Students discontent with new alcohol policy

By DAVID NEIWERT

In what could be their most unpopular move in months, the U of I Board of Regents recently handed down a new alcohol policy calling for tougher standards of enforcement. Student reaction to the decision has so far been mostly negative.

As one of the measures taken, the Housing Department instructed resident advisers in the dormitories to inform the campus police whenever alcoholic beverages were being consumed in the residential hallways.

Dr. Jean Hill, Dean of Student Services, says that the move came about as result of pressure from the administration. At a meeting in which the policy was discussed, Dr. Tom Richardson, vice-president for student affairs, advised staff members present to do what they must to see that the campus alcohol policy was enforced. Ron Ball, director of housing, acted accordingly by creating the new responsibility for the resident advisers.

According to Hill, "Dr. Richardson indicated that Gibb said to enforce the policy the best we can."

Most of the students voicing dissent have been from the dormitories. Many of them are the R.A.'s themselves, who claim they're being caught in a bind by the order.

"The only thing that really gets me is that we're getting caught in a bad situation," says one R.A. "It makes it pretty rough when you're supposed to get some kind of rapport with the members of the hall and yet you've got to turn in your friends for drinking."

The advisers have been instructed to put the stops on functions within the hall in which any alcoholic beverages are in the hallways or open gathering places. If the parties refuse, then it is the R.A.'s duty to inform their supervisor, who will likewise try to end the function. If the supervisor's efforts are not effective, the campus police will be called in to deal with the situation. Advisers failing to report the incident face possible dismissal. Both Gibb and Richardson were out of town and unavailable for comment.

"We don't want the resident staff to be put in a bind on this," said Hill. "But the fact is we were given the word to enforce the policy."

Previously, we had a sort of laissez-faire kind of approach to the situation, but a number of changes have been made that make that no longer workable."

"I was kind of blown away by the suddenness of the whole thing," said one student. "Why do they hand this thing to us now when most of us are wrapped up in our studies and can't really devote much time to fighting it? It seems to me that their timing was really bad—or really good, all depending on whose side you're on."

One of the main complaints the students have is that students living in fraternity or sorority housing aren't affected by the policy. There will be no move made to restrict functions in the Greek houses, mainly because many of them are privately owned. A number of the dissenters have claimed that such a policy is discriminatory.

"I guess that it is discrimination of a sort," says Hill. "But it's just one of those things that is built into the system. We can't force students on privately-owned ground to adhere to University policy."

She did admit that certain of the Greek houses are in fact on school-owned property and therefore might fall under the policy's jurisdiction. But, she adds, "that issue just hasn't been brought up yet."

Dissatisfaction is apparently widespread among resident hall members. "I know that there will be some kind of resistance to the thing," says one R.A. "People are just real unhappy about it."

"It hasn't cut it with the students," says another adviser. "They don't like it at all. I think something's going to happen."

Ball remained noncommittal when asked what kind of steps would be taken should any confrontation evolve. "We'll just handle the problem as it presents itself," he said. "I guess we'll just have to take it as it comes."

The police state that they will not go out of their way to look for any violations, but if a complaint is filed then they will be forced to investigate.

Some halls are claiming that it is written into their constitutions that alcohol consumption is allowed within the hall, and such a policy is endorsed by former president Ernest Hartung. Hartung's signature was put to the hall amendments when he was still in office.

But, says Ball, "that doesn't make one bit of difference. No sort of agreement or decision can override the Regents' policy."

Some question the motivating factor for the Regents' and University's decision. "I believe there must have been some kind of pressure from elsewhere," claimed one student. "And look what the general effect of this is going to be—many of the students are moving out of the halls because of this, and going off campus. And business in the bars is really going to soar, too. It just makes you wonder why they're really doing it."

Harding nabs top slot, Wright new number two

ASUI Senator Bob Harding won an impressive victory over two opponents Wednesday night to become the new student body president-elect.

Harding captured 1,014 votes to Stacey Silva's 472 and John Hecht's 457.

Gerry Wright, ASUI Senator, became the new vice-president-elect, winning 973 votes. Jan Piccard placed a strong second with 725 votes followed by Bob Cirillo with 156 votes.

Winning senate seats were Dave Lockhart with 1,050 votes; Mona Dobaran, 954;

Nancy Buck, 950; Matt McLam, 942; Rick Howard, 935; and Rob Mitchell, 756. The rest of the senate race went as follows: Scott L. Jones, 664; Victor Noble, 578; Steve Gardner, 572; Paul Kuespert, 526; Gus Metz, 393; and Calvin Romrell, 306.

Students also endorsed a proposed $6 per semester fee increase. The vote was advisory and will be submitted to the Board of Regents when the ASUI formally requests the increase. The issue passed with less than a 100 vote edge: 1,074 for, 988 against.

Wright's selection as Vice-President leaves a vacancy in the senate. The president will appoint a replacement to serve the remaining semester of Wright's term. The senate must confirm that appointment.

There have been no indications who that appointee will be. The highest vote getting losing candidate could be appointed. Scott Jones came in seventh. But the president is free to select anyone. In the past, senators have been appointed who did not run in the election.

Six senators, including an incumbent, were elected. ASUI Senators Silva, Sally Johnson, Rusty Jesser, and Steve Bradbury will retire from office December 13, when the newly elected officials are installed.

Roughly 32 per cent of the student body voted in the election with 2,120 votes cast. That is one per cent less than last fall's election, but more than last spring's voter turnout.

From myth to choice

Androgyny symposium topic

The values inherent in male and female systems will be the topic of a three-day symposium here this spring.

The Women's Center recently received a grant totalling $11,372 from the Association for the Humanities in Idaho for a project entitled "From Myth to Choice: Toward a Vision of Androgyny."

The androgyny theory is an attempt to combine the positive attributes of the male value system with the positive qualities of female values to form a new definition of the human condition.

Under the AHI grant, the Women's Center hopes to explore this theory and visions which are proposed as alternatives to the present male and female systems, according to Corlann Bush, one of the project directors.

"We hope to go beyond the issues of equality, abortions and displaced homemaker concerns to the conflict of larger value systems," Bush said, adding, "The symposium will provide an opportunity for helping professionals in psychology, sociology and social service to learn about value systems that would assist in helping their clients."

"We are not trying to convert anyone to matriarchy. We only want the aspects of both societies to be explored," she said.

"All the seeming furor which inevitably accompanies public discussion of such issues as rape law reform, ERA and affirmative action reflects our personal concepts of self," noted Dr. Layne Hannaford, another project director.

"It is crucial to examine those concepts in order to understand ourselves and our society more accurately and perceptively," she said.

The goals of the Women's Center project are to provide a symposium at which theoreticians, humanists and other participants will define and assess the values inherent in patriarchal and matriarchal or feminist systems. The symposium will provide a forum to identify and examine the ways that these values are embodied in theology, psychology, history, literature and sex role socialization. New values and visions (androgyny and humanistic psychology) which are proposed as alternatives to male and female systems will be explored.

The symposium is tentatively set for March 10, 11 and 12 in the SUB Ballroom. Speakers include Dr. Ann Wilson Schaefer, founder and director of the Women's Institute for Alternative Psychotherapy, on "Male and Female Systems"; and theorist Carolyn Heilbrun, professor of English at Columbia University, New York, and author of "Toward a Vision of Androgyny," on androgynous values.

An experimental workshop involving the audience and humanists in informal interactions and exercises is also planned.

Television coverage of the symposium will be provided by KUID-TV, the university station. Telephone hook-up will be available for at-home audience questions.

Project directors include Bush, assistant dean of students; Hannaford, instructor with the Department of English; Jenifer Klindt, graduate student and president of the Moscow chapter of NOW; and Ilene Sackett, from the Idaho State University Counseling Center. The Women's Center has received funds from the Northwest Women's Studies Resource Bank, an Office of Education-Women's Educational Equity Act Programs project, to pay Sackett for her consultation work.

The Women's Center also will hire a coordinator for the project according to U of I Equal Opportunity-Affirmative Action guidelines.

Also contributing to the project are Dr. Jack Sullivan, professor of foreign languages and literature, and Dr. Carol Gross of the WSU Special Education Training Project.

Few funds available for summer work-study

Full-time summer work-study will not be available to any students for the 1977 summer break. Part-time work-study positions and awards from loan and grant funds will also not be sufficient to help all needy summer school students, said Dan Goyette, assistant director of financial aids.

The limited work study funds available will aid students to work part time while going to summer school. Students who are not attending summer school can receive no summer work-study.

Summer work-study is only available if there are leftover funds from the previous academic year, said Goyette. There were a lot more applicants this year than in the past and all the funds were committed a lot earlier in the academic year, leaving very little funding for the summer, he said.

According to Goyette there are still eligible students waiting to be given funds for the academic year. "The financial aids office has requested additional work-study funds from the federal government, but even if more funds are received, full-time work-study will still not be possible," he said.

Goyette stressed the importance of returning applications by the April 3, 1978 deadline. He also said students ought to have a good reason for going to summer school. He explained that reasons for attending summer school will be looked at, as well as completion date, if it gets to a "financial crunch."

Applications for these limited funds will be available beginning December 5, at the Student Financial Aid Office in UCC 228. The April 3 deadline is for both summer work-study and financial aid for the next academic year. Late applicants will have little chance of receiving assistance, said Goyette.

Cheap books abound at Exchange

If you go up the escalator in the Idaho First National Bank building, turn left at the top, and go through the door marked Hodgins Office Suites, you will find the Paperback Exchange, Moscow's only used bookstore.

"You can't make money selling books at 20 and 40 cents each," said Dean Smith, owner and operator of the store and full time U of I student. The business "pays the rent here and that's it—just a break-even proposition."

The Exchange has been open for six months, and it has grown. When Smith started, he "didn't have a dime, didn't have a book."

He borrowed $1000 from a bank to start his enterprise. "I spent three months hitting used bookstores and Goodwills from Seattle to Boise," he said. By selling, buying, and trading, his stock has grown to more than 10,000 books.

"The idea is a success," he said. "I'm not making any money. It's more of a hobby." Smith carries science fiction, westerns, romances, mysteries, general fiction, non-fiction, and other kinds of books. He also has Frank Frazetta posters for sale. The Exchange is open from 12 to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

Howard Cosell gives "rugs" a bad name

(ZNS) The wig-maker who sold Howard Cosell his hairpieces claims that the sportscaster is giving head coverings a very bad name.

Charles Alfieri says he can't bear to watch Cosell on the tube any more because of the abuse Cosell is inflicting upon his $375 hairpiece. Alfieri told the New York Post: "He ought to spend more time getting his rugs serviced...if he did, he wouldn't look so bad."

The artificial hair expert says that "rugs" should be cleaned at least every two weeks, and repaired regularly. Alfieri says, however, that Cosell seems to just carelessly pop one on his head before going before the cameras, thereby giving the hairpiece industry a bum rap it doesn't deserve.

Judicial contempt

In a state-wide poll taken earlier this year, lawyers were asked to evaluate the performance of Idaho's judges. Our very own Judge Mosman got the worst rating. His handling of the Shelledy case is just the latest demonstration of why this happened. Considering Shelledy's offer to reveal his un-named source in confidence, it was simply capricious for Mosman to issue a contempt citation. Indeed, it seems hardly fair for a judge to find anyone in contempt of court when his own conduct renders the actions of the court so difficult to respect.

Just as the judge's politics are conservative to the point of being reactionary, so are his morals. And he takes advantage of his position to inflict them on the unlucky people who appear in his courtroom.

Consider a case that reported in the Argonaut on October 14th. A woman and the man she was living with were brought before Mosman on charges of possession of marijuana. They pleaded guilty. Mosman was kind enough to put them on probation, but ordered them to stop living together, stipulated that the man could not marry during the two years of his probation without the consent of his probation advisors. Apparently, this is typical of the rulings that he hands down.

Judge Mosman comes up for re-election in a year or two. Hopefully, the people of Latah County, particularly students, will vote to rid themselves of his obnoxious paternalism.

But for us students, ridding our lives of paternalistic control isn't that simple. We still have the Board of Regents and the university administration to deal with, and we can't vote them out of office.

Specifically, I am referring to the recent crackdown on drinking in dormitory lounges. Once upon a time, the Regents had decided that these lounges were public areas, and that it was therefore illegal to consume alcoholic beverages in them. For some reason, the administration and the housing office have just decided on a tough new enforcement policy.

What everyone seems to forget is that the residents of a dormitory know each other and work together as a group. Because of this group relationship, their lounge is much more like a private family living room than like a public lobby in an apartment building. Present policy makes it illegal for grown men and women to have a beer in their own living rooms.

In itself, this may be a trivial issue. What is disturbing is the attitude towards students that this policy demonstrates. It shows quite clearly that the Regents and the U of I administration do not regard us as responsible adults.

It seems that the people who actually participate in education - the students and the faculty - ought to have most of the control over how the university is run. Instead, we have a benevolent (?) group dictatorship consisting of the Board of Regents and President Gibb. (The paternalism even extends to the faculty. Their views, as expressed by the faculty council, seem to be largely ignored by the Regents).

When it comes to Judge Mosman, we can make ourselves feel better by deciding that he is an authoritarian anomaly in what is supposed to be a democratic system of justice. But in the case of the University of Idaho, we don't have even this cold comfort. We are forced to realize that the whole system is basically authoritarian, and that any resemblance to a democracy is purely incidental.

Seekest not the Arg

Those who seek a copy of the Argonaut next Tuesday, Nov 22, will seek in vain. The staff, in a futile attempt to limit the waste of newsprint, will not publish a paper next Tuesday. The reason(s) for this drastic change in the publication schedule of this rag may be attributed to any one, two or more of the following:

- 1) The editor's choice for ASUI President-elect lost.
- 2) The editor's choice for ASUI President-elect won.
- 3) The editor didn't have a choice.
- 4) There won't be an appreciable number of student readers on campus on Tuesday.
- 5) There aren't an appreciable number of student readers on campus today.
- 6) There never has been an appreciable number of student readers of the Argonaut.
- 7) There is an appreciable number of student readers of the Argonaut, but they can't read.
- 8) The editor can't read.
- 9) Neither can the staff.
- 10) There won't be any news.
- 11) There will be news, but nobody cares.
- 12) There will be news, people do care, but they still don't know how to read.
- 13) The earthquake scheduled to rock the Moscow area at 9:57 pm (7.329987 on the Richter scale) Monday next will render inoperable the presses on which this sorry excuse for a newspaper is printed.

Give 'em a break

The ASUI has a new administration. The time has passed for any question of support for the new officers and other "what if's."

We elected them. Now as they prepare to take on the burdens and duties of their stations, let's remind ourselves that for most, serving in the ASUI is not the immeasurably pleasurable experience we imagine it to be. It means long hours spent on issues. It means occasionally sacrificing grades for issues with which many students choose not to concern themselves.

And it means taking a lot of abuse from people who, for one reason or another, don't happen to agree with them.

This is not to say the ASUI officials are perfect. Sometimes they fall on their faces badly. But they have done a lot of good for the students.

This is also not to say this paper or this writer, in particular, will always agree with their actions. Part of the responsibility of being in office involves standing up to snobbish reporters and watching an editorial writer tear you apart.

But the new president, vice-president and senators deserve a decent break. And this writer pledges to cooperate, when possible, with the ASUI officials in meeting our common goal—serving the students.

Demonstration...martyr or no!

By MARTY TRILLHAASE

Students from Idaho and Washington universities carried their protest of the Jay Shelledy case to the steps of the Latah County Courthouse Saturday.

Over 150 students marched from U of I SUB to the courthouse, equipped with protest signs, a public address system, and two university faculty to address the gathering.

But it was a protest that almost didn't get off the ground.

appearance at the courthouse, protest organizers began questioning the need for their action.

"We went ahead with the protest because this issue is larger than just Shelledy, just Mosman, or just this case," said one spokesperson for the protest. Eddie Sue Judy, News editor, Campus News; said the issue centered on whether the government and specifically the courts can be allowed to encumber a reporters's ability to gather and disseminate the that concern," she said.

30 minutes before the official protest started, fewer than a dozen students had arrived at the SUB. But as the noon hour approached, the doorway of the SUB began to swell with people.

The students did not obtain a parade permit. They remained on the sidewalks during their seven-block trip. Despite occasional onlooks from other pedestrians and expressions of curiosity from automobile passengers, the group remained relatively quiet.

Protestors of restrictions on press freedom joined forces last weekend.

Shelledy was expected to begin serving his 30-day jail term this week. Students began to stage the rally, complete with Lewiston Morning Tribune publisher and editor A.L. "Butch" Alford and Tribune editorial page editor Bill Hall. The student organizers presented a resolution to the national Society of Professional Journalists-Sigma Delta Chi supporting Shelledy.

They even obtained promises from the major three television networks to cover the protest.

Then a sudden turn of events changed everything. Thursday night Judge Roy Mosman, who sentenced Shelledy to the jail term for refusing to disclose a confidential news source, announced Shelledy would not be jailed. Mosman said the plaintiff in the libel suit would file a motion to strike the Tribune's and Shelledy's defense.

That could essentially give the libel suit to the plaintiff.

Shelledy had announced he would report to jail Friday. He did so. But he found no detention order for his confinement.

And the protesters had no martyr.

Following Shelledy's

news and whether the courts can be allowed to restrict the public's right to know."

Protest organizer Rod O'Dell said the decision not to jail Shelledy was no accident. "Mosman didn't bargain for all the attention and publicity that his decision would bring," O'Dell said. The U of I journalism student added Mosman received 16 requests from national media for interviews Friday. He added the judge turned the offers down.

"Mosman was scared of the national attention, so he diffused the issue by not jailing Shelledy in the hope he could get his unpopular decision out of the limelight," O'Dell opined. "His failure to carry out his plans to jail Shelledy, despite an agreement with Shelledy to jail him Friday, was an attempt to confuse and scatter the popular opposition to his decision," O'Dell said.

The protesters believed they had an issue. But did they have the public following they had Thursday night?

"We knew the events of Thursday and Friday were going to hurt us," Judy said. "The issue was still there and we had to let those people who were still concerned about the larger issue voice

At the courthouse gathering, protestors were read a statement of support and appreciation from Alford and Hall.

"We are not on hand to join you as planned because of Thursday night's sudden development," the statement said. "The Tribune and Shelledy should not be in the limelight," they said.

"Focus instead on the larger issues—the interpretation of the first amendment, serving the public's right to know. The ability of the Press to report a falsehood in the people's government and the propriety of jailing reporters for protecting their profession."

Two U of I faculty members addressed the gathering. Marvin Henberg, assistant professor of Philosophy, said the issue comes down to a conflict of rights. But in matters dealing with public officials, Henberg said, reporters should be granted a preferred right to hold sources confidential. "The greater potential dangers lie in giving government officials—representatives of the people in any capacity—an unwarranted advantage against the peoples' right to know," Henberg said.

Neil McFeely, U of I assistant professor of political science, said confidential sources must be protected. He said most information dealing with government wrongdoing often comes from insiders who cannot speak on the record.

Shelledy was prepared to enter jail Friday.

Without information obtained from confidential sources, the public is ill-informed about its government he said. He added, "The guarantee for a free press, is not for the benefit of the press but for the benefit of us all."

McFeely urged the gathering to encourage passage of a shield law in Idaho.

Such a measure would grant reporters the right to hold sources confidential under certain situations. A Shield Law bill came before the Idaho legislature in 1973. It passed in the state senate, but floundered in the House of Representatives.

Faculty from Communications schools at both the U of I and Washington

State University at Pullman declined to speak to the gathering, O'Dell said.

Judy closed the rally, requesting the protestors to continue advocating a free press. "The energy generated today must not dissipate," she said. "Simply because this particular event is over."

Judy said the gathering was successful. "I certainly do think it turned out well," she said. "I think that it's really encouraging to see that there are that many people in a small town, and also some people that were willing to drive great distances, to stand up and be counted for the right to know. This nation guarantees them that," she said.

Tenth game sends Idaho to Las Cruces, N.M.

Plagued by injuries, last weekend's 45-17 loss to Washington State, and a 2-7 season record, Vandal football will hit the road this weekend to Las Cruces to play New Mexico University in a 1:30 (MST) game. Idaho guard Dave Wiggum is out with a partially torn ligament in his knee from the game with the University of Nevada at Las Vegas, 2 weeks ago. Quarterback, Craig Juntunen has been hampered with the flu and a chest and head cold will have his spot filled by Rocky Tuttle. Several of the other players are tending small injuries and may or may not start.

The "Battle of the Palouse," saw WSU the victor over Idaho to the tune of 45-17. But even could see it in this week's practice, they're looking forward to this one," Troxel said.

"This game is important," Troxel continued. "We'd like to go into the BSU (Boise State) game with a win."

New Mexico will try to close out a 4-6 season and this will be the Aggies last contest of the 1977 football season.

U of I and NMSU is fairly new as the series was initiated in 1971, with the Vandals coming out on top 19-14. The only other time the two teams met was last season in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome. Idaho won that game 33-6.

Troxel is expecting a tough contest in Las Cruces. "They played a very physical game against us last year," he said adding, "I think the two teams are a lot alike."

Aggie quarterback Rick Horacek holds NMSU's highest rushing total in a season ever for an Aggie quarterback 360 yards. Running back Anton Niles and wide receiver Stanley Sam are also threats to score. Sam has 33 interceptions this year and a career total of 90 interceptions.

New Mexico is averaging 314.7 yards rushing and allowed 23 points per game defensively. The strong point for NMSU appears to their pass rush which has recorded 51 quarterback sacks.

Bowls (and not the kind you eat out of), national rankings that finally mean something, and All-American candidates: I can hardly believe it's that time of year again..

Bouncing back from a mediocre 1976 season, Boise State's ranked sixth in the nation, increasing their winning streak to four by beating Cal Poly 42-21 in Boise.

It was the last home game for the Broncos, and it ended the same way BSU's season has been going—with a loud bang.

Cedric Minter, a name to remember and maybe jot down, rushed for 210 yards and four t.d.'s. If that doesn't do something for you, how about this: the guy's a frosh. You heard me right. A freshman!

BSU's a running club and they deserve the rest they're getting this weekend. They might need it as they face the Vandals in Moscow the following Saturday, on Nov. 26.

That happens to be the day that the national Division II playoffs are to be held. After Northern Arizona's 70-0 romp over Eastern Montana, rumours are rampant that the Lumberjacks will be invited along with undefeated Cal

Davis to represent the Western region.

But first Joe Salem's club faces UN-Omaha this Saturday in Flagstaff. For some reason analysts think the Nebraska boys are good. Maybe that stems from the fact that Omaha's a mere 100 miles from Lincoln Cornhusker land. Pish posh: NAU to win.

Idaho went up against a brick wall Saturday as they fell to Pac-8 power Washington State in Pullman. Losing 45-17, the Vandal defensive line led by Steve Parker and others put up a noble effort that grounded the WSU running game. But the passing game? That's another story.

The Vandals travel to sunny New Mexico Saturday where they'll meet New Mexico State in Las Cruces. The Aggies (notice how everyone in the Southwest is called "Aggies"?) are only 4-6, with Idaho winning 33-6 last season at Homecoming. The result's up in the air, but when it finally comes down, I select Idaho to get back on the winning side. The Vandals will win this one, 28-21.

Idaho State ended Weber State's season, beating the Wildcats 21-18 in Pocatello's Mini-Dome. Montana also ended its season Saturday but on a winning note, as they slipped by Puget Sound 18-17. Montana State was idle.

No problems picking winners this week. Utah State should obliterate hosting Idaho State, while Big Sky third-place Montana State will get past Portland State in another night game.

Harriers nab ninth in district meet

Wrapping up a respectable season which included the earlier winning of the British Columbia provincial championships, men's cross country finished ninth in the district and fourth in the Big Sky Saturday at Salt Lake City.

Texas El-Paso surprised no one as they took the NCAA District 7 title hands down. Simon Kilili from Wyoming took first place with a time of 29:09, and helped his team take second, while third place went to Brigham Young.

New this year, the district meet saw independents, the WAC and the Big Sky square off. Idaho's best effort came from Dennis Weber, who finished 47th, with a time of 32:09.

"To a certain extent I think we were intimidated by the competition," said Coach Keller. "Out of the top 50 runners, only 11 were from the Big Sky."

The conference's best showing was from Weber State's Jorge Ruiz, who helped the Utah team get a sixth place in team standings, and took the Big Sky trophy.

"I know one thing," said Keller, "and it wasn't because we were out of shape. We just ran yesterday (Wednesday) up in Spokane for three miles, and Steve Ortiz (a freshman) came within two seconds of breaking the school record."

Ortiz ran a 13:53 three-mile for the U.S. Track Postal Meet, posting a season best for him. Keller added that Ortiz' performance might earn the 17-year-old a berth in the top 20 runners in that nationally-compared race.

BSU game will be televised

KTVB Channel 7 from Boise, the traditional Treasure Valley station to carry Boise State football, will tentatively be telecasting next Saturday's University of Idaho-Boise State football game. The game will be broadcast live from the ASUI-Kibbie Dome to KTVB's viewing audience which covers most of southeastern Idaho.

"The NCAA has to give us permission first," said Dr. Leon Green, men's intercollegiate athletics director. Green emphasized that the decision to televise the Idaho-BSU game has not been finalized yet. "We should be hearing from the NCAA any day now—Sunday at the latest."

John Ikeda, Business Manager for U of I athletics, said that the NCAA's decision should arrive Monday from Big Sky commissioner Steve Belko. The Big Sky conference has already given KTVB the go ahead.

"I don't anticipate any problems with approval," Ikeda said. "We haven't signed a formal contract yet because we can't until the NCAA gives us their approval."

Idaho will be getting the first $1,000 on all advertising sales with the balance split between BSU and Idaho.

"It will help us with more statewide exposure," said Ikeda.

Tickets sold in the Boise area are non-refundable according to Ticket Manager Inez Driscoll. "I've only known about it for a day," she said. "As far as I know even the television people didn't know until the last minute."

"The tickets say right on them they're non-refundable. We have an agreement with Boise, so that when they sell tickets up here it's the same way."

Ikeda said that about 1,200 tickets are being sold in Boise with less than 150 left. "Ticket sales here have been real good," he added.

Ed Troxel, head football coach, taped an interview for KTVB concerning the upcoming game. "They asked me a few questions relative to the game," Troxel said.

No field hockey nationals for now

The U of I women's field hockey team defeated Washington State 3-0 before falling to the University of Oregon team 2-1 in the regional qualification tournament last weekend in Tacoma, Wash.

The loss ended the team's hopes of advancing to national competition in Denver Nov. 23-26.

In the game with WSU, Vikki Howard, Sue Gytri and Alisa Smith each scored one goal for Idaho.

Idaho's season record is now 15-1-2, and the team has outscored its opponents 63-14.

McCaslin and Ringer: folk and country concert tonight

Two of the top names in country music, Mary McCaslin and Jim Ringer, are in concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the Administration Auditorium. Tickets are $3.50 at the door.

McCaslin started with Linda Ronstadt and the Stone Poneys and has been characterized as an L.A. cowgirl. Her songs range from Cole Porter to Lennon and McCartney.

Ken Barnes of Rolling Stone Magazine said, "McCaslin's unorthodox guitar tunings create unusual, ethereal melodies of striking beauty."

Jim Ringer is a true western singer, an artist whose music comes from his own experience as a construction worker, prize-fighter, traveling performer, and the dozens of other pursuits he has followed in his life.

His style runs the gamut from the traditionally oriented (such as the title cut on "Tramps & Hawkers" his fourth album), to contemporary country western.

The concert is being presented by a new Moscow organization, "The Friends of Music and Media," devoted to bringing quality folk artists and speakers to this area.

Hepburn's dog eats dinosaur

By DAVID GAFFNEY

This Sunday the ASUI Film Society will present a mad-cap comedy made in 1938 called, "Bringing Up Baby", starring Katharine Hepburn and Cary Grant. Show times in the Borah Theater are 5, 7 and 9 p.m. Admission is 75 cents.

Hepburn and Grant play the roles of a couple of people living in New York who are brought together under some very odd circumstances. Miss Hepburn is an heiress who is bored to tears with riches and high society and would rather jump off her penthouse balcony than go to another high society party.

She meets Grant, who is a Paleontologist working on a rare dinosaur skeleton in a downtown museum, and falls madly in love with him as only Miss Hepburn can fall in love: madly, Dahling, simply madd-ly!

She invites him to her penthouse flat for dinner one evening and he makes the mistake of bringing along the precious final bone which will complete his dinosaur skeleton. Miss Hepburn's pets, a terrier named George and a leopard named Baby, snatch the valuable bone from Grant and the fun begins.

He tries everything to get the bone back but to no avail. However, he winds up with a much finer set of bones when he collects beautiful Miss Hepburn.

Director Hawkes keeps this zany nonsense moving at a high pitch equal to the best 18th century Restoration Comedies of Goldsmith and Sheridan. Critics agree that besides The Philadelphia

Story, Bringing up Baby is Miss Hepburn's finest and most accessible comedy film. Howard Hawkes, as a director, is one of America's best, having made films such as, "The Big Sleep" with Humphrey Bogart, "His Girl Friday" with Rosalind Russell and Gary Grant and "El Dorado" and "Rio Bravo" with John Wayne.

George, the Dog, is played by Asta of 'the Thin Man' series which starred William Powell and Myrna Loy in 1934.

Lack of outdoor understanding leads to trail misunderstanding

By N.K. HOFFMAN

The Idaho Trails Council (ITC) held its sixth annual symposium Nov. 12 and 13. Speakers and panelists dealt with restrictions such as permits and ethics that apply to users of national parks, forest lands, and rivers.

Many of the problems outdoor recreationists run into seem to stem from a lack of understanding. Motor vehicle people don't understand hikers, snowmobilers don't understand cross-country skiers, commercial floaters don't understand non-commercial floaters, and vice versa. The symposium was set up to let people from different user-groups at least hear each other out.

"You can't pigeon-hole recreation," said James R. Fazio, ITC president. "Everything does affect everything else."

River recreation was the first topic, and Jim Rennie, U of I outdoor program coordinator, spoke from the viewpoint of the private user. Permits are the problem, he said. Only a certain number are issued each season, and he felt that too many of these went to commercial outfitters.

John Jones, a commercial outfitter from Pullman, countered with an argument against the open permit lottery Rennie had proposed.

A panel discussing the viewpoints of trail users followed, with representatives from horse-users, hikers and climbers, motorcyclists, cross-country skiers and snowmobilers.

George Hatley, representing equestrians, said horse riders feel they're the earliest trail-users, and have a right to be there; consequently, they're not always as careful as they should be. Hatley has developed a code of ethics for trailriding horse riders.

David Cockrell, a hiker and climber, described some attitudes hikers and other recreationists have, according to sociological studies.

Instead of being an experience source, Cockrell said, wilderness has become "an activity setting...a place where you can go to play with your equipment." People collect wilderness experiences like hunters collect trophies, he said. One of the functions of the ITC should be to redirect the motivations of multiple-use land; people should learn that when they want to "play with their equipment," they don't have to go to the wilderness to do it, he said.

Mel Quale gave the motorcyclists' viewpoint. Motorcyclists feel that "Uncle Sam views some of his nieces and nephews as illegitimate," he said; there are many restrictions applying to motorcyclists that don't apply to hikers or horseback riders. Quale said this was partly because a "New Class, America's darling," had the ears of the media and Congress. These people feel that "anyone using a machine in the forest can't appreciate nature." Quale said motorcyclists help clean up trails; they would be open to a new program.

Ron Watters, cross-country skier, said his group was losing ground, partly because of a myth, which skiers help perpetuate, that they can go anywhere. Actually skiers are limited by snow, access, terrain, and "dominant use." An example of dominant and sub-dominant use, Watters explained, is a hiker walking along a highway. The cars are dominant. Cross-country skiers feel this way about snowmobilers.

there," a brochure reads—and which media would be the best at informing the public.

The most effective method of teaching people about minimum impact camping was an exhibit of slides set to music, Fazio said.

Jim Bradley, a resource assistant in Nez Perce National Forest, spoke about another method of informing wilderness users: the "portal assistant" program. He called the program a "three-pronged attack," and said it starts with lectures and demonstrations to fifth and sixth-graders. Next, there are wilderness information specialists, or "wizzes," who stay at the beginnings of trails and talk to as many people as possible about minimum impact camping; they also keep track of who is going where. This way they can help disperse people by knowing if an area is Snowmobilers feel restricted too, Rich Morrison of the Latah County Snowdrifters said. There are closures for safety, for game wintering habitats, and for downhill skiers.

"Can't we eliminate this spirit of competition?" asked a woman in the audience during the open discussion that followed. "We should have sharing and cooperation...concern for the resource would eliminate this arguing."

People applauded, but we all came back after lunch for more of the same anyway.

Bob Oset and John Dalle-Molle, both rangers, spoke about restrictions from the land-management viewpoint. They explained how permits keep the impact of people on the land low. Permits limit the number of people in any one area, said Dalle-Molle.

A panel on user-education followed. Fazio described some studies done to see how much people knew about minimum impact camping—"the challenge is to pass through the area and leave no trace that you were crowded and advising people not to go there, Bradley said. "It's not a decree, it's a persuasion."

The third prong is the wilderness ranger. The rangers roam around and watch people to see if they're damaging the wilderness.

But the most effective method of informing the public is word of mouth, Bradley said.

Finally, Brent Logan spoke about collegiate outdoor programs and how they contribute to a student's self-reliance and involvement with other students. He helped on a project to clean up the lower Salmon River, and had a beautiful slide presentation.

After it, an odd attitude that had permeated the whole proceedings resurfaced. Somebody in the audience told Logan he should be cautious about where he showed such beautiful slides. People might get ideas. People might want to go there!

It's dangerous to let people know there are beautiful places in the world, it seems. People might want to go and look at them.

Minority student's fest upcoming

A banquet and dance will highlight the Chicano-Hispanic cultural exchange to be held Saturday, November 26, in the SUB ballroom. The event will promote communication and cooperation between the administration, parents and students.

According to Carmen Loera, chicano minority student advisor, the exchange will feature a banquet of various mexican foods, while entertainment is provided by the students. Vocals, instrumentals, Mexican, Costa Rican, and Indian dances will highlight the entertainment.

The banquet begins at 4 p.m. to be followed by a dance at 10 p.m. A country-western band and a band that plays both rock and Chicano music will play for the dance.

"We're hoping to take parents to the football game in between the banquet and dance," said Loera.

The exchange, sponsored by Student Advisory Services and Minority Advisory Services, will give parents a chance to see what students are doing, and concentrate on recruitment and retention of minority students, said Loera. Students and counselors will be coming up from southern Idaho to look at the campus

Like mom like son

(ZNS) Sometimes it's like mother, like son.

Oregon teenager Emol Koch punched out a girl because she pushed a pomegranate in his face. Koch was taken home on suspension by his school principal.

The principal explained that having a fruit pushed in your face wasn't sufficient reason to hit someone, but the mother disagreed.

According to Koch's mother: "I told him (the principal) to wait right there...and we'd have a little demonstration. I went into the house and got a nice ripe honeydew melon. Then I came back out and backed him up against his car and squashed it into his face twice. He left with three seeds on his nose."

Banquet tickets cost $6 and must be reserved and picked up at the MAS office,

Help for homework harried parents on the way

Many parents throw up their hands when their children ask for help with homework, but a new program to be developed at the U of I could change that.

A new approach to teaching science to elementary school children which would turn the home into a classroom and parents into teachers will be developed at the university starting in January. The work will be funded by a $75,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

The project, originated by Dr. Michael Browne, professor of physics, and his wife Josephine, an elementary school teacher in Moscow, will develop and test materials to promote a family-oriented, individual science study by kindergarten through eighth grade students. An associate professor of biology at Washington State University, John Crane, will collaborate on the development of these materials to teach experimental explorations of topics ranging from atomic energy and nuclear physics to the basic biological processes of cells.

"Many recent studies by sociologists and educators have shown that the single most important factor in the quality of education is the home environment," Jo Browne said, adding that the new program will utilize and enhance this factor.

Basic skills, such as reading, writing and arithmetic, are given the highest priority in the schools today, with time for science very limited, she said. But the youngest years are the most formative, and children need exposure to science before high school and college. As class time is limited, then the home can be an important learning center, and parents an important learning resource, she said.

Parents will receive instruction from the teacher and will perform the experiments during a once-a-month evening workshop. Parents will receive a study guide and assist the child as the work is done at home. Children will receive a separate study guide suggesting topics for investigation and indicating possible experimental avenues. They also will keep a journal on the work and report results in class.

Dr. Browne said research over the next two years will produce a resource manual for the teacher, a guide for the student, and a guide for the parental advisors. These materials will be tested in actual home and classroom situations during the following year, he said.

Subjects other than science will also be affected by the home process, he maintained. "This program will enhance all aspects of education because it will draw the parents into the learning process and develop a good academic atmosphere in the home." All subject areas will benefit from this involvement, he said.

Other benefits can also be realized. The monthly workshops with the teacher will constitute effective adult continuing education and will enhance the parent-school relationships, the Brownes said. More importantly, the use of parents as teacher-advisors can greatly strengthen the family structure and enrich the parent-child relationships, they said.

Blind psychologist says sportscasters prejudicial

(ZNZ) A blind psychologist claims he can tell the race of a professional football player by carefully listening to the remarks the play-by-play broadcasters make in describing a game.

Doctor Raymond Rainville of the State University of New York says he has discovered a subtle anti-black prejudice in the comments made by all-white announcers.

To test this theory, Rainville says he made word-for-word transcripts of the announcer's descriptions of various black and white players in 12 NFL football games.

He states that a panel of judges read the transcripts, which had been altered only to change the player's true names. According to Rainville, the judges unanimously found that players who turned out to be white were praised while those who were black were criticized.

Rainville told Human Behavior magazine: "When blacks broke through the line or made a long run, this was seen as the result of luck, good blocking or other forces outside the player. When whites made the same accomplishments, this was interpreted as being due to their own skill, strength, initiative or other internal qualities."

Smooches start of successful days

(ZNS) A German study has reportedly discovered that men who want to "enjoy better health, live longer and earn more money" should start each day with a kiss.

Prevention magazine says a two-year study of West German business leaders has found that 87 percent of the top industrialists who were interviewed reported that they kiss their spouses every morning.

Doctor Albert Szabo, who conducted the study, adds that of 100 executives whose careers were slipping, 83 percent said they never or "seldom bothered" to kiss their spouses.

Szabo said of male executives: "when a man skips his morning kiss, he's off to a negative start. He tends to be moody and depressed. He's uninterested in his work and his surroundings."
