Rising of the curtain

Editorial

The Year of the Dragon. The U.S. Bicentennial. Detente will attempt to bring about coexistence, new leaders will be appearing everywhere and the U of I will be conducting negotiations over parking, construction, housing, drinking, the Spring Music Festival and academic discrepancies.

The Argonaut will begin this year with fresh virginal talent as well as new mental and physical dimensions. The staff has been changed and the format rearranged in the hopes of putting forth the best journalistic endeavor of the decade, with a return to the social optimism of the early sixties.

We will present biting editorials, fair news coverage, diverse and entertaining cartoons, a literary supplement and even a job market.

We extend our pages in welcoming all new and returning students, staff and faculty.

Contributions and suggestions concerning university and community affairs are requested and encouraged.

Regents say: "still pay"

BOISE - The U of I administration has been directed by the Board of Regents to collect the full $200 registration fee this semester, overturning a ruling by the university's Administrative Hearing Board Dec. 4 which ordered $30 of it not be collected.

Regent Ed Benoit said he was opposed to the idea that a university board should issue directives concerning regents policy. He made the motion ordering the administration to collect the fees, saying the regents have the "exclusive authority to establish fees."

The AHB released their decision December 4, saying certain of the registration fees were actually tuition, which is constitutionally prohibited at universities, except for "professional programs."

U of I President Ernest Hartung, whose report to the regents in reply to the AHB report spurred the regents action - advised a complete review of the fee structure in all state colleges and universities.

Members of the Committee for Student Rights, which raised the tuition question said they will not take action to prevent the fees from being collected this semester, as had been considered. Said one member, "as long as we feel the university is making positive strides and acting in good faith" the matter will not be pressed.

The regents agreed a study should be undertaken, but have so far only appointed a committee to determine how the fee situation should be studied. The committee has been ordered to report back at next month's meeting in Boise.

Concern was also expressed at the meeting that this action by the students, if pressed, might eventually lead to in-state tuition and higher payments for students.

Regent A.L. Alford said, "It would be ironic if this step of the committee of students, whose work has now stretched back over 16 months, should be the biggest step for tuition in Idaho."

In other matters, the board accepted the idea of having a program in which graduate students from various states could exchange schools for in-state prices.

Registration scheduled

Registration will take place from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today and tomorrow. Classes will begin Wednesday.

Student must first pick up their registration packet. New students should do this in the reserve book room of the library, and returning students should go to their dean's office.

Students must then go to their advisors, and select the courses they will take. Students must receive their dean's stamp of approval; this can be obtained at their dean's office.

Students may go to the Memorial Gym for formal registration according to the chart reproduced here. The letters are those of the student's last name; you may register after the time, indicated, but not before.

Students must check with each department whose courses the student plans to take, and obtain validation from department personnel.

A table is available in the gym for students who wish to indicate that they want to take courses pass-fail or on another option. However, students have up to two weeks after registration to decide on the pass-fail option.

Fee Deferment

As much as 60 per cent of student tuition and registration fees may be paid in two installments later this semester, according to university officials.

The fee deferrment plan was begun last semester, and according to University Controller Gerald Reynolds, "there was a pretty good response," though "not many people went that option." He said he expects more to take advantage of the program this time.

"Overall," he added, "there were not any real problems."

Any student who must pay more than $100 to attend the university and has no "delinquent accounts" with it, is eligible.

New courses offered

A new class which will permit students to design and build an experimental structure known as a "tensegrity mast," is being offered this semester under Arch. 404 Special Topics.

The course meets Tuesdays and Thursdays and will be taught by A.J. Peterson, visiting associate professor to the U. of I. Credits will be arranged.

"Buckminster Fuller coined the word 'tensegrity' meaning 'tense with integrity,'" Peterson explained. Designed to demonstrate continuous tension with discontinuous compression, a tensegrity mast represents a highly efficient, natural structural phenomenon. Spiderwebs are an example from nature, Peterson said.

Purpose of the course is to help students learn to visualize sophisticated structural-architectural concepts and to translate this vision into reality with standard industrial materials.

"Second, students are learning to apply structural principles and resulting forms to serve mankind and to evaluate the structure's impact on the environment," Peterson remarked.

Extensive prerequisites in art, architecture and mathematics are listed, but Peterson said he will waive most of these for students having general spatial awareness and the ability to think three-dimensionally, construction experience or aptitude and personal interest.

"In addition, students must be willing to work extra hours occasionally, travel and speak Coloradoan," Peterson said.

Science & the unexplained

Are you looking for a little less relevance in your academic schedule? Do you feel like taking a one-credit pass-fail course to be graded more on participation and less on performance?

The course, Interdisciplinary 400, will be offered this semester on a pass-fail basis and will discuss science, fantasy and the unexplained.

Eleven different teachers from five different disciplines will all gather together to instruct a course in trying to answer the question of "What can a seeker after truth reasonably believe?"

Such topics as acupuncture, evolution and reincarnation, the healing arts, and a Sasquatch will be discussed.

For students interested in areas of the mind, ESR, astrology, hypnosis, numerology, the emotional life of plants, and even pyramid power will be covered.

For additional information on adventures into the unknown call Professor Michael Browne of the physics department at 885-6745 or Professor Malcolm Renfrew in chemistry at 885-6787.

Records can be withheld

Students may restrict information held about them by the university if they file a request within ten days.

The policy, established last year, provides that any information held about them by the university may be released only with the student's approval, if he "presents a written request to the registrar within the first ten days" of the semester.

Many student records are already restricted, and may be released only with student approval. This includes counseling records, health records, personal references, disciplinary action reports, and academic and financial status reports.

Information now open to the public includes the student's name, local address, phone number, permanent address and phone, class status, major, academic and other honors, scholarships awarded, dates of attendance, degrees attained, and the height and weight of members of the athletic teams.

A complete copy of the records policy can be found in the back of the Time Schedule.

W-2 tax forms available

Withholding Tax W-2 forms will be available all next week for university employees, according to the Controller's Office.

Forms for salaried employees will be sent to departments for distribution; and those for persons working as Irregular Help may be picked up at the Cashier's window in the Ad. Annex.

Our own autocrat

by M. MORRIS
Political Editor

With the confidence afforded by re-election and with the support of various campus cliques, ASUI President Dave Warnick has already set out to establish a new political atmosphere at the University of Idaho.

Indicative of Warnick's new endeavors was a letter issued, courtesy of Warnick and his new cohort—ASUI Vice President Brian Kincaid, that outlines the issues the Senate will pursue this semester. Among the issues presented were student fees, alcohol policy, and certain utilities funding.

The mere fact that Warnick has to tell the students what issues are important suggests an inclination on his part to be some omniscient leader that is so aware he doesn't even have to consult the students for their interests.

An excerpt from this letter sent to living group leaders says, "The Idaho Student Association will be working on several issues of the legislature which will be of interest to all Idaho students." In other words, these issues will be of interest to all Idaho students whether they like it or not.

The point here is that Warnick appears to be taking on an autocratic relationship with the students. Thus, there is no student input and only mock efforts to initiate student input. Thus, Warnick is in a seemingly strong position whereby he can continue his malicious attacks against the administration and other authorities. This simultaneously enhances his self-interests as a politician.

But who pays in the end? The students, because of communication with the Administration, the regents, and even the governor have been jeopardized by Warnick's political rhetoric.

The time has come for students at the U of I to transcend apathy and prevent the developing autocracy precipitated by Warnick, himself. Who is Dave Warnick to tell you what to think, much less what issues are important?

Warnick joins WSU

Areas of cooperation between the U of I and Washington State University were discussed by ASWSU officials and ASUJ President David Warnick Wednesday.

"Our schools have more of a mutual interest than football," Warnick said.

He spoke at the ASWSU Assembly meeting, and suggested cooperation in areas including parking, the academic calendar, entertainment, and golf course use.

Warnick said the WSU and U of I golf course managers had made an agreement between themselves that students from the opposite school would be allowed to play at regular student prices.

"I don't think this is a bad idea," Warnick said, but questioned whether managers should be allowed to make that decision without consulting students.

He also said there were problems with students driving to the other university and being ticketed, not knowing which parking areas are approved for student use.

The ASWSU assembly agreed to help look into these problems and backed the formation of a joint U of I and WSU group to study cooperation.

Little rascals strike

As the Argonaut was getting ready to go to press two young ruffians scurried from within the closed SUB gameroom with a SUB information desk employee in hot pursuit.

Tony Hayes, the SUB employee, discovered the invader's presence when he received information from the cafeteria workers about some kids playing on the elevators.

He wasn't sure how old they were. "They didn't stay long enough," he said.

Despite shouts of "shoot them" by a cheering Argonaut staff, the little rascals escaped unharmed.

It's deep in the end zone

by M. KOSSMAN Sports Editor

I was offered the literary chance of a life-time. I grabbed it. Sports editor of the Argonaut. A dream come true.

The job would require a complete change of both personal dialogue and outlook on life. I was up for it.

Day One.
The Argonaut office.
Selection of a desk required only moments. Located securely on my home turf I waited for the opening play.

Before I could set the defense this "new-fangled" woman editor operating out of the veer on a quarterback option crossed the line of scrimmage.

"Blitz," she says, the crooked black cheroot accenting the terse movements of her tight thin lips, "How in the hell are you?"

"Wondering," says I, "how in the hell you found out about my name."

For an answer I received a hearty slap on the back, a long ash on my shirt and a reply that indicated there was darn little she did not know about me.

"Welcome to the team, Blitz," she continued. "You didn't go too high in the draft but we still expect a lot out of you (seems that social editors were drafted first this year).

"Well coach, what's in the old play book?" "Blitz," she smiled, calling audibles like a pro, "I want you to define your job for me."

"DEFINE MY JOB!!"
"Yeh, you know, just type up a short list of those characteristics inherent in a top notch sports editor. No sweat, turn it in with your towel when you leave."

Before I could recover she disappeared in a fog of cigar smoke and a swirl of combat boots. I turned to my typewriter when play resumed.

The end product of my definition is as follows:
A Sports Editor:

- is more powerful than a Texas Wishbone
- is faster than a Comstock spiral
- is able to invent colorful adjectives in a single down
- and who, disguised as a mild-mannered Argonaut reporter, fights a never-ending battle for truth, justice and a winning Vandal football team.
- He must also be rather full of . . .

Feeling that I was more than qualified for the position I turned in the definition, moved off field, enjoyed a cold shower and with visions of Knute Rockne lighting my way, I headed home.

In a more serious vien, I want to issue a warning to students who take a strong interest in college sports.

This semester we are going to give sports events one hell of alot better coverage. There will be an actual Sports Page. There will be stories on minor as well as major sports events. There will be features on individuals involved in sports not only because they are engaged in sports but for other reasons as well; like the tremendous dedication and personal sacrifice that athletes undergo in order to excel at what they do.

I am certainly not naive enough to overlook the problems and perils of college sports today and there will be comment in that direction. The main concern though will be in presenting the news called sports to an audience which may in effect detest it but is still damn interested in it.

Student comment and criticism on this column and on the sports news presented in the Argonaut is welcome. It might be ignored but it is welcomed.
