Pro-life booth draws criticism

By KIT FREUDENBERG

Controversy arose last weekend over the Right to Life exhibition booth at the Latah County Fair. The pro-life faction opposing abortion as a form of birth control won a first place blue premium ribbon for their exhibit.

The use of posters and slides depicting aborted fetal babies provoked most of the criticism, said Gordon Dailey of the fair office. However, he said that the fair's censorship rules only cover nudes in art exhibits. As many as 20 complaints had been turned into the fair office Saturday, said Dailey.

Jenifer Klindt contacted at the Women's Center said they had urged people to complain to the fair board about the booth. She said, "We've always understood that the Latah County Fair was a family event." Klindt also said she questioned the "highly inflammatory and distorted material" shown and the effect it had on children who saw it.

Janice Scott, wife of the president of the Moscow's Right to Life Chapter, said the fair office requested Friday that several of the more objectionable slides not be shown. She said the slides had been shown twice on Friday to adults. Also, persons running the exhibit kept the pictorial literature under the counter, she said.

Moscow School District second graders attended the fair on Friday afternoon. A woman at the booth Saturday said they did not show the slides when the children went through.

"She lied," said one mother of a Westpark student. She said her son had seen the slides and poster and asked, "Did they cut the baby out? Is that what happened?" The boy's father said the pro-life faction could have made their point without the pictures. "I didn't want him to see that."

A teacher escorting the children said she received comments from her students about the "baby in the cradle" at the exhibit. She said she believed most of the children did not see the slides or posters.

Scott said she was amazed how people were shocked by the pictures, but not by the act of abortion. The reaction towards the Right to Life organization was positive, she said. Scott said the chapter has tried for a different presentation "but were inexperienced." She said she did not know if the organization would have another exhibit next year.

Dailey said the fair board had not yet discussed whether or not they would stop another exhibit. He said, "Had we known, I don't know what we would have done."

Klindt said, "We are definitely not questioning their right to present their view point, but we are questioning how they present it."

Plastic foils football fans

Gate personnel checking football fans Saturday night surprised a few by prohibiting gallon plastic containers.

Some students solved the problem by cutting off the top of soft plastic bottles. Others with gallon thermoses and coolers had to leave the containers outside.

Ed Schmitz, chief of campus security, said, "There were a few more bottles and cans" than he had wanted to see. However, the crowd conducted itself well, he said.

Ticket takers confiscated about 20 invalid student identification cards at the north entrance. Gate attendants admitted students who showed yellow fee receipts. An attendant said that the student ID's could be recovered at the controllers office.

Coors brewery owner target of songwriter's ballad

(ZNS) Joseph Coors, the owner of the Coors Brewing Company in Golden, Colorado, and a generous supporter of the John Birch Society, has become the subject of a popular song. The lyrics of the single, titled "The Ballad of Joe Coors," accuse Coors of forcing prospective employees to take lie detector tests in efforts to screen out pro-union people or gay people. In addition, the song accuses the company of practicing hiring and promotion discrimination against women and blacks.

On the flip side of the 45-record is another song dedicated to strikers titled "Coors Brewery." Both numbers were written and sung by Kathy Kahn, a performer who has twice been arrested on the Coors picket line and is currently standing trial on criminal charges related to her picketing activities. Kahn is accompanied by guitarist Danny McMahon, who is also a Coors striker.

Swine flu lives on for government

Government as a result of swine flu damages.

The newspaper says that government attorneys have received claims from citizens who say the swine flu shots have caused everything from paralysis and death to stained blouses. So many claims have been filed, Justice Department lawyers say, that it could cost the taxpayers $25 million and take five years just to litigate them, even if the government wins every case.

The procedure is so complicated, The Journal says, that the Justice

Well, even if you don't, the government sure does.

The Wall Street Journal reports that the government's massive inoculation program last fall, which vaccinated nearly 48 million Americans against the so-called swine flu epidemic, is now causing a massive headache for the U.S. Justice Department.

The Journal reports that Justice Department attorneys are expecting as many as 2500 claims totaling more than $2 billion against the Canines continue controversial capers on campus.

Dogs under fire again

With the return of students to campus, dogs continue to create controversy between faculty, staff, students and police.

Dogs on campus cause about 2 - 5 complaints per day, said Ed Schmitz, chief of campus security. When answering a complaint about a loose or barking dog, the police first try to contact the owner, he said. Then, if the owner cannot be located, said Schmitz, the dog is impounded.

Because the university is part of the city, the dog catcher can drive on campus and pick up stray dogs, according to Clark Hudson, Moscow's chief of police. He said a first offense costs five dollars and a $1 per day kennel fee. The impoundment fee doubles at each offense up to $20.

The ASU Senate passed a resolution last spring asking all dog owners to keep the animals off campus during classes.

Reaction to the problem varies. One student said the dog would be barking at home or on campus. "It really doesn't matter where," he said. Some professors and staff members complain about the tied dogs barking and interrupting classes, according to several complaints.

ID cards give spouses priviledges

Student Spouse Cards are now available in the Student Union main office, according to Hilary Lutman, cashier. The identification cards cost $15.

Married non-students holding the identification cards will be regarded as students for both athletic and general student activities.

The only difference between holding regular and spouse I.D. cards is that the non-student spouse is not able to check out books from the library with the card or use the infirmary's services. However, students are allowed use of these facilities.

The spouse card is a "good deal," says Lutman. A student's wife or husband regularly pays $2 for each football game and $1.50 for basketball games, whereas the student is admitted free. The total cost of all home games would be well over the cost of an identification card.

The card permits use of the womens' and mens' gyms, lockers and facilities. Only card-holders, faculty and their spouses and university staff are able to use the facilities.

Swimming is free of charge to the card holder. Currently, swimming costs $1.50 per adult, or $15 per semester, the same as the cost of the student spouse card.

Entertainment is generally less expensive to card holders, though there are no fixed prices.

Plays, musicals, and dance performances in the Ernest W. Hartung Theatre usually charge less to students and married non-students with I.D.'s.

The cards are sold to couples who provide proof that one is a student and that they are married. Lutman claims she accepts proof in the form of a joint checking account, same name and address, or a marriage license.

Mike Downum

Downum quits KUOI

Mike Downum, station manager of KUOI officially resigned his position to accept a new job with channel 2, in Boise.

The announcement was made to the Communications Board last Tuesday. Downum said he will begin his new position this Thursday. Downum will work in the film department doing processing and editing.

Downum said he would recommend someone to take his place some time this week.

Monetary matters Senate topics

The ASUI Senate will consider a bill to allocate $10 thousand for painting the SUB, and a bill proposing the transfer of Bob Harding's $40 a month salary to the financially-hurting Programs Department.

Other business includes Senate Bill No. 188, which would provide establishment of residence and office hour requirements for ASUI vice presidents. Gary Quigley, the current vice president, said it is "basically an amendment to the current ASUI rules and regulations." Quigley prophesied the bill probably "will die" at the meeting. He said the regulations are already on the books.

The communications secretary job description, the appointment of Mike Ayersman to the programs board, and a change in the rule and regulations concerning the programs board are also bills which will appear as new business.

Senate Bill No. 168 proposing the $10 thousand SUB paint job will be given an "in depth" consideration, according to Bob Harding, chairman of the finance committee.

Harding said the controversy stems from the cost and the actual need for such an extensive job. "We'll look at that one real close," he added.

About the bill proposing the transfer of his salary to the programs board, Harding said, he felt "It would be better used that way." Harding said there isn't enough money in the general reserve to fund several projects currently being considered by the board.

The Senate will meet at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the SUB Chief room.

University Press offers Washington bird text

Birds, birds, birds and where they live are the topics of a new University Press of Idaho publication, Birds of Southeastern Washington.

The book is termed a "distributional checklist" by Earl J. Larrison, U of I associate professor of zoology here and one of the authors. The 66-page volume details the birds found in southeastern Washington, basically the area south of Grand Coulee and east of the Tri-Cities area, plus adjacent areas in northern Idaho.

Dr. John Weber, Washington State University assistant professor of civil engineering, is co-author.

Larrison said the book is of interest both to "birdwatchers, or people interested in the field, and to those interested in comparing changes in bird distribution." He said a similar checklist was prepared 22 or 23 years ago at WSU and comparing the two gives a check on how changes in environment have produced alterations in bird ranges.

He noted, for example, that the bars in the Snake River, once used as breeding sites by Canada geese, are now gone as a result of the dams. The reservoirs, however, are attracting an inland invasion of certain marine birds such as the black-legged kittiwake.

While the book focuses on Asotin, Columbia, Garfield and Whitman counties in Washington, bird sighting records are also included for Walla Walla, Franklin, Adams, Grant, Douglas, Lincoln and Spokane counties in Washington. Limited records for Latah, Nezperce and Idaho counties in Idaho are also included.

Copies of the paperback book at $1.75 each are available through the University Press of Idaho, a division of the Idaho Research Foundation, Inc., Box 3367, University Station, Moscow, Idaho 83843; through local bookstores and from the Palouse Audubon Society, the book's publication sponsor.

Caucus picks ISC delegates

Twenty three delegates, have been chosen to represent the U of I at the Idaho Student Convention.

The delegates were picked at a caucus Thursday night. They are:

Kathy Abbott, Moscow; Robert Abbot, Moscow; Scott R. Baillie, Kellogg; Elaine Bjorn, Moscow; Mary Jane Call, Moscow; Greg Conradi, Boise; Joe Facillia, Twin Falls; Sherry Grant, Twin Falls; Tim Greeley, Moscow;

What's college for, anyhow?

'Olympics' include disrobing, pies

By KRISTEN MOULTEN
Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity attracted 12 womens' living groups to their annual olympics Saturday.

Girls from three halls and nine sororities participated in the parade up "Greek Row" and the competitive events on the administration lawn.

Alpha Gamma Delta was overall winner in the Olympics. Alpha Gamms placed second in the 45-yard crawl; third in the four-legged race; and first in the ten-girl tug-o-war and in the disrobing contest, a swimsuit-to-overhauls and boots relay.

Gamma Phi girls chalked up enough points to place second overall. They placed second in the tennis ball push, a 60-yard nose drive; fourth in the pie-eating contest; and first in the four-legged race and five-girl leap frog contest.

Third place winners were Pi Phi pledges who placed fourth in the wheelbarrow race and first in both pie-eating and balloon throwing.

Teams tallying a high number of points were Kappa Kappa Gamma, Delta Gamma, Alpha

The competition was not without an occasional tumble.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon has hosted the Olympics for 25 years on this campus.

Models plan posing strike

(ZNS) The models who pose for artists in Bologna, Italy, have begun a unique kind of strike in an attempt to gain higher wages.

The models have announced plans to pose for only one minute at a stretch, and then to strike for the next four minutes, before posing again. They call their tactic a "hiccup strike."

The group, which poses for painters at Bologna's Academy of Fine Arts, is asking that its hourly wage be replaced by contract.

Somehow, it all seems painfully familiar. Student leaders from Idaho's four-year colleges protest a State Board of Education decision to increase student fees for intercollegiate athletics. The board appoints a committee to review the role of athletics and study the need for the fee increase.

I hardly expect this child of a conservative bureaucracy to suggest any substantial changes in the present system. Still, I will venture to evaluate the situation and explain how I think things should be done. And the state of affairs at our own university seem to be as good an example as any of the role of intercollegiate athletics in Idaho.

Last week, somebody in the public relations department put out a slew of propaganda posters to convince us to leave certain beverages at home when we go to football games. On these posters, our famous domed stadium is referred to as the "Kibbie-ASUI Death Star". Maybe I'm twisting things a bit, but I think this piece of Star Wars imagery is quite apt.

The Kibbie Dome, built

primarily as an arena for varsity football and basketball, bears something of a resemblance to the Death Star. It is huge, ugly, and a waste of money that could have been spent better elsewhere. (Nations always have money for armaments and colleges always have money for football, no matter how broke they are otherwise.) It is even possible to think of the football team as a regiment of imperial storm troopers, carefully trained to "kill." The hours of grueling practice the teams put in, and the periodic firing of losing coaches shows that intercollegiate football and basketball are not mere games, but part of the deathly serious business of creating a proper public image for the university.

It seems to me that varsity sports ought to exist primarily for the sake of the student athletes — not the spectators, not the alumni, and not for the sake of the egos of the school administration. Sports should provide the student with the chance to develop his or her abilities, the pleasures of teamwork, and hopefully some relaxation. In short, they should be fun. But with competition as fierce as it is, it isn't fun anymore. Some of the less talented players barely get to play at all.

Intramurals at the U of I are fun. And they give many more people the chance to actually play, rather than just watch. The same is probably true of the so-called "minor" intercollegiate sports that men and women play.

So why not take the same approach with football and basketball? A couple of years ago, I read a story in the Lewiston Tribune about a football league back east whose member schools don't recruit and don't give scholarships. Players even buy their own shoes and medical insurance. Their games are still exciting, and the crowds are still enthusiastic. And it's probably more fun for the players.

This would certainly save money for Idaho schools, eliminating the need for a fee increase. The football players might have some time to get an education in something besides running and blocking. Assuming that the rest of the Big Sky conference doesn't follow our example, there are always plenty of junior colleges and other small schools that we could play.

The only thing any Idaho college has to lose from such an arrangement is its macho image as a Big Time Football Power. But, considering that this is Idaho, the Board of Education may decide that is too big a sacrifice to make.

Winners...

The U of I marching band and Vandalettes. I've come to expect an excellent halftime show from them at home football games, and they came through again Saturday night. A bright spot in an otherwise pretty disappointing evening.

Kudos where they are due. U of I has an unstoppable back in their Mr. Gibson. He should go far (and he did). I kept hoping one of the speaker clusters would fall on him and at least momentarily stun him. I had to settle for watching him stumble downfield under a hoard of gold shirts. C'est la guerre.

...and Sinners

Who were those little kids on the field during the game? More importantly, why were those kids on the field? Great fun for them, I'm sure. In the overall scheme of things, however, having those kids on the field is strictly bush.

Bush League reprise. Press box section, upper division. The lower press box, I have been given to understand, contained working press. Thank God for small favors. Judging by the bodies ascending to, and descending from, the upper press box, I got the distinct impression there was a combination day school/kindergarten/women's coffee klatsch in lively progress. On behalf of those up there who tried to get some work done in the midst of that menagerie, I would suggest that whoever was in charge (if, in fact, there was someone in charge) be taken out tomorrow and shot. Perhaps then the press box will revert to its function as a work area.

Play it again, Sam. Or maybe that should be "play it again, Ed". I don't want to be too hard on our temporary dome manager, Ed Chavez, but the ticket taking procedure at the east entrance of the south concourse was strictly from hunger.

You might also put up a sign or two outside the door noting that ID-toting students need to go north if they want to get into a game on the strength of a validated ID.

Where, oh where were the liquor control people? Remember the signs, stories and warnings from great and near great about the dire consequences of bringing booze to the game? If there were folks keeping a sharp nose out for illegal distilled spirits or that bracing golden-yellow liquid from Milwaukee, Golden and Olympia, they certainly weren't on the south side of the field. I stood next to two gentlemen (I use that word advisedly) during a good part of the last half who lubricated their sorrows while watching the mayhem on the field. And, having gotten a good noseful or two of their particular ambrosia, I can assure all and sundry that they weren't drinking the un-cola. During part of that time one of Moscow's finest stood practically cheek to jowl with our two imbibers without blinking an eye or making a move for his cuffs.

Tsk, tsk, tsk. For shame, for shame, etc. Stay tuned (or is it stay stoned?) for the next chapter, when Doctor Gibb, Ed Schmitz, and other keepers of the Regents' holy writ conduct body searches at the gate to keep the booze from flowing. Those who are unable to learn from history (witness Prohibition) are doomed to repeat it. Till next time: keep laughing. The situation is getting more droll by the minute. POOL

A fair for the county

The Latah County Fair concluded this weekend. Like any good county fair, children's laughter was abundant. Off time, the variety of gravity-defying rides elicited a few good, clean screams of stark terror, too.

Adults, too, found plenty to do at the fair. Exhibits, ranging from an explicit anti-abortion booth to pickle displays were viewed by many.

Livestock, including hopeful 4-Hers' sheep and grown-ups' prized cattle, were reviewed.

Many Latah residents entered various competitions, many more just came to see the show. As always, the county fair was a true community happening.

'One on One' dunks college athletics

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
One word of advice: don't see One on One if you believe in the sanctity of intercollegiate sports. It will be a waste of your time and money and just might give you nightmares.

But for the rest of those who might even have a secret desire to knock sports, One on One is the perfect vehicle to vent your frustrations. It can be seen at the Kenworthy this week.

The story is a simple variation of boy gets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl. Only in this case, the girl is a basketball scholarship at Northwestern University.

Henry Steele, (Robbie Benson) is a naive freshman basketball player who comes out west from Colorado on a four year free ride. He soon finds out that there is more to a scholarship than textbooks, tuition, and room and board.

He gets a job watching sprinklers come on in the morning. The sprinklers are automatically controlled, but that doesn't stop the $70 weekly checks from coming in. And there is the case of the home game tickets he must give his Alumni supervisor. For that, he gets $600. Each ticket is worth $300, he is told.

All of this sounds great, as long as he can keep playing good ball. Which he doesn't. His female tutor (Annette O'Toole) who opens his heart to something more than basketball, is the distraction.

Finally, the coach "advises" him to quit and renounce his scholarship. But there is one catch. Steele signed a no-cut contract with the university, which means nobody can take that scholarship away from him. But they sure could make practice hell for him besides taking the extra freebies away.

O'Toole's scenes are good, but there are not enough of them. One wonders, whether it is possible for an older TA to fall in love with a freshman. The film doesn't do much to suspend that disbelief.

Aside from that, it is a film worthy of merit. It quickly identifies its villains: greed, overall ambitious coaches, and corruption. Benson seems to be asking whether it is possible for sports to remain amateur when $150,000 scholarships are involved?

Regardless of the answer, it is certainly a question needed to be asked.

Wagner plays shingo

Folk singer Pop Wagner will be on campus for the ASUI Coffeehouse this Wednesday in the Vandal Lounge from 8 to 11 p.m. Admission is free. Wagner hails from Minneapolis, Minnesota.

"Well I guess I'm one of those old time folk singers," said Wagner. "I play lots of old time music and some that's not so old, like songs I write myself."

Wagner's instruments include guitar, fiddle, harmonica, banjo and a thing he calls a shingo.

"It's an instrument given to me in Colorado by a fellow who made it out of cedar shingles and broken chairs," said Wagner. "The chairs were broken in a barroom brawl in Crested Butte in 1969."

Wagner said he has played for just about every type of audience, from toddlers in headstart centers to old folks in rest homes. One of the songs he wrote, "Old 97 (Where Did You Go?)" has been recorded on three albums released in Germany.

"I haven't made any records yet," he said, "but I've got a song book I'll sell you for a quarter (that's a good deal)."

Wagner calls his style "old time, ragged but right."

"Besides working alone, sometimes I get together with Bob Bovee to do a tour or just go bummin' somewhere," said Wagner. "I have also been working with Bob Douglas and we do a lot of old favorites with those good old southern gospel harmonies. All three of us plan to work together soon as a string band. That should be fun...watch for us."

For a taste of the Wagner style, drop in the the Vandal Lounge of the SUB tomorrow night for some coffee and music.

Lelouch finds true love

SUB Films will present And Now My Love this Friday night at 7 and 9 p.m. in the Borah Theater. Admission will be $1.

Rats, foiled again

(ZNS) A British new wave band, called "The Rats," recently devised a publicity stunt which, much to the relief of their recording company, never got off the ground.

It seems that the band had acquired 30 dead rats from a local zoo and had carefully wrapped the rodents in plastic sandwich bags. The group had planned to fly over the nearby Reading Music Festival and deliver the saran-wrapped rats by air mail to an unsuspecting crowd below.

Phonogram Records learned of the planned air raid, and delayed the air drop by pleading with the band to give the rats a decent burial instead. In the meantime, the dead rodents began to decompose, leaving the band no choice but to find other ways of getting publicity.

The British music paper Melody Maker commented: "The publicity stunt is not dead, it just smells funny."

Director Claude Lelouch brings to the screen this tale of fated love, characterizing it as the world's greatest natural high.

Martha Keller plays Sarah, the spoiled daughter of a rich Jewish industrialist. The story revolves around her search for "true love."

Set against a backdrop of major news events of the 60's and 70's, the reactions of Martha and her eventual true love Simon (played by Charles Denner) drive them toward an eventual "chance" meeting on a plane to New York City.

Suits don't suit

(ZNS) The makers of swimming suits will probably be watching the outcome of today's elections in San Diego with great interest.

That's because the voters of that southern California city will be deciding whether or not to repeal an ordinance which makes Black's Beach the only official "swim suit optional" beach in the United States.

An estimated 43,000 skinny dippers jammed Black's Beach last May 29th to celebrate the nude beach's third (and perhaps last) birthday.

Bergman focuses on death, magic and mate swapping

The Ingmar Bergman film festival continues its second week on KUID-TV, CH 12. Each weeknight at 10 a different film will be shown. Tonight's film will be Smiles of a Summer Night (1955). This little yarn about the spicy sport of partner switching was the inspiration for the recent Broadway musical comedy success A Little Night Music. Bergman connoisseurs insist that this original is better. The style and structure is something between the Marx Brothers and Shakespeare. Wednesday's film will be one of Bergman's most famous

The Seventh Seal: A knight returning home from the crusades plays a game of chess with Death to save a traveling troupe of players. Bergman draws an allegory of man's search for meaning. Thursday's film will be Wild Strawberries (1957). Awakening early on the day he is to receive an honorary degree, an eminent doctor is disturbed by a dream of his own death. Throughout the day the doctor is haunted by memories and revelations that force him to reevaluate his entire life. Friday's film will be The Magician (1958). This tale of the supernatural centers on a wandering 19th century magician. He finds himself in Stockholm with a bag of tricks that backfire on him. Horror, and absurdity are juxtaposed with logic.

Vandals drop second game

By SCOTT TUDEHOPE

The University of the Pacific, under the guiding hands of fullback Bruce Gibson, dropped host Idaho 31-21 here Saturday. It was Idaho's first conference home game this season.

"Gibson just knocked the hell out of us," said Idaho head coach Ed Troxel. "We really anticipated Gibson hitting us, and he did." When it was all over, the All-American candidate rushed for 171 yards.

Said Troxel, "We're not out of the conference game yet. We just don't like to lose." He added that he wished Pacific had fumbled once or twice. "I was praying for it," he said.

Unlike the Rice game, Idaho hung in there the first half. Using the veer offense to their advantage, Rocky Tuttle carved up the Tiger defense and ran for 109 yards in 14 tries for an average of just under 8 yards a carry.

But it wasn't the offense that bothered the head coach this time.

"We just didn't get inside-linebacker support like we should have," he said, "and there was no pursuit."

The game started off slowly for Idaho. In their first possession, the Vandals were handed two penalties which nullified the drive. Net yardage was negative, and the Tigers took over on the Idaho 26.

In just four plays Pacific put the first points on the board to make it 6-0 with 8:14 to go in the first quarter. Kicker Frank Alegre made it 7-0.

Two plays and less than a

After the teams traded licks, Idaho again under the leadership of Tuttle, rumbled down the field in 9 plays, covering 70 yards. At 21-17, apparently the momentum was still there.

It was enough to send both teams to the locker-rooms with Idaho on top at the half, 21-17.

At this point, seeing how Pacific was playing, Idaho didn't have breathing room; it was more like gasping room.

"Give me an I" ... Dr. Richard Gibb, University of Idaho president, takes time out to lead a cheer during last Saturday's game with Pacific.

minute later, Tuttle made a poor pitch and the Terrible Tigers recovered on the Idaho 24. All too soon it was Pacific 14, Idaho 0, after a 22-yard pass by quarterback Bruce Parker to Brian Peets.

Images of the Rice game were surfacing...it was time for Idaho to come back.

It was Tuttle who got Idaho going again. Starting at their own 24, Tuttle had gainers of 1, 5 and 16 yards, then fired off three pitches to Tim Lappano for gains. Finally with a handoff up the middle to Lance Hubbard, and it was Idaho 7, Pacific 14.

Carbon copy football was to follow. Just like Idaho, Pacific was frustrated in a short-lived series that left Idaho in possession at their 37.

Tuttle & Co., took over from there. Coming off a veer keeper, Tuttle raced for the game's longest run of 63 yards to score. At 14-13, Ralph "The Toe" Lowe, who's presence at last year's game was a God-send, tied it up, 14-14. The quarter ended with Idaho in control.

Now into the second quarter, Pacific drove 69 yards only to be stopped by the Vandal secondary. They had to settle for an Alegre field goal which made it 17-14.

What the Vandals needed was a respirator; what they got was Craig Juntunen.

The ping-pong third quarter was to end with a slam with Pacific one-upping Idaho's veer.

It took 15 minutes for anyone to score and when Pacific did, it was under the auspices of Gibson and tailback Darwin Benjamin. 62 yards later, Pacific led 24-21.

Juntunen, coming off an ankle injury, attempted to fire up the lagging offense. It was useless. Receivers weren't getting open and he was dropped for several losses. The Big Play wasn't there this time.

Pacific didn't have any better luck after they received Lowe's punt, so it was back to Idaho on their 36. Three yards and three downs later it was back to the Tigers. And what an encore they had in store.

Five first downs, one 13 yard pass, four pitches for 55. Zip, xap, zing. Pacific nailed Idaho's coffin with 6:22 to play when Parker handed off left to Gibson. The PAT made it 31-21.

The last straw was when Idaho fumbled at their 49. From there it was pure formality.

"Astonishingly beautiful."

Men's and women's intramural sports are in full swing and the Argonaut sport section will include standings from all sports that are available to us by press time.

ASUI senators take Reds

Yesterday, in a game that could be described only as a friendly "grudge match," the ASUI senators beat the Argonaut Reds 4-3.

Before an estimated crowd of 3 people and one dog, the Reds and Senators exchanged Baseball buffoonery, laughter and a multitude of insults.

The senate battle cry seemed to be: "You guys play mushball like you print newspapers." The Argonaut staffers didn't know whether to take this as a complement or not, since pride on the "Arg." runs very high.

Rosemary Hammer, editor, called the contest, "A truly classic conflict between good and evil and as usual evil triumphed." "We're gonna whomp them next time!" she added.

ASUI senator Vicki Tucker said, "Contrary to the fact that the Arg. staff had several practices and we didn't, the senate showed superiority, as usual by winning."

Communications board was umpiring behind the plate, Mona Debanan having the honors.

The Reds will go against the Senators again next Sunday in a rematch. Hammer said that this time the umpires will be chosen from non-ASUI affiliated people.

Idaho soccer wins

In a non-conference game Sunday, the U of I soccer team beat the Lewiston Coca-Cola Seaporters 3-1. Idaho scored goals by Rob Murray, Nasser and John Ooms to cleanly establish its lead. The Seaporters managed to hold Idaho scoreless in the second half but could come up with only one score from Kim Dixon.

Idaho has been practicing in preparation for their upcoming conference game against Whitworth of Spokane Oct. 1. The final team cut will be tonight for the "A" and "B" teams.

Volleyball team looks good

With four returning starters from last year's team, several experienced transfer students, and freshmen that show potential, the 1977 volleyball season for the University of Idaho women's intercollegiate team looks promising.

Under the leadership of rookie coach Amanda Burk, from WSU, and the assistant coaching of Gordon Inglis, the team will concentrate their efforts at the small college level (schools with 3,000 or less full-time women undergraduates).

Returning to Idaho from last year's team are Vicki May, a junior from Calgary, Alberta; Peggy Clemmons, a senior from Anchorage, Alaska; Debbie Bock, a senior from Burbank, Ill; and Terry Neuenschwander, a junior from Rockville, Maryland.

"Vicki is looking strong this year," Burk said. "She attended some clinics in Canada and her back-court play is improved. She is one of my 'all-around players. Terry is also a strong back court player and may figure into one of the setting positions."

Transferring to Idaho this season are Dana Antonelli, a junior from Rathdrum who competed at North Idaho College, and Debra Danaher, a junior from Espanola, Washington who transferred from Spokane Falls Community College.

"Dana is a real strong net player," Burk said. "She is a consistent hitter and another all-around defensive and offensive player. Debra is real energetic and has real ball savvy. She is another player we are looking at as a setter."

Four incoming freshmen will add youth and strength to the team. They are Jana Watts and Terri Fitch of Bonners Ferry, Diane Wallace of McCall, and Lisa Armstrong of Moon, Pennsylvania.

"I am thrilled with the freshmen we have this year," Burk continued, "They show great potential in all-around play and with the strong nucleus of returning veterans, I feel we will be a team to contend with in the Northwest this year."

The junior varsity, under the guidance of Inglis, is one of the strongest volleyball teams Idaho has had. They will form a strong supportive unit for the varsity with 10 members gaining intercollegiate experience. They will be featured in several dual matches prior to the varsity games as well as in several lone matthes.

Idaho will be hosting several invitational tournaments this season starting with the Tune-Up Invitational September 30-October 1. Eleven teams from throughout Idaho, Washington, and Oregon are entered for competition.

On October 7-8 Idaho hosts five schools and on November 12 eight more schools will enter competition at Idaho.

Burk gets volleyball job

Amanda Burk has been named to the women's athletic coaching staff at the U of I as head volleyball coach, assistant tennis coach, and administrative aid to Kathy Clark, head of women's athletics.

Clark, the former head volleyball coach, stepped down in order to handle an increasing work load in women's athletics.

The 29-year-old native of Austin, Texas, comes to Idaho from nearby Washington State University where she was assistant volleyball and tennis coach. Her job is on a part-time appointment.

"I'd like to see this position become full time and/or permanent," she said. Burk said that she wants to coach or teach coaching classes in physical education.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Earnest Gammage Jr. of Houston, Tex., she is married to Alan Burk of Fort Worth, Tex., currently a woodcraftsman in the Moscow area.

When asked if changing coaches at the beginning will have an adverse affect on the volleyball team, Burk said, "No, I'm working with the assistant coach who was here last season and I've been around since they began practice so it's not like they don't know me at all," she added.

"I'm not as familiar with the competition in this area as I'd like to be," coach Burk said, "But I feel we should be able to do real, real well."

AMANDA BURK

Prior to her duties at WSU, Burk was head volleyball coach and head men's tennis coach at Concordia Lutheran Junior College for two years.

Big robot makes perfect guard

(ZNS) A New Jersey company claims it has developed the ideal security guard: a 650-pound, seven-foot-tall robot that can automatically sense human intruders and then chase them down.

Quasar Industries of Lindhurst has named its invention "Century One." According to the Company, Century One is equipped with sensors to detect movement, noise or body heat. When it gets within eight feet of a suspect, the robot reportedly orally instructs the intruder to halt. For humans who don't obey, Century One is said to be armed with a strobe light that can blind its quarry, a mechanism to release laughing gas, and an electric shock gun.

Commissioners claim wife beatings fault of feminists

(ZNS) New Hampshire's Status of Women Commission has rejected a proposal that would have aided "battered wives" in the state. It was voted down on the grounds that the feminist movement is responsible for most wife-beatings.

A survey of 225 undergraduates at Western Washington University found that most of the dental fears stem not from the expectations of pain, but from a dislike of the dentist's personality or the dentist's style.

Biologist finds dam shutdowns OK with fish

Hydroelectric dams in the Pacific Northwest may soon operate more efficiently as the result of a just-completed U of I study that proves upstream migrations of steelhead and salmon are not disturbed when dam flows are shut off at night.

Sponsored by the Idaho Water Resources Research Institute and the Idaho Cooperative Fisheries Unit, fisheries biologist Dr. Robert G. White has spent the past two years analyzing fish movements and travel rates between lower Snake River dams during flows ranging from zero to peaking levels.

Fisheries professor Dr. Ted Bjorn, research associate Rudy Ringe and graduate assistant Kemper McMaster were chief contributors to the study, and funds were provided by the Army Corps of Engineers.

"Federal agencies have always feared that if dam flows are stopped at night, fish will become disoriented," explained White, assistant professor of fishery resources. "So, though peak energy demands are usually experienced in the early morning and evening, low flows are kept running over the dams at night. Consequently, that power potential is lost."

In charge of controlling all the dams on the lower Snake, the Corps wanted to know if they could save the water going down the river at night to use the next day for peaking. Thus, they funded the study to monitor fish passage over two dams, Lower Monumental and Little Goose, and through the connecting reservoirs. Conveniently, the National Marine Fish Service (NMFS) operates a fish collection facility at Little Goose Dam which allowed the researchers to obtain the migrating fish they needed.

Both salmon and steelhead swim upstream during warm months to lay eggs in their native spawning grounds. Dams have caused serious problems as "roadblocks," and numerous structures, like fish ladders, and management practices, like keeping flows running at night, have been designed to increase the odds of survival.

After spawning in the fall, the salmon die. Idaho steelhead authorities feared would be affected.

"One question naturally arises," White pointed out. "Even if holding back night flows is not harmful, fish experts will want to know whether there might still be a risk to fish when that 'held'

Newly tagged with a radio transmitter, an adult chinook salmon comes out of anesthesia, ready to make an upstream test run. Both steelhead and salmon were recently involved in a U of I study which proved that shutting off dam flows at night does not disturb upstream migrations. overwinter and spawn in the spring, but few return again to the ocean.

Only the adults were tested during White's study, since it is the upstream migration that water is released the next day for peaking."

Peak flows are used to produce maximum power at dams, and all three lower Snake dams expected to double their peaking capacity next year.

His task was to answer only one question: What is the fishes' behavior during zero flow conditions at night, compared to their behavior during normal night and daytime flows?

Captured at the NMFS facility at Little Goose Dam, fish were placed in an anesthetizing solution and tagged externally with magnetic wire and internally with magnetic ball bearings. Some fish received an internal radio transmitter.

From there they were transported by tank truck to a point below the dams where they were released in a rush of water to begin their upstream run.

One early observation he made was that fish were less active at night.

The fishes' rates of travel and their success in crossing dams did not change with the variation in flows. White noted there was no correlation between failures and night-time shut-offs.

Statistics from counts proved that flow cut-offs at night made no difference

"Now that we know we can safely shut off dams at night, the challenge will be how the Northwest can best use that stored water and still protect its highly-prized fish runs." White said.
