The Huck Finn story

The Organic Theatre performed the first part of "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" last night. Part Two is slated for this afternoon at 12:30 in the Performing Arts Center. Both parts can stand alone, so if you missed Part One, be sure to catch Part Two. See page 7 for details.

A System So Satisfying We Call It "Good Vibes"

Our $429 "Good Vibes" system offers a level of performance that would have cost over $600 just five years ago. How many items can you think of where the cost of quality has come down?

This outstanding value is the direct result of combining three products which are each "best buys."

The receiver is the Harman/Kardon 330C, a brand new update of the world's best selling receiver. The 330C incorporates a beefed-up amplifier section and a highly sensitive tuner, as well as improved cosmetics (for whatever that's worth).

The speakers are the new Advent/2W which sound very similar to the famed Larger Advent. In fact, except for the last half octave of base, they sound virtually identical.

The new programmable belt-drive B.I.C. 920 turntable is a perfect match for the Advent-Harman/Kardon duo. We include a base, dust cover, and the Shure M75ECS cartridge, long a favorite of ours, and well noted for dependability.

At our special system price of $429, you save $81, and those are good vibes indeed.

Oh yes, we warranty everything in this system for two full years—except for the Advents, which we warranty for life.

Tax issue highlights first debate

By BILL LEWIS

The controversy over democratic Presidential nominee Jimmy Carter's weekend statement on tax reform may make that issue the biggest at the candidates' first debate this Thursday.

In an interview with the Associated Press released Saturday, Carter said as President he would increase taxes for those making more than mean or medium level of income," while those making less than that could expect a tax reduction.

Although Carter said such a policy would help in shifting the tax burden away from those at lower income levels, Republican Vice-Presidential nominee Robert Dole quickly made an issue of the statement, saying Carter means to increase taxes for people making as little as $12,000 to $14,000 a year.

Carter quickly tried to clarify what he meant on the tax question, saying Dole's interpretation of the AP interview was "completely distorted."

He said his objection was to simplify the tax code, adding he wouldn't increase the tax burden of "working families."

Nevertheless, as Thursday's debate approaches, slated to deal with domestic policy, Carter may have more explaining to do about what has become the first big issue of the presidential campaign.

The difference between the two candidates on the tax issue center on where tax cuts would be most effective. Carter has contended that big business could absorb a tax increase to lessen the burden of those in lower brackets, while Ford has said business taxes should be reduced "in a way that creates more jobs."

The president has also proposed tax breaks for middle income persons who invest in common stock. Such a plan he said "would encourage persons to invest in America's future and their own."

Such an approach to taxing investments is opposed by Carter who has called for equal taxation of investment and wages, as part of his proposed simplification of tax laws.

In addition to taxes, Thursday's debate will focus on other domestic issues, including federal spending, jobs, and inflation, which Ford says can be reduced if government spending is reduced.

Such a view, Carter says, is "narrow and doctrinaire" as well as ineffective in dealing with inflation. He puts much of the blame for the rise in inflation in the seventies on the Federal Reserve Board, which he says should be required to conduct more of its business in the open.

The government, according to the president, should not assume the burden of providing jobs "though a host of social programs" which have been proposed in Congress.

Politicians proposing government job programs, the President says, "believe an acceptable price for economic recovery is a new round of higher and higher inflation. They are wrong."

In addition to tax breaks designed to create jobs, Ford favors training programs and assistance for areas of the country suffering from exceptionally high unemployment rates.

Carter on the other hand favors public jobs "as a last resort" as well as proposing summer youth jobs and training programs similar to the president's.

The democrat contends his programs may be expensive, but can be paid for through increased tax revenue which will result from less unemployment.

Thursday's debate in Philadelphia is the first of three, with the second scheduled for Oct. 6 in San Francisco. That discussion will focus on foreign policy issues.

No location has been announced for the third debate, scheduled for Oct. 22 and expected to be open to all topics.

Edwin Newman of NBC News will be the moderator of Thursday's debate. Panel members announced yesterday by the League of Women Voters, which is sponsoring the debates, include Elizabeth Drew of the New Yorker magazine, James Gannon of the Wall Street Journal and Frank Reynolds of ABC News.

Opinion

Watch and listen

The elections are coming up soon.

For the first time in many years, the two candidates of the major parties are going to be debating each other face to face. This will be an excellent chance to see how the candidates perform opposite each other, physically as well as ideologically.

I know that presidential campaigns are unappealing most of the time, but I urge all students to take advantage of this moment and listen to what the candidates have to say. They may not be your choice, but they may be representing us next year, so it may be a good idea to listen to what they have to say.

The primary television stations have not yet settled their dispute on whether they will cover the event or not, hopefully they will. I do have a suggestion for their situations: Allow the TV stations to take pictures of the audience's reaction—but they cannot use them until after the debate, when they give their wrap-up. This way the viewing audience wouldn't be "swayed by audience reaction" until after they'd made their own opinion.

I know it's hard to take time out from studying, but pull out a beer and sit down and relax and listen—an informed public is a more democratic public. ST

Candidate misunderstood

To the Editor:

I was somewhat taken aback by portions of the article appearing in last Friday's Argonaut concerning the candidates for appointment to the Senate.

In fact, my first reaction to the statements evidently uttered by one of the candidates was: "What a turkey." My dismay was greatly aroused upon the realization that those very words had come by way of my own pen. I cannot claim a misquote, for indeed I did write those things. I could and DO claim, however, that my statements were taken out of their intended context.

It should be noted that the material for this article was gleaned from the application form for the senate vacancies. It should, as well, be noted that the form requested the applicant to describe him or her self and that person's stance on various issues in...sixty words or less.

My purpose in making application for one of the vacancies was to hopefully correct what many seem to view as a major fault of the current system. I thought it was time for someone to represent the views of the forgotten ASUI majority...those sixty plus percent of the student body who are evidently so bored, disgusted or the like with the actions of our governmental system that they do not bother to vote. I thought that it was time for a person having differing views to be injected into our currently homogenous senate. I thought it was time that a person who couldn't understand why the ASUI should accept the principle of payment for

Editor's note: John Hecht is a former U of I student, who is recovering in Ketchum, Idaho after seeing the Idaho Legislature in action last spring.

By JOHN HECHT

In a less turbulent era, a university president commented, perhaps only half viciously, that his main responsibilities were to ensure football for the alumni; sex for the students; and parking for the faculty.

The elevations of Dr. Green and Coach Troxel preserve the first, White Pine Hall is a manifestation of the second, but apparently the third is beyond reach.

The current fervor about a charge for parking is as recent as increased fees for students, and as old as the traditional faculty plaint of being underpaid, but expecting some prerequisites.

Student leaders last spring requested that in trade for agreeing to various fee increases (to back out state appropriated monies) that as many reasonable user fees as possible be instituted.

An example of their efforts is higher dorm rates to cover utility bills that formerly all students were subsidizing. State money was then freed and out back into education.

Another student proposal was a parking fee. This was an instance of students once again assaulting their own coffers (or Dad's, or Uncle Sam's, or whomever's) to benefit the institution. Judging from the current reactions, the faculty doesn't like the present. Five or six years ago, before I was a student, a report on parking was issued by one of those committees that met, deliberated, recommenced, and was ignored. One professor was quoted as saying, "If I can't be guaranteed a parking place within 75 feet of my office, I'm going elsewhere." Basic drives and needs seem not to have changed. In partial response to faculty needs and pressures, low-cost married student housing was torn down across from the SUB, and more parking spaces installed. (Sorry, I couldn't avoid it.) One of the warts on the otherwise lovely face of the University of Idaho is the parking lot incising the central mall. Where a naive freshman from Bliss, or a visiting dignitary with taste might expect lawn and trees, there is an unpaved parking lot, surrounded by cement posts, reserved for faculty. Now, not only is the faculty being asked to pay for something that one member considers a "right" and even implied (or maybe explicit) provision in the faculty-employment contract, but it is being called upon to compete with, horror of horrors, students for the spaces. One can only shudder at the scenario. At the beginning of the school year the few prosperous faculty (the ones without patches on their elbows or on their ties) must queue in line with excited, chattering undergraduates (regard students as being unable to afford cars) who have just ever so eagerly paid their ever increasing registration fees, and pay like common folk, money for a parking permit. That is enough to make a person give up tenure and move to Deary.

If that isn't enough, the first day it is decided to drive to work (since it's a long commute from university ridge as the outer Moscow suburbs, it's cool). It is realized with mortification that early arrival is necessary so that some rich dormie who has been moving pipe all summer to buy a CB for his Cadillac doesn't laugh at that family '53 Chevy. Or worse, what if the student has a newer model camper?

Such ignoble events must not be allowed to happen. It would reduce the image of the institution, and even of the faculty. The consideration that money would be freed up to be placed elsewhere, such as in academics, is an argument so tedious as not to warrant mention.

And of course, if the faculty need not worry about where that $10 or $30 or $60 has to come from, they will be able to concentrate on their first concerns: improved quality of instruction, long term goals of the university, and even a more mature professional image to present to the legislature, where the money crunch necessitated fee increases in the first place.

researched, unbiased decisions. This I feel is a vital quality for any officeholder.

It was further reported that I "recognize advantages of fee increases for students." I certainly DON'T like fee increases. However, particular issues at hand involving increases for us are to our educational advantage. A more informed campus, and feedback are needed now.

I'm not writing this to "campaign," but to clarify my position from that reported in the Argonaut. I suggest to you, if you're interested in the senate candidates, to read the letter being sent to the living group presidents. The credibility of the Argonaut's report is lacking, and possibly not only in my "expressed feelings."

Story clarified

To the Editor:

After reading Rosemary Hammer's article of September 17, concerning candidates for the senate positions I was surprised to read what I "felt." My application for senator, which was apparently Miss Hammer's source, was taken out of context. Let me therefore, clarify the situation.

Student Congress, debate, and speech do not qualify anyone to hold a senate post. My own experience in forensics taught me, however, to make well

Band lauded

To the Editor:

On Saturday night, September 11, 1976, the U of I football team won an important game in Boise. Among the significant happenings that night was a superb performance by the Idaho Band and Drill team which had Boise State fans drooling. Some 20,500 plus spectators had cause to wonder why a Band and Drill team from Idaho and nothing from the home team? Of course, you and I know the answer to that.

My compliments to the U of I student body for supporting the BAND and ATHLETICS. Believe me it made athletes, band and drill team members, parents, alumni, and friends of the University proud of all of you.

May your mature judgment and personal pride prevail in all things.

Shaheen: breeding and rehabilitating the falcon

By BILL LOFTUS

Falconers don't like to talk about their hobby to non-falconers. The reason is because in the last few years falconry has been presented to the public as a cruel sport akin to bear-baiting or cockfighting. I won't try to defend falconry anymore than I would try to defend anyone keeping a horse fenced in or a dog tied. This article is about two other aspects of falconry that the public hears very little about: rehabilitation of wounded and sick raptors and the breeding of them.

Dr. Stauber, a professor at the U of I, has another falconry hobby other than hunting his goshawk. He tries to rehabilitate sick or injured birds that are brought to him. People bring in short-eared owls that have been plowed out of their nests, sparrow hawks that have been hit by cars, goshawks that have been shot—one goshawk had its nest logged out from under it and a golden eagle was recovered from the Snake River—and birds that were so emaciated that they could not fly. And he tries to heal and release them.

Over 20 birds have been brought to him since April, 1975. About 50 percent of them have been released. In his words, "About 20 percent success is considered good, but I have been having better luck than that." And luck has to play an important part in trying to rehabilitate raptors, because they are very fragile.

Raptors are highly specialized for hunting so if a wing or a leg is hurt in the wild the bird would starve.

A lot of Dr. Stauber's work is something that most people could do, if they knew how to feed the raptors and had the facilities for them. Such things as feeding weak birds until they are strong enough to fly, or providing them with a predator-free place until they can recover from shock or destroyed wing feathers.

Some of the things Dr. Stauber does few people could. He sets broken wings and broken legs which require more knowledge of veterinary medicine and anatomy than most people have.

The birds that are unable to return to the wild are usually given to other falconers for hunting birds.

Dr. Stauber is also interested in breeding birds but his rehabilitation interests and lack of time prevent him from getting involved with that aspect of falconry.

The breeding of raptors is Lester Boyd's area of expertise. He was the first to produce a Prairie Falcon-Shaheen hybrid. He has produced three more of those hybrids and about 27 other raptors so far with his breeding techniques. He estimates that he has taken about 20 birds out of the wild in his previous 20-some years of falconry.

The shaheens that were collected in Iran were to have been located at Boyd's farm on the Palouse. The reason that they wouldn't take older birds was that they pass the critical imprinting state shortly after hatching. If they are taken before the imprinting stage, then they are much easier to work with because they think that they are humans or that humans are falcons.

The work of the breeding program involves the artificial insemination aspect. When falcons are imprinted that humans are like them, then a pair bond can be established between a human and each individual falcon. That means that the males court him and he can collect the semen from them with little difficulty. The females are also more tractable and don't go careening off the walls whenever the handler enters their room, as wild-caught ones will.

According to Les Boyd, artificial insemination of raptors is important in several aspects. It allows a greater flexibility in the production of offspring because almost any make can be bred to any female whether or not they are naturally compatible. It also makes distribution of semen possible among separated individuals which could make it possible for falconers with one bird to use them as "breeders." It makes smaller projects like Boyd's possible.

Cornell University and the Canadian Fish and Wildlife Service are breeding falcons for release in areas where they formerly occurred but have now ceased to do so. Cornell produced about 50 falcons for release last year and the Canadians about 45 birds. But for operations of that size, 15-35 pairs of falcons must be kept.

These projects are based on natural mate selection and large numbers of birds must be kept so the birds can find compatible mates. Those numbers would be impossible for a private venture because of the cost. Les Boyd and Dr. Stauber each estimate that it costs 20-25 cents for the small chicken that each falcon eats every day.

The word "private" in falconry has acquired a different meaning in the last few years. There has been an increase in the cooperation among falconers. It is considered unethical to sell a raptor to another falconer but it may be traded or lent.

The breeding program increased that cooperation even more because of the complexity of the undertaking. This spring, Les Boyd flew semen from a Harris hawk to other falconers. One of them lived in California and got his shipment by jet and the other lived in Spokane and got his shipment by carrier pigeon, which did as fast a job as flying it up there.

The main problem with artificial insemination is semen viability, but people in other areas of bird breeding are working on that so an answer should be obtained to storage problems before too long.

Les Boyd thinks that once breeding programs become established, then falconers will be able to supply birds for their own use and perhaps also supply birds for depopulated areas. Dr. Stauber now provides birds that otherwise wouldn't have survived. The two men are examples of the "newer aspects" of falconry.

Blue Mountain Rugby: living up to the sport

Did you know that there are hookers, scrums and props in Moscow? They are positions on a rugby team. Moscow's rugby team, the Blue Mountain Rugby Club, has started another season of rugby.

Last spring the club got its start as the Idaho Rugby Club. Six games were played despite a shortage of players. This fall the number is almost double what it was last spring. The Blue Mountain Club is being sponsored by Joe Hall's Tavern and has a good schedule of games lined up.

The members of the Blue Mountain Rugby Club are not all veterans of the game. There are some players that have played rugby for six years and some that have just started the sport.

The Blue Mountain Rugby Club practices Tuesday and Thursday at 4:00 p.m. on the Wallace Complex fields.

They invite everyone interested to come out and play. Everyone is given the chance to play in the games and if enough people come out there is a chance that another club could form.

The club has a match this Thursday with the club from WSU. A tradition in rugby is that the winning team has

Sweet sweet victory

By BILL KIRTLAND

Once again it took a man off the bench to lead the Idaho Vandals to a 31-28 victory over a tough Pacific team. One of this week's heroes, (there were two) was fullback Kevin McAfee. The big back ran for over 100 yards on 13 carries in the fourth quarter.

The other man of the hour was kicker Ralph Lowe. His 44 yard field goal with 13 seconds left in the game put the Vandals in the win column for the second week in a row. It sure is good to have a kicker the caliber of Ralph Lowe. Don't be surprised if he wins a few more games before the season is over.

Defensively the Vandals were plowed under by Bruce Gibson. Gibson is being watched closely by pro scouts and there is little room to wonder why. After some adjustments at half time the Idaho defense played better, allowing only seven points in the second half.

Tom Eilertson had a super game coming off the bench to sock the UOP quarterback twice.

It was good to see that devastating offense come alive again. The big people up front ripped holes in the Pacific line at will. With Pacific closing off the quarterback keep and pitch, they let the fullbacks run. And run they did, for Robert Brooks gained 97 yards and McAfee gained 111 yards. Both played well.

One disturbing aspect of the game was the apparent lack of field communication. The Vandals have had too many men on the field and too few at different times this year. These are little unnecessary mistakes that eventually cost ball games.

There is little doubt in my mind that Ed Troxel won't call a quick halt to these mistakes. The team can't afford to give up plays, penalties, time-outs, and yards and not get caught, especially with the schedule the Vandals play this year.

The University of Ohio is also 2-0 on the year and will provide excitement for Idaho when they journey to Athens this weekend. We should have a full report on Ohio for Friday.

Boise State whipped the weak sister of their schedule 42-14. Idaho State continued their losing ways, getting beat by Cal Poly 29-17.

Vandals booted into win

By JIM BORDEN

Ralph Lowe booted a 44-yard field goal with only 13 seconds remaining in the game to lift the Idaho Vandals past the University of Pacific 31-28 in a non-conference game Saturday.

The Vandals came from a 28-21 deficit in the fourth quarter and the win gave them their first back-to-back season-opening triumphs since 1963.

A bad punt by Pacific gave the ball to the Vandals on the Idaho 49 yard line with only 1:17 left in the game and the scored tied 28-28. The Vandals advanced on the Pacific goal line but were set back by a penalty.

Because the Vandals had used all but one time out earlier in the half, they were unable to control the clock and had to kick from far out with 13 seconds left. The result was a 44-yard boot by Lowe and a victory for the Vandals.

Kevin McAfee turned in a fine performance for the Vandals, rushing for 111 yards on 13 attempts, all in the second half. Robert Brooks scored three touchdowns in the first half as the Vandals traded seven-pointers with Pacific.

Idaho quarterback Rocky Tuttle replaced starter Craig

Juntunen and scored late in the fourth quarter on a keeper to tie the game 28-28.

"We came together as a football team," said Idaho coach Ed Troxel after the game. Troxel said his entire team performed well against Pacific.

"It would be a shame to single out any individual for us, but you have to mention Lowe and McAfee," he said.

For Pacific, fullback Bruce Gibson racked up 187 yards rushing and three touchdowns to lead the Tiger attack.

Idaho led in almost every statistical category, having 309 yards rushing to Pacific's 270. The Vandals had 105 yards passing on 12 completions of 21 attempts and 1 interception. Pacific got 66 yards on eight completions of 18 attempts and no interceptions. Total yardage: Idaho, 414; Pacific, 336.

Penalties hurt the Vandals again this week getting six calls against them for 76 yards. The Tigers got five for 45 yards.

Fumbles were also a factor as the Tigers were only able to jump on two of their own drops. The Vandals fumbled three times and lost two of those.

Huck Finn, Part II: the best is yet to come

Are you interested in seeing an acute social satire? Do you want to see an entertaining drama? Do you want to see a true classic enacted onstage? Then, have I got a deal for you...
 It may sound a bit corny, but it's all true. "Huckleberry Finn" is not just a story about a kid and a slave floatin' down de Miss'ssippi Rivah havin' demselbs a good time. It's a story about growing up in America, and even more so, it's an analysis of the American character itself. If you think it's not so, then you probably haven't read the book, at least not since you were a kid.

Well, what we have here is not a book, but even better yet, a play. And the actors who are performing it are seasoned veterans; they have taken this particular play all over the world in this past year. They have performed across Europe and all of America, and in most places that they have performed they have received highest critical ratings.
 Now it may seem to the average person that "Huckleberry Finn" would be unlikely in terms of stageability. But the Organic Theater Company doesn't need huge, lavish sets; instead, they involve the audience directly in the play by encouraging a use of the imagination to the extent that one really doesn't need a real raft in order for it to exist.

Instead, a light is shone on the actors in the shape of a raft and the actors mime the actions of poling and fishing. This technique, while sounding to some like a cheap way out, actually provides the audience with a higher level of enjoyment than they would get if there was, say, a cardboard raft and paper water.
 If you didn't see the first half last night, you missed out. But at 12:30 today, you can catch the second half (which, in my opinion, is the best part anyway); tickets are on sale at the PAC for $1.50 (students) and $2.75 (non-students). If you miss this play, you'll only have yourself to blame when you hear everyone else telling you how good it was.
 Be there. Aloha.

Circle K club aids U of I

A national service organization sponsored by the Kiwanis club is forming on campus and will hold its first meeting Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in the SUB.
 The group, Circle K, is open to all students, according to faculty advisor John McMullen. The particular activities of Circle K will be decided by its members, McMullen said, adding the group may work to assist handicapped persons or help at university functions such as registration. Activities of the group will be undertaken with the assistance of the Kiwanis club.
 More information is available from Circle K organizers, Dan Nelson at 882-0671, or Ken Hungerford at 885-6434.

Pre-veterinary students now have alternative to WICHE

By BETH GOFF

After traveling a good distance down a dusty gravel road to the veterinary science building, we interviewed Dr. Floyd Frank, Dean of Idaho faculty of Veterinary Medicine, about a new co-operative program with the WSU college of veterinary medicine.

A few years ago, if you were a veterinary science major, you had to go to another state to receive your D.V.M. degree.

There are only 20 schools of veterinary medicine in the U.S., three of these being located in the 13 states of the northwest. Until 1974, Idaho had no program for providing education leading to the D.V.M. degree, but the student-exchange program of the Western Interstate Compact of Higher Education (WICHE).

Previously, students from the ten western states could apply for admission to the three colleges of veterinary medicine in the West. Because of the large number of resident applicants, these schools gave preference to residents. Therefore, only a small number of Idaho students were admitted each year under this program.

Recently, the demand for veterinary medicine became so high in Idaho that an alternative had to be found to satisfy the requests for veterinary education. The cost of building a new college would be from $15 to $30 million, which is too high for Idaho to consider.

In 1974, an idea was borrowed from Oregon State which constituted a sharing program between the U of I and WSU. Under this program, graduate vet students are enrolled in the College of Veterinary Medicine at WSU. In exchange, the U of I contributes faculty and staff; a budget of $700,000 and a large-animal clinic in Caldwell. This sharing program is called WSU/Northwest College of Veterinary Medicine.

The primary goals of this sharing program are:

1. To assure access to veterinary medical education for Idaho residents.
2. To provide for Idaho's veterinary medical manpower needs. (Idaho is a livestock-oriented state, but in many communities large livestock populations are without the services of a veterinarian.)
3. To increase research, disease investigation and continuing education in veterinary medicine for Idaho.

With this program now underway, and gaining support every year, the percentage of Idaho students now being accepted into the WSU school is as high as 18%.

There are currently 32 students involved, with a projected enrollment of 60 students by 1980.

The general idea of the swap is that classes are held at WSU, while much extensive research is conducted here. Some of the extensive research being conducted here are programs to develop a method of vaccination of a fetus while still in the uterus; predator control through use of sterilization of male species; and animal diseases having close relationship with human health.
