Senate rejects fee increase, Argonaut editor

By JOHN HECHT

In a dramatic meeting Tuesday, the ASUI Senate narrowly voted down a resolution requesting the U of I Administration recommend a $3 per semester fee increase.

The Senate also reversed itself from last week and voted down the appointment of Rosemary Hammer as Argonaut editor for next fall.

The defeat of the fee increase came as a surprise to most of the Senate, as indications from the "Sunday Session," the informal meeting where the Senate discusses the upcoming agenda, gave no hints that there would be problems.

The senators voted 6-6 on passage of the resolution, throwing the tie vote to ASUI Vice President Gary Quigley. Quigley told the Senate that he was in favor of the increase. He said that he visited most living groups talking in its behalf. However he likened the referendum to a mil levy increase, and said that by not showing up at the polls, the students indicated their lack of interest in the issue. He then voted against the resolution, effectively killing it.

In a surprising reversal from last week, when Hammer passed the Senate on an 8-4 vote, the Senate switched ends and gave her the opposite total.

The appointment bill for Hammer had been vetoed by ASUI President Lynn Tominaga because of the lack of an effective starting date. Tominaga's veto was sustained by the Senate, and a new bill was introduced.

That bill, with a starting date of June 1, failed on a 5-7 vote. The Senate then realized that it was without an editor for next fall, and went into a short recess to discuss informally what it would do. When it came out of recess, the bill was reconsidered, and failed once again, this time on a 4-8 vote, with Stacy Silva changing from "aye" to "nay."

It is not yet clear if a new bill for an Argonaut editor will be introduced at next Tuesday's meeting, which is the last of the year. It is understood that the Communications Board has said that it continues to recommend Hammer for the position, but there has apparently been no formal statement to the effect.

The fee increase issue is probably dead for the semester. The Senate will meet at least once this summer, and at that time will attempt to partially restructure the budget, which is already tight. Much will depend on how much money is left over from this year.

Senators who will remain in office through next fall say that it is almost a certainty that another referendum for a fee increase will be on next fall's ASUI General Election ballot. Fall elections usually have at least a 30 per cent turnout. The referendum was approved two weeks ago by a majority of those voting but the numbers of voters fell short of the constitutionally required 25 per cent.

In other business, the Senate approved the Operations

Budget of the SUB, with only minor changes, which had been agreed on by the SUB Board. The major change was a decrease in projected income for the SUB, based on the assumption that the new convention center planned in Moscow would reduce business at the SUB.

Also approved was a bill naming the members of a special committee of the senate that will develop a five-year plan for ASUI Communications. Graphic Arts Department, which was recently transferred to the jurisdiction of Comm Board from Promotions, was placed under the Production Department, which is also under Comm Board.

Judy King was appointed editor of the Gem of the Mountains. She previously had been recommended as a co-editor, along with Steve Bonnar, but the Senate defeated that bill, and returned it to Comm Board with the suggestion that only one person be editor.

Two resolutions concerning conservation also were acted on. The first dealt with a water utilization policy for the ASUI Golf Course, requesting the Administration to give it a high priority for water usage. The other, dealing with energy usage in the SUB, passed unanimously.

New prexy here today

The next president of the U of I intends to work closely with students. He added this will go further than working with ASUI officials.

Richard D. Gibb, who assumes charge of the U of I July 1, told a press conference yesterday at Lewiston High School he will work for informal relations with individual students. "I would like to walk across the campus and invite a student out for a coke," Gibb said. "I think the more we know about each other," Gibb said there will be fewer big problems.

Gibb is visiting the U of I today. He said this will be his only visit before assuming office. He was in Lewiston yesterday, meeting with the Board of Regents.

Gibb said he plans to work closely with all facets of the university. But he cautioned against expecting rubber stamped approval. "There is no way a president can satisfy all students, faculty and administration," he said.

The new president said he will need some time to acquaint himself with the university before making any changes. Gibb said he plans to take three to six months before any major personnel decisions are made.

The Idaho legislature will involve much of his time during that period, Gibb said, adding he is "very positive about working with the legislature". He said he plans to "let them know they're important" to the university.

Gibb will come to Idaho experienced in legislative dealings. Serving as the head of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education since 1974, Gibb administered that state's seven-university system. He served in a similar post in South Dakota previous to that.

In both posts, Gibb worked with state lawmakers. He noted that he has worked with legislators in three states.

Gibb was selected as the next president by a 18 person search committee in March and was confirmed to the post by the Board of Regents last month.

Exit interview for NDSL

All students with NDSL Loans are required by federal regulations to participate in an EXIT INTERVIEW prior to termination as a student from the school from which the loan was received. Those students with NDSL loans who will be graduating from or do not intend to return to the U of I at the end of this semester must come to the Student Loan Office, Room 211 of the Administration Annex Building for their EXIT INTERVIEW. This interview will provide to the student all the information needed to fulfill his/her obligation associated with the loan received. Please come in any time before your departure from the U of I.

Grad says sex facilities need more publicity

By JOHN HECHT

A U of I graduate student, following research on her master's thesis, has said in a letter that most women at the U of I are unaware of the facilities and information available at the university regarding sexual behavior, contraceptives and abortion.

Shellie West, of Moscow, working for an advanced degree in psychology, told Vice President for Student Affairs Tom Richardson that there should be a more effective program of informing the students of both sexes of the various services available. The Argonaut also received a copy of the letter.

Some of West's findings include:

--That approximately 50 percent of the women surveyed claim that they are not engaging in sexual activity or have access to contraceptives.

--The U of I Health Center is not giving out information regarding abortion referral, nor is it even making referrals to the Women's Center, where such information would be available.

--Forty-five percent of the women surveyed are sexually active and not using contraceptives. West said this is a combination of both individual choice and a lack of communication about knowledge of or access to contraceptives.

West listed some of the services available on campus in regard to contraception. These include the Health Center, which gives informal weekly seminars on contraception for both sexes and the prescription and dispensing of contraceptives by the Health Center. The Health Center also performs pregnancy tests for U of I women.

The graduate student also pointed out that the Women's Center provides pregnancy counseling, which involves review of alternatives available to pregnant women, including supportive counseling. The U of I Counseling Center also provides such information.

In addition, the Women's Center provides information regarding abortion referral, which includes information on doctors and clinics available and actual procedures involved.

Both the Women's Center and the Counseling Center provide post-abortion counseling. They also provide counseling for any post-abortion emotional reactions and adjustments.

The circus came to Moscow yesterday. Complete with lions, tigers and bears, it was a journey back to childhood to some, and a look at reality to others. Staff writer Jim Borden was in attendance, and came up with a few conclusions of his own.

Opinion from the stands Circus leaves something missing

By JIM BORDEN

Somehow the enchantment of the circus gets lost amid the outrageous prices of the concessions and the less-than-enthusiastic calls of the peanut salesmen.

Kids are great. They imagine the circus as an exciting show with death-defying acts and ferocious animals. They do not see the circus for what it is: a flashy way to make a buck.

Let it not go without saying that the circus was not without its oohs and aahs. There were several near misses and one actual miss in the aerial acts of the 4:30 show yesterday.

Certainly, these talented performers are to be applauded. But one could not help but notice the unfortunate conditions of the lions, tigers and bears that also performed. It must have been a treat for them to vacate their cramped quarters for that short period to stretch their legs and leap from one stand to another.

Still the Moscow Lions should be thanked for their interest and caring, but perhaps their time could be better spent next year.

One final note. I am glad I attended the 4:30 show. Had I gone to the 8 p.m. show, I would have missed Chevy Chase.

Locals grab Wallace bid

Commercial Builders, Inc., of Moscow was apparent low bidder to remodel the Wallace Complex Cafeteria at the University of Idaho.

The Moscow firm submitted a basic bid of $1,382,456 to expand the kitchen of the Wallace Residence Center and remodel adjacent cafeteria lines and dining areas. The new eatery, which will include a snack bar, salad bar and regular hot food service, is expected to open at the start of fall semester 1978.

The only other firm bidding on the project was Sceva Construction Co., Inc., of Spokane, Wash., which offered to do the work for $1,414,848.

George Gagon, U of I physical plant director, said the university will review both bids and submit a report to the governing board during its May meeting this week in Lewiston.

Notes in parting

The end...at last

With amazing predictability, spring semester, 1977, whimpers to a close. And it's about time, too. Somehow, there is nothing so gratifying as the end of school, and the eminent delights (or money-making toil) of summer.

This semester may not have been a particularly exciting one. However, it was pleasant, and perhaps more important, safe. We had a music festival, and no one was busted. We bit the heads off of expensive, experimental chickens, but no one was expelled. We also seem to have survived the much griped-about implementation of parking permits. Life was quiet in Idaho.

To Brad or not to Brad

As you may have already noticed, we have a staggering number of letters in this issue. It seems some students, especially women, were a bit ruffled by Mr. Loksen's opinions about lumpy ladies. A few questioned my sanity in printing such a nasty, sexist spiel. If, however, I held every letter I did not agree with, the Argonaut would have very few words from readers at all. Brad Preston may or may not fall into this category. I'm not telling.

Kudos and accolades

As the semester ends, so does the Argonaut. It is time to thank the unthanked, the durable toilers who skip classes and grow ulcers in the name of journalism. To our tireless writers, John Hecht, Ed O'Brien, Jim Borden, Bill Loftus, Betsy Brown, Marty Trillhaase, and Mark Erickson, I extend an editorial kudo. Too bad about all those incompletes and "F's," gang. It's been fun.

To our sports editor, Jeff Marshall, who never complains, even though the photo people give him a rough time, a quiet bravo.

This semester, Eddie Sue Judy has held the unenviable position of head copy editor. Not only does she have the task of correcting our spelling, she has to make sense of it all.

It is a miracle, but our production manager, John Pool, is still speaking to us. To John, and his staff of diligent typists, who put up with all sorts of grief from the editors, thank you, and loud huzzahs.

To our former editor, Mike Kossman, thank you. You made the Argonaut what it is today.

Our advertising staff, with Mark Becker in command, performed well this year. In addition, I want to thank the many community businesses for their support.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the ASUI senate for its continued interest in journalism.

HAMMER

A bigot here, a bigot there

After writing a column for the Argonaut for a semester and a half, sometimes I wonder how well I manage to get my point across. I'm thinking specifically of my last article. (The one I wrote the week before my friend Myrtle filled in for me.) My main point was that there is some rather vicious discrimination against women on this campus. It isn't always obvious, but it's there. And, in my own small way, I was trying to get rid of some of this prejudice.

To make my point, I used the example of a vulgar fraternity newspaper. And strangely enough, some people were so happy that I'd made a slam at the Greeks that they missed what I was trying to say.

I thought I made it clear that the frats have no monopoly on sexism - that I was only using some of their activities as "for instances". The fact is indisputable that the same sort of prejudice is widespread among dormies and off-campus people (A fellow named Sam Loksen, apparently a GDI, proved this by proudly parading his bigotry against women in a rather ignorant letter in Tuesday's Argonaut.)

So isn't this ironic? I wrote an article protesting bigotry, and a lot of people liked it for the simple reason that I reinforced another type of bigotry. If I can't do any better than that, maybe I ought to go back and take English 104.

But how does this hostility between Greeks and non-Greeks arise? It seems childish - like two little kids fighting because one likes chocolate ice cream and the other likes vanilla. So some people like to live off-campus or in the dorms. Others like to live in sororities or fraternities. Some Greek houses do have dreadful reputations. So do some dorms. What's the big deal?

As a woman who lives in a dormitory, I can share some of my own prejudices with you. My own hostilities towards Greeks arise from the deep-seated suspicion that I just wouldn't make it in a sorority.

What I mean is this: Greek houses select their members by how well these people fit in with a certain set of standards.

The people who meet these standards are "Good", and they get in. The ones who don't get booted out on the sidewalk.

The implication seems to be that those people who don't fit in with the Greek way of life are "inferior". Personally, I don't like etiquette, I don't like dress dinners and exchanges, and as a socialite I'm a failure. So, I know I wouldn't get along in a sorority. And I don't like the idea that I might be inferior to someone who would believe many non-Greeks feel the same way.

But, in all fairness, I've never met any people who live in sororities or fraternities who thought they were any better than the rest of us. Still, this isn't the image that comes off. Arrogance and a sense of superiority almost seem to define the word "Greek". All you folks out in sorority-fraternity land have a definite PR problem. (Think of this in the same way as you would a friend's reminder that "Scope, once in the morning does it!" It may be insulting, but it's meant for your own good.)

All that aside, the rest of us have a prejudice problem. Stereotyping Greeks may not be quite like stereotyping women or blacks or Chicanos, but the principle is the same. Aren't we big enough by now to tolerate people who like a different flavor ice cream or a different way of living than we do?

Land's sake

To the Editor:

I would like to thank you and your staff for the very fine job that has been done in the past year in covering conservation issues in the Moscow area. In the past, all too few people have been involved in deciding how our public lands should be managed, largely because they didn't know what was going on, or when.

By publicizing the many campus meetings that have dealt with our public lands, you have performed a real service to the campus community, as well as to the land itself. Thanks for a job well done.

Dennis Baird

Don't sit on it

To the Editor:

This letter is a semi-response to last Tuesday's letter entitled "Zoo Review." Undoubtedly you are now being deluged with piles of indignant letters from incensed ladies who object to being evaluated in this manner. It is a fairly predictable response; but, as usual, it is the truth that hurts.

Let's face it, gals. While it is unfair to generalize, one would be fairly accurate in stating that a large portion of the girls at the U of I have oversized posteriors - "Spud-butt", if you like. Not that this is a sin in itself.

Would I be venturing too far to suppose that a large portion of those letters you are receiving, dear Editor, state that one should "ignore external factors like bodies and look at the beautiful personality inside"? Well, this is all fine and dandy and sweet and nice, but also a bit naive. While a run-down body is no great flaw, it indicates a lack of self-respect on the part of its owner. One doesn't have to be a model or conceited jerk to have a good-looking body - just a willingness to get off your lazy ass and do some exercise. I do it myself; so do most of the guys I hang around with; why can't the girls do it, too? (Once again, I must apologize to those women that do exercise regularly.)

Because they are going to a school where the ratio of men to women is 3 to 1, girls don't have to compete very hard here to find male companionship, especially if they are above average in looks (Spud-butt and all). As a result they grow complacent, and even conceited. ("Well, Harry and George and four other guys have the hots for me, so I can tell Larry to get lost after I scrub my acne.") When a guy looks at your personalities, girls, he finds them about as attractive as your butts.

Sadly enough, even though one finds good-looking bodies at WSU - and yes, it's true that there is a much greater percentage of them there, no matter what anybody tries to tell you - I'd have to say that those bodies possess personalities that are at an even lower level than those here at Idaho. I'll hand it to you there, gals.

So don't go leaping down Sam Locksen's throat for handing you some truths, O Women of Idaho. When you get out in the big, wide, world, not many men are going to show much interest in you if you continue to display the habits that you do while attending the University of Idaho - if you haven't already nailed down a hubby by then, anyway.

Thanks.
Dan Faulkner

Thanks BOYS

To the Editor:

As I try to hold a pencil with my pudgy, fat fingers and try to write with one pudgy, fat hand - while the other is shoveling mexi-fries and baked potatoes with sour cream AND butter into my voracious pig's mouth (washing it all down with a thick malted, of course) - I am admiring the sleek, slim, sexy Greek gods which abound on the U of I campus!

Needless to say, none of these incredibly gorgeous boys have ever asked me out, and I have often wondered why. The sight of their casually mussed silken locks, combined with the unbelievably sensuous dirty Levi cutoffs, drives me to a frenzy. These fuzz-faced boys, with their pasty white limbs, fill my heart with desire. But alas, they never return my looks, and my dreams are unfulfilled.

No wonder I only seem to attract men! Boys do not appreciate my quick wit and innate passions, and they pass me by.

Thank you for printing these tips which allow me to understand how, maybe someday, I too can be tall, slim, and sexy, and these boys will really see me for the first time.

My Heartfelt Thanks
Deidre Ganopole

Warped

Mr. Loksen:

Are your values so warped that you are only attracted to the playboy-type of person? If that is so, then perhaps it is you that had best do the exercising. Only forget about your body. No matter what shape than your intellect and mental out-look on life.

The size of one's waistline, breasts and hips (from your letter I presume that you are a hip-man? - or at least think so), reflect very little about what people are all about. Just as I doubt that the size of your penis would tell us a whole lot about you. People are minds, emotions, souls and, yes, bodies to name just a few of their components.

But people are the sum of these parts. They are a very intricate meshing together of all this. When you single out one small part of a person to the neglect of the rest, you not only slight that person, but you slight yourself. I'm not sure which is worse.

Paul F. Moon

Bad taste

To the Editor:

Tuesday morning as we sat down to enjoy our fried potatoes in hopes of attaining the WORLD FAMOUS SPUD BUTT we began reading Mr. Loksen's letter in the Arg. Unfortunately this ignorant letter left a bad taste in our mouths ruining the entire breakfast. We thought the mold for this type of person has long since been discarded. Mr. Loksen is under the false notion that women were placed on this earth for men's pleasure only.

We hate to destroy his childish dream by exposing him to the facts of life.

Granted there are people on this campus who do not take care of their bodies, but this is to be found world wide, not just in Idaho. By touring WSU (a campus twice the size of Idaho) on a sunny day, Mr. Loksen is observing only those girls with "beautiful bodies" who are willing to present themselves publicly in their skimpy summer attire. Whereas if he went directly into the living groups, he would discover a radically different story. Mr. Loksen forgets that when living and eating in the dorms, he is subjected to a wider variety of people and habits. I am sure he too has his repulsive traits.

But all this is irrelevant when one considers the true person underneath the "acne infested" skin. Why should people conform to his standards which may or may not be important to them? People should not be judged on whether or not they look like Farrah Fawcett-Majors, but how they are deep within. Besides, who appointed Loksen God? He has no right to set standards for everyone else.

We could begin to discuss the quality of the male bodies on the Idaho campus, but we refuse to exist on such a superficial level. The years at Idaho have taught us that "good people can be found in all different sizes, shapes, colors and complexion types.

Fortunately we, along with many other people from this campus, have profited from this knowledge. Mr. Loksen, maybe if you ignored these "sows" unruly appearance and talked to them, you would discover they might have more to offer society than you.

Mr. Loksen, the only advice we could give someone with such a shallow philosophy of life is to sit in the sun with your beer and your Playboy, dreaming about all those ideal women and PLAY with yourself. For you do not deserve anything worth having.

Good luck Mr. Loksen!
(You'll need it)

Spud Butt & Spud Butt Not,
Toni Jones & Nikki Carrell
P.S. We would advise Mr. Loksen to go watch Carnal Knowledge. Jack Nicholson had the same problem you do and he ended up impotent.

TKE's speak

To the Editor:

While some fraternities are complaining about an anti-Greek bias in the ARGONAUT, we at Tau Kappa Epsilon this year have not found this to be the case.

When any living group does something constructive and newsworthy, it can receive recognition. The very first issue of the year carried news from our international organization that we had received the "most improved chapter award."

TKE's participation in the Untalent Show for Campus Chest and our Halloween Haunted House for UNICEF were carried in the ARGONAUT.

TKE deeply appreciates the complimentary editorial by Sue Thomas in the December 15 issue: "There are bright spots" on campus, "the TKE House participated in the Oxfarm Food Fast" for world famine "this year and gave $95 for the cause. Students ought to pick up on these types of humanitarian efforts."

Any living group may like a little positive recognition, we expect the ARGONAUT staff is no different.

TKE would like to take this opportunity to thank those who appeared in our Speakers - Reception program this year: U.S. Senator James A. McClure, Dr. Ernest Hartung, Dr. Tom Richardson, Dr. Sherman Carter, Dr. Auttis Mullens, Robert McAllister, James Barnes, David Warnick, Jeanette Driskell and Ellie Michaelson, Dean Harry Davey, Dr. Cliff Dobler, Sen. Norma Dobler, Representative Tom Boyd.

All our speakers have given outstanding presentations concerning the University, state, and nation, we at Tau Kappa Epsilon would publicly like to say: Thank you.

Golden rule

To the Editor:

I have been quietly "observing" this institution for four long years (instead of studying) and can no longer keep still.

I have become most uncomfortable with the endless bickering and name-calling between Greek and Independent.

Unfortunately, every semester, usually without fail, a person or a small group from a fraternity puts a blemish on the "honor" of the Greek system by pulling some bimbo stunt. What becomes more irritating than the "crime" itself is when letters are hastily sent to the Argonaut defending the existence of sororities and fraternities. (I am usually NOT critical of the Greeks. Actually, I am often quite jealous of their frivolous lives. However, I do manage to have a good time here in Moscow). What pisses me off is instead of the certain house writing and simply saying, "Yes, we do screw off occasionally, but you gotta be an ass hole once in a while if you want to retain your sanity," they resurrect the "name" of the Greek system by saying something like "But when we have these parties, we raise money and offer it to those who are 'less fortunate' than us."

In other words, they can get as drunk as they want and act like idiots as much as they please, and they always have the crutch of being a very "charitable" organization. (When the roll is called up yonder, they'll be there)

(If you were not sleeping in Psychology class that day, you may recall that this type of behavior is "known" as dissonance reducing)

Brothers and Sisters! Please do not crucify me on the cross of ignorance! For I realize that these kind of instances are what the Greek system is all about, "Preparing young adults for their place in society." After you graduate, as you achieve your standing in the capitalistic system (the greatest in the world), you

Now I shall proceed to further enrage all by withholding my name.

Viewing pleasure

To the Editor:
In response to "zoo review"
by Sam Loksen
Dear Sam:

I have to agree with you that we do have an abnormally high concentration of girls that we could call "FRUMPS", however, this percentage of our female population is not nearly so high as you would lead us to believe. Being a resident of the Tower known as obscenity corner (So known for the scenic view created when many of our ladies come out to sun themselves), I can vouch for the fact that we do have some pleasingly noteworthy females on campus, who make girlwatching very pleasant indeed.

Apparently, my dear sir, you have been living in a very deprived section of campus. My suggestion to you is to either move to another section of campus or shut your eyes and mouth. If you choose the former and choose a good location in which to reside, I'm sure you will find many of the women here at the U of I, if not more, then every bit as pleasing to the eye as the women at WSU.

Sincerely,
Daniel D. Thacker

Thar she goes!

To the Editor:

Sam Loksen's letter to the Argonaut was a disguised attempt to drive another species into oblivion. This species' common name is the Great Northern Land Whale. The Great Northern Land Whale Harpooner's Club Ltd., in conjunction with the Frito-Lay and Pepsi Cola Corporations has again increased the GNLW population to harvestable proportions. After spending millions on the media, and thousands of man-hours on this recent campaign which generated such memorable slogans as "Bet you can't eat just one!" and "Have a Pepsi day!", we resent Mr.

Loksen's attempts to undermine our organization.

If Mr. Loksen wants to reduce the number of land whales he should buy a tag and spearing license (which often resembles a bottle of Two Fingers Tequila) and join us on our next hunt, and give the game a sporting chance.

Hunting the Great Northern requires guts and nerve. Our last hunt almost ended in tragedy. We spied our quarry skulking along the sidewalk behind some cars (cars make excellent camouflage as this species instinctively knows). We had to act fast; she would soon be out of range. Our chief harpooner, "Tiny" who is 275 lbs of muscle really put his shoulder into it...and had the bad luck to hit an oil pouch. The pouch burst, drenching the street with high quality oil. Before we could get our danger signs up, a VW skidded on the oil and almost killed three law students walking to class. You can imagine the adrenaline in our systems, it was like taking three black beauties.

A real toad

To the Editor:

Mr. Sam Loksen must be a real toad, regardless of whatever physical attributes he might have. Toads like him live in puddles (very shallow) and give warts to those who touch them. One has only to open his eyes on this campus to see any number of beautiful young women - women who have been blessed with good health and good looks. And I congratulate them on their good fortune. But no one deserves the crude blanket condemnation in your letter.

Consider those of us who were not so blessed. Admittedly, there are young women and men (and not so rare as you seem to think) who really don't seem to care about their appearance. But while you swill your beer, gawking, many young people are struggling in what is, for them, a daily battle. Our society has really sold us on the importance of "body beautiful." It sure is great for the economy, anyway.

Apparently you have never had to subsist on carrot sticks, celery, and water, while your skinny friends scarfed down popcorn, potato chips, and milk shakes (and beer). You have probably never spent months faithfully counting calories and carbohydrates, and running laps only to find yourself a meager two pounds lighter for all your effort. Believe me, it's rough. Dietary habits are formed very early in life and are very hard to change. But the effect of those early years seems to hang around forever.

But your remark about "acne-infested sows" hit the bottom of the barrel. Obviously you have never had acne or you would understand how heart-breaking it can be. Acne is a skin disease and often has little to do with diet. So you face your harshest critic day after day in the mirror, counting each new blemish and praying one has gone away. You buy all the crap drugstores can offer, if you can afford it, but it doesn't help. So all you can do is wait. And wait. As you grow older it may go away. Maybe it won't. And even if it does, there may be scars.

Mr. Loksen, your puddle must be very shallow indeed, if you find it impossible to have a "purely platonic relationship." So shallow, in fact, that I can't see how you could possibly have any relationship of any kind, except perhaps with yourself (it's called narcissism) and other toads like you. Such a pity! I have wonderful friends and a beautiful man who loves me, and I wouldn't trade them for the best looks in the world.

No, Mr. Loksen, I don't need your advice on a subject you know absolutely nothing about, nor does anyone else. If you want to start handing out criticism about the shape of the female body, I suggest you take a course in human physiology and get a few facts. Then a lesson or two in compassion might help. Then perhaps when-if you grow up, when you are 45 and balding, and all your beer has gone to your belly, you might understand.

Mr. U of I

Dear "Sure as hell":

It is with great gratitude that we respond to your zoological studies. We believe that your kind concern should be recognized. First of all, we'd like to nominate you as Mr. U of I. We were so naive as to think there were no such male specimens around here. We rather thought most of the guys at the U of I were quite pleasant.

You seem to have made a real name for yourself (although I'm sure it couldn't be printed). Wherever you go on campus - you'll be a celebrity! But if looks could kill, we wouldn't have a celebrity anymore!

We really don't care to waste many more words on you. Although we would like to add - you probably would be much better off (us too!) at WSU next year. Just think of all those "attractive physical shapes" - with that "sure as hell" kept in shape bod of yours, and those looks that try (?) - you'll be beating them off (if they're that dumb)! Enjoy that "sheer heaven," old boy!

Where did all...

To the Editor:

Last Sunday was the first Sunday in May. Once upon a time that day was a cause for rejoicing amongst all University of Idaho students. It was a time when we forgot our differences, forgot that to some of us where a person lived or with whom that person associated caused strain upon our relationships. It was a time for gaining the insight that only a euphoric state can bring. A time when everybody was fairly united in their desires to do so.

Something happened, though, which changed all of that. Whether it was through the efforts of the university administration or the lack of interest exhibited by the student body, or due to a combination of the two, Blue Mountain died.

I believe that the most important contribution to its death was due to a change in the composition of the student body. With the advent of a dome built in the face of financial crises and leading to a decline in the quality of education, fewer and fewer people interested in their education stayed at this university. We still continued to grow, in population, but that growth was only superficial. The type of people, ie. the radicals, free thinkers, those that added some spice to life here in Moscow left us. Their departure effectively killed off the life of this university. That's what killed Blue Mountain, those same causes have just about killed off what remains of the once flourishing intellectual life here in Moscow...It's too bad, this place once had some pretty interesting potential.

C'est la vie,

Twice the fat

To the Editor:

I think Sam Loksen has a dis-ease - a fat head, a big mouth and tunnel vision. The stupidity and ignorance in his gross exaggeration concerning women's anatomy is truly disgusting!

Biologically women have at least twice as many fat tissues as males therefore prone to gain water weight in certain parts of their body, namely the arse.

Ironically, after I read the article the first person I saw was a slim, attractive woman walking into the Wallace cafeteria for breakfast. Since Mr. Loksen is probably from the Wallace complex he is perhaps surrounded by more overweight people than any other area in town. The Wallace cafeteria, as many are aware, is infamous for its starchy delights. During my walk from the Wallace Complex to the Music building I passed approximately 20 women of which only one was overweight.

People tastes and values including their prejudices are shaped mostly by the culture in which they exist. Many cultures, past and present, have viewed plumpness as a virtue.

Many artists, especially, during the Renaissance consider the plump figures fascinating as drawing subjects and prefer them to "skinny" models. Ancient Hawaii thought that obesity was a sign of great beauty.

Women are more than objects, contrary to your neurotic brain, Mr. Loksen. I do give a damn about you and people of your kind because your type of people are the ones that contribute the negativity to complicate peoples' neurosis. As soon as you can accept people for who and what they are maybe you can accept yourself.

I'm for people liberation

Up with Hammer

To the Editor:

We wish you to print this petition of support in the Argonaut.

The Argonaut has had its ups and downs this semester, as it has had its ups and downs over the years.

However, an editor for next fall was chosen by the Communications Board, which had a choice of five persons. The Senate rejected the Comm Board's selection of Rosemary Hammer, but as yet can't really explain why. Our student leaders seem to think that somehow magically a new editor will appear, but won't or can't say from where.

We have seen a definite improvement in the last two Argonauts, the ones that Hammer has put out. We do need and enjoy a good Argonaut. It is our paper. If an editor is not chosen now, will we have an Argonaut next fall?

We urge the Senate to reconsider its vote against Hammer as editor, and officially approve her this coming Tuesday, which is the last Senate meeting until next fall.

Love's louder

To the Editor:

In the past five or so Argonauts, many devout Christians have been trying to change Brad Preston's views of Christ by using the written word. They have quoted scripture, used argumentative reasoning, and have given personal testimonies. That's all very well in a lot of cases, but in this case, we Christians are missing the boat. Matthew 22:39 says "and a second is like it, You shall love your neighbor as yourself." This thought says, we should love our fellowman, Christian or not. Instead of preaching the Gospel to him, lets show Brad a little Christian Love and understanding.

Yours truly,

Best ever

To the Editor:

Just a brief note to say how much I have enjoyed the Argonaut this semester.

I think that you and your staff have done a really excellent job in getting out a good-sized, interesting, and well-balanced newspaper. The various controversial issues seemed to be covered fairly on all sides and I appreciated the faculty and sports news.

It is a difficult thing to do the work you have accomplished when there are various points of view on campus issues and you all are probably taking full-time or close to full-time course loads.

In the 28 years I have been on the faculty here, I have seen considerable variation in the quality of the student newspaper. A few years ago, most of us thought it hit a real low. Now, I think it is as good as I have ever seen it.

Congratulations on a job well done.

Choice beautiful

To Sam Lokson:

Too bad your dream of wine, women and pursuit of happiness has been hampered here at U of I. If you find it better fulfilled at WSU, why don't you transfer there?

I find it refreshing that ladies here can find the self-respect to dress how they like, not trying to impress people like yourself. Have you thought that perhaps our goals may not include being pursued by men? One way women can show their individuality is in the way they dress. I'm sure the people who do not clothe themselves to your expectations do not care what you think.

I agree the human physique is a beautiful thing, but so is the choice of how one wishes to use it.

Grave mistake

To the Editor:

It should seem evident to you by now, Mr. Loksen, what a grave mistake you have made. Also, the Arg should have had enough sense not to print such a highly emotional letter which had no firm basis. It seems evident that you did not give much thought to what you wrote.

To point out a few major gross errors. First, where did you get the idea that only women become "acne-infested?" According to doctors & what I myself have seen, men also seem to acquire acne.

Second, how did you know that the Playboy sales have increased? For you possibly to know, you, Mr. Loksen, would have had to have taken a poll. It would seem that the ratio of men to women at the U of I is large enough to account for high sales

And third, everything you said about women can also be directed towards men. After all, everyone is human, & what each one eats is his or her own business. Don't you agree, Mr. Loksen?

Since, Mr. Loksen, you believe as you do, why don't you take some constructive action, such as, forming a reform school for all of your "Idaho Spud Butts?" The woman population would be curious to know what course of action you would be willing to take to help them, doctor. Do be sure to tell us.

Signed,

Male species of the UI Zoo, it is now time for your review.

Unlike the females, who suffer exotic diseases while in captivity, the males seem to lose things. They lose their razors, combs, nice clothes, deodorant and manners. Their plummage becomes very scruffy. No wonder the females are put off by the males' futile attempts at the traditional spring courtship rituals!

Females succumb to the hideous disease, Idaho Spud Butt, for lack of incentive. When she sees all about her males with untrimmed beards, hair that hasn't seen a barber for months, clothed in Salvation Army bargains, she feels she has no reason to don her most colorful feathers.

The much larger, prestigious WSU Zoo boasts a greater population. The female portion of the Zoo is much larger than the smaller UI Zoo. Naturally there seem to be more unusually rare females at the WSU Zoo.

We, the reviewers of the males, unlike the female reviewers, realize there are some men around who are clean, neat and mannerly. And you will see these men with clean and neat female associations.

Go to Paradise

To the Editor:

This may not seem like an appropriate letter for the Arg. But lots of students buy music to pass the good and bad times in school. I think it's pretty sad to see big business or chain stores come in and try to put little private businesses out of the scene.

Vandals defeat Savages; end season tomorrow

By ED O'BRIEN

Freshman pitcher Brian Stokes stopped Eastern Washington's comeback attempt with the poise of a veteran in the late innings of Wednesday's game, and senior Steve Gregor continued his clutch hitting with a home run and a triple, accounting for four runs batted in, as the U of I took the wildness out of the Savages with a 9-4 win.

Idaho scored four runs in the third to take an early lead. Dan Stahnke and Dan Prohaska made it home when EWSC committed one of its four errors. Pat Bailey and Rick Britt reached base on consecutive singles and then Gregor tripled to push across two more runs.

Scoring three in the sixth and one in the seventh, the Savages came back to tie the score at 4-4 and finished starter Doug Brown, who had struck out six through six innings.

From that point on, it was all Idaho. Stokes (2-3) held EWSC scoreless the remainder of the game, striking out three along the way, and the Vandals put on a little rally of their own.

Steve Gregor blasted a two run homer in the seventh to give the Vandals all the runs they needed and added three more in the eighth to finish the scoring.

Pat Bailey had a good day at the plate with three singles and two runs scored. Roger Vanderhye and Rick Britt both had two hits for the Vandals on the day.

One bad note for coach John Smith came in the eight when Steve Gregor was hit by a pitch in the elbow and had to be taken out of the game.

Take a break from hitting the books for finals this weekend and head over to Guy Wicks Field. The Vandals will be looking for a four game sweep in an attempt to finish at .500 in the Northern Pacific League.

Today at 1 p.m. Seattle University will be here for a doubleheader and tomorrow at noon it will be the U. of Puget Sound for two more games. Last weekend on the road Idaho went 1-1 against each of the same two opponents.

Seniors Jim Guy (3-6) and Rick Ketring (4-6) are the tentative starting pitchers against Seattle, while senior Van Briggs (2-3) and junior Mike Hamilton (2-5) will start against Puget Sound.

Idaho hosts Big Sky tennis finals

The University of Idaho is the site of this year's Big Sky Tennis Championships scheduled today and tomorrow.

Five teams are entered along with Idaho, including Boise State University (5-13 season record), Montana (8-6), Montana State (9-12) and Weber State (17-14).

Idaho has to be considered the pre-tournament favorite as it sports a 27-6 season mark.

Idaho head coach Jim Sevall is the tournament director. He sees the championships as a two-way race.

"I really expect it to come down to a battle between Weber State and ourselves," Sevall said. "Boise State has a couple of good players but doesn't have much depth to be a contender and neither Montana nor Montana State have the strength."

Sevall added that his team got a big boost last weekend by walking away with the Washington State Invitational. The Vandals defeated all competition with wins over Washington State, 9-0, Eastern Washington State, 9-0, and the University of Oregon, 6-3.

"I don't know which match made me happier," Sevall said. "As far as I know, we have never beaten Oregon until last week, and Eastern Washington is a tough team, so to shut them out was really something. And to beat WSU, 9-0, we had to play real well."

"I think it gave us momentum going into this weekend's Big Sky tournament," he added.

The tournament will be held on the Ridenbaugh courts (Ad lawn), behind Memorial Gym and at the new courts near Ghormley Park.

Women netters close regular season action

The last week of regular competition for the University of Idaho women's tennis team will be a busy one with three matches scheduled for Friday and Saturday.

Friday, the U of I squad will be in Spokane, Wash., for a 10 a.m. encounter with Spokane Falls Community College. At 4 p.m., the Idaho women will again take to the courts, this time against Whitworth.

Competition continues for Idaho on Saturday when they take on intrastate rival North Idaho College at Coeur d'Alene at 9:30 a.m.

Barb Propst of Pocatello, Idaho's No. 1 player continues her winning ways with an 8-3 season. Propst added three more wins this week with victories over Kim Clark of Eastern Washington State College, 6-0, 6-1; Tana Sparks of Montana who is the defending Eastern Area champion, 6-3, 3-6, 7-6; and over Karen Eggan of Montana State, 6-1, 7-6.

Idaho's team record slipped to 3-8 when they absorbed three losses last week. On April 26, the UI squad lost a close contest to Eastern Washington State, 5-4, in Idaho's last home match this season.

In weekend action at Missoula, Mont., Idaho lost to Montana, 6-3, and to Montana State, 7-2.

Libyan labels Palestine key to peace in Middle East

By MARTY TRILLHAASE

The Palestine issue is the key to peace in the mideast, according to Libyan director of foreign affairs, Ahmed Shahati.

Shahati, who is the equivalent of the chairman of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee has been touring the U of I this week with 13 Libyan college students.

Shahati identified the major area of disagreement between the U.S. government and his nation as the Palestine issue. Shahati directed his remarks to a press conference Wednesday on the U of I campus.

"Our point of view on the Palestine issue is that the human rights of the Palestinian people should be restored," Shahati said.

Shahati said Palestinian refugees, who left their country following the formation of the state of Israel and the subsequent wars in the Mid East, should be allowed to go "to their homeland and live with dignity according to human rights issues."

Shahati added that Arab lands taken by Israel during the 1967 and 1973 wars must be returned to Jordan, Syria, and Egypt before a final settlement can be reached.

Shahati said Libya, which participated in an oil embargo against the U.S. in 1973 considers its oil to be a potential international

"When our heritage and principles are threatened by any nation, we will use these means to protect our heritage and our principles and the values of our revolution," he said. But Shahati added a future oil embargo isn't likely. He said the Libyan people are affected by economic problems in the industrialized world, such as an embargo would bring. But he added "As the U.S. has the right to form policy, we believe other nations will have the right in shaping their policy to deal with the issues." Shahati added Libya had lived 7000 years without the income from oil. "And they could do it again," he said.

When asked why he chose to speak on international affairs in a small town like Moscow, Shahati said the Libyan government has a high regard for Idaho. He noted that it was Idaho Congressman Steve Symms who made the first "people to people" visit to his country since its revolution in 1969.

Shahati expressed disapproval of the U.S. government's foreign policy towards his nation, but added hope for future improved relations. He said while visiting the State Department recently, "I got the impression that President Carter is adopting a policy of improving relations with all nations."

But regardless of the official U.S. policy towards his nation, Shahati said he has found an "understanding" with the American people for his country. He added he would like to see those relations strengthened.

"Indeed we found a great deal of potential cultural, economic, and scientific exchanges between the people of Libya and the people of the United States and we are working towards that exchange." He said "In return we hope and we expect an understanding from the American people of our problems and would appreciate their help in solving those problems."

Cultural and academic exchanges between the U.S. and Libya could involve the University of Idaho. Dr. Bibtana, a director of research at the University of Benghazi in Libya expressed hope that student and faculty exchanges between the U of I and Libya could be arranged.

Bibtana said such an exchange would be the beginning of improving Libya's position with the U.S. government. "We think it's a very effective way," he said, to begin such an action.

Libyan students visit for exchange of views

If you still think Libya is an oil rich country of two and one half million people who do nothing but ride their camels, look again. Libya is intent on entering the modern world by making a total commitment to education, according to Libyan student leader Aboelgader Bagdadi.

Thirteen Libyan students from the University of Garyounis and the University of Benghazi are currently touring Idaho universities.

After completing a three day tour of the U of I yesterday the students will tour BSU and ISU before returning home. The students are here at the invitation of ASUI President Lynn Tominaga, who traveled to Libya in February with Idaho Congressman Steve Symms.

Bagdadi is the leader of the Libyan Student union. As such, he represents all Libyan college students when dealing with that nation's government.

The two Libyan universities are completely funded by the Libyan national government, Bagdadi said. He added that any Libyan high school graduate can attend the universities free of charge.

Bagdadi credited Libyan leader, Col. Muammar Al Qadhafi, for the educational system in Libya. When asked to compare conditions in his country before Qadhafi came to power in 1969, Bagdadi said "There is no comparison. It's a comparison like you compare black and white colors."

Bagdadi said Qadhafi brought a change in the social order of the country. Where previously profits from the oil industry went to a few "special pockets," he said the revenues are now going for public services such as free homes, free medical services, public buildings and free education.

Libyan children start attending elementary school at the age of six, Bagdadi said. He noted that class attendance is compulsory. Following elementary school students attend another six years of schooling which are similar to American junior and senior high schools, he said.

The Libyan universities are expanding their curriculum, he said. Among the fields of study offered are Arts, Economics and Commerce, Law, Medicine Agriculture, Engineering, Pharmacy and Arabic and Islamic Studies.

The university graduates have no trouble finding employment, Bagdadi said. Besides the opportunity to join the university faculty, Bagdadi said, Libyan industries offer many opportunities for new graduates. The curriculum is based on the needs of Libya, he said.

There are two thousand Libyan students attending school in the U.S. and another eight thousand Libyan students attending European universities, he noted. Among the Libyans in Idaho is Salem O. Issa, who is a U of I engineering graduate student. Issa acted as interpreter for Bagdadi during an interview which was aired on KUOI Wednesday night.

"I would like to thank the students of the University of Idaho and the broadcasters of the University of Idaho for this chance," Bagdadi said, adding that he hoped the interview would allow Idaho students an insight into his country.

Some of the other activities for the Libyan students included a tour of the U of I campus including the SUB, a luncheon with ASUI officers, a steak fry Wednesday evening with the Moscow Chamber of Commerce and a ballet performed Wednesday night in the Performing Arts Center by 25 Libyan dancers who are accompanying the students

At faculty meeting

Calendar, ROTC lab time kept

In its first meeting since October, the U of I General Faculty approved early start academic calendars for 1978-79 and 1979-80, refused to end a policy prohibiting single section classes required for graduation from conflicting with ROTC labs and said farewell to Ernest Hartung as President of the U of I.

The early start academic calendar, presently used at the U of I, had been questioned by the Board of Regents earlier in the year. A late start system, similar to the WSU calendar was considered. Surveys taken of students and faculty showed support of the current system, however. At the Regents' meeting in Pocatello last month, board president A.L. "Butch" Alford did not call for further study of the matter.

February 18 Faculty Council approved a middle, as well as the early and late academic calendar. That action was later amended at last month's council meeting to support only the early start calendar.

Another issue that came before the faculty council last month was a move to reject a policy of prohibiting conflicting single section classes required for the graduation of ROTC students with ROTC labs.

Those labs are held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11 a.m. to noon. Some faculty members had argued this hour should not be restricted for the ROTC class.

Two weeks ago the Faculty Council rejected a motion calling for the elimination of this policy by a 14-3 vote. Economics associate professor David Campbell then petitioned the entire faculty to consider a "compromise" motion. Campbell proposed holding the ROTC labs at the "extremities of the day," rather than eliminating the policy entirely.

"The intent of this motion is to compromise," Campbell said, adding that the classes could be held in the early morning or late afternoon periods.

Faculty Council Chairman Bert McCroskey opposed the move, saying on campus ROTC programs should be encouraged. "The Faculty Council members seem to feel that officer training programs are much more realistic," McCroskey said, coming from the broad spectrum of a university than from a military academy.

Col. Richard Stockton, department head of the Naval Science program, told the faculty the present policy "seems to be the least disruptive." Stockton said ROTC schedules one lab class for all ROTC students to attend.

ROTC lecture classes are more flexible, he said, and meet at more than one time a day. But the lab brings all the ROTC students together, he said, adding it is "a big part of our program."

Since Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays are heavily loaded with university classes, Stockton said ROTC ruled out those days for the lab class. He added that arranging to hold the lab at any other time would be difficult. Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, he said, are traditionally used for science lab classes.

Stockton added that ROTC physical education classes, required for some ROTC students, are held five days a week at 6:30 and 8 a.m.

Kincaid case reviewed

An appeal by Brian Kincaid, former ASUI vice president, over the constitutionality of the possession of marijuana in the home will be heard this Friday by the Idaho Supreme Court meeting in Coeur d'Alene.

Kincaid was busted a year ago in Moscow, along with thirty other persons. Kincaid pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to nine months in the Latah County Jail.

Kincaid, who is currently free on bail, is basing his appeal on the "right to privacy," arguing that the state has no compelling interest on what goes on inside a person's home if it does not affect others.

At the time of the sentencing last year, District Court Judge Roy Mossman in a controversial pronouncement, called Kincaid a "danger" and said that because Kincaid had a position of "responsibility" in the student government, he also had a duty to act in "a more exemplary way."

Kincaid's appeal, which cites several sections of the U.S. and Idaho Constitutions, rests primarily on the precedent of Ravin v. State of Alaska (1975) in which the Alaska Supreme Court ruled that the criminalization of marijuana in the privacy of the home violated the constitution. The unanimous decision found that "privacy in the home is a fundamental right..."

Kincaid is also featured in the latest issue of "The Leaflet" the publication of NORML, the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. His profile is the second in a new series called "Casualties of the Marijuana Laws."

Attention UI Veterans

U of I veterans attending summer school are reminded there will be no GI Bill checks from June 1st until July 1st.

The following is the effective pay schedule for all veterans from the months of May through September 1st.

MAY 1: Full check for veterans attending summer school. Check for 13 days in May for those currently enrolled and not planning to attend summer school. Last month of prepayment.

JUNE 1: No check for any veteran. June check will arrive on July 1.

To the Editor:

I would like to express a deep-felt desire for reform of the apparatus distribution department of the Physical Sciences. My main concern is with the mistaken authority incurred certain individuals working within that department who take little thought in soaking chemistry students of their hard-earned money.

At the beginning of this semester I was loaned, from the apparatus room, a defective piece of equipment.

This defect was very slight and I could see how easily it was overlooked by the lessor, since it was merely an accessory on the larger whole. But, to my tearful anguish, upon my returning it at the end of this semester, it seems this piece of equipment is no longer acceptable. I was promptly assessed for the entire object with no compensation for depreciation. (I was charged the inflated price of a new one.)

I have neither seen nor read any written policy on damage to loaned items. However, I would assume that equipment returned in the same condition as received should be acceptable. Furthermore, if the department cannot be held responsible for noting the condition of articles when loaned out, in order to tell if the lessee is at fault, then I do not see how it can be given the authority to incur debts upon said lessee.

Agony

I cannot concentrate today,
My thoughts are filled with fear.
Because my teacher turned to say,
'A final test, my dears.'

I nearly fell, right off the chair,
My head was spinning fast,
The room was filled with silenced air,
All eyes were downward cast.

I studied hard all night and day,
My brain was working hard,
I even dreamt about the test,
The teacher was a guard.

And now the test is over with,
My thoughts again return,
I sigh a sigh of deep relief
My eyes no longer burn.

To the Editor:

A friend of mine and I called a professor in the art department and we asked him which type of a person he thought was easier to draw, "plump" looking women, or "slim" looking women, and his response was the "plump" looking women because they were easier to draw and shade.

I do agree with Sam Loksen about some women being overweight, but that is no reason for him to put them down. But if he was overweight I don't think he would like people to put him down.

What I think Mr. Loksen is trying to say is that if a woman walks up to him and says she's overweight then she's supposed to go on a diet and lose weight.

Most of the women I see are mostly "slim" and I really don't see how Mr. Loksen got the impression that women turn into "sows" after they get out of high school.

Some men just think that if a woman doesn't have a good looking "arse" then he shouldn't go around her. I think if men would see the kinds of "personalities" that women have, then I think Mr. Loksen would take back what he said in his letter.

I'm very sorry to hear that

Sam Loksen feels that way about overweight women. Because to some people in different states or even in Idaho some people think "fat" is beautiful. I have seen a lot of males that were overweight in the fraternities but I don't consider them "UGLY". I more or less judge people by respect and personality.

Eva J. Boone

Take that, Sam

To the Editor:

In response to your "Zoo Review" critique, Mr. Loksen, I must say that in reality it is not an objective critique, but a banal, immature exposition of gross ignorance, lack of sensitivity towards both women and men and finally a lack of personal insight into life on your part.

In one sense your letter does not even merit printing. Instead of presenting a maturely written, constructive and objective analysis of a very real health problem (obesity), you choose to point out and distinguish various characteristics and "non-attributes" of the women attending the U of I in a painfully clear expression of the type of violent, sexually prejudiced thinking practiced by a large percentage of the male populace on this campus. Does the phrase "this old boy" mean anything to anyone?

(In all fairness this lack of healthy thinking is not solely restricted to the U of I. However, in my opinion, it seems to exist here in undue quantity, perhaps out of proportion to other, more enlightened college communities I've had a chance to observe).

Not only do you express very insulting and demeaning attitudes towards women, as in the same moment, you are also insulting a large percentage of the male population who have better things to do than to spend all of their time engaging in a "sport" known to all males girl watching" as you so inaccurately imply all males do. Has the possibility ever crossed your mind that there do exist some males who are sensitive and attracted to women for their total being and not just for play objects to be pursued sexually with the additional pleasures of "beer and sun" to stimulate the conquest? Or are these men the "pods and geeks" you so grossly refer to them as being???

You continue, and I must say quite creatively, to relate the eating habits and mannerisms of women in the cafeteria line "a cross between the Chicago stock yards and Ladies day on all-star wrestling". This sequence of insults, though hardly deserving comment, clearly delineates in my opinion, your feelings of personal insecurity, male sexual anxiety and a disposition towards aggression and violence in your attitude towards women. You go on to note how "Playboy" magazine has never sold better on this campus. In reference to your unhealthy attitudes toward real women, I can see why you would attempt to find solace and security within the bounds of this fantasy trip. You seem to completely rule out the beautiful interactions that can take place between spiritually and sexually healthy men and women. Your all consuming interest in the childish game of pursuit-and-catch seems to override all other facets of human communication and awareness.

In reference to your next paragraph, there are to women (this is almost too obvious to write), other things in life than being pursued as sexual objects, one being the inherent desire to be treated as a person in her own individual right and Not to have her integrity and self worth robbed through the arbitrary desires and wanton manipulation your kind of thinking seems to repeatedly extoll. Another obvious point I must bring up here is that most women are not out to win your kind of attention or so called respect.

Considering the fact that you seem to have so little of this "respect" for yourself, I think I'll pass on it, thank you.

Next you continue on to say what you think is an obvious impossibility - a platonic relationship without the pleasures of "wine, women, song and the pursuit of happiness". This statement in itself is yet another indication of where your ill-placed priorities within a learning institution lie (an issue I won't pursue here). The only reason your "pursuit of happiness" at the U of I has been disrupted is due to self destructive actions on your part, Mr. Loksen.

Along these same lines, how many women do you think would honestly agree with your statement, "If women tried more they'd be impressed by the results". Do you mean to say, Mr. Loksen, that if I exhibit myself as a shapley prime prospect on the meat block, I'll be rewarded with your thwarted respect?? If your answer is "yes", you have some serious reconsidering to do concerning the nature of reality.

Yes, a female body is beautiful, as are many natural phenomena, however, it is beauty not to be marred and desecrated by such blatantly insulting and hostile sexist attitudes you seem to so generously possess

Finally you make an attack on the Women's Liberation movement. Isn't this subject a little out of your scope of understanding, when, like a confused, lost child taking seeming revenge on the world, you cry out, "So, hello women's liberation and I don't really give a damn what you think."

Unfortunately, for many of us, it is not quite as easy to dismiss so casually as you do, this very controversial, explosive and socially vital issue. It is not just a question of women's liberation, but in the final analysis, a question of human liberation. In conclusion, hello liberation and I do give a damn what you think, Mr. Loksen and I DO CARE. I have to.

To the Editor:

"Play It Again Sam"
In reply to Mr. Sam Loksen's letter of Tuesday, May 3rd.

Dear Sam,
In reply to your Tuesday Slaughter of the U of I women, we'd like to bring your attention to your difficulty with mathematics. To put the record straight, the ratio of males to females at the University of Idaho is three to one, respectively. At WSU, the ratio is about eight to five, females to males in this case. Not only is there a higher ratio of women, but the number of people that attend WSU is considerably higher than here. If you also consider the number of males at the U of I that are actually MEN, the women here are in dire need of MEN, period.

It is rumored that the majority of the boys here personally own stock in the Clearasil corporation. They also have been known to donate the grease from their hair to cook the Wallace Cafeteria french fries. But let us not dwell on physical characteristics; they speak for themselves. Let's get down to the nitty gritty and discuss mentality. Oh, yes, chivalry is not dead at the University of Idaho - it thrives! Quite often we are serenaded until all hours of the night (and morning) by men's (?) living groups. Echoing off our walls are such lovely tunes as "Shoup sucks!" and catchy jingles like "F--- McConnell!"

Sam, dear, you speak of the "cold slap of reality" - that is nothing compared to the swift kick in the derriere received by the women at this educational institution. At least the women here can improve by diet and exercise. For you boys there is no hope; degenerate personalities and a severe lack of couth cannot be remedied through simple diet and exercise.

To illustrate our point, wasn't it just a few weeks ago that two valuable chickens were executed in a rather poor excuse for a good time? (Sorry, ATO's, but you haven't heard the end of it yet.) And then how about the lovely volley of musical profanities accompanying Monday night's black-out? Then there was the time a male hall stripped one of it's members, tied him up, and deserted him in a female dorm. The general attitude of the ladies present was apparently nonchalant; they gave him a towel and, in not so many words, told him to come back when, or if, he reached puberty.

Let's face it, Sam, there are weirdos in every crowd - male and female alike. One man's dream is another man's folly, isn't that how the saying goes? Obviously, Sam, your head isn't on your shoulders. You say you don't care what we think; we wonder if you are capable of thinking at all with your head in such a tight spot.

Arg picks best flicks of '76

By MARTY TRILLHAASE

From the simplistic fantasy of Rocky to the cold realism of All the President's Men the American public was treated to some of the finest films seen in years in 1976. There were some bombs of course, but nowhere near the amount of turkeys found the year before.

At the top of the list is Rocky. Admittedly it is a film made many times before. The plot is standard 1930 Frank Capra, where the American Dream does come true for the underdog. Some upper lip critics might doubt the film's viability because the hero does end up at the top.

So be it. Rocky is the first picture this writer has seen in a long time that left him with a pleasant feeling.

What seems amazing are the similarities between Rocky and another dark horse candidate for the academy award in 1955. Marty won the best picture, best actor and made a huge profit.

Rocky, which at last count won the Golden Globe Award, the Academy Award and a $70 million gross, was made in 29 days with a $1.1 million dollar budget. Sylvester Stallone wrote the script in a frenzied 89 hours of sweat and No Doz.

One friend told me Stallone visited his school in Switzerland last Spring (about the time he finished filming Rocky) and told him his plans were to sit back and make a million dollars. With a 10 per cent take, he stand to earn close to $7,000,000.

But more than that, Stallone took a personal dream and made it real for millions of Americans. Perhaps we need more films like Rocky.

While not aspiring for greatness, Silver Streak achieved its goal—giving the audience one hell of a good time. What starts out as a comedy becomes a suspenseful show. Not exactly an easy thing to do. Gene Wilder and Richard Pryor were excellent, with Pryor stealing most of the show. If you didn't see this one, you missed something.

In what may have been his finest portrayal to date, John Wayne produced a mystifying blend of the real and imagined with his performance of the dying gunslinger in The Shootist.

Word had it that The Shootist might well have been Wayne's final film. If correct, he couldn't have picked a better farewell vehicle to generations of American movie goers, who grew up with Wayne's 200 films.

Using film clips from Wayne's 50 year collection of movies as a character biography, The Shootist hinted the character was not only riding off into the sunset at the closing, but Wayne's death might be final. A world without John Wayne seems almost unimaginable. And despite the many flaws of his films, they will be missed.

While he is not the "Duke", his fans consider Clint Eastwood as much the superstar. Eastwood had two films out this year, The Outlaw Josie Wales and The Enforcer (Dirty Harry III). Of the two, The Enforcer was the better. Eastwood doesn't design his films artistically and they should not be taken that way. The Enforcer is not as good as the original Dirty Harry, but the film series are somewhat comparable to the James Bond flicks of a decade ago. They're just fun movies.

Of course this isn't something to recommend to your mother.

Perhaps the finest semi-documentary film in years was All the President's Men. Based on the best seller by Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward, the two Washington Post reporters who cracked the Watergate scandal, All the President's Men accomplished the near impossible. It told a well-known story objectively and made it click. It also did another difficult task; showing Robert Redford could act. And produce. And organize

Fab Fours' Magical Mystery tours tonight

By DAVID NEIWERT

The Beatles need no introduction to people who grew up in the sixties. They not only were a major part of the culture, they were perhaps the prime movers in that culture, and their effect is still felt today.

The Summer of Love in 1967 was when the Beatles were at their peak — most notably, they made Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band and Magical Mystery Tour that year. The latter was actually the soundtrack from a BBC special of the same name, starring the Fab Four themselves.

Until recently, that film was largely unavailable for mass viewing. But in the fall of 1974 it was put on the distribution lists of a few film companies and immediately became a big hit among Americans who had previously been unable to view this now-classic film.

The ASUI Film Society is bringing Magical Mystery Tour to the U of I campus tonight as their last film presentation of the year. Showing in the Board Theater at 5, 7 and 9 good talent.

Redford initiated the project shortly after the book came out, buying the rights one step ahead of another actor who wanted to produce the Watergate story, Dustin Hoffman. Fortunately, Hoffman decided if he couldn't beat them, he'd join them taking one of the lead parts. Both Redford and Hoffman gave the performances of their careers, although Hoffman told Time magazine he wasn't totally satisfied with his part.

The greatest asset of the film was that it kept the objective style of the book. It did not set Nixon up as a completely evil villain to be disposed of and Woodward and Bernstein as the shining knights out to slay a dragon. They were simply two reporters trying to do a good job, with no more intelligence or heroic fortitude than most people.

Now the zeros. At the top of the list has to be the recent production of King Kong. All one can say is that with a $72 million budget, the new King Kong fared worse than the original 1932 production, which was more believable, more entertaining, and believe it or not, more advanced technically.

A Star is Born, another remake, should be mentioned briefly.

p.m., admission is $1 per person. Showing with the film are two other Beatles shorts, one a collage of Beatles history and the other a documentary of their 1964 Washington, D.C. concert.

Magical Mystery Tour opens with poor Ringo attempting to cope with his nagging aunt. He takes her on a special bus tour that promises to be a wild, fun time. Other tour members include John, George and Paul, as well as members of The Bonzo Dog Doo Dah Band, and assorted actors.

The tour turns out to be something different than expected. A clan of wizards, perched on a cloud somewhere above the bus, sets a series of spells into motion that catapult the folks on the bus into an hallucinogenic fantasy world. The wizards, of course, are all played by the Beatles. The film, with its bizarre and intriguing effects, and the musical score by the Beatles (including songs like I Am the Walrus) becomes an acid head's heaven.

Phosphate mining stirs environmental action

Phosphate mining in southeastern Idaho and environmental impact statements were the topics at Thursday's Friends of the Environment meeting. It was the group's last meeting of the semester.

Charles Hendricks was the guest speaker at the meeting. Hendricks is the supervisor of the Caribou National Forest in southeastern Idaho near Pocatello. The forest encompasses about 1 million acres.

A major part of the western phosphate field lies within the boundaries of the forest. The field may contain up to 45 per cent of the United States' phosphate reserves. Currently, there are two active phosphate mines in Caribou National Forest. According to Hendricks, they produce about 3 million tons of phosphate ore yearly.

The controversy about phosphate mining in Idaho centers largely around environmental concerns. The refining process requires large amounts of energy and pollutes the air. The mining aspect aroused the ire of environmentalists because of access problems, site disturbance, and the large acreages involved with the mines.

In 1973, because of increased agricultural demand, "the price (of phosphate) went way up and boom! Everyone started looking to activate phosphate mining operations," Hendricks said. Because of the large reserves on Forest Service lands, and because mining interests began to push for their exploration and development, the federal government initiated an environmental impact study. The study would determine what the effects of large scale mining would be on the Caribou National Forest.

About environmental impact statements, Hendricks said, "Basically we have to watch that we don't overproduce on the unimportant aspects. There is a tendency to make them too complex and too voluminous." He also said the procedures for their preparation must be tightened up.

"We haven't done a good job in following a precise procedure," he said. "In most of the cases, we haven't been concerned enough with procedures. I think that sometimes we get too wrapped up in them and miss the real objections to the content."

"I think we're a lot better managers when we're under pressure," he added. In relation to environmentalists Hendricks said, "Your comments, your opposition, and sometimes your outright beating of us (the Forest Service) is good for us. I'm not saying that you should always win, but sometimes it's useful."

Injured student files suit

A U of I student injured in a bar fight last Saturday filed a $165,000 personal injury suit yesterday against the man accused of assaulting him.

Johnny W. Gipe, 22, brought the damage suit in Second District Court against Allen R. Hattenberg, 22, Moscow, as a result of the incident just after midnight Saturday at the Alley Tavern. Hattenberg was arrested for aggravated assault Tuesday and is free on $250 bond pending further action in the criminal case.

Gipe alleges that Hattenberg poured beer on him, then struck him several times on the face with a beer glass when he attempted to leave. Hattenberg continued to hit Gipe with the glass after the glass had shattered, causing several facial lacerations, Gipe's complaint said.

Gipe was treated at Gritman Hospital and required stitches to close the wounds, he said.

He is seeking $150 in medical expenses, $10,000 in general damages, an undetermined amount for future plastic surgery to correct the scars, $100,000 for permanent disfigurement of his face, $50,000 in punitive damages and $5,000 in attorney's fees. Gipe asked for a jury trial.

Attorney Lynn Farnworth of Moscow is representing Gipe.

Faculty lauds Hartung's leadership

The faculty of the U of I at its general meeting Tuesday praised the man who has led the institution the past 12 years.

leadership as the twelfth president of this university, 1965-77."

The inscription noted the faculty thanked Hartung for: --"Fostering the concept of a university as a scholarly community of faculty, students and administrators.

--"Enhancing the quality of teaching, research and service.

--"Finding peaceful means of resolving problems during the turbulent '60s.

Tower tossers dangerous kind

Throwing objects from dormitory windows can lead to criminal charges and eviction if the thrower is positively identified, according to campus authorities. But, that identification is "difficult if not impossible" to get.

Attention turned to falling objects last week when a Theophilus Tower custodian was slightly injured by a water balloon from an upper floor and nearly struck by two railroad spikes. Custodian Mary Green said the spikes landed less than 10 feet from her.

Green did not press charges because, she said, the throwers were not necessarily the residents of the rooms the objects came from so she could make no positive identification.

If someone were injured or property damaged and the thrower could be identified, the thrower might eventually receive a criminal conviction. Disturbing the peace and assault are two possible charges against throwers if an injured party signs a complaint, according to Ed Schmitz, campus police chief.

One thrower was convicted early this year after a throwing incident last fall, Schmitz said. Schmitz said campus police would cooperate with housing if the campus agency pursued flying object problems. "We will pursue any complaint from housing just like we would any other complaint. We have no hands-off policy," he said.

Ron Ball, dorm coordinator, said, "As with anything where injury or property damage is involved and our staff member that's there doesn't think he or she can handle it, we'll notify campus police." He said perhaps an officer could talk to residents and get them to settle down.

Ball recently said he notified resident advisors, as he has many times in the past, to discuss the problem with dorm residents. He said if a thrower is positively identified he or she may be referred to either campus judiciary boards or the civil judiciary system.

Green and several Tower custodians said last week's balloon bombing was not an isolated incident: it drew special attention because someone was hit. The custodians told of a watermelon from 11th floor damaging the roof of a Volkswagen, and of flower pots, cans of rocks and even a cat plummeting from the building's upper floors. One custodian said, "If they keep it up somebody's going to get killed."

The custodians called for two protective measures against falling objects. They suggested installation of heavy screens over Tower windows and attaching an awning over the dumpster area on the building's side.

Overseas aid contest

The Institute of International Education has announced the opening of the 1978-79 competition for grants for graduate study or research abroad in academic fields and for professional training in the creative and performing arts. It is expected that approximately 550 awards to 50 countries will be available.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, who will generally hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, will be proficient in the language of the host country.

Candidates for 1978-79 are ineligible for a grant to a country if they have been doing graduate work or conducting research in that country during the academic year 1977-78.

Selection is based on the academic and or professional record of the applicant, the validity and feasibility of the proposed study plan, the applicant's language preparation and personal qualifications. Preference is given to candidates who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad.

Information and application may be obtained from Dr. Ronald Stark, Fulbright Program Adviser at the U of I in 111 Morrill Hall. Deadline for submission of applications to the Adviser is October 1, 1977.

There Are Bigger, Fatter,
Chromier, Knobbier
Cassette Decks Than The
New Advent 201A. But.

If you would like a cassette machine with unsurpassed performance, (and one that will let you get all of that performance in everyday use), you can't do better than the new Advent 201A.

The 201A is the successor to the machine that made a hi-fi medium out of cassettes. It has, among other things, a new record/play head, the Sendust head, that offers an ideal combination of performance and durability. And it offers the wide-range, low distortion, and super-quiet background (thanks to the Dolby System, which Advent introduced to cassette recording) of the original 201.

Above all, though, it offers the most effective, easy-to-use recording controls of all tape machines we know of. It makes superb recordings in actual day-after-day use, not just in theory. And it makes experts out of people who don't want to devote their lives to machinery.

So don't be fooled by its understated appearance and non-thousand-dollar price. For $399.95, the new Advent 201A is everything a cassette recorder really ought to be.

in interior design contest

Two U of I interior design students have won cash awards in the second Annual Student Design Competition sponsored by Design Center Northwest, Seattle, Wash.

Cindy L. Hoovel won first prize and $1,000. Dennis Pedersen won third prize and $250. Both are seniors.

While cash prizes are for the students' own use, they netted $500 for the U of I

Interior Design Program as well. The contest, themed "A Regional Museum of American Heritage in Design," attracted more than 60 student entries from interior design programs in Idaho, Washington, and Oregon.

Second prize was won by an Oregon student and a Washington State University student received the honorable mention award.

Chile visitor teaches astronomy seminars

Chile is a long way from Idaho, but a U of I astronomer who spent last year at Cerro Tololo working with the world's third largest telescope will add those experiences to a pair of seminars in astronomy this summer in North Idaho.

Tom Ingerson, associate professor of physics, will join a staff of professional astronomers and instructors for outdoor sessions Aug. 7-13 and Aug. 14-20 at Farragut State Park on Lake Pend Oreille, 25 miles north of Coeur d'Alene.

The seminar program is divided into small sessions which will explore different aspects of contemporary descriptive and observational astronomy," Ingerson said. "There will be many activities at all levels, suitable for people from the novice to the advanced amateur."

"Participants will be able to choose a program of activities based on their own interests and pursue them at a pace they desire," Ingerson noted. Enrollment will be limited so each participant may receive individual instruction and assistance.

Robert Kearney, U of I professor of physics, said a variety of astronomy related activities will be offered to participants and their families.

"Besides a star party and scheduled viewing times on the telescopes, we'll have programs on such topics as astrology, extraterrestrial life and science fiction movies," Kearney said.

Site of the seminars will be wooded, secluded Thimbleberry Group Camp which offers facilities for tents, campers and travel trailers (no electrical hook-ups).

"The fee includes a family campsite and the use of the park facilities, but participants must provide their own camping gear and food," Kearney said. Reservations, at $20 per participant, will be accepted on a first-come, first-served basis with the balance payable 10 days before the start of the session.

Further information on the seminars is available from the U of I Office on Continuing Education, 1044 Blake St., Moscow 83843.

Rich Little big man at WSU

Rich Little, one of today's most popular and talented impressionists, will perform at the WSU Performing Arts Coliseum this Saturday at 8:00 p.m. for Mom's weekend.

His portrayals of personalities like Johnny Carson, Jimmy Stewart, and Richard Nixon have propelled him into the limelight of the nation's top clubs and television shows.

In his concert appearances, Little zooms through at least three dozen impressions in a single show, selecting them from his repertoire of over 160 caricatures. He combines both comedy and song throughout his performance and pays tribute to former stars like Humphrey Bogart and Clark Gable. Tickets are for reserved seats and are priced at $6 and $5. They can be purchased in Pullman at the CUB, Coliseum Box Office, and Budget Tapes and Records; Lewiston at Budget Tapes and Records; and in Moscow at the Magic Mushroom and Paradise Records and Plants.

Zakarison wins in Latin translation

Elizabeth Zakarison, a senior U of I classical studies major, has won first prize in a Latin translation contest sponsored by Sigma Phi, the national classics honorary.

Zakarison, a second-year Latin student, competed with students at all levels from all over the country. Her award includes $35.
