Fiscal problems block collective bargaining

by David Morrissey
of the Argonaut Staff

A seven month study has concluded that "the case for collective bargaining by faculty of the U of I is compelling," but that "the climate for successful negotiations is not hospitable."

The study, conducted by the Faculty Council ad hoc Committee on Collective Bargaining, concludes that collective bargaining would improve faculty economic status, job security and the role of faculty in institutional governance.

But the report also lists inadequate state financial resources, the history of labor unions in Idaho, political conservatism and the lack of enabling legislation as obstacles to the adopting of such bargaining.

The study also concludes students have little place in a bargaining situation involving faculty. If they sit at the bargaining table at all, it should be in an "observer status," the report says.

Research and investigation that led to last week's issuance of the 22 page report began on March 13. It was then that the Faculty Council established an ad hoc committee "to investigate possible means of implementing collective bargaining," and the effects this bargaining would have on faculty, the University and "relations with regents, Legislature and general public." The Faculty Council established the committee after requests from the general faculty.

Under the heading "economic issues" the report examined salaries, fringe benefits and working conditions and concluded: --University of Idaho salaries are poor, "no matter what commonly used basis for comparison is employed." The average Idaho salary of $15,309 is "far below the average for faculty in the Pacific states ($19,808) and below that for the Mountain states ($16,430).

--The annual standard of living cost for a family of four in non urban areas of the West is $18,215, while the average U of I salary is $15,309.

--Higher salaries help a university "retain its more effective faculty members and attract higher caliber candidates for vacancies."

--Working conditions would probably improve and fringe benefits increase should such bargaining be instituted.

Job security, an area the report said included academic freedom, academic due process and peer evaluation and review, was cited as "one of the reasons why faculties chose collective bargain."

Noting that faculty job security is subject both to state political interests and national economic conditions, the seven member committee took aim at U of I personnel policies. Observing that the U of I in the past 16 months "has experienced three separate personnel policies in areas involving job security," the committee called each new policy "more restrictive" and concluded that current policies "may well violate accepted standards of academic freedom in some of the specified causes for dismissal and termination."

The report praised University administrators for their role in "institutional governance." "Under the present administration," the report states, "communication has been good and there has been a steadily wider sharing and participating in faculty governance ... faculty power has increased in the recent past."

Still, the report argues that collective bargaining is needed in this area also, noting that "influences outside the university have introduced new factors into the power structure." Examples of these influences include:

--regents policy, which is subject to change.

--increased monetary demands on the state legislature from other colleges and universities in Idaho.

--"a pervasive feeling of public distrust with regard to the validity of the educational establishment."

The report cites as one of the larger problems in the area of "institutional governance," the lack of communication between faculty and regents, and between faculty and state legislators. "Increasingly," the report said, "it appears that power from the regents and the legislature is being exerted downward on the faculty without the possibility of intelligent collective response."

The report also disagreed with the argument raised by some student leaders at the U of I that students have a role as participants in collective bargaining. Calling a collective bargaining agreement a contract, under which each party "is delivering a good or service to the other and receiving something of value from the other," the study concluded that "students do not meet the definition of a party to the contract and therefore should not sit at the bargaining table."

Students could become involved in such bargaining, the report added, by adopting "observer status," or through participating in "prebargaining conferences."

The report also referred to House Bill No. 78, which was defeated in the 1974 session of the Idaho Legislature. That bill would have established a legal framework within which public employees in Idaho could engage in collective bargaining. The report cites H.B. 78 as containing "guidelines which are typical and might be expected in any law that is passed."

Among these guidelines were designation of "appropriate bargaining units," "procedures for electing the bargaining agent," "elections," and "contract negotiations."

The suggestions raised in H.B. 78 would be necessary as "enabling legislation," the report said, before collective bargaining could work. "Experience throughout the country would indicate collective bargaining is unlikely to be viable in the absence of enabling legislation." The current absence of such legislation adds to what the report calls the "not hospitable" climate toward negotiations.

One partial dissent was filed to the reports conclusions, in which two objections were made. The committee concluded that "the history of labor unionism and the environment of political conservatism in Idaho are not conducive to collective action." Separately it also concluded that "the financial resources of the state are perceived as not being adequate to meet the needs of the public sector, particularly higher education."

Committee member T. Alan Place, professor of mechanical engineering, noted that at no point in the report were either of these two conclusions supported by facts.

"I feel it is both unscholarly and misleading to write conclusions concerning matters which have never been addressed," he said.

Members of the committee preparing the report were Gerald Marousek, chairman, professor of agricultural economics; Donald Seelye, vice chairman, professor of labor relations; Gwendolyn Kelly, secretary, assistant professor of education; Joyce Campbell, assistant professor of radio-television; Robert Hosack, professor emeritus of political science; and Elizabeth Stevenson, assistant dean, College of Letters and Science.

The report will be discussed at the Tuesday Nov. 18 meeting of the Faculty Council, and may be considered by the general faculty on Dec. 16.

Two views on report

U of I president Ernest Hartung, out of town when the collective bargaining report was issued, had not yet read the report when reached by the Argonaut.

Hartung described collective bargaining, however, as "a two edged sword, with both disadvantages and advantages. It requires a considerable amount of analysis to determine whether the advantages outweigh the disadvantages for any particular institution. I will read the report with interest and will give it a lot of thought."

ASUI President David Warnick, also contacted for comment by the Argonaut, described his reaction to the report as one of "disappointment" noting that the committee "did not address itself to the possibility of an equal role for students in the bargaining process."

Warnick said he "was also disappointed to see that the report did not address itself to another issue in public collective bargaining, that of full disclosure.

They should have addressed whether both sides should make their offers and counteroffers public."

IV. The following is a referendum that will direct the ASUI on what action it should take on a music festival. If the final vote is positive, the ASUI will use all its powers to provide a music festival. If the vote is negative, the ASUI will not provide or support a festival, and will attempt to discourage all efforts to provide a festival. The accompanying ballot asks the student for input on the type of festival he/she desires, if one were to be held.

REFERENDUM:

Will you please answer the following referendum:
Do you want the ASUI to support a spring music festival in any form?

Yes No

This is a ballot similar to those which will be used in Wednesday's election. However, according to Election Committee Chairman Mark Beatty, the names on the ballot are rotated every fifty ballots, so the one you fill out will have different name arrangement.

Idaho supports Church

Idaho Senator Frank Church received an early vote of local support for his party's presidential nomination Friday, as Democratic delegates from four north Idaho legislative districts gathered here for a pre-convention "mock caucus" and vote.

Some 38 Democrats, representing state legislative districts five, six, seven, and eight, which cover much of north central Idaho, met in Lewiston for a trial run of the rules and procedures that will be used to select delegates to the Democratic National Convention in 1976.

This procedure includes delegates declaring support for presidential contenders, and when the ballots were tallied Friday, Church walked off with 47 per cent of the vote, 23.5 per cent went as "uncommitted," and the remaining votes were split among four different candidates.

According to state Democratic Central Committee Chairman Deckie Rice, one of the organizers of the four hour "mock caucus," the purpose of the Lewiston meeting was "to familiarize Democrats with the rules of their party."

Rice noted that rules of the Democratic party for delegate selection have changed "considerably" since 1972. "These meetings are to make sure people know what is necessary to become a delegate, she said.

Rice also mentioned that in May, Idaho will have its first presidential primary. The Democratic party wants to reduce the confusion that primary might bring, she said.

Wanda Kay, executive secretary for the Idaho Democratic party, was also present at the Friday meeting. She said that similar "mock caucuses" had been held in Boise, Twin Falls, American Falls and Rexburg. The final caucus will be held in Coeur d'Alene on Nov. 15. Church has averaged "over 50 per cent of the vote" at these trial caucuses, she said.

Voting for the presidential candidates took a short time, and the votes were non-binding. The ballot counting, however, was the emotional high point of the evening. The room full of Democrats broke into cheers and applause when, after six votes for either non-Idaho candidates or "uncommitted," Church received his first vote.

Those supporting Church at the mock caucus included Norma Dobler, state representative from district five. Dobler's district includes Moscow and the western half of Latah County. State Representative Robert Hosack, also from district five, cast an "uncommitted" ballot. Bruce L. Sweeney, representative from district six, which includes part of Nez Perce county, also cast an "uncommitted" vote.

Faculty, students clash in Kibbie contest

The ultimate clash between the ASUI and university administration is set to take place on the gridiron this Saturday.

The long-rumored game will be coached by ASUI Senator George Ambrose (for the ASUI) and Registrar Matt Telin (for the administration.) Both are reported to have been working their teams hard.

The administration, boasting a strong defense, has yielded the largest number of volunteers, according to Coach Telin. The team will be captained by player Ernest Hartung, university president, and co-captained by Administrative Vice President Tom Richardson, and Dean of Graduates and Research Coordinator Ronald Stark.

Other players include: Bill Accola, head of the Computer Center ("we're planning to play him off against Kim Smith," Telin said); Harry Davies, Financial Aids chairman; Jean Hill, dean of Student Advisory Services; Chuck Woolston, assistant dean of SAS; Sandi Gallagher, Affirmative Action officer; Dennis Hedges, Kibbie Dome manager; and Dean Vettrus, SUB manager.

Other administration players include University Controller Jerry Reynolds; University Relations Director Carolyn Cron; Housing Department Head Bob Parton; Carl Kiilsgaard, associate director of Development; and Political Science Professor Sydney Duncombe.

Telin said most of the deans have not replied to his invitation to play. However, Law School Dean Albert Menard was excused, "following careful analysis of his three-page memorandum," Telin said.

Telin said that in spite of the age discrepancy, "we intend to be competitive."

ASUI Coach Ambrose was unavailable for comment, but the ASUI team has been growing, according to reports.

Its captain is David Warnick, ASUI president; no co-captains have been chosen.

Among the players listed so far are: ASUI Vice President Mark Beatty; Senators Ambrose, Kim Smith, Jane Man- nex and Jed Jaudoin; Attorney General Art Berry (a former quarterback for Boise State University), Communication Board members Ken Kittrell, Mike Gallagher, and Brian Kincaid; Faculty Council Representative Kathy Wicher, Photo Director Glenn Cruickshank, Argonaut Editor Marshall Hall, and Issues and Forums Chairman Dan Yake.

The game will be played Saturday, in the Kibbie Dome, at 4 p.m. Telin said that intramural rules, with a few exceptions, will apply.

"We're playing a little early," Telin said, "to allow Captain Hartung to play and shower before his evening buffet dinner."

The Vandal football team will play Northern Illinois University that night, also in the dome.

Corporations to interview

One job interview will be held at the placement center today, one tomorrow, and three on Thursday.

Today the Osmose Wood Preserving Co., is looking for Forestry majors as Foreman Trainees.

The Kerr McGee corporation will interview for positions in "engineering design and operations" tomorrow.

Thursday, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. will interview accountants. The other two companies to interview are Chicago Bridge and Iron Company (for work in construction), and Utah, International, for work in mining.

"The Student has a right to be heard and once that right is established, he has the responsibility to make himself heard."

What does the Governor say about the ASUI President?

To David Warnick

Opinion Argonaut

Poster problem

There are apparently some junior Richard Nixons running around the University of Idaho campus. These persons have in the past two weeks ripped down over 1,000 posters of candidates running in the ASUI elections, apparently feeling that the election of a particular person is so important it justifies disrupting and distorting the electoral process.

No one candidate has been singled out; destroyed posters have covered persons running for all offices. Because of this several candidates have unofficially agreed to press charges for malicious destruction of property should the identity of those tearing down posters become known.

Currently ASUI election rules have no provisions for dealing with this kind of activity. There should be not only an election rule prohibiting this conduct, but a penalty clause through which a rule of this nature could be enforced.

The Argonaut encourages any student with knowledge of these destructive actions to contact our offices. This sort of sick morality the University of Idaho can do without.

- Morrissey

Myers's the name

To the Editor:
As campaign manager for Ralph Myers, I would like it to be known that in the Friday, Nov. 14 issue of the Argonaut a tragic blunder was made. Ralph Myers picture was dubbed with another candidate's name. It seems very inappropriate that the name, Gary Kidwell, matches Ralph's mug shot.

The only publicity that we have that covers the campus as a whole, was severely hampered by someone from the Argonaut staff. Since we run a no-budget campaign, it is hard to say what may be the outcome of Ralph's senatorial quest.

Hopefully, Ralph's picture will be placed in this issue of the Argonaut with the correct title under the photo. We would appreciate it immensely.

Ralph and I would like to apologize to any student that was misled or confused by the mistake.

Thank you,
Steve Folk

Why Warnick's the choice

Editor:

Last year I publicly opposed the election of David Warnick. This year I fully support his reelection effort. Why?

First, without a doubt Warnick is the best ASUI President I've seen in my four and one-half years here. Most of our past presidents have done good jobs but they tended to represent one or two narrow interest groups on campus. Warnick has, during his administration, attempted and succeeded at incorporating virtually all student groups in ASUI politics and activities. He is the first president I've seen who actually has an open office from which he will listen to and act upon students' problems and suggestions.

Second, Warnick is the best internal administrator the ASUI has had in memory. Due to his leadership there has been a reorganization of the ASUI - something every candidate has talked about doing for five years. Warnick did it. His reorganization has been successful enough to create internal cooperation where previously there was only bureaucratic infighting. He has managed to stretch the ASUI dollar much further than his predecessors. Entertainment is, for the first time, making money.

Third, Warnick has been an integral force in preventing fee increases. He is the first president in memory to have a consistent plan to prevent them and this has been the first year since I've been here that there have been none.

Fourth, Warnick's opponents have previously displayed little or no interest in the ASUI despite the fact they have all been here at least three years. They display a genuine lack of creativity in that they have been forced to run against Warnick's style while accepting and running with his positions on virtually everything else. Their inexperience is revealed by the fact they believe great things can be accomplished for the students without conflicts with the administration and the regents. THIS IS PURE HOKUM! In any group of people with special interests there is bound to be conflict.

In the three years I've been involved in the ASUI I have seen almost all senators and most presidents come into office with that point of view (including myself). Most leave office realizing that there is a point at which conflict is not only necessary but highly constructive for the entire university. An example is Warnick's opposition to the university's 1977 budget request. The result will be 22 new faculty at the U of I. This opposition also resulted in a public expression of thanks from President Hartung.

Warnick has been an effective president and as such has naturally upset a few people. This is to be expected. To reject Dave Warnick is to say to the administration and regents that ASUI presidents should behave like polite children instead of responsible adults. It is to say that the students should continue to fight among themselves for the scraps that fall from the educational table. I do not believe the students or even the administration and regents believe this. But it is clear that Warnick's opponents do.

Grant Burgoyne

From another point of view

To the Editor,

I am writing in disgusted response to Mr. Deskiewicz and Mr. Clark who called for the resignation of an ASUI Senator because the Senator stood up for the interests of students.

I propose the following alternative course to the demand for David Vest's resignation:

1) a boycott of the Hoagie Shop, owned by Mr. Deskiewicz, and of other seemingly "anti-student" establishments, until said owners acknowledge that students are the primary source of income for Moscow City merchants, and

2) a public apology from Mr. Deskiewicz to the ASUI Senate for damages inflicted to students and to the image of the ASUI Senate during Mr. Deskiewicz's display of public outrage against students.

This course of action by outraged students will cause the following changes:

1) a change in the absurd community feeling that students are less than full members of the Moscow community because of their transient status, a feeling that is pervasive throughout Mr.

Deskiewicz's letter and throughout the Moscow community in general, and

2) a stop to reactionary incidents which precipitate against student activities and against student leaders because of the community's insipid attitudes.

End the insults to student leaders who were forbidden to attend community functions with our Board of Regents; end the insults to student leaders who dare to speak out for students; end the recurrent opposition by community merchants to student activities, like the annual spring music festival.

Mr. Deskiewicz, an apology is due to the ASUI Senate, and to every student of the University of Idaho who caught the bitter gist of your letter to the Editor last Friday. The accusations and attitudes that you casually tossed about should terminate in your own pocketbook!
Yours sincerely,
Kim R. Smith
ASUI Senator

What's the issue?

To the editor:

I am glad you have finally succeeded in getting most of the typographical errors out of the Argonaut and making it more readable. I trust you are still working hard to get more accurate reporting in the Arg.

However, I wish to point out one editorial error (I consider all errors in the final copy editorial) which you seem to have overlooked. You have published two issue 19's and two issue 21's; thus you are two issues behind. If you publish the Nov. 18 paper as issue 25 you will be back on schedule.

Thank you,

Half the sky Granville

In Mountain Moving Day, Poems by women, Elaine Gill states----"Mountain Moving Day is truly upon us--women are beginning to speak out with their own voices. They are beginning to sound like women, making their own projections, their own pieces of living material, not out of their own bodies this time, but in words. And I think all of us, men and women, should be grateful for this new life that is upon us."

This new life she speaks of can be an exciting process but if you've been trying to "move mountains" for a long period of time, you know it can lead to exhaustion and depression. Sometimes the status of women in society seems to be exactly the same as before and it's easy to give up the struggle in despair.

The message for the day to those of you that are feeling discouraged is--Hang In There! Our society is changing. The changes are small but significant. A local restaurant now asks a male-female couple after dinner "Will this be on one check or two?" It's easy to say "so what"? But if you examine this simple question, a common assumption is fading away. If you're a male student you may have wondered about the assumption that you have more money than your female counterpart. If you're a businesswoman taking a client to lunch it can be insulting when you're treating, but it is assumed the male always pays. And if you're female, have you ever wondered about the assumption that you aren't capable of ordering your own food when the waiter looks straight at the man and asks for the order?

Another small but significant change lies in the way men and women relate to one another.

The traditional scene of a woman trying to fix something and a man coming up stating "here let me do that," is not as acceptable as it was a few years back. Now it is more common to hear a man ask --"do you need some help?" or "can I give you a hand with that?." This too seems simple, but if you've ever been in a situation where a hammer or wrench was taken out of your hand and a "here, let me do that" was heard, this small change is not so insignificant. Being made to feel like a child who is totally incapable of fixing anything is not a pleasant experience.

Women are also offering to help with or teach skills to men. If a male friend says he doesn't know how to patch his pants, there is usually an offer to show him how, rather than automatically doing it for him.

These small changes are starting to move the cultural "mountains" that we have been raised to believe. Each change brings us all closer to a world where one's sex does not determine one's destiny, and a world where people can relate to people, rather than one sex relating to the "other sex."

Three good reasons why David Warnick should be ASUI President...

RESULTS--No fee increase--for the first time in several years there's been no fee increase during an ASUI President's term.

RESULTS--Improving education--Warnick has led ASUI involvement in working to improve this University.

RESULTS--Reorganization--Under Warnick, the ASUI was finally reorganized. A separate Entertainment Department was created, and the Student Union was brought under the ASUI.

Mannex for Kincaid

Editor
Idaho Argonaut

Over the past few weeks I have been verbally endorsing a specific candidate for ASUI vice president. Now, I'd like to do it in print.

This candidate is Brian Kincaid. The reason for my endorsement of Brian is that he has consistently shown interest and involvement in the ASUI. This participation includes major positions on the Stadium Board and Communications Board. He has also participated in a variety of less publicized positions.

These activities have required him to work with all facets of the ASUI including the Senate. As a senator, I have seen Brian's productive participation at each meeting. Brian has good working relationships with both students and staff.

For these reasons I believe the best choice for ASUI Vice President is Brian Kincaid, and I urge students to turn out and vote for him.

A blind boy's bluff

Dear Editor:

It has come to our attention that the blind football record created by "three young independent boys" is, so to speak, one of their numerous "blind boy's bluffs."

As the young vibrant dynamic duo of French Hall, we can speak of previous experiences in "challenging" these young boys.

Let us cite a few examples of their abilities: 1. Racquetball- there was debate as to whether we should have spotted them 10 or 15 points; 2. Baseball- "Rifle-arm" Vanderhye is but a "shot in the dark"; 3. Ping-pong- "Sure handed Axe" didn't know his ping from his pong, or his ding from his dong.

Our list of "blind records" could go on indefinitely, but we must close in order to challenge victims once again. That's all, French Hall

Dogs slaughter pronghorns

Department of veterinary science

Chris Boro, a research technician in virology, prepares some cultures that are an important part of the research that goes on at the veterinary science laboratories.

"I instinctively knew they were dead," said Tom McKean, associate professor of zoology, when his three antelope failed to meet him at the fence on Wednesday morning for their regular feeding.

When McKean found the remains of his three pronghorn, valued at $6,000 near the lower section of their enclosure at the department of veterinary science, he knew they had been attacked by dogs.

Lyyle Brouse, Moscow sewage treatment plant operator, whose trailer home is only a few feet from the antelope enclosure, said he was awakened by his own dog's barking at about 11:30 p.m., Tuesday night. Upon investigation, he saw a group of four dogs, three shepherd types and a large black dog, attacking a goat a few feet away. When he shined his flashlight on them, they were frightened and fled.

Although McKean spent hundreds of hours on research with the antelope, he said that the time isn't the important thing. "My biggest regret," he said, "is the way in which they were killed. Two dogs grabbed them by the throat and then the remaining dogs completely ripped them apart, abdomen and hind quarters. They were literally eaten alive."

The female, who was completely eaten, bled for about 30 feet, he said. "They ate 20 to 25 pounds of meat - bones and everything. It would be equivalent to me walking up to someone's german shepard, holding it by a chain around its neck, taking out my scalpel, and then carving out pieces of meat until it was dead. Not too many dog owners would appreciate that."

McKean stressed that unless large dogs are kept at home, this would not be the end of such incidents. "But I don't blame the dogs," he said. "Large dogs will form packs and kill animals, and it's just a biological instinct of dogs to do that. It could very probably be somebody's pet. No matter how sweet and gentle a dog may be when alone, when they get in packs, they instinctively kill."

These dogs really knew what they were doing, McKean said. "There is no evidence that the antelope were cornered. In fact, the first few weeks, they had to be bottle-fed six times a day, but gradually that was reduced to one. His research involved the study of metabolism and temperature regulation, and was funded by the U of I graduate school.

The time and care McKean gave his antelope is not uncommon among researchers at the Veterinary Science Research Laboratory. "When you work so closely with animals, you can't help but Larrison, associate professor of zoology, says that the African dog types can make a kill by just surrounding their prey. The animal freezes and makes no attempt to get away."

McKean said that his biggest concern with his pronghorn research had been dogs. He said that he chose the area at vet science because there hadn't been any trouble with dogs on that side of the highway for two or three years. The only alternative to the four foot fence was a smaller, woven, eight-foot enclosure with barbed wire on the top. He said that the alternative enclosure meant that there would be no place to run and no natural feed. The animals in other words, would be caged.

McKean had gotten the antelope, Lucky, Super, and Louise, at the National Bison Range in Montana, when they were 15 minutes old. He started out with five, but two died, noting that they were very hard to raise in captivity. For become attached to them," explained William Eckblad, scientific aide.

Choco, a brown heifer born in May, 1975, was taken away from her mother at birth and, due to experimental design, was isolated in a shed for three months. During that time, the only mother she knew was a pair of graduate students, Bob Magonigle and Rita Ivanoff, who bottle-fed her everyday.

Another calf named Buster was isolated during that same time period. Both Choco and Buster were extremely trusting of their "mother", as are most young, domesticated animals, but when released they usually resume their unfriendly attitudes, explained Magonigle, now a research associate.

"But Choco remained friendly. There has never been another cow like her. She is almost like a pet dog; she comes when she's called, will nuzzle you gently, give you a big lick, and even butt you now and then. She will even let you ride her, but she doesn't go very far." Magonigle explained her unique qualities by saying, "Once in a while within each species, you find a rare specimen that develops human character and personality and becomes a real individual."

Also known as the "recreation director", Choco surprised administrative secretary Lynda Pitkin one afternoon, while she was sunbathing on the weekend. "I was just lying there with my eyes closed, when my little boy, Chelan, started screaming, 'Cow, mommy, cow.' I thought he was just playing, but when I looked up, there was Choco licking his cheek."

ubiquitous; everywhere you'd go, there he'd be. Strangely enough, he really liked long hair. When Rita (Ivanoff) was here, he would go up to her, smell her hair and nuzzle it. He was really tame," Magonigle said. It wasn't until adulthood that he had to be penned in when the rutting (mating) season arrived, he said.

In October, Jasper developed a case of viral pneumonia and died. Even Judy Lyle, senior secretary, was saddened by his death. "I just felt terrible," she said. "He was such a friskie character when he was young. I could see him play from the window where I sat. It was like losing a pet."
Another animal donated by Bob Magonigle has some fun with Choco, the "pet" cow at the vet science research area.

"Two dogs grabbed them by the throat and then... ripped them apart..."

Now used as a normal adult blood donor for various experiments, Choco, which Magonigle admits is short for Chocolate Hershey Bar, isn't the only friendly animal at vet science. A male goat named Junior brightens some of the smelly duties of Agnes Dodd, graduate assistant. Following her around and wagging his tail, Junior is now six months old, but abnormally short due to "Sore Mouth" experimentation. "We infected him when he was a month old, which stunted his growth, so now he is short but really fat," Dodd said. She claims that Junior, short for Junior Varsity, is the captain of the junior varsity football team. "Actually we do have some fun chasing and running around with them," she said.

the Idaho Fish and Game Department is Cuddles, a five month old white tail deer.

Dr. Eric Stauber, assistant professor of virology, explained that, like Jasper, Cuddles was being illegally raised in captivity. He said that she was too young to be released this fall during hunting season, but after some basic studies will be released in the spring. "We hope to release her when the weather is warm enough and where she is in no danger of dogs."

Other characters such as Slow Poke, a two and a half week overdue Holstein calf and Wheatina, a pale colored calf, complete the line up. "We've had quite a variety of interesting experiences in our research," Dr. Stauber explained. He claims that mice are stealing antibiotics from his desk drawer and eating his jade plant.

A concern voiced by many was over the treatment of experimental animals. In the case of McKean's research, he said, "This whole experiment was designed for non-invasive techniques, all external measuring, and no surgery. At the conclusion of the experiment, I would have attempted to release the antelope back on the bison range where there is no hunting.

Dr. Floyd W. Frank head of the department of veterinary science summed it up by saying, "Animal researchers are, generally, persons who were directed into research careers because of their compassion for animal suffering. As a result, research animals are treated humanely."

An older goat, Susie, was the goat injured by the same dogs who killed McKean's antelope. "Susie couldn't run as fast because of her arthritic knees," Dr. Renshaw, assistant professor of microbiology, said. "Fortunately she only suffered multiple lacerations of her neck and hind quarters, and will recover in a couple of weeks."

The only animal who was ever allowed to roam freely throughout the vet science enclosures was Jasper, a tame male elk. Given to the university by the Idaho Fish and Game Department because someone had illegally tried to raise him in captivity, Jasper was too tame to be turned loose. "Jasper was

Eight miles proves a long road

The Idaho Vandals rode over into Cougar Country Saturday afternoon with prior game expectations of defeating WSU. The expectations however, were short lived.

After taking the initial toss of the coin the Vandals made a questionable decision to kick into a 20 mph wind. The Cougars found it unquestionable when they returned it nearly 50 yds. It was then the Vandals made a startling discovery: Idaho's defense had missed the bus!

From this point in the game the Cougars, who were 2-7, totally annihilated the obscure Vandal defense with their offense. The Cougars ran and passed at will for a "mere" 84 points and only 694 total yards.

The few times Idaho's offense kept the ball it did look good. They were able to score 27 points and run up over 400 total yards against a P.A.C. 8 defense.

Quarterback Dave Comstock ran well and the offensive line did move the Cougar line out, giving the Vandal running backs room to run. One of the real high spots for the Vandals was Tim Lappano, who ran for one 86-yard touchdown, 145 total yards, and one other score in 11 carries. Even the very swift Cougar secondary couldn't catch him.

The 84 point scoring spree by the Cougars set many offensive records for WSU, and also a record for the Vandals - the most points ever scored against an Idaho team.

After last week's record setting performance with Weber state, and this Saturday's performance against the cougars one wonders what will happen Saturday against Northern Illinois.

Interviews required

Students taking out National Direct Student Loans are required to have an exit interview before leaving school, according to the controller's office.

This includes students leaving before graduation, and students graduating.

Interviews take place in room 211 of the Ad. building, and are designed, according to Assistant Controller Ray Menier, to provide the student with information concerning how he or she should meet the obligations of his or her loan.

The Common Woman is as common as a loaf of bread and will rise to the public's eye Nov. 17-22. "Rural Woman: A Visual Interpretation" is the photo exhibit theme done by two U of I students. This exhibit will be displayed at the Bookpeople in Moscow from 10 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.

The photographers, Journalism student Julia Betz and Carol Berg who is working on her Master's in Education are exhibiting about 30 contemporary photographs of women in Northern Idaho.

The photos were taken in conjunction with a project sponsored by the U of I Women's Center called "Rural Women's History Project." and the Association for the Humanities in Idaho (AHI).

The project deals with the role women play in the development of Idaho. The black and white photographs show women in their different environments as well as in portrait photos. The women photographed ranged in age from 14 to 94.

This project was done over a nine-month period beginning in January 1974 and completed for exhibition in November 1975.

The photographs will accompany tapes of interviews done with these women, and the tapes will be placed in the special collections section of the U of I Library when the project is finished.

Intramural results

Results of the women's intramural volleyball matches for Thurs., Nov. 17, were as follows:

McCoy Hall 2-15 15
Alpha Gamma Delta - 11 7

Pi Beta Phi - 15 15 15 15
Houston Hall 1-9 13 9 4

Semifinals, to be played

Tues., 18, at 6:30, are scheduled:

Phi Beta Phi vs. McCoy Hall 2
Carter Hall vs. Alpha Phi 1

During the championship matches on Thurs., Nov. 20, winners for Tuesday's semifinals vie for first and second place; losers vie for third and fourth place.

Antigone opens at PAC tomorrow

by Carolyn Harada
of the Argonaut Staff

The U of I Theater Arts Greeks are preparing for their finest hours.

When the production of Sophocles tragic Greek play "Antigone" opens for a four-day run Wednesday through Saturday at the U of I PAC, senior theatre arts major Marty Roberson will scarcely be able to mask his pride.

Creating 22 classical Greek masks in four weeks has given Roberson a few headaches as well as his biggest challenge to date.

Because director Forrest Sears' staging concept of "Antigone" is experimental in style and includes dominant bird images, especially birds of prey as personified by the tyrant Creon, Roberson was initially faced with several artistic and practical considerations.

He had to construct traditional, comfortable-to-wear headgear.

Roberson selected polysar, a pliable, charcoal-colored plastic, for his base material. After measuring each actor's facial features (eight titled roles and 14 Greek chorus members), he marks the polysar and molds the material onto the face with a hand blow-dryer. A damp cloth is used to shape the eye sockets and speeds up the hardening process, said Roberson.

The mask is then ready for a sawdust and glue mixture which stiffens it and forms the features of birdlike beaks or ridges that Roberson wishes to achieve. Metallic paints, chiefly copper tones, complete the desired, non-human effect.

The mask will not cover the entire face. Falling a little below the cheekbones, voice projection will not be masked, explained Roberson.

"Each mask requires about two hour's work," Roberson said, adding with a grin, "I think I may have bitten off more than I can chew."

Roberson's masks will also complement costumer Jennifer Pattison's flowing Greek robes which mirror various birds or their plumage in line, color, and fabric textures. Pattison, a senior clothing and textiles major from Las Vegas, Nev., is also the Ballet Folk Company's costumer.

The blind prophet Teiresias will be robed in erosion cloth. Shiny metallic shapes have been sewn to the cloth according to Ms. Pattison. She explained that prophets used to wear fishnets, which is suggestive of the raven which collects bright objects such as bits of bones.

Stage design and technical direction for "Antigone" is by Holger Stave, resident designer of the U of I PAC.

"Things are busy at the PAC. Instead of a boring Greek play, it can be an exciting piece of work, and the Theatre Arts Department is trying to make it that way," said Stave.

Aside from the technical aspects of the production, the cast performers have been busily rehearsing.

Sharon Gaus will portray Antigone, the ill-fated daughter of Oedipus, who pays with her life for her heroic resolution to bury her slain brother Polyneices.

The tyrannical Creon, who upholds civil law over the ancient religious rites of kinship, will be played by Bruce Gooch.

Antigone's sister Ismene who pleads discretion and civil obedience is Sally Ahlstedt; Antigone's betrothed, Haemon, who defies his father Creon, is portrayed by Skip O'Meara; and Howard Swain will play the blind seer Teiresias.

The Greek chorus, which represents the Theban elders, is being directed by Carl Petrick, U of I affiliate professor of dance and Ballet Folk director. The chorus supports the action and explains what actually goes on since the Greeks never showed any real violent action on stage, said Stave.

Cast as soldiers are Douglas Bozarth and Lee Plummer, and the child is played by Peter Terteling.

Tickets are available in the U of I SUB with prices set at $2.50 for non-students and $1.50 for children. U of I students are admitted free with their activity card. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Loggins and Messina at WSU

Loggins and Messina will be appearing at the WSU Coliseum tonight at 8 p.m.

With their blend of "old-timey" rock 'n' roll, folk and country rock, Loggins and Messina have become a force to reckon with in the pop music field in the 1970's. Both Loggins and Messina had established professional backgrounds before coming together. Messina had performed with the legendary Buffalo Springfield and then founded Poco with Richie Furay. Loggins played with several rock groups, but is better known in the music trade as a composer of hit songs such as "House at Pooh Corner," for the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, and "Love Song" for comedian Anne Murray, which enabled her to win a Grammy award in 1974.

Originally from Everett Washington, Kenny Loggins played for groups such as the "Second Helping" and another called "Gator Greek". Later he became a songwriter for ABC WINGATE before Columbia Records signed him as a solo artist in September 1971.

Jim Messina from California and Texas has played music professionally since high school. Also he produced Kenny Loggin's first Columbia album. As they prepared material they discovered that they meshed well, both as writers and performers, and Messina began taking a part in the recording sessions. The group later formed in 1972.

Their share of hits consist of "Your Mama Don't Dance," "Thinking of You" "Growin'" and their current song "A Lover's Question."

Instrumentation for the group consists of Kenny Loggins on vocals, rhythm guitar, harmonica and flat top; Jim Messina on vocals, lead guitar, dobro, flat top and mandolin; Vince Denham on soprano, alto, tenor and baritone saxophones, flute and bass flute, and bass clarinet; Steve Forman on percussion and vibes; Jack Lenz on keyboards; and Richard Greene on fiddle, violin and cello.

Election slated

Polls will be open from 8:45 a.m. to 5:45 p.m. during tomorrow's ASUI Fall General Election.

The 12 polling locations are as follows: SUB, Physical Sci., Life Science, Ag. Sci., Library, Forestry, Law, Ad. Bldg., Theophilus Tower, Wallace Complex, Jansen Eng. Bldg. and the Education Bldg.

Students must present their ID card in order to vote for one person as ASUI president and vice-president, and 10 persons for senate.

All campaign material should be removed from the campus by 8:30 a.m. on election day. This is the responsibility of each candidate. Violations should be reported to any election Board member, or call Mark Beatty. The area covered includes all university structures, and fraternities and sororities.

Fast for world harvest planned

A Thanksgiving observance, focusing on "Fast for a World Harvest" is scheduled for Thursday noon at St. Augustines Center, across from the SUB.

"Fast for a World Harvest", in its third year at the U of I, is an event in which participants fast for 24 hours, and donate the cost of food for the day to OSFAM-America to be used in projects to help small farmers in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

It is estimated that 200,000 persons took part in the nationwide fast last year, according to a St. Augustine Center spokesman.

Everyone is invited to attend the observance sponsored by the Augustine Center and the Campus Christian Center.

Learn why Rome fell- taste the culture

A lecture at the University of Idaho titled "Roman Culinary Art" will provide an opportunity to learn about, as well as taste, what the ancient Romans ate.

The presentation, scheduled for Tuesday, will feature Dr. Cecelia A.E. Luschnig, U of I assistant professor of the classics, who will speak at 7:30 p.m. in the Ad. Building room 318. Following her talk, actual Roman dishes will be served to those attending.

The lecture is the second in a series on the classics, currently being sponsored by Eta Sigma Phi, the classics honorary.

Would a Two-Year Scholarship Worth Up to $10,000 Interest You?

An Opportunity for 450 Highly Qualified Sophomores

If you're the kind of person we're looking for, you've already started to think about what you'd like to do after graduation.

If a scholarship leading to a career as an Officer in the U.S. Navy appeals to you, you'll find this message well worth reading.

Two-Year Full Scholarships

The opportunity is very attractive. If you're selected, we'll provide full tuition during your Junior and Senior years, pay for your books and educational fees, and give you $100 a month for 10 months each year to help cover your living expenses.

There are two different programs you can apply for. The first is the Nuclear Propulsion Candidate Scholarship Program (NPCS). To qualify, you must have one semester each of calculus and physics (or two semesters of calculus) and have a B-minus average or better. It is open to men only.

The other program is the Two-year NROTC Scholarship Program. The only difference in the qualifications is that you must have a C average (2.3 out of 4.0) or better. It is open to men and women.

For both programs, you'll need to pass Navy qualification tests. And, quite frankly, it will help if your major is math, physical science, or engineering.

The Curriculum

After you're accepted, you begin with six weeks of training next summer at the Naval Science Institute at Newport, R.I. During your final two years of college, you take several required courses in math, physics, and Naval Science. You also go on a summer cruise prior to your Senior year. (Of course, you're paid for all your summer duty.)

A Challenging Job

Upon graduation, you are commissioned as an Officer in the U.S. Navy. And from then on your career can take you anywhere in the world, in a variety of fulfilling jobs.

Those who apply for the NPCS Program have a particular challenge ahead of them: The Navy's Nuclear Power Program. Not everyone who applies makes it: the men in charge of more than two thirds of our country's nuclear reactors must be a very special breed. Final acceptance into the Navy's Nuclear Power Program is determined during your Senior year after an interview in Washington with the Director, Division of Naval Reactors.

A two-year scholarship worth up to $10,000. A unique opportunity to serve as an Officer in the U.S. Navy. You'll want to act now. The deadline for acceptance is May 1, 1976 — and once the quotas are filled, you'll have lost your chance to earn yourself a scholarship.

If you think you've got what it takes to qualify, fill out and mail the coupon below, contact either your local Naval Recruiting District or the Professor of Naval Science on your campus, or call 800-841-8000, toll-free, anytime.
