MIDTERM

1. What sort of person reads the Arg?

A person who knows beauty when he sees it. And he sees it all around him. In cheese. In the company of eleven year old boys. And twice a week in the pages of his or her favorite campus newspaper. Fact: If you lined up all the members of the Argonaut staff, four abreast, they would circle the SUB four times. If only you could get them to do something that silly. Nobody reads these dumb captions anyway. Just leave me alone. Let me go home. (Source: 1963 Weekly Reader.)

Talisman House

Reaching the total community

By SUSAN SAMPLE

Withstanding the emotional impact of an abortion is a lonely experience, especially in Moscow. Hoping to alleviate this, Talisman House will be providing abortion counseling as part of its new program.

Known in the past as the hub of Moscow counter-culture, Talisman House is undergoing changes. Diane Milhollin has been elected as the new director and funding will be provided by a Title 1 Grant.

"I see it as a very positive kind of program," remarked Milhollin. Following the direction of the grant, a concentrated effort is being made to reach out to the total community—the city of Moscow as well as the U of I.

Entitled "Creative Alternatives for Adult Development," the grant has a two-fold purpose: to work with people who work in a volunteer capacity in the community and to serve the senior citizens in Moscow.

"I see Talisman House functioning as a resource center as well as plugging into the existing network of resources," explained Milhollin. Referral services will be continued as before but will be expanded, especially in the direction of the elderly.

Bombarded by swindlers, Moscow's senior citizens need a resource center where they may learn of their legal and civil rights. Financial implications of being a senior citizen with a minimum fixed income is frequently a problem and becomes a dilemma for a surviving spouse.

Increasing the expertise of volunteers through training sessions and workshops will be another aspect of Talisman House. Working with people involved in programs such as Meals-On-Wheels and the Multiple Sclerosis Foundation, Milhollin anticipates bringing their skills to a paraprofessional level.

New areas of need are constantly arising, such as abortion and mastectomy counseling, which the House will meet. Special emphasis may be given to these areas as they are of real interest to Milhollin. Formerly a vocational rehabilitation counselor for five years in Moscow, Milhollin is currently a graduate student working on her second master's degree in guidance and counseling.

"Clients of mine were involved in the House in one way or another and that's how I met Bob Cameron," she explained. Familiar with many of the functions of Talisman House and the definition of the grant, Milhollin became "really, really interested" when she learned of the opening for director.

As a counselor, she was well aware of resources available to individuals in the Moscow community but realized that few others were familiar with the various services. Thus, previous experience provides her with a wealth of information and contacts.

"It's taking time to find about each aspect of Talisman House," Milhollin noted. "But I like to be involved. It really gets me going." Although the grant provides the primary structural guidelines for the new program, Talisman House will continue several of its previous activities such as the Coffeehouse and the Moscow Free University, which is scheduled to begin next semester.

On a volunteer basis, Bob Cameron will continue to be involved in his special interest areas at Talisman House. Both craft shows, the Kris Kringle Kraft Conspiracy and the Renaissance Faire, will be held again this year.

Talisman House is still under the auspices of the U of I as Milhollin is coordinator of the Title 1 Grant, which is only available for higher education. In reaching out to the senior citizen population, she hopes to involve them in the U of I system. A senior scholar program is available in which an elderly individual may register as a full-time student for only $20. A single class may be taken for $5.

The game room in the basement of the SUB is now undergoing remodeling. Hopefully, the work will be completed in a month's time and it will once again be available for recreation.

The pursuit of violence

By MICHAEL ANGELO

NOTE: This is not a sermon. It IS a view of life as it really happens here in Moscow. As it really happened last Friday night in the Spruce Tavern. Hopefully it is not life as it always must be.

A thickly crowded, alcohol-blurred night at the Spruce.

The reasons for being here are endless, escape from the boredom of the campus, hopes of a possible but improbable copulation, recognition from Mr. Goodbar or some excitement to stir the blood.

You had the bucks and the inclination for whatever reason and like last weekend and the weekend before you find yourself sitting in the Spruce again.

The evening wears on. The alcohol level builds. Conversation becomes almost impossible as the crowd builds. Time melts away, its passage marked by the changing TV shows which a few diehards at the bar attempt to follow; an occasional burst of unnatural laughter; a shout to some recognized acquaintance.

The wall of bodies forms along both sides of the narrow channel between game room and bar. Eyes from all parts of the room begin their unconscious scrutiny of the formation. They find the same faces they find there every weekend. Hard faces, laughing too loud and too often, faces aware that they are the center of attention.

The conversation by now has grown too full of false bravado and impossible illusions to be excitement enough. The level of beer in your system begins to feel just too damn good.

Occasionally a few women can be seen in the walls of the channel formation. They seem to enjoy the oh-so-accidental-brush of flesh-on-flesh, but as time wears on even this is not enough.

As the flow of bodies increases down the narrow channel and the standing formation solidifies a tenseness grows. Individual adrenalin levels rise to match those of the alcohol. You feel real good standing there shoulder to shoulder to shoulder. Sort of invincible with a territory to protect, and all those expectant eyes on you.

The bodies stuttering in their tight movements down the channel become less and less recognizable as human beings. Something feels like it is going to happen. You can sense its stirring in the mind and in the eyes so intent...More beer now, it becomes a waiting game...

"Hey you son of a bitch, don't push your ass into me." The time is at hand, someone has finally been singled out.

"Wow man I'm just trying to get through..." You know he will be damn lucky to escape on words alone. His words mark him for all to see. As the eyes of a great beast of prey focus on its target, all eyes in the room seek out the owner of the second voice. It's time now, right now. The reason behind your reasons for being here takes control.

There will be no more words. The victim sensing his fate turns to make his escape, too late, he is grabbed by a collective hand and spun around...a fist, backed by every hot pair of eyes in the room, smashes into his face, once, twice...

The blood flows from beneath his astonished eyes. It takes the human shape completely from his face and the mental tongues of the eyes in the room suck at the blood; suck at his fear; at the sheer animal smell of the kill...

There is enough human will left in the bar to take the necessary actions to reinstate stability. The victim is soon enough out of sight. As are the mental tongues. The eyes remain taking in the past tense as if they were somehow not quite satisfied.

Your nervous system stretches and relaxes. If you were not directly involved in the incident you recoil from what has happened as if you had nothing to do with what went on.

More beer and more empty conversation. After a while you find a way home or if very lucky, into someone's bed. Either in sleep or in flesh you find a way to wash away the revulsion of the evening. You forget that someone was hurt and bled to provide you with an evening's entertainment.

The only balance to this process is that you realize somewhere in the dim recesses of your mind that someday you or someone you love will become the victim. We all have our turn sooner or later.

Have a real good time at the Spruce next weekend.

Feedback wanted

To the Editor:

Students and listeners of KUOI-FM:

Last year, money was allocated to KUOI-FM, the ASUI station, for remodeling and the purchase of new equipment. KUOI-FM is in the process of changing from 10 watts to 50 watts stereo. Ten watts reaches only part of the campus, while 50 watts would reach virtually every student.

The problem is that not enough money was allocated to complete the project, due to rapidly rising costs.

The second problem is that the possible need for a full-time engineer was not foreseen when the ASUI budgets were done last year.

I would like to ask for your comments on the following questions:

1. Should KUOI-FM be changed from 10 watts to 50 watts?

2. Should additional money be allocated to pay for a full-time engineer?

Your comments, questions, and suggestions will be greatly appreciated.

Community response

To the Editor:

I would just like to say how impressed I have been by the response to the Kincaid Defense Fund. The community has not gotten together to protest prohibition like this for several generations.

This may be a good time to try out an idea that Bob Cameron has suggested before. It has become a Moscow tradition to arrange a SPRING BUST for a select crowd of marijuana smokers. When we get over the amount needed for the Kincaid appeal, why don't we keep on collecting and put the money in a SPRING POT to be used for legal defense of these sacrificial victims. We might not be able to pay for everyone's entire defense, but we could finance a sort of public defender to provide the early advice after arrest that can be so important to the final outcome.

Vote Republican

To the Editor:

During the last two years, students have seen fees going up. During those last two years--I wonder what our legislative representatives have been doing.

Two of those people are running for election this year--Norma Dobler and Bob Hosack. I think students should ask why they haven't been able to get more state funding for the university.

So far from the answers I've seen, I think we need new legislators. Students who are interested in keeping their fees low and fighting the push to impose tuition, should seriously consider voting for new blood--Tom Boyd and James Lucas for State Representative and Jerry Snow for State Senator.

These three will provide a new approach and all three have close ties to the university, but not so close they can't work for us effectively.

We need to keep costs low so the University of Idaho remains open to all young people in our state.

ASUI in review

Editor's note: Brian Kincaid was released from Latah County Jail last week and will be writing for the Argonaut this semester. He will be writing a column every issue on what is happening in the ASUI and on campus.

By BRIAN KINCAID

This is a new column which would have started earlier but for the author's lack of access to a typewriter.

Several interesting items are brewing in the campus political scene this week. Starting on the other side of campus, the Faculty Council meets today. Among the items to be covered are two new proposed programs, one in Computer Science and the other in Applied Statistics. The third item should concern students. The University Curriculum Committee has recommended to the council that all audited courses not be recorded on a student's permanent academic record.

This would allow a student to still audit a course for his own edification but would not imply to a prospective employer that the student has some expertise in the subject field.

There is push from the athletic director to build tennis courts at the old field house site. ASUI Senate support is being solicited for this proposal in the form of a resolution introduced by ASUI Senator Mark Limbaugh. There exist at least two arguments against this resolution, which will be discussed at tonight's senate meeting. First, the original design for the swimming pool held plans for three tennis courts on the roof. Second, an ASUI Vice-presidential candidate, a year ago, ran on two issues, one of which opposed tennis courts in the old field house site. That candidate was elected by a 2-to-1 margin. This author is not against tennis courts per se, just tennis courts in the old field house site.

In the senate tonight several appointments will be discussed along with the vetoed pay increase for the KUOI-FM engineer. Under the senate's new business comes the appointment of the Election Board Chairman.

The closing date for applications was last Friday, however, ASUI President David Warnick made his decision on Thursday. That night he received an application for the position but neglected to interview the applicant and stuck with his initial decision to appoint ASUI Senator Mike Campos.

When questioned about this, Mr. Warnick responded that he had received only two applications before last Wednesday, which he thought was the closing date. Both applications were from Senators and both were appointed, one as chairman and the other as assistant. That leaves the interested 'other' applicant frustrated and out in the cold. Examples like this don't help the furthering of student involvement in the student government process.

The senate will consider another resolution tonight, which is asking the University President and the Board of Regents permission to contract bar services at one-time events in the SUB. This is a money-making proposition so it will probably pass the senate and hopefully even the regents. It is a far cry from a student bar and lounge, but it is the first step!

Pursley emphasizes 'Dr. No'

"There's a basic difference of philosophy on how we deal with the problem of big government," said Ken Pursley of his opponent Steve Symms. "He simply votes no. Some of the things he votes no on are, I think, wrong votes."

Pursley, a Boise attorney running for the first congressional seat in the House of Representatives, said that he feels that government still has a role to play in many of the areas that Symms has voted against. "Education is one of those areas," he said. "Senior citizens is another. I would continue those programs and I think they are essential to continue."

Pursley said that he would apply a different approach to the problem of big government. He said that he favors setting up a method for a five-year review of all programs created by congress to see if they are still serving the purpose of their creation. He said that he would also support a provision for demanding accountability under the sunshine law from the bureaucracy. He added that as part of his philosophy, he would like to see government de-centralized. "I'd rather go that way than having two levels of government with conflicting ways addressing the same question," he said.

Pursley said that he favors many of the areas that Symms is opposed to, such as senior citizens support, civil rights legislation, and education. But he said that he is in agreement with Symms on a number of issues.

"We both oppose gun control, we both oppose federalizing land-use planning. Fundamentally, we both agree that government is too big, too complex, and too pre-occupied with regulatory details," he said. But it is that philosophy on how to handle that problem, he said, that separates Ken Pursley from Steve Symms.

Speaking of Symms' negative voting record, Pursley said that there are many areas that he would also vote no on himself. "The problem is," Pursley said, "That his is a consistent 'no' which doesn't accomplish anything. You've got to be able to work with a number of congressmen if you're going to accomplish anything.

Pursley listed as his number one priority the question of the environment. He added that his opponent has one of the worst environmentalist voting records in the Congress. He said that there should be a balanced use of the resources. He said that there has to be industry, especially those industries involved with the environment such as timber, mining, and agriculture.

He also said that there has to be a national energy policy. He said that alternative energy sources have to be considered, but he added that he was wary of nuclear energy and said that he was more inclined to accept coal under the right conditions than nuclear energy.

Pursley refused to have himself labeled as either a conservative or a liberal. He said that he is both under certain conditions, liberal in the area of human rights and conservative in the area of economics.

Symms outlines views

By MARTY TRILLHAAUSE

Editor's note: This article was written with information provided from Congressman Steve Symms' public release statements and campaign literature. Repeated attempts were made during the past week to contact Symms for an interview. All ended unsuccessfully. We would welcome an interview with Symms at any time he wishes.

Steve Symms, (R-Idaho) has one of the most famous voting records in the House of Representatives this year, at least in this region of the state. His campaign literature and public release statements say that this is the result of "principles, not promises."

Symms is listed as one of the most conservative members in the entire Congress by several organizations. The American Conservative Union consistently rates him in the area of 90-100 per cent. This same organization rates such leaders as Sen. Edward Kennedy a 0 and Sen. Frank Church a 20 per cent.

He has listed as his major accomplishment during his past two terms in the House of Representatives his help in leading the fight against "bureaucratic" wage and price controls, his strong and "successful" opposition to federal gun laws, his fight against federal land-use planning, and his role in the "fight to open Congressional committees to the press and the public."

He supports a policy of "world-wide free trade for agriculture." In other words, Symms favors leaving the food situation of the world to the working of the free market. He said that the genius of the American farmer has fed not only the U.S., but much of the world as well and he said that the secret to this is to provide an incentive for the farmer, namely high returns for their production.

Symms said that he is in favor of legislation pending before the Congress that would remove earning limitations now imposed on those persons living on Social Security benefits.

Symms has voted for the passage of the "Government in the Sunshine" bill which would prohibit closed door meetings of many executive agencies. "I'm in favor of anything that slows down the federal bureaucracy," Symms said. Symms is also the co-sponsor of the Sunset Law which is pending before the Congress and would require Congressional review of all federal agencies every four years before being reinstated.

The congressman has been in favor of cutting the food stamp program since he was elected in 1972. He supported an amendment to the food stamp bill being considered by the Agriculture Committee on which he serves, that would allow the Secretary of Agriculture to remove "low-nutritious and non-nutritious" items from the list of acceptable products that can be purchased with food stamps. "Everywhere I go, I find people want to reduce, not expand the food stamp program. I favor cutting waste and doing it now," he said.

He also has shown support for a strong defense policy and favors a policy similar to former governor Ronald Reagan's position with respect to the Panama Canal, in that at no time should the United States ever give up its claim to the canal. Symms has expressed concern over what he considers to be a dangerous situation developing between the dictator of Panama, General Omar Torrijos and the Cuban leader, Fidel Castro. "It has become increasingly evident," Symms said in a letter to the state department concerning Cuban troop movements in Panama, "that General Torrijos has been cozying up to Castro as part of his efforts to push the United States into giving up sovereignty over the Canal Zone."

Symms has gone on record opposing proposed Amtrak service to Southern Idaho which will include stops in Nampa, Boise, Mountain Home, Shoshone, and Pocatello on its route from Seattle, Washington, to Salt Lake City, Utah.

Vandals trounce Wildcats 45-17 Vandals trounce Wildcats 45-17 Vandals trounce Wildcats 45-17

By JIM BORDEN

The Vandals remain undefeated in Big Sky football as they swamped Weber State 45-17 Saturday in the Kibbie Dome.

The win bolsters Idaho's overall record to 4-2, with the Vandals still undefeated at home after two games in two weeks at Moscow.

Weber fumbled on its first play giving Idaho the ball 21 yards from the goal. Runs by Taylor and Brooks took the ball to the four-yard line where quarterback Craig Juntunen faked a hand-off and slipped over for first blood. Ralph Lowe's kick made it 7-0.

The teams traded punts a couple of times until Idaho moved 80 yards on 7 plays, capped by a Robert Brooks 24-yard touchdown spurt. The kick near the end of the first quarter made it 14-0.

Weber took the ball for three plays, just long enough to end the quarter, then punted back to Idaho.

This time Kevin McAfee did the work as the Vandals took over on their own 29. Four McAfee rushes and a couple by Juntunen had the ball on the Weber 23.

Four plays later, Juntunen optioned off to Tim Lappano who dashed six yards to the goal and after another Lowe kick, it was 21-0.

After the kickoff, it looked like Weber would sputter again until a bomb pass from the Weber 33 gave the Wildcats the ball on Idaho's 20-yard line.

A couple of good runs gave Weber a first and goal on the Idaho 9, but a near interception and an overthrown pass forced Weber to go for a 25-yard field goal making it 21-3.

After halftime and a quick Weber possession, Idaho went right back to work moving, under the direction of Juntunen, from the Idaho 25 to the Weber 14 where the drive stalled.

Tuttle came back in at quarterback and got in two plays before the third quarter ended. A penalty and a loss on a running play made Idaho go for three points instead of six, but Lowe's kick was short of the necessary 42 yards. The Wildcats again went to the air only to be intercepted again, giving Idaho the ball on its own 36.

But Idaho could not capitalize on the Weber mistake and punted the ball all the way to the Weber four-yard line.

The Wildcats mixed running and passing on this possession and moved to the Idaho 18 where they added another touchdown pass to make it 38-17.

Idaho was to have the last word as Juntunen came back in and engineered another 80-yard drive capping it with a 12-yard pass to Hagadone in the end zone.

Another Idaho interception and Weber was through for the night with the final score, 45-17.

Idaho set a new school record 516 yards rushing with three of its rushers going over 100 yards, McAfee, Brooks, and Taylor, and Juntunen adding another 94 of his own.

In Big Sky action Saturday, Montana downed Boise State 17-14, Montana dropped Idaho State 28-7, and Cal Poly squeaked by Northern Arizona 8-7. The other Palouse team, Washington State, did not fare so well as Idaho, kissing the feet of UCLA 62-3.

Five U of I coeds are cheering the Vandals on to victory this year. Volunteering for cheerleading duties after lack of money ended the selection of official cheerleaders are, from left, Cindy Alumbaugh, Sumter, S.C.; Janice Ellis, Hazelton; Dawn Anderson, Pasco, Wash.; and Judy Pedersen, Moscow; with Linda Trompke, Mountain Home, center top.

...it bought time...

By BILL KIRTLAND

Playing before one of the largest reproductions of a Saturday night Mort's Club crowd, the Idaho Vandals delighted the crazy bunch by waxing Weber State 45-17.

It was the type of game the typical Vandal would appreciate, a slaughter. The outcome was evident after the first quarter and it gave the fans a chance to sit back and enjoy themselves to the fullest.

Weber State wasn't a very good football team. In fact, poor would be a good adjective in describing them. On the other hand, Idaho played a super game. The offensive line pushed Weber around like they were on roller skates.

The running backs, led by Robert Brooks and Kevin McAfee, powered and out ran the Wildcats. The running attack accounted for 515 yards and 32 of 37 first downs, both were new U of I records.

The defense played with emotion, and never gave Weber a chance. Weber State didn't deserve a chance. Although the Wildcats passed for 295 yards you really can't hold this against the defense. Most of these yards came in the second half against reserves, when Weber was playing catch-up football.

The contest came at a super time. It was a good win, but more important it bought time for the Vandals' walking wounded. Tim Sanford, Lynn Rice, Bill Fagerbakke, and Rick Sullivan should be back in action against Montana State.

Besides momentum, the victory gave Ed Troxel a chance to look at his younger players. While his veterans were healing, they received valuable game experience.

The Vandals are going to need everything they've got when they travel to Bozeman this Saturday. Although premature, this game could well decide the outcome of the Big Sky championship.

The U of I women's field hockey team hopes umbrellas will not be necessary when they travel to Western Washington Oct. 22-23 to compete in a busy weekend schedule.

Friday, Idaho hopes to revenge an earlier defeat when they visit Western Washington State at Bellingham. After the contest that begins at 4:30 p.m. (PDT), the squad will travel to Tacoma to prepare for the Pacific Lutheran Invitational Meet.

Saturday's action begins at 8:30 a.m. when Idaho meets Central Washington State. A break in the action occurs until 1 p.m. when the women again take to the field to challenge host PLU.

The U of I women participated in the WSU Invitational Oct. 22-23 chalking up two victories and absorbing one defeat.

Falling to Idaho was CWSC by a score of 1-0 and Oregon State University by the same score. In the Central game the offense was spearheaded

Netters enter tourney

The first tough tournament of the season is scheduled for the U of I women's volleyball team when they enter "A" Division Pool Play in Cheney, Wash., Oct. 22-23.

The Idaho netters will begin competition at 6:30 p.m. Friday when they take on the University of Washington. Saturday finds three matches facing the U of I when they meet Pacific Lutheran, Oregon State, and Portland State, considered the top team in the Northwest.

The junior varsity's only match is an away contest in Lewiston where they take on Lewis-Clark State College. Action starts at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Friday, Oct. 15, the U of I women met stiff competition when they hosted WSU and lost a hotly contested match 11-15, 5-15, and 14-16. "WSU forced us to play defensive volleyball," Coach Kathy Clark said.

Unfortunately, you cannot score points on defense. That is why the score does not reflect the quality of the game our women played."

by Nancy Hubbard, a senior from Moscow who plays fullback, a defensive position. Three times Hubbard drove from deep in Idaho territory to the opponent's goal, and on the third attempt scored the lone goal of the game.

WWSC handed U of I its only weekend defeat with one goal late in the second half.

"We set a record for time of possession in that game and they still beat us," Coach JoDean Moore said.

Doobie Bros. tomorrow night

By DAVID NEIWERT

In what will undoubtedly be the biggest show to ever hit Moscow, the Doobie Brothers and Silver are performing Wednesday night in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome. The show starts at 8 p.m., with tickets selling at the door for $6.50.

They are not the same band they were a few years ago. There have been a number of additions and deletions in the band's make-up (including their picking-up of ex-Steely Dan guitarist Jeff Baxter) that produced drastic changes in the band's compositional and performing style. A couple of years ago a Doobies concert meant just the band themselves; now their show includes an onstage troupe of over 20 people.

Still, they have a reputation as one of the top concert bands in the nation. Crowds at their concerts (which are always SRO) have been known to become barely less than frenetic.

Silver, on the other hand, is not too well-known as a group. They have a hit single on the AM stations ("Wham Bam") and have only recently started building a reputation for themselves.

Be there or be square.

Book Review

'Children of Dune'

By DON WILLIAMS

Another classic has been added to the Frank Herbert collection. The third and last part of the Dune trilogy has recently come out in hardback and earlier this year was a four part series in the science fiction magazine, "Analog"; it is titled THE CHILDREN OF DUNE.

Muad'Dib (born Paul Atreides) and his concubine Chani, a native born Fremmen of Dune, gave birth to twins which ended the second book of the trilogy, DUNE MESSIAH. Leto II. and Ghanima were born; their mother died and their father, blind, wandered out into the desert to join his mate, thus willing a collapsing Empire to the children. With the apparent collapse of the Atreides family, Alia, Muad'Dib's sister, became regent to the twins and the Empire they had inherited. As they grew, the Corrino family tried to regain control of the empire and the Bene Gesserit worked to recover the 'kwisatz haderach' genes. Leto developed prescient powers similar to his father's and realized that the planet was 'dying' or at least changing the way of life and killing the sand worms which create the spice, melange, the basis of the Atreides power. To return the planet to its previous state, Leto gets a vision which tells him he must follow the "Golden Path" and search for Jacurrutu, to undo all that his father had done.

THE CHILDREN OF DUNE is a surprising end to a story of high quality science fiction. It does justice to the previous books of the series and surpasses many of his other works. This is required reading to all who have read DUNE. Those of you who haven't read any of the series, you're missing out on a world of imagination by Frank Herbert.

Concert review

Valdy: less than perfect

By DAVID NEIWERT

"If you're going to teach a song to a child, this one would be one of the wiser choices, I think," said Valdy, as he and the band sang together with no instruments.

The song was, "Last Night I Had the Strangest Dream."

Valdy does not give a perfect concert; one that is thoroughly entertaining; it does, in fact, become a little dry at times. But one in the audience cannot mistake that charisma in the man that makes a great performer. It may not be honed down yet, but it will be someday.

He is obviously a veteran; he knows how to speak with the audience in such a manner that they will respond both vocally and emotionally. Yet it was probably this coherence between him and the audience that was the concert's greatest downfall. When he left the stage to let the band play for awhile on their own, everything that he had built up fell flat; the rapport was gone, and the band had to build up their own kind of relation to the audience. When they finally succeeded it was too late, for it wasn't until their last solo song, "Flying," that it happened.

They made up for it with the two encores; the songs performed then -- "Yes I Can" with Valdy and the Band, and Jackson Browne's "Rock Me on the Water" and "Last Night" featuring the band by themselves -- were undoubtedly the highlights of the show; it was here that the band came through and showed their fine potential.

Overall rating: (on a scale of 1-5) 3.

Search committee continues quest for new president

By ROSEMARY HAMMER

The presidential search committee has set its collective nose to the grindstone. The task of selecting a replacement for the retiring Ernest Hartung, president of this university for twelve years, was undertaken with vigor this weekend, when the group met officially for the first time since July.

In an all-day session Saturday, the committee attempted to outline an acceptable method of evaluating prospective candidates. "This is like trying to qualify what makes a great work of art," remarked Sig Rolland, U of I history professor. "We've got to try to find true excellence, not just follow procedure," he continued.

The experience of each candidate in administration, academics, and the political aspects of a presidential role will be carefully scrutinized. This type of experience, however, was deemed very difficult to evaluate by the committee. Such factors as the candidate's leadership record, relations with faculty members, ability to work with students, and success in communicating with legislators and policy making groups were seen as tough points to rate objectively.

Sandi Gallagher, an affirmative action member, called the evaluation form subjective and ambiguous.

"We can't throw out things that are not measurable. It's a matter of judgment," emphasized Dobler.

She stressed the importance of using objective, measurable material, directly relating to the job of a university president.

Norma Dobler, however, expressed another group opinion when she stated "we can't throw out things that are not measurable. It's a matter of judgment."

The weight placed upon each evaluation point was discussed at some length by the committee. The value of actual administrative experience, as opposed to leadership in an area such as business, or government, was considered.

One committee member cited his experience with a former mayor, turned university president, who executed his new role with great success. If items 2, 3, and 8 are evenly weighed, for instance, this type of individual would be eliminated, he noted.

Despite this possible stumbling block, committee chairman A.L. Alford said, "We can consider people, if they're qualified, from other than the world of academia."

Jean Hill, dean of women, said she saw nothing wrong with placing emphasis on academically oriented candidates, but the post should still be open to capable leaders from other areas.

The necessity of finding a president able to deal with special interests and considerations of this state were stressed by the committee. While a northwest native was seen as being possibly better geared to relating to the people of Idaho, it was agreed that someone from another area could also fill the president's spot. "The most negative thing I've heard about Ernie Hartung is that he's an 'eastern intellectual.'" But education has made great progress since he's been here," Hill said.

"The most negative thing I've heard about Ernie Hartung is that he's an 'eastern intellectual,' but education has progressed throughout the state since he's been here," Hill insisted.

"This is not a geographic issue," agreed Rolland, "but the candidate should be able to chat with potato diggers and not have too many problems." Gallagher asked, "would a black female from New York survive to the interview point?" Sherman Carter, financial vice president, replied, "a black person from Harlem would be unique if she can relate with all these farmers." Should such a person materialize, however, the committee agreed that she would be considered.

Dobler emphasized that a viable candidate "should at least know how a land grant university functions." Graduate law student Walter Sinclair stressed the importance of a candidate with experience in graduate level programs, especially law school. "Law school is different than other graduate programs," he explained.

5. Evaluate the candidate's record of research activities.
6. Evaluate the candidate's record, considering involvement with faculty-staff members and faculty-staff organizations.
7. Evaluate the candidate's record, considering involvement with students, student organizations, and student personnel professionals.
8. Evaluate the candidate's record with regard to those specific aspects which suggest ability to relate to the Idaho scene. This might include contact or experience in land-grant, residence-type campuses, as well as anything suggesting contact or understanding of those groups which are represented in Idaho.
9. Evaluate the candidate's experience and background in fiscal management and budgeting matters.
10. Evaluate those aspects of the candidate's record which reflect involvement with persons in legislative and policy making bodies.

agreed to consider leadership potential, not just actual experience. Don Kees, U of I counseling director, noted that it is difficult to just look over a candidate's track record, and "infer from that, that we have a president."

The goal of the presidential search committee is to narrow down the field of candidates to about six. These names will go to the Board of Regents, who will then select the next president of the university. Members of the committee will indicate their rating of each "We can consider people, if they are qualified, from other than the world of academia," Alford commented.

candidate. These ratings will then be processed by computer, resulting in a group consensus of each applicant. Evaluation will begin at the end of this month. The committee plans to submit the final list of candidates sometime after an early January meeting.

Other members of the presidential search committee include chairman Alford, member of the state board of education, David Warnick, ASUI student body president, J. Walter Sinclair, U of I law student; Norma Dobler, 5th district state representative from Moscow; John Mix, alumni; Richard Kerbs, alumni; R.W. Coonrod, U of I, academic vice president; Carter, U of I financial vice president; Hill, dean of women; Everett Samuelson, member of dean's council, U of I; Bert McCroskey, chairman of the U of I faculty council; William Parish, faculty; Don Kees, faculty; Rolland, faculty; Paul Dierker, faculty; Robert Woodhead, industrial representative; J. Clint Hoopes, state board of education; and John K. Swartley, state board of education.

Each individual committee member can give a written recommendation of a certain candidate to the regents. However, no recommendation is allowed from the committee as a whole, beyond the list of finalists.

"The regents will depend 90 percent on our committee findings," stated Alford. "The only time they're going to see them is perhaps a two hour meeting. Our judgments will be the primary evidence that they will have to weigh," he emphasized.

U of I students get recognition

Senator James McClure has asked that a presentation made by two U of I students to the National Republican Party Platform Committee be placed in the Congressional Record.

Jim Redinger and David Warnick presented the Regional Primary concept to the committee, using the regional primary in Idaho as an example. This concept was endorsed as the stand of the Republican party.

Senator McClure said "the work of these young men has importance that goes beyond the workings of one political party. The hodge-podge trail which has evolved with respect to Presidential primaries leads to Congress' doorstep."

In their presentation to the platform committee, Redinger stressed the need for less than 30 Presidential primaries, and more than one. "The trend has been towards regional primaries--besides the one in the Northwest this year, we find several adjacent states going to common dates. For instance, Vermont and Massachusetts, Alabama and Georgia, and Tennessee and Kentucky." Redinger stressed the "achievements" of the Idaho College Republicans in bringing the regional primary concept to Idaho.

Warnick stressed the advantages which would be incurred through a regional primary system, saying "A regional primary should help focus attention on the needs and strengths of the home towns of our nation. If we're ever going to get away from the syndrome where a New York-Washington, D.C. axis dictates what issues are regarded as important, and where fresh ideas which come from 'the provinces' are stifled, then we need some method of focusing attention back at the state level." Warnick feels that two advantages which would be achieved allowing candidates and issues to develop and catch on with the voters, and insurance that issues common to a given region would be discussed.

Jim Redinger is the state chairman of the Idaho College Republican League. David Warnick preceded Redinger as state CR Chairman and is the ASUI president here. Both Redinger and Warnick are Moscow natives. They co-chaired the Task Force on Regional Primaries set up by the College Republican National Committee.

Senator McClure said that he intends to introduce legislation in the next Congress to implement this plan.

Foreign students discuss U.S. policies

The Carter-Ford foreign policy debate is old news, but the views of the people the policies are made about were as current as the discussion at the breakfast table this morning. Several U of I international students expressed their views on debate matters in interviews conducted during the past week.

Only one of the students interviewed felt United States foreign policy has a truly major bearing on her day-to-day life at home but all said American policy affects them to some extent. Hildy Ellis of New Zealand said she considers American foreign policy fairly important to her homeland because of the role the United States plays in New Zealand's defense.

Amelia Ward of Liberia said more equitable returns for Liberians from U.S. corporate installations would constitute foreign policy morality in her country.

One student from Kenya did not seem as concerned with U.S. activity in his country as with the lack of it. Referring to President Gerald Ford he said, "He talks about Africa when elections come."

Most of the students were concerned about nuclear armament agreements between the United States and Soviet Union. Willis said, "A lot of my friends feel that all this competition is going to result in a war." Ward and the Asian students said they feel agreements should be reached banning nuclear weapons development and developing nuclear power for beneficial purposes.

If responses of these U of I international students are any indication, Ford and Carter have more reactions to be concerned about than those of voters and foreign leaders. There are several million other eyes watching for the aftermath of the great debate.

Fire Prevention

Today marks the 20th anniversary of three deaths at the U of I. On October 19, 1956, three men were killed in the third of a series of fires that had been sweeping through the university's dormitories that week.

According to Barbara Petura, I of I News Bureau, the fires were the result of arson and the person responsible for them, a journalism student from Kellogg, Idaho, is now serving a 25 year sentence for second degree murder.

The first fire occurred on October 12, 1956 on the ground floor of Willis Sweet. There were no injuries. One day later, another fire broke out in Chrisman Hall. Again there were no injuries. By this time, the authorities were convinced that the fires were the result of arson.

On October 19, a fire broke out on the ground floor of Gault Hall. Two students were found burned to death and another was found in the showers, dead from asphyxiation.

Since then, nothing that extreme has happened, but there have been repeated cases of vandalism to fire preventing systems throughout the living groups. Director of Safety, Chuck Woolson, said that the incidents are at a low at this time, though. One of the most common types of damage is that to fire extinguishers. According to Woolson, the cost of recharging an extinguisher is $11-12. The extinguishers are inspected once or twice a year. If damage does occur, a member of campus or housing security is assigned to monitor the extinguisher.

There are three types of fire prevention systems. The first is the fire extinguisher. The second is the alarm system. The third is the fire hoses that are placed on every floor of the dorms. Woolson said that the resident advisor and himself regularly inspect all three systems. Also, the fire department, headed by chief Ralph McAllister, inspects the equipment and conducts fire drills. Woolson complimented McAllister, saying that the university's excellent record during the last twenty years is due to the quality of McAllister's inspections.

Graham Nash - Crosby's introverted partner

By BILL LOFTUS

Sunday night on KREM FM (92.9), there was a program called "Interview" with Jim Ladd as the host. Last week's guest had been David Crosby and this week's guest was Crosby's current musical partner—Graham Nash.

Nash's background in the music business is from being co-lead vocalist for the Hollies to being a member of Crosby, Stills and Nash; Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young; a two album solo career; and finally as half of Crosby and Nash.

Whereas Crosby seemed to stress environmental issues in an extroverted manner, Nash came across as the introverted social thinker. Nash seemed to still be the protestor of social inequities that he was in the late 60's and early 70's. Jim Ladd called him a "self-styled field worker in the American conscious." Perhaps the area of the interview that was most reminiscent of the late 60's and early 70's was Nash's outspoken pro-marijuana stance.

He said, "Drugs definitely changed my life. I was 24 or 25 when I first started smoking. All I can say from a personal point of view is that it laid me back and gave me time to think...and in that way it made my life better... I've never found marijuana to be evil."

Nash has evolved away from the violent revolutionary paranoia of the late 60's, though. He didn't view violence as the only mechanism of social reorganization. According to Nash, "There is no difference between quiet working and physical evidence of that work." But he went on to, in effect, justify the earlier demonstrations and the methods by saying, "In the 60's you had the kids physically in the streets saying, 'No that's wrong and the government had to say 'you're right' and stop the war."

Jim Ladd also questioned Nash about the CSN&Y situation. Nash's response was quite a bit like Crosby's four jugs of nitro and CSN&Y analogy. Nash said "We're all human beings and when someone does something that upsets me I let them know and when I did something that upset them, they let me know, because we're all incredibly strong people." That inner tension in the group was also furthered by their relationships to their music. Nash's viewpoint was that, "To me CSN&Y are the music they make, the music that they make, not the people and the effect that music has on people...and when people don't treat it with the same respect that I do, I get very upset, very frustrated, and very disillusioned." When the group's tension became too high, Nash felt that the music wasn't being as

"incredibly holy" as it could be and that led him to leave CSN&Y.

Nash's thoughts on social order were strongly optimistic. He said, "I think it (life) comes down to choice. I really believe that human beings know the difference between right and wrong. And he followed that by saying, "The kids are really much happier than we are. Consciousness is a constantly expanding concept, right? The kids will get hipper younger as we evolve as a species." Nash's introspective side was most visible when he began to talk about his relation to music and to life.

Nash said, "I've always felt a little strange; I've always felt a little different. When I first picked up a guitar and started playing chords I said, 'There's something different going on here. Here's something that didn't kick me or stab me in the back.

There's an incredible freedom with music."

The help that he received from music was summed up when he said, "My life has been incredibly dreamy...I've been able to be my own psychiatrist, make other people feel, and support myself at the same time, totally with feeling."

His statement that encompassed the most about life was the one about wisdom. He said, "That's the thing about wisdom. I think you have to be really old and have to have experienced millions of things to really have any of it."

And with that the interview with Graham Nash, the man who has described himself as a "simple man" that sings songs about personal experiences was at an end. Next week's interview isn't with Stills or Young, but the series does continue with Robin Trower, a former guitarist for Procol Harum.

For the better part of a month the chimes in the Administration Building Tower have not been operating. The problem exists in the electronic systems that amplify the signals given off from the strips of bell metal or the player-piano-type rolls in the carillon at the Music Building and carry those signals to the speakers in the Administration Tower.
