeling, and one I haven't felt for a long time..
