ASUI falls behind in dues

by Annette Cary

The ASUI has not paid $4,000 dues to the Idaho Student Association (ISA), a lobbying group for student concerns, and it may not.

ASUI President Bob Harding says, "I don't know if we'll get $4,000 worth of service."

One alternative to joining the ISA that he is now considering is to start an alternate lobbying group. "The idea of a student lobbying group is very good," says Harding, but he questions whether the ISA really does that good a job.

One function of the ISA is to represent the schools in the Idaho legislature and then to send information to them. In December 1977, Harding told the ISA that the U of I was not being kept informed and requested that a weekly newsletter be sent.

Harding says the newsletter was supposed to be started in January, but he has only received one. Mike Hoffman, President of the Boise State University Student Lobby and BSU's representative to ISA, said the next newsletter is now being worked on, but he did not say when it would be sent.

Harding says he also does not approve of parts of the ISA's financial system, i.e., a checkbook with counter-signed signatures. He also says the association's financial records are poor, funds are not audited and $1500 of ISA funds have been embezzled.

Hoffman agrees that Harding's complaints are legitimate, and says quarterly audits are being started.

Harding attended two ISA meetings in Boise this year. Most people attending the meetings were from BSU, says Harding, in fact, the ISA Executive Director, Will Roy is enrolled at BSU.

Harding says this may influence the ISA to work harder for the interests of BSU than for the other Idaho schools. He points out that BSU has its own lobby in addition to the ISA, and both groups have been lobbying for the permanent building fund for Idaho public institutions. However, BSU has recently erected two new buildings with money from this fund.

Hoffman says other schools "have always been afraid of a BSU bias but I have never seen it." He says that rather than the ISA being used to help the BSU student government lobbyists, the two complement each other. Roy says the ISA benefits all students in Idaho equally. Competition among schools to see "who can have the most new buildings" is "self-defeating."

The association "would stay alive without the U of I" said Roy, but it would be weakened.

Harding has just begun to consider an alternate lobbying group. "I don't know if it would be good or bad yet," he said. It might not be powerful if its membership is not as large as the ISA, and the two groups would probably "work against each other instead of for each other."

Besides the U of I, the members of ISA are BSU, Lewis and Clark State College, Northwest Nazarene College, Northern Idaho College, and College of Southern Idaho.

Since dues are based on size of the school, each school pays $500 except U of I and BSU which each have annual dues of $4,000.

Yet each school gets one representative—its student president—on the executive council, and therefore one vote each.

The executive director chooses the lobbyists. This year, two of the lobbyists are from BSU, one if from NWN, and the other, Lynn Tominaga, is from U of I.

Residency requirement change sought

Boise—A bill that would make it harder for out-of-state students to establish residency was introduced by the House Education Committee Friday.

Rep. Kitty Gurnsey, R-Boise, sponsor of the bill, said the measure would amend the Idaho Code so that to be classed as a resident, a student must receive less than half his support from parents or legal guardians if they do not live in Idaho.

Gurnsey said that under the present law it is too easy for out-of-state students to achieve Idaho residency and avoid paying out-of-state tuition.

The current law states that a student may become an Idaho resident after living continuously in the state for twelve months.

State senator Norma Dobler, D-Moscow, said that she would not favor the bill as it now reads. "I think the bill would be impossible to administer," she said.

A relatively small crowd watched 11 meet records broken in nineteen track and field events Sunday at the Third Annual Vandal indoor track meet in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome. Among the records to fall were the long jump, boosted to 25' 2" by Vesco Bradley of a northwest semi-pro club, the 330-meter dash, cut to 37.51 seconds by Darrell Seymour of WSU, and the triple jump, lengthened to 53' 9.25" by Ian Campbell of WSU. The hurdlers and high jumper shown here were among almost 150 athletes to compete in the meet. Photos by Jim Johnson.

No appeal to be made on findings

by Mark Jacobson

"We are not going to appeal their (NCAA) findings," said U of I President Richard Gibb in a press conference Friday.

Currently the NCAA is investigating the U of I for alleged recruiting violations which occurred in the spring of 1977.

Gibb would not discuss the NCAA's findings. He said that he had been urged to wait until the findings are released by the NCAA. Those findings should be in by Wednesday or Thursday of this week and the U of I will release its comments at that time, Gibb said.

Gibb said the decision not to appeal the NCAA findings was "determined yesterday," (last Thursday) after he and Athletic Director Bill Belknap conferred on the matter.

Other skeletons in the basketball closet have surfaced. The Idaho Free Press, Nampa, reported Jan. 17 that violations also occurred in the spring of 1975.

The article reports that Rodney Johnson, one of Idaho's co-captains, was illegally flown to New Orleans to help Idaho basketball coach Jim Jarvis recruit Donald Newman.

Recruiting trips made by active university athletes is in violation of NCAA rules.

The story claims that Johnson flew to New Orleans, supposedly to visit an aunt who lived there. Jarvis was also in New Orleans at the time, according to the Idaho Free Press, attempting to keep Newman from signing with LSU.

After playing at LSU for one season, Newman enrolled at the U of I where he is red-shirting for Jarvis and is a roommate of Johnson's.

Neither Johnson nor Newman could be contacted.

Their phone apparently has been disconnected or their number has been changed, according to the Moscow phone company.

The Idaho Free Press article also deals with another article published in the March 26, 1977 issue of the Daily Idahonian. The article publicized prospective athletes on campus, their workouts and meetings with boosters.

According to the story, the "release" was prepared by then graduate assistant Wes Sordorff and distributed in Moscow.

Boise State publication draws officials' fire

by Marty Trillhaase

The interim president of Boise State University has issued a disclaimer freeing all BSU staff, faculty, and administrators from responsibility for material appearing in a recent student satirical publication.

Acting BSU President John Bullington issued the statement following publication of the latest Arm biter. The Arm biter is modeled after the National Lampoon. The magazine is published through the facilities of the student newspaper, the Arbiter.

Arbiter editor John Priscella followed up Bullington's disclaimer with a disclaimer of his own. Priscella's statement disavowed him and his staff from responsibility for another campus paper, the Focus. The Focus is published by the BSU news bureau and is similar to the U of I Campus News.

Part of Bullington's response was aimed at establishing a publications board within the BSU student government. Currently, BSU does not have a board responsible for its publications. The U of I does.

Under the BSU structure, the ASBSU President appoints the editor and the student senate finances the paper.

Establishing a publications board could increase the ASBSU senate's power over the student media, Priscella said. But he added the Senate already controls the paper's purse strings. That gives BSU senators the potential power to influence the Arbiter's news content.

Priscella said he would prefer incorporating student publications. That, in effect, would substantially limit student government control over the Arbiter.

But he added the chances of obtaining senate approval for the incorporation move is slight. "I don't think they would release any powers that are already theirs," Priscella said.

Priscella has not closed the doors on a publications board entirely. "I would look at it objectively but with a very wary eye," he said. "I'd certainly want legal attorneys to take a look at it for us," he added.

Bullington also indicated a publications board may have prevented some questionable material from appearing in the Arm biter, Priscella said. But Priscella added the Arm biter pays its own way. The magazine is financed by advertising and by a one dollar per copy price. "It's not costing the student body anything so I don't see what their problem is," he said.

Although Bullington's remarks were meant to limit the magazine, he may have accomplished just the opposite. The BSU President's disclaimer was covered widely Thursday by the Boise media. Priscella noted Arm biter sales went up drastically Friday morning. Roughly 260 copies were sold in a two hour period, he said.

As a result of the publicity, Priscella said he expects the increase in sales to continue.

Senate will consider convention, ISA dues

The use of campaign slogans on ASUI ballots, an entertainment convention in New Orleans, the Wind Ensemble's trip to Chicago, and payment of ISA dues will be on the agenda at Wednesday's ASUI Senate meeting.

A bill submitted by Senator Dan Prohaska would provide space on ASUI ballots for campaign statements or slogans. The statements would be limited to twelve words, and could take any grammatical form desired by the candidate.

The Senate will consider the transfer of $675 to the entertainment budget, for the purpose of sending Entertainment Manager Scott Baillie to the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association Convention in New Orleans.

Bills providing for the expenditure of $4,000 for Idaho Student Association dues and $2,744.50 to send the Wind Ensemble to Chicago will also be considered.

Other items before the Senate will include the appointment of a presidential administrative aide, a bill providing for an ASUI official to attend Moscow city council meetings, and the purchase of a $2,500 electronic cash register for the golf course.

Bill sets state agency standards

A bill which would exempt the Board of Regents/State Board of Education from some provisions of the Administrative Procedures Act has been introduced into the legislature.

The bill, introduced by the Senate Health, Education, and Welfare Committee, will be the subject of a public hearing in Boise. The hearing is slated for 7:30 p.m., Monday in the State Office Building.

The APA sets standards and practices for state agencies to follow when proposing new regulations. The legislation was originally passed in 1965. It provides for prior notice through publication of the new regulations. The APA also calls for public hearings to be conducted on the proposals.

But the APA provides an exemption. Regulations or decisions dealing with areas of "internal management" are not bound by the law.

The Board has maintained this exemption applies to most of its jurisdictions.

Not so, charged the Idaho Student Association. The ISA claimed the Board violated the APA by establishing an alcohol policy without public hearings. A Boise judge agreed last May.

The question of what constitutes "internal management" was a costly one for the Board. In order to re-establish a permanent alcohol policy, the Board conducted public hearings at the four state-supported colleges and universities. The final price tag was roughly $25,000.

The Board now fears the Boise decision may set a precedent.

The Board had requested a total exemption from the APA last year. Senate HEW committee members expressed reluctance to do that although the Board promised it would conduct hearings in areas of public concern. One committee member, Sen. Dick Smith, R-Rexburg, said at that time the exemption might set a precedent for other agencies.

The current Board request must return to the senate HEW committee before final senate consideration.

The bill as it now reads classifies the following as being internal management:

- Student fees and tuition rates
- Student activities and discipline
- Personnel management
- Admission requirements, curriculum and academic standards
- Use of physical facilities and student housing

Gibb talks candidly at conference

"I was in the area, so I decided to call a press conference," chuckled an amazingly relaxed U of I President Richard Gibb, last Friday.

Gibb said that he called the conference simply to answer some of questions of the press.

On the matter of ASUI Golf Course Pro Richard Snyder, Gibb said that there are "no technical violations," concerning possible nepotism charges against Snyder.

Gibb said that he is "tempering justice with mercy," in paying Ed Troxel his salary until June 30. Troxel resigned under pressure on Dec. 31. "We want to give him a reasonable length of time to find a job," added Gibb.

Gibb was fairly candid concerning the NCAA charges of illegal recruiting against Idaho. "We are not going to appeal their (NCAA) findings," he said. Gibb said that the decision not to appeal the NCAA allegations was reached after conferring with Athletic Director Bill Belknap Thursday.

As to whether or not he had made a recommendation concerning the $6 fee increase which was cut in half by the Board of Regents, Gibb said, "I elected to stay out of it under the circumstances."

Gibb said that he could understand the problems of people who live out of state and work in the state with regard to their children's college tuition. He said that he felt that granting such people waivers of the out-of-state tuition fees would have a modest impact on student financial programs.

in a pig's eye...

Two sets of teeth

A publication at Boise State University is starting to attract a lot of attention.

It's called the Arm biter (a take-off on the BSU student paper, the Arbiter) and it does National Lampoonish social, political and sex satire. Meanwhile, the BSU administration does a double-take.

The magazine has shocked the administration there and sent it groping for ways to cope with the Arm biter. One of the ideas the administration struck on was that of a publications board, similar to the Communications Board here at the U of I.

Now, a publications board is not actually a bad idea at most times, and if it understands its purpose clearly. It should participate in the selection of student media heads, hear grievances, assist the media where needed and help keep the bureaucracy off the media's back. It certainly should not tell a newspaper, magazine or whatever what to print, or what not to print.

That's why the surfacing of a publications board, right now, smells fishy. Worse than that, it smells of censorship.

It seems to me that the only real reason to establish a publications board at BSU at this time would be to place a check on the Arm biter. Granted, the board they have in mind might very well be similar to the board here. Then again, it might be used as a muzzle to prevent the Arm biter from biting any more arms.

This, of course, would be illegal. Here at the U of I, for instance, the editor of the Argonaut "shall determine all editorial and business policies" of the paper, subject to review by the Communications Board. In addition, the Argonaut is protected by the First Amendment right to freedom of the press, and Fourteenth Amendment not to be deprived on liberty without due process of law.

I hope the BSU administration is not foolish enough to try to censor or otherwise tamper with the Arm biter. The administration there is dealing with something much bigger than itself, or even the state of Idaho.

Rape crisis line to be discussed

Planning and decision making for a future rape crisis line is the discussion topic for a Jan. 24 meeting from 7-9 p.m. at the Women's Center.

The Moscow community no longer has a rape crisis line. Volunteers are needed. Interested people attending the meeting will decide whether a line will be created and who is going to do it, said Donna Granville, director of the Women's Center.

The more people who volunteer for the project, the less the time commitment will be for everyone, she said. "We have to have a lot of women involved or it isn't feasible. Even if only one woman is raped, she should have a support system to go to," said Granville.

Rape crisis line volunteers support women emotionally and through legal procedures, if they desire it. Granville stressed the importance of obtaining input at the meeting and encourages interested people to attend.

"... it shall be the duty of the legislature of Idaho, to establish and maintain a general, uniform and thorough system of public, free common schools..." Idaho Constitution

In a recent survey of the predominantly-Republican Idaho legislature, about one-half the respondents indicated that they would support a constitutional amendment "allowing" the University of Idaho to charge tuition. Essentially, it was argued that those who benefit from the service should "shoulder more of the load."

However, Idaho students are probably shouldering more of the load than warranted (and illegally) when they pay the registration fee, which is obviously tuition. After all, what is tuition but a mandatory fee to attend school?

But, another common usage of the word "tuition" is that money which goes to support instruction, something that our registration fee supposedly doesn't include. But if we examine the various components of the fee, we discover something different.

There is a charge for the University Classroom Center; another for the College of Education Building; several for the Kibbie Dome. Each of these buildings is used for classroom instruction. The Idaho Supreme Court ruled that the Law School Building fee was in fact a tuition (although legal for law students). If one classroom building fee is tuition, why are not others?

In addition, students are charged for, and are major supporters of such non-exclusive services as Intercollegiate Athletics, the SUB, and the Alumni Association, all of which are considered necessities for a "complete college education."

The University of Idaho pre-dates the state. It was chartered by the Territorial Legislature, which wrote "...no student shall be required to pay any fees for tuition...except in a professional department and for extra studies...", but somehow over the years our registration fee, like Topsy, "just grew."

The Idaho legislature, served for too many years by an acquiescent alumni, a fiscally-nervous Board of Regents, and administrators unable or unwilling to make tough budget decisions, has continued to permit the levying of a growing registration fee to help support auxiliary enterprises that do not have the general support of the public.

A recent example was last summer's attempt by the board to increase the intercollegiate athletic fee to maintain a "continuance budget" for men's sports, and build up women's athletics to a level that is apparently required by Title IX. It was argued that the public would be reluctant to increase its tax share of such activities. But at the same time, it was said that the public would not stand to have athletics cut off, or even cut back.

It is justly argued that the Idaho taxpayer, who gives one of the highest per capita amounts to education of any state in the union, is already burdened. However, this "burden" of funding education and its support enterprises was placed upon the public, not by the students, but by the legislature.

It is not enough to attempt to limit fee increases each year to "as little as possible," we must become more conservative, and return to the intent of State Fathers who called for a free education, to the Idaho Legislature, rather than taxing—by fees—the group that can least afford to pay: the students. Our state constitution is important, and it would seem appropriate that our own elected officials could follow its meaning.

Letters

Socialism

To the Editor:

Here's a news item about farmers that may be of interest to some Argonaut readers. It appeared in the Nov. 16, 1977 issue of the Schenectady Gazette with the heading: Farmers at new low.

"The U.S. farm population, 8.2 million, is down seven percent from a year earlier and is 15 percent below 1970.

The figure is 600,000 less than it was last year and 15 million less than in 1970. Today's farm population is only slightly more than one quarter than that of the peak years of 1916 and 1933 and is the lowest on record going back to 1910."

According to the New York State Department of Agriculture, there were 60,715 dairy farmers in this state in 1950, but only 17,050 in 1965.

More and more small independent farmers are finding themselves in a bind where they are being absorbed by the big agribusiness corporations.

Present day society is forcing more and more people to become victims on the bottom of the lowest rung of the economic ladder with the result the rich are getting richer and the poor keep on suffering and going downhill.

As the Socialist Labor Party stresses, we need a NEW system and that is REAL SOCIALISM!

Many parking lots have plenty of room

by Kristen Moulton

If people would be willing to walk a block or two, there would be no parking congestion problem, according to Chuck Woolson, Director of Institutional Services which administers the parking program.

While the majority of permit-required lots were typically above 90 percent occupancy level during fall semester, many lots were used at only 27 to 84 percent levels, Woolson said.

The University's three free parking lots, located west of the ASUI-Kibbie Dome, east of the Golf Course Clubhouse and west of the Wallace Complex, were virtually unused, he said.

"People who don't mind walking and don't want to buy a parking permit can park absolutely free," Woolson said. Parking Control employees found the walk between the Administration Building and lot 31 behind the Kibbie Dome to be only eight minutes.

Streets on and off campus are subject to Moscow City Ordinances and so require no university parking lot permit.

Woolson encouraged drivers to use the "under-used" lots and said that a parking place could be virtually guaranteed.

Yellow permit lots that have a low occupancy level, according to Woolson, are lot 41 on Sweet Ave., behind the Music Building; lot 46 on Blake St., south of the Music Building; lots 12, 13, and 14 on Sixth St., east of Gault Hall and the Heating Plant.

Under-used blue permit lots are lot 1 on Third St., next to the Information Center; lot 20 on Paradise Creek St., north of Wallace Complex and Theophilus Tower and east of the warehouses; lot 8 on Sixth St., in back of the Isotope Lab; lot 24, west of the Law Building; lots 18 and 29 on Deakin Ave., north and east of the SUB; lot 36E on College Ave., just off Deakin; lot 38, north of the Industrial Arts Building, just off Sweet Ave.

Percentages of usage of the lots were derived from data collected during September, October and November at different times Monday—Thursday by parking program employees.

The present parking program has been in operation for a year. Prior to that time, university parking lots were free and were run on taxpayers' money.

The parking program is now self-supporting. Revenues from permit sales, meters and citations are used for the salaries, equipment, materials, expansion and improvements of lots, Woolson said.

The parking lot between the Law Building and Wallace Complex will be expanded by over 123 spaces this summer, Woolson said, as part of a five-year improvement and expansion plan. The lots near the Heating Plant will be paved as the last phase of the plan.

Woolson said the program is in good shape, partly because the officers do good work. "We treat all the same, whether they are students, faculty, administration or state officers."

A common gripe last week of students new to the campus this semester was that they were ticketed before they could buy permits at registration.

Woolson said that these people are in the numerical minority and that over 90 percent of the permits sold are sold during fall semester. During the first week of fall semester, only warnings were given except for flagrant violations, he said.

"If we didn't protect the integrity of the permit, we wouldn't be doing right by the owner," he said.

The traffic committee, made up of students, faculty and staff, will hear appeals from persons who feel a citation was undeserved. Joan Miller, of the Institutional Services Offices of the Guest Residence Center, handles all written appeals and schedules committee meetings.

During fall semester fewer than two percent of all citations were appealed, a fact that Woolson thinks is an indication that the system is fair.

Fewer than one-half of those appealed are forgiven by the Traffic Committee. Though no one ever has, a citation could be appealed to the President, the Regents, or the courts, Woolson said.

One violation that the parking control officers are expected to "crack down on" is illegal parking in a handicapped space. The charge for such a violation is $10.

Violations of parking lots regulations warrant a $4 citation.

Parking regulations are in effect from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays only.

Idaho law changes are aiding women

"It's exciting to see consistent changes in Idaho law concerning women's political and equalitarian issues," said Senator Edith Miller Klein, R-Boise, at the recent Practical Politics for Women conference held on the U of I campus.

"What we've done is only a drop in the bucket; there's still a long way to go," said Klein, discussing Idaho's legislative progress for women. Klein said the door has been opening during the last 12 years.

The issues involving women currently under consideration by this session of the Idaho legislature was the content of Klein's keynote address to the more than 70 women and men who attended the lecture and workshops.

Senator Norma Dobler, D-Moscow, conducted the displaced homemaker workshop. This legislation will attempt to aid middle aged women and men, who have fulfilled the role of unpaid homemaker and find themselves displaced because of the death or disability of a spouse, or divorce or other loss of family income. The bill attempts to help those unable to receive other types of government services.

The workshop on dissolution of marriage outlined the proposed no-fault legislation and compared the proposed changes with the present divorce proceedings in Idaho.

Klein said progress for women in Idaho against discrimination has been achieved in the areas of civil rights, equal wages, probate codes and equal management of community property.

She spoke of the strong and large numbers of people who lobbied for and against the Equal Rights Amendment, citing the shaking of fists and shouting as a "sad action."

Klein said she supports a more logical approach that will give inspiration and the mechanics for stimulating the idea that women can function and need specific protection. "I hope some of it will be a change in attitude," she said. "We must continue to work to change social attitudes and enforce the laws we already have on the books," Klein said.

Globetrotters to visit dome

The world famous Harlem Globetrotters will bring their show to the Kibbie Dome at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 26. They will be playing the California Chiefs.

Pre-game and half time variety shows with Chester Cable, an acrobat and comic, Gerard and Ursula, a husband and wife comedy acrobatic act, and Leslie Young and Rick Kinsman, famous trampoline performers, will add an extra dimension to the normal Globetrotter antics.

According to the Globetrotters, they are first and foremost masters of the game of basketball at its most serious. Playing against professional basketball teams, they have only lost one game in the past 15 years, participating in some 5,500 contests.

Known as the "Magicians of Basketball," the Globetrotters have played more than 13,000 games before nearly 85 million people in 94 countries.

This year they will visit 200 cities in North America, travelling more than 75,000 miles. After finishing their American tour, they will play 100 games in Europe.

They have been playing basketball and performing since 1927. They didn't begin to make a name for themselves, however, until winning a Chicago Herald American newspaper invitational tournament which determined the world's basketball championship in 1940.

The famous "Globetrotter style" evolved during the team's leaner years when only six or seven men travelled with a squad. One man would "show dribble" using time on the clock so his teammates could take a breather, or two or three men would control the ball with fancy passing techniques, allowing everyone a short rest.

Advance tickets are now on sale in Moscow at Carter's Drug, the Magic Mushroom and the SUB; at the Washington State University Performing Arts Coliseum in Pullman and at Market Time and Owl Drug stores in Lewiston. Reserved seats are $5.50 and general admission $5. A $1 discount will be given children under 12 and U of I students with valid identification cards.

Women cagers take on LCSC

Tomorrow night the U of I women's varsity basketball team travels to Lewiston to meet Lewis-Clark State College at 7 p.m.

The LCSC women will go into the game with a 4-6 season mark while the U of I women will be 3-1.

"Our players are doing some exciting things," Coach Bonnie Hultstrand said. "We are getting all around scoring and rebounding from several players during our games."

Eastern Oregon State College and Northwest Nazarene College both fell to the Vandals this weekend. Jean Hayman Chamberlain and Betty Fiandaca contributed 17 points each to lead the Vandals to a 77-45 decision over EOSC.

Kathy Ball topped the U of I women's 80-60 effort over NNC with 21.

'Introduction to Theatre' starts with surprises

Students enrolled in Theatre Arts 101, Introduction to Theatre, got a surprise when they went to their first class session this week.

Using a new concept for the class, Fred Chapman, recently appointed head of the department, mixes lecture with practical demonstration by advanced acting students. For the first class, however, the "actors" were disguised as students, and interrupted the "lecture" in a surprising way.

The scene began as Chapman strolled to a podium set up on the stage of Hartung Theatre and began delivering a pompous, boring lecture, read directly from a book.

It may have seemed like the typical, staid first day of class, except perhaps that the lecture ranged from melodramatically boring to absolute tedium. Then again it does sound like the typical first day of class.

Shortly after Chapman began his monotone delivery, the first interruption came in the form of two late "students" entering the class, bantering boisterously between themselves, and creating a distraction in general as they made their way to their seats.

Chapman droned away, unfazed by this, or by a second group of late "students". To add to the distraction, another "student" arrived late and stood on the stage by the podium until Chapman stopped the lecture to ask them what they wanted.

The new interruption handed Chapman a sheaf of papers and asked if it was too late to register for the class.

Things returned to normal, only to be punctuated by a booming crash as a flat fell over backstage. An actor emerged from behind the curtain and asked Chapman to leave because there was a rehearsal scheduled.

"We're having a class," said Chapman. "Go use the green room."

As the series of interruptions escalated, some of the actors started getting up from the class and began taunting Chapman with cries of "boring, boring," circling the podium, and finally grabbing the podium and trying to drag it from the stage.

Throughout the melee, Chapman tried to continue the lecture, but was foiled when the actors finally dragged him from the stage and began acting out impromptu scenes. Chapman kept attempting to sneak back onstage, but was prevented by the actors.

During a scene from Hamlet, one of the actors drew a sword and thrust it into the curtain. A scream was heard, and the audience noticed Chapman's shoes protruding from under the curtain.

The class knew it was a setup by then, and laughed as the charades continued.

Chapman finally staged a comeback of sorts when he strode onstage with a ladder, climbed to the top of it and began again to recite his lecture.

The actors countered by lining up in front of the ladder, while one of their number sneaked up from behind, pushed the ladder and Chapman over into waiting arms, and hit him in the face with a pie.

So much for an introduction to theatre. All the world's a stage, they say, and so is Theatre Arts 101.

Wildlife Society to hold meeting

The Idaho Chapter of the Wildlife Society will hold its annual meeting, 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., Jan. 24.

Improving communications will be the topic of discussion and programs are scheduled in the student union building Borah Theatre during the day.

In conjunction with the meeting, wildlife art and exhibits will be displayed in the Gold Room in the SUB and may be purchased from the Wildlife Society.

The people at the Gramophone stereo center are sound engineers, musicians and audiophiles dedicated to the most accurate, faithfully reproduced sound—often at prices far below retail costs. Their knowledgeable staff can demonstrate such "best buys" as the Cizek system pictured below. This high definition stereo consists of the Connoisseur BD 2/A turntable (with its incredible low mass arm), the Technics SA-5270 35 watt/channel receiver, and the Cizek speaker. Unlike "house brand" speakers, this unit has received rave reviews in publications like High Fidelity and the Analytical Underground Journal, Audio Critic. Although modestly priced, the Cizek is used by the La Scala Opera House; and the rock group Boston, as home monitor systems.

The Gramophone also carries high fidelity budget stereos as well as many state of the art components. If you want the best value in audio, check out the Gramophone's low prices before buying from anyone else.
