U of I owns stock in "racist" firms

by Judith Berman

The Argonaut has determined that about one-sixth of the U of I private endowment is invested in U.S. companies operating in South Africa.

The stocks and bonds of the eight companies involved, including Gulf, the Chase Manhattan Bank, Tenneco and W.R. Grace, are valued at nearly $1 million.

Student protest against university investment in corporations operating in South Africa has been considerable on campuses around the country, though little has occurred until now at the University of Idaho. Most recent was last week's passing of a resolution by the assembly of the Associated Students of Washington State University (ASWSU). That resolution requested that the Board of Regents divest $1.6 million in stocks and bonds tied to South African interests. A student-sponsored rally on the subject was held Wednesday at WSU.

According to the magazine Politics and Education, student actions have taken place on some 32 campuses nationwide. Chief among these were sit-ins last spring at Stanford University and at various campuses of the University of California. Almost 300 Stanford students were arrested demanding that the university vote the proxies of its 93,350 shares of Ford Motor Company stock in favor of a church-sponsored resolution requiring the company to withdraw from South Africa. Stanford owns $120 million worth of stock in 33 companies in South Africa.

About one-third of the $1.7 billion portfolio of the University of California is invested in corporations operating in South Africa. Sit-ins against these investments resulted in 401 students arrested at UC Santa-Cruz, 58 at Berkeley, and 20 at Davis.

Neither Stanford or UC has yet acted in response to the students' demands.

Politics and Education lists the students at Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Wellesley, Brandeis, Rutgers, Columbia, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Ohio State, the University of Maryland, Tufts, Dartmouth, Wesleyan, and Boston University, among others, as having organized anti-apartheid activities. Those activities focused on university investments in corporations operating in South Africa.

Some universities have decided to liquidate their South African-related stock.

Wisconsin's attorney general ruled that the University of Wisconsin at Madison's $14 million invested in corporations such as 3M, Exxon, and Union Carbide violated a state law barring the regents from investing in companies which practice or condone discrimination.

Last November the Oregon State Board of Higher Education voted to divest itself of holdings in companies in South Africa which employ more than 50 people or which have fixed assets or earnings exceeding $500,000.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst sold about $680,000 worth of stock in companies in South Africa. Last spring Hampshire College sold all of its small portfolio. Smith College sold some $700,000

Committee neutral on lecture

by N. K. Hoffman

The Issues and Forums Committee had no opinion one way or the other on the issue (of abortion)," said Terrill Furey, chairwoman of the committee, which invited Dr. O. J. Brown to speak about abortion last Thursday. "(Abortion) is a controversial issue, but the committee's whole purpose is to bring in different issues for different interests," she added.

The Issues and Forums Committee has five members, all of whom decide on which speakers to invite to the U of I. The committee hires speakers with money from its own budget and funding from student organizations, Furey said.

Forrest Mays, a member of the committee, was particularly interested in inviting Dr. Brown to speak here; he thought the issue deserved exposure.

"I don't think there was any more promotion for this program than for the others," Mays said. "Most of the posters were torn down, so we had to put them up again. It was as if somebody didn't want people to know what was happening."

Last year the Issues and Forums Committee invited Wilma Scott Heidi, a former president of NOW, to speak at the U of I. This spring, Dr. Jay Allen Hyneick, who does UFO research, will speak.

Mendoza still in trouble

U of I assistant speech professor Nancy Mendoza was in better condition yesterday following three heart attacks last week.

Mendoza is still in serious condition. She is under care in the coronary unit of Deaconess Hospital in Spokane.

Her condition was stable, according to Deaconess.

Wednesday was reportedly Mendoza's best night since the attacks. "Things are beginning to stabilize now," Mendoza's mother, Thelma Wandling, told the Argonaut.

Senate delays considering fee breakdown

by Kerrin McMahan

The ASUI senate delayed consideration of a bill providing for a breakdown of the $3 spring semester fee increase in its meeting Wednesday night.

The bill contained appropriations to several ASUI departments. The Finance Committee had approved only one line, providing $750 for the Graphic Arts Department. Jim Rennie, Outdoor Department Manager, protested the committee's decision to hold the rest of the bill, including an appropriation of $1,660 to the Outdoor Department. ASUI President Bob Harding noted that the departments could be "frozen" before the committee approved the bill. Senator Daniel Prohaska, committee chairman, said he felt the committee should investigate each item rather than "rubber stamp" the department heads' requests. The senate voted to send the entire bill back to committee.

The senate approved the appointments of six students to the Golf Course Board. Appointed were Mike Helbling, manager, Dean Smith, Ed Knudson, John Beck, Tom Kiblen, and Tom South. Kenneth Manni, a second-year law student, was appointed ASUI Attorney General. 48 other appointments to ASUI Boards and Committees were held in committee.

A bill providing $800 to pay tutors at the learning resource center was passed. The additional money was needed if tutoring services were to continue past March 15, said spokeswoman Janet Driscoll.

Three resolutions dealing with state legislation were passed. Senate Resolution 8 urges the failure of Senate Bill 1510, which would restrict the serving of alcohol in and around public schools and churches. Resolution 9 calls for some clarification and changes in Senate Bill 1435, which makes it possible for the State Board of Education and the Board of Regents to be exempted from compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act. Resolution 10 asks for the defeat of House Bill 374, which would limit renovations, repairs and remodeling at U of I to $5,000 per year.

Idaho's investments in South African companies revealed

worth of stock in Firestone because "the company did not respond adequately to the trustee's concerns about the implementation of the Sullivan principles," according to Politics and Education.

Investments with money given by private donors to the U of I amount to a market value of $5,587,666. They money was originally left in a number of separate trusts, but in 1959 these trusts were pooled by the University of Idaho Foundation into the "Consolidated Investment Trust" (CIT). Touche Ross & Co., the CIT's auditor, lists the two largest items in the trust's assets as common stock and corporate bonds, at a market value of $4,261,379 and $1,198,876 respectively.

Ownership of a share of stock indicates a share in ownership in the company. A bond could be described as a system in which a sum of money is lent to a corporation for a certain number of years. During those years the corporation pays the lender interest on the money. The rate of interest is usually higher than what a bank pays. Ranier Bancorp, for instance in which CIT invested $100,000, pays 9½ percent interest on its corporate bonds. Interest paid on regular passbook savings deposits by commercial banks in 1977 was slightly more than 5 percent.

The CIT contains both shares of stock and corporate bonds of companies which have been determined to be operating in South Africa. At market value:

$210,000—the Chase Manhattan Bank (at 8¼ percent interest) Chase Manhattan Bank is a subsidiary of Chase Manhattan Corp., which owns Standard Bank of South Africa.

$49,875—Manufacturers Hanover Corp. (at 8-1/8 percent interest). Manufacturers Hanover is not directly involved; however, it makes loans to South Africa.

$146,250—Grace, W.R. & Co. W.R. Grace is a company with concerns in three major areas: chemically based products and services, consumer products and services, natural resources. Grace's subsidiaries in foreign countries include W.R. Grace Africa, Ltd.

$87,000—Sterling Drug. Sterling Drug owns Winthrop Laboratories, Ltd., of Johannesburg, South Africa

$137,860—Continental Corp. Diners' Club, affiliated with Continental Corp., has a branch in South Africa.

$136,000—Tenneco Inc. Tenneco is chiefly active in the area of natural resources. It owns J.I. Case, Ltd. in Johannesburg, and has a 25 percent interest in an oil concession with other companies off the South African coast.

$98,000—Gulf Oil Corp. Gulf owns Gulf Oil Co. of South Africa

$87,375—Texaco. Politics and Education cites Texaco stocks among those sold as being involved in South Africa.

$952,320 TOTAL

The above information was obtained from Walter

Skinner's Oil and Gas International Yearbook, Dun and Bradstreet's Principal International Businesses, Who Owns Whom, (1975) and the Directory of Intercorporate Ownership.

The pooling of the individual trusts, according to Foundation Treasurer Sherman Carter in his prefatory letter to the 1977 CIT annual report, created increased security through diversification, reduced administrative expense, and allowed for higher earnings than were possible if the trusts had continued to be invested separately.

When the CIT was formed, it consisted of 25 individual trusts with a total of $286,851. Currently there are 182 individual trusts.

The U of I Foundation selected Becker Securities Corporation to evaluate the CIT investment performance. The nationally recognized firm rated the CIT in the top one percent of the funds in Becker's data base, which is taken from one-third of all the retirement, endowment, and other tax-free trusts in the United States.

Carter also said in his prefatory letter that the growth of the CIT is "largely the result of its noteworthy investment performance, which has significantly and directly increased the principal and had also generated confidence in the fund and helped attract new donations for investments."

The investments are handled by the Investment Committee of the U of I Foundation.

A copy of the CIT investment report is available at the Financial Affairs Office in the Ad. Annex.

U of I receives dividends

The State of Idaho Insurance Fund paid the University a dividend of $19,838 on 1976 premiums. This brings the total refund for 1976 to $30,117, about 13 percent of the premium.

The university pays an annual premium based on the numbers and types of employees and the risk involved in their jobs, said Arnie Broberg, U of I safety officer. He added, "The insurance fund pays premium dividends after all operating expenses for the year are paid, and accident claims have been settled. Our dividend equals the premium, minus the insurance funds operating costs, minus our claims." Broberg explained the dividends, "...recognize the good safety record of the University. We are having less accidents even though more people are employed."

Incompletes due by Tuesday

Tuesday is the last day to remove or extend incompletes, according to a notice from M. E. Telin, director of admissions and registrar. All removal of incomplete cards and extension cards must be filed in the Registrar's Office by that date.

WSU students leave bottles at home during America

Because of an extensive public relations campaign, the number of bottles left behind after the America concert at WSU last weekend was just a fraction of those left after the recent Eric Clapton concert in Pullman, ASWSU vice president Greg King said Wednesday.

In an effort to eliminate police searches like those that took place at the Clapton concert, King and other ASWSU officials initiated the campaign urging concertgoers not to bring bottles and cans into the Performing Arts Coliseum. A bottle thrown during an earlier concert prompted the searches in the first place.

The campaign consisted of signs, radio announcements, students circulating garbage cans to dispose of unacceptable containers and fliers which were handed to each person as he/she entered the concert. Police stayed out of the inner concourse, King said, only patrolling the outside.

"The whole campaign went very, very well, and as far as I am concerned, we can keep on going with it forever," King said.

University Police Chief Del Brannan said, "I was very pleased with the outcome; the students worked very hard on it. However, the America concert is by no means a yardstick. We can't say this is the solution that will work in all cases. It is the ideal situation, but we'll just have to wait and see."

Orientation needs leaders

Leaders are needed for the outdoor orientation program, scheduled for Aug. 18-25, according to Dave Cockrell, coordinator. Outdoor orientation is an option in the new student orientation program.

"We are now seeking leaders for this year's program who can structure a wilderness trip to provide experiential learning for new students," Cockrell said. "We want to offer a chance to explore a particular area in Idaho, learn specific wilderness skills, develop an understanding of environmental issues, and participate in a group process of cooperation and understanding."

Anyone interested in serving as a leader should contact Tim Miller at the Office of Student Advisory Services, UCC 241 or phone 6757.

Grad programs now for Idahoans

Idaho residents may now enroll at resident tuition rates in selected graduate programs not available in Idaho. A program (WICHE), coordinated through the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education offers graduate studies in six western states.

Five other western states have opened certain programs unavailable in Idaho to Idaho students. Those states are Montana, New Mexico, Hawaii, Wyoming and Alaska.

Idaho has opened 30 of its graduate programs to residents of other cooperating states. Students will pay the receiving state's resident tuition rather than the non-resident tuition usually charged.

Students involved in the program, now in its second year, may continue to pay resident tuition as long as they maintain satisfactory academic progress.

Dr. Clifford Trump, deputy director for academic planning of the Office of the State Board of Education, said the WICHE program requires students participating from Idaho to be certified as Idaho residents. Trump is the certifying officer for the program.

Participation in the program, which has been approved by the State Board of Education, may mean savings of up to $1,300 per semester, said Trump. Savings depend on the non-resident tuition of the university attended.

A total of 42 graduate programs are available to Idaho residents accepted as WICHE fellows, said Trump. Among the programs are the doctoral and master's degree in pharmacology, ocean engineering and astronomy at the University of Hawaii; master of science in engineering management at the University of Alaska at Anchorage; master of science in petroleum engineering at the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology or the University of Wyoming; and the master of science in computer sciences at the University of Wyoming.

Students wishing to enroll in the program must secure certification from Trump and apply directly to the college or university involved, according to its regular procedures.

Trump said Idaho applicants may be affected by limitations on enrollment capacity in the particular program or by an overall institution enrollment limit.

Students desiring forms and information pertaining to WICHE should contact Dr. Clifford Trump at the Office of the State Board of Education, Room 307, Len B. Jordan Building, 650 W. State Street, Boise, Idaho 83720.

But on the home front...

Without question, the existence of such a government as South Africa's in a so-called civilized period of history is appalling, and every effort should be expended to change the situation. The apartheid policies of the South African regime, are, as has often been pointed out, inconsistent with ideals of human rights, equality, and brotherhood.

Still, I have some reservations about the current rash of anti-apartheid student activism in Pullman, and elsewhere across the nation. It is much easier to join a cause which requires no real sacrifices from us than a cause which requires us to alter our lifestyle and to go to real trouble to achieve our aims. It is much easier to react instinctively to reports of injustice than to take time and energy to try to understand the complexities of a situation.

South Africa is far away. Whatever happens there doesn't affect us much (outside our consciences). Calling for university officials to liquidate stocks and bonds of corporations operating in South Africa may appease some consciences, but it requires little sacrifice and little effort, and results in little change there, where the problem is.

It's easy to lament America's (and Britain's and France's) veto of the U.N.-proposed trade embargo on South Africa. True, an international trade embargo would probably cripple the South African economy, but in the end the blacks, by and large, dependent on urban jobs for their livelihood and unprotected by law and privilege, would suffer the most. The universities may sell their stocks, but that will not stop people from buying diamonds, chrome, oil, and gold—all major South African exports.

A solution to such a complex situation as exists in South Africa will only be achieved by careful thought, difficult compromise, and personal sacrifice. Students lately have been quieter about injustices closer to home, injustices which they are in a position to affect—but which would require real effort to change.

"Racist" investing protested

PULLMAN—Washington State University is not facing the issue on its $1.6 million in South African holdings, according to student leaders in the drive to force WSU to divest itself of those holdings.

WSU student Damani Obafemi, speaking for a coalition of black student organizations, said today the university is apparently trying to redefine the meaning of investment. "The university is now talking about 'direct' versus 'indirect' investments in South Africa," Obafemi said.

in a pig's eye...

When the newest edition of the ASUI Constitution was drafted and passed by the students three years ago, a new provision was added: that the ASUI president submit his budget proposal for the next fiscal year by the first senate meeting in March. This was to allow the senate enough time to deliberate and pass a rational budget.

It appears that this year, as last year, the constitutional deadline will not be made. President Harding's board appointments were a bit late coming to the senate, and the senate is reviewing the appointments with all deliberate slowness. Maybe by next week, or maybe by the week afterwards, the appointments will be approved.

However, in the meanwhile, the budget is suffering. Harding has said that he hopes to have the various department requests to him by spring break, which may be optimistic. If it does happen, the senate might get to start working on it by the first week in April.

But right now, there is a proposal for a $3 fee increase coming to the Regents, which will be acted on (supposedly) in April, after being submitted to the March meeting for "information purposes," (also to comply with the spirit of the Administrative Procedures Act).

The fee increase is another $3 on top of the ASUI fee increase that was passed "temporarily" in January. The agenda item that mentions the increase says nothing about a recommendation to retain the temporary increase, except backwards. It calls the new $3 to "reinstate the reduction made by the Regents at the January meeting" (from $6).

However, things are going to get touchy with how the ASUI Senate passes its budget. Harding will probably have to submit three separate budgets: one for the "old" ASUI fee of $15.75; one for the present "temporary" $18.75; and one set up in the hope that they can get the $21.75, something not assured.

The Regents will need to be convinced that the whole increase is necessary, something that wasn't done in January. Regent Clint Hoopes pointed out that the student leaders asked for a 38 percent fee increase, and said at the time he was not convinced the student leaders needed it. Neither were the other regents, which is why it was voted down.

The U of I administration has stapled a copy of the proposed breakdown that was passed out to the students for last November's election. But it is likely that proposal is now out of date and needs some revision. But how can it be revised until the student government decides what each department needs, wants, and would love to get away with?

So the ASUI budget fun and games, one of the great annual events of the year, the politico's own Blue Mountain, has some more delightful implications this year. And the price of admission to watch is only $15.75 a semester. Or $18.75, or $21.75. Pick your favorite number, and hope for a winner.

error on both sides

Last week, I went to an Issues and Forums program that featured an anti-abortion speech by an evangelical theologian named Dr. Harold Brown. I dutifully sat through the whole presentation and took notes, intending to comment on it in this column. Certainly, it is useless to drag out the same tired arguments that people have been chasing around in circles for years. Both sides have made up their minds. And to be truthful, most of Dr. Brown's speech was not really worth discussing. It's all been said before.

Yet, there was one serious weakness in his reasoning that needs to be pointed out. Interestingly enough, many of his opponents make the same sort of mistake. The error is in assuming that the abortion issue is cut-and-dried.

According to Dr. Brown, medical opinion is unanimous in saying that human life begins at conception. Therefore, from the moment that egg meets sperm, a person exists with an inalienable right to life. This means that an abortion at any stage of pregnancy is obviously out-and-out murder.

Indeed, in one sense, the newly formed zygote is human. After all, it's not going to turn out to be a hippopotamus. But is it really a person in the full sense? There is more to personhood than having the genetic code of homo sapiens. And it isn't the possession of well-formed fingers and toes that makes the difference, regardless of the pictures of early fetuses that anti-abortionists are so fond of displaying. The thing that makes a person a person is that elusive something called human consciousness. This involves the capacity to think, to feel, to love, and a sense of self-identity. And it is not scientifically possible to determine when a fetus becomes a person, by this definition. It is simple minded and arrogant for "right-to-lifers" to assume that anyone who doesn't think that abortion is murder is being intellectually dishonest.

On the other hand, pro-abortionists are sometimes just as simplistic, in certain ways. It is unrealistic to believe that anti-abortionists are engaged in a deliberate conspiracy to confine women to the traditional roles of baby-factory and household drudge. Rather, they are fully convinced that abortion is murder, and that laws against it are justified on that basis. The decision of whether or not to "murder," they feel, must not be left to the individual conscience. One can dispute their reasoning, but not their motives.

In my own opinion, because of the impossibility of making a clear-cut judgment about when and if abortion is morally justifiable, the decision must be left to the conscience of the pregnant woman herself. Of course, this is not a simple decision, or one to be made lightly. At any stage of its development, the fetus has, if nothing more, the potential to become a fully autonomous person. That potential must be respected. But in many cases the rights of an actual autonomous person (the pregnant woman) outweigh those of a potential person (the fetus).

The "abortion is murder" formula is tempting, because it allows us to deal with this important question in black and white, and does not confuse us with complex and difficult shades of gray. But unless we are willing to ignore the problem of over-population, the less-than-total effectiveness of birth control, and the enormous personal problems that can be caused by unwanted pregnancies, then any such simple formula is quite inadequate.

Men not God

Editor,
The battle for Biblical substantiation rages on but all the participants continue to overlook a fundamental fact. There is no rational or logical argument for ascribing this literary work to God. It was written by men. You might as well quote me Chaucer.

Pro-language

Editor,
I have been following the discussion in the Argonaut on the subject of reinstatement of a foreign language requirement; the latest I have seen is Dr. Rowe's 'Opinion' in the February 10 issue.

I support Dr. Rowe's stand but would go further, I would recommend that a foreign language be required of all undergraduate degrees and that no graduate student be admitted without a background in one or more foreign languages or it be understood that if admitted he/she will be required to fulfill that requirement during the graduate program (either Masters or PhD).

I will not reiterate Dr. Rowe's arguments, they are clear and should appeal to both the scholarly and the practical mind, if it (the mind) is receptive at all. I will only add to his presentation that I know from personal experience that possession of an additional language gives one a definite edge in an increasingly competitive job market, regardless of the job—store clerk to businessman, laboratory technician to scientific researcher.

I confess that as a graduate student I agitated against the two-language requirement at my Alma Mater. Today, over twenty years later, I bless the sagacity of the curriculum committee of that institution for I have received much personal satisfaction and joy and material reward from being reasonably proficient in the two languages. Ronald W. Stark College of Forestry University of Idaho

Anti-language

Editor,
For the past few weeks a fusillade of pro-foreign language requirement articles have been published in the Argonaut. To these statements I say BAH and HUMBUG! Dean Furgason stated my feeling toward blanket foreign language requirements when he said "medieval torture practice."

I have been subjected to both Russian and Spanish due to foreign language requirements, both of which have never been put to use, nor are they remembered except as medieval tortures.

Dean Furgason does bring out what I consider the major point in that he studied German and was required to use Spanish. If one does need a specific foreign language for his/her profession it is much easier to learn, as well as put to use when there is an interest in the language. It may be pointed out that U of I does not offer Japanese or most likely whatever language Libyans speak. The dean also makes much of the point that if you learn the language, you may possibly learn the thoughts of the culture. If one wants to learn about another culture, without going to the country, many publications by the State Department as well as cultural anthropologists would be a much better source than a professor whose main interest is verb and noun usage.

I pose a question to both Dean Furgason and Professor Rowe. Is the negative effect of this medieval torture upon the many in this university worth the "good" effects of a few extra majors the foreign language department may obtain?

Letter policy

The Argonaut will accept open letters to the editor until noon on the days prior to publication. Letters must be signed in ink by the author, but names may be withheld upon request. In the interest of allowing space for as many letters as is possible, we request that letters not exceed 500 words. Letters will be edited for spelling and grammar but not for content. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to run letters containing offensive or vulgar language, or libelous material.

Human rights group started

The Moscow Committee for Human Rights is a new special interest group, formed to help achieve legislation to change civil rights laws.

The committee's goal is "to insure equal rights for persons through legislation, banning discrimination on the basis of sexual or affectional preference."

Presently, the committee is attempting to locate and consolidate support for its attempts to achieve non-discriminatory legislation, said the committee chairperson.

The committee is aiming first at legislation on the city level and hopes to be able to go beyond this level and branch out in other areas, said the chairperson.

Money is needed by the group to get together a pamphlet and inform supportive citizens of their efforts. "We hope that they will actively support the group through monetary or voluntary efforts," the chairperson said.

The committee for Human Rights is sponsoring a dance and kegger at 8 p.m. tonight at 317 S. Howard St. A $2 donation will be charged at the door. The kegger is open to the public.

Dam energy to be explored

The potential of using low-head dams as a means of curbing the energy crisis will be explored in a comprehensive seminar being planned for June 6-7 at the U of I.

Sponsored by the Idaho Water Resources Research Institute (IWRRI), the seminar will present the technical, economic, environmental and hydraulic factors to be considered in developing small dams for hydroelectric potential.

Co-sponsors of the event include the U.S. Department of Energy, the Idaho Office of Energy, the Idaho Department of Water Resources and the U of I College of Engineering.

Dogs pull Moscow mushers into going sport

by Eddie Sue Judy

PROBLEM: If 10 huskies can pull a 50 pound sled and its driver 16 miles in 60 to 75 minutes, how long will it take two huskies to pull an out-of-shape journalist's arms out of the sockets?

ANSWER: Not very darn long.

While an Argonaut reporter wrestled with that problem last weekend, five Moscow mushers faced their own much larger challenges behind the huskies. They were pitting their dogs and driving skills against teams from eight states and one Canadian province in the Pacific Coast Sleddog Racing Championships at Priest Lake. The three day meet, Friday-

Sunday, included four major racing events. The longest race and the race with the largest share of a $3,000 total meet purse was the open. Open competitors were allowed any number of dogs in a team, with about a dozen the most common team size.

The race was run on a 16 mile varied terrain course. Teams ran the open all three days to prove the dogs' day-to-day endurance, according to Barbara Petura, U of I News Bureau manager. Petura and her husband raise and race Siberian huskies.

To the observer, preparations immediately prior to an open race are utterly chaotic. Dogs in harness, on chains and in traveling compartments sense the excitement and howl, bark and bounce about. A week's worth of Moscow noon sirens compressed into one blast might equal the din. Drivers coo encouragement to their teams as they might to a favorite child.

The driver requires several able-bodied helpers to get his team into the starting chute. The dogs, hitched two abreast, are eager to run and lunge and pull for the start.

An assistant holds the harness lines behind each pair of dogs. The dogs surge for the starting chute, straining their holders' arms and pulling bootheels deep into the snow, as the above-mentioned Argonaut reporter learned first hand.

Teams start at intervals. An announcer with a microphone blares, "Rick Petura, you have 45 seconds." A steady countdown marks the final seconds: "Five... four... three... two... hike!" Holders jump out of the way and the team is off on an approximately one hour run.

No whips or other coercive devices accompany Petura sleds. "Running becomes the highlight of the dogs' day" because that's when they get attention and excitement, the News Bureau manager said.

Other Moscow mushers at the meet were Sterling Campbell, a case worker with Community Social Services, and his two young sons. Campbell raced in the three-dog event while his boys competed in the pee-wee race.

Pee-wee is a short distance race using one dog and is open to children as young as three years old.

Moscow racers' results were as follows:

Sterling Campbell in three dog, 12th of about 40 teams; Barb Petura, also in three dog, 22nd; Rick Petura, open, 10th of 13 teams; Matty Campbell, pee-wee, 4th of 30 teams; and David Campbell, also pee-wee, 9th.

State superintendent Truby tests local political waters

Roy Truby believes Idahoans are tired of extremists.

If that view is correct, Truby could end up in Washington.

Truby is currently the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He is also an unannounced candidate for Rep. Steve Symms' seat.

Truby was in Moscow Saturday, testing the local political waters. He assessed the coming campaign as well as Symms. Symms, by becoming the leader of various national "extremist" groups "was not doing anything for Idaho," Truby said.

He said his campaign will strive for moderation in government.

Gov. John Evans, also present, said he was "very pleased and very optimistic about Roy. He's going to make a good candidate and a good congressman able to represent district 1...better than the current congressman is doing."

Local Democrats in attendance included State Rep. Robert Hosack, D-Moscow, and councilwoman Linda Pall.

Accreditation: complicated issue affects all

by Marty Trillhaase

What is accreditation and what implications does it hold for higher education?

That's a question that concerns students, faculty and employers. Students want a degree from an accredited program. Faculty members find more prestige teaching in an accredited program. Employers are more inclined to hire a graduate of an accredited program.

Simply put, accreditation refers to a minimum standard of quality that an institution or program must attain. An accrediting agency approves an institution or program if it falls within that level of quality.

But the issue is anything but simple.

There are two levels of accreditation: The first level concerns the individual institution. Six regional agencies accredit the schools. These are the New England Association, the Middle States Association, the Southern Association, the North Central Association, the Western Association, and the Northwest Association.

A team representing the regional unit visits the institution on a regular basis. This team evaluates the institution and makes recommendations to its leaders. The university has the option of following or not following these recommendations, according to Academic Vice President

Robert Coonrod.

The University of Idaho is accredited as an institution by the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges.

Coonrod noted that few institutions of long standing have problems with this type of accreditation. Those schools facing accrediting trouble are either relatively new and struggling to gain a foothold, or older schools caught up in great financial hardship, he said.

One problem currently facing regional accreditation is the method used to evaluate branch schools, Coonrod said.

An institution may lie in one region and supervise a branch in another. Coonrod said the agencies are slowly learning to cope with the situation through mutual cooperation.

Regional accrediting agencies face a new problem with vocational-technical education. The organizations have evaluated baccalaureate institutions for 75 years. But they have to define new standards for vo-tech.

The second type of accreditation involves individual programs. The agency performing this evaluation is usually a professional society. These include organizations like the Society of American Foresters or the Engineers' Council for Professional Development.

Programs must be eligible to apply for accreditation, Coonrod said. But those eligibility standards vary from agency to agency, he added.

Accrediting agencies may require certain student-teacher ratios, a certain minimum number of PhD's among the faculty, or a somewhat consistent program of study among the schools it evaluates.

Coonrod noted that the accrediting agencies have been moving away from hard and fast rules. But they still define the minimum standard of quality. In order to receive accreditation, the programs must comply.

A good deal of the pressure for program accreditation comes from those professions which require state licensing. In order to take the license test, a graduate must hold a degree from an accredited program.

Such professions as medicine, pharmacy, and law require state licensing.

The U of I is accredited in all such programs it provides, Coonrod said.

The following accrediting agencies have approved various programs at the university:

—American Bar

Association
—American Chemical Society

—American Dietetics Association

—Association of American Law Schools

—Engineers' Council for Professional Development

—National Architectural Accrediting Board

—American Society of Landscape Architects

—National Association of Schools of Music

—National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education

—Society of American Foresters

Coonrod noted, however, the accreditation trend is now moving to programs not licensed by the state. Examples include business and music, he said.

The U of I has two major unaccredited programs. These are the College of Business and School of Communication.

The reason behind these being unaccredited is obvious—money. But Coonrod added the university is moving to accredit the programs.

The business school may be accredited as soon as next year, he said. The governor's budget, if passed by the legislature, would allocate the necessary funds for the school to achieve eligibility status.

That would leave the School of Communication next in line for future appropriations for accrediting purposes.

A recent addition to the accrediting system is home economics. The American Home Economics Association was formed five years ago to evaluate programs. Although the U of I is a member of the organization, it has not applied for accredited standards, Coonrod said. He added no goals have yet been made for accrediting the home economics program.

Some programs are not subject to accreditation, however. No agency exists for maintenance of their standards, Coonrod said. But these are examined periodically by the Northwest Association, he added.

Death flick dies, stays dead

by N.K. Hoffman

"We defibrillated him, but he's in bad shape."

"What did the specialist say?"

"Sharon, we've done all we can for him. All we can do now is pray."

"But he can't be alive. The doctor pronounced him dead over half an hour ago."

Going to Beyond and Back at the Kenworthy through Feb. 28, 7 and 9 p.m., is like visiting a wax museum where the waxworks aren't trained yet. They're still twitching.

Worse, many of them are still talking. They talk enough to bury you beneath a mound of cliches. "Buying this plane was the second best thing I ever did," Eric tells Amy as they gaily fly through the air. "Marrying you was the first." Of course two minutes later Eric dies in a plane crash and Amy sees him asking Jesus to forgive him.

In what purports to be a semi-documentary—"Everything you will see is based on studies by scientists and parapsychologists"—the Christian bias is a little too strong for scientific objectivity.

Another cliché is the use of the "man in the library" technique. After each little tableau of death—indeed, often right in the middle of them—"Toupee-Man" pops on screen and picks up a book to prove he's telling you the truth. He restates the obvious and people in the audience tell him how wrong he is...well, it's just like being at home in front of the television and talking back to the Excedrin man.

And here again we have one of the classic contradictions; Toupee-Man tells us, "These subjects are now being lifted out of the realm of superstition and into the realm of fact," just as if he believed in the scientific method—although earlier in the film he made fun of the "cool clinical attitude of science" which rejected the concept of "soul."

As a sort of a climax to the film we are invited to experience death. Toupee-Man, sounding like a fortune cookie, tells us the common phenomena experienced by those who died and lived to tell of it:

You will feel like you are going down a long tunnel.

You will see the faces of departed friends and relatives.

A white light will engulf you.

You may hear buzzing.

You will see a gate before you.

You will feel a divine presence.

You will float above your deathbed.

You will feel as though you are looking down on a futuristic city.

If you experience any or all of these things, you are either dead, in New York, or both.

Prisoners blow bridge, foil captors

by David Gaffney

This Sunday the Film Society will present a film that has become one of the all-time classics of war movies, "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

This movie, which won 27 international awards, including seven Academy Awards, has a cast of stars that would take up too much space to mention here. The lead role is played by Sir Alec Guinness, of Obiwan Kenobi—"Star Wars" fame. Guinness plays a captured British Army officer whose passion for duty leads him to perform an almost impossible task—the construction of a jungle railway bridge for his Japanese captors.

The setting of the film is the steaming jungles of Southeast Asia during the latter days of World War II.

This is a film of high adventure and tense drama which only these actors could have pulled off as successfully as they did. Each incident in the film is staged and edited to Bridge on the River Kwai has won 27 international awards and seven Academy Awards. Alec Guinness of Star Wars fame stars with William Holden, lead down to the nerve-racking finale.

This scene took a total of five months to stage and set up, and took two minutes to execute. Obviously, there were to be no retakes. It is overwhelmingly effective as is the irony of the whole situation that has been developed throughout the entire movie.

"Bridge Over the River Kwai" will be shown in Borah Theatre at 5 and 8 p.m.

Also, Lina Wertmuller's flipped-out Italian comedy, "Love and Anarchy" has finally arrived. The film, which was delayed in transit because of the massive snowstorm that entangled the Midwest last week, has been solidly rescheduled for this Friday at 7 and 9 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

Some Argonaut predictions match award nominations

Well, fate's little arrows have hit the Hollywood dart board yet again, movie fans. Academy Award nominations came out Tuesday. How many of them agreed with Friday's Argonaut?

Best pictures were The Goodbye Girl, Julia, and The Turning Point, which we did not predict, and Annie Hall and Star Wars, which we did.

Actors were Richard Burton, Marcello Mastroianni, and John Travolta, who didn't get our vote, and Richard Dreyfuss and Woody Allen, who did.

We scored better on the women, though. Anne Bancroft, Shirley MacLaine, Diane Keaton, Jane Fonda, and Marsha Mason were all nominated by the Academy and also by us.

We'll find out how close our final predictions came on April 3.

Rugby season opens Sunday

The U of I Blue Mountain Rugby team begins its season with two home games Sunday afternoon at the Wallace Complex intramural fields, against teams from Pendleton, Ore. and Whitman of Walla Walla, Wash.

Last year's season for Blue Mountain was 8-2 overall and the team's three year total is 26-5, so the Blues are looking forward to another good season of "scrumming down and rucking."

Game time is set for 1 p.m. with the second match to follow after a short break.

Students are urged to attend the Sunday games and support the Idaho ruggers, who will be traveling to France later this year.

Idaho swimmers qualify ten; regional competition on tap

Coach John DeMeyer's women swimmers face their final test of the season today and Saturday as they go up against 12 other schools in regional competition in Seattle.

Of the 15 women who tried out at the beginning of the season, ten made it to the meet at the University of Washington's Husky pool.

Freestyle sensation Linda DeMeyer leads the Vandals along with butterflyer Kris Ablin, divers Teri Bell and Barb Jackson and senior swimmer Linda Smith. Other swimmers competing are Lisa Hazel, K. C. Knight, Diane Becherer, Carol Thompson, and Debbie Stockwell.

"For most of the swimmers it's their first time (at regionals)," said Coach DeMeyer. "Our only senior is Linda Smith."

The meet is expected to be dominated by teams from the Universities of Washington and Oregon and Canada's Simon Frazier University.

Winning - an endangered species?

Idaho on road for finale

What would you do? Down 4-21 for the season and 1-12 in league play, Idaho basketball will try to wrap up its discouraging season on a hopeful note tomorrow night in Ogden when it meets the Wildcats of Weber State. The Vandal's most recent defeat was last night to Northern Arizona.

"We're just going to have to go out there and let it all hang out," said Jim Jarvis, Idaho head coach. "We'll play good

Once more the Vandals are cast in the despicable role of spoiler in conference terms. WSC desperately needs a win to secure a spot in the 4-team conference playoff, held this year at either Pocatello or Missoula depending on the outcome of the Idaho State-Montana game Saturday night.

Last Saturday night's 77-72 loss to ISU was more than a defeat for Idaho. Junior center Jim Kaczmarek went out with injuries to the knee and ankle and Dan Forge, a starting guard, badly sprained his ankle. Forge accounted for the Vandal's first 10 points in that game.

Apparently Forge will be back which means a probable starting lineup of point guard Bill Hessing, high point, Jeff Brudie, Terry Gredler at low point, and wings Reed Jaussi and Forge.

Vandals travel to EOSC, NNC

Idaho women's basketball will be on the road this weekend to meet two teams they soundly defeated earlier in the season. Friday night's action pits the Vandals against Eastern Oregon State College and Saturday they go against Northwest Nazarene.

In the squad's first encounter with EOSC the Vandals romped to a 77-45 victory. Tonight's game is the Vandals' last league game.

"It would please them very much to have a league upset and we're their last chance," Idaho Coach Bonnie Hultstrand said. EOSC is currently in the cellar of the Eastern Four League.

Probable starters for the

Green resigns as director

Dr. Leon Green will be retiring as Director of the Division of Health, Physical Education and Recreation at the U of I after completing the 1978 summer school session. Green is 64.

Green has seen many changes in the program since he came in 1940. "One great move was to get playing fields, and we got them," Green said. "Although I didn't know it at the time, I was setting a goal for 38 years. That's how long it took to accomplish what I wanted to," he added.

"My greatest thrill at the university came from being able to write a recommendation for a student...(knowing) that the student can go out and do the job," he said.

Also retiring from the Division of Health, Physical Education and Recreation is Eric Kirkland, coordinator of the recreation program. Kirkland has been with the department for 31 years.

"He always had time for his students," Green said of Kirkland. Kirkland was one of the first people he hired, Green said.

Athletic training major proposed

by Becky Paull

A new dimension to the U of I physical education department, athletic training major, is being proposed by trainers Mark Smaha and Sherry Buickel.

"We're kind of excited," Smaha said. "We hope to provide a structured program that will attract good student trainers."

"It is going to give us some people to work with. It's really a problem with people who come for one semester only," Buickel said. "It's really going to help in the sense that it will get people who are really interested in athletic training."

No courses or staff will have to be added so there is no money factor involved, according to Smaha.

The National Athletic Trainers Association set up guidelines for trainer certification. One option open to prospective trainers is to graduate from a school with an NATA approved curriculum and to work 600 hours in a training room. The other option allows for the student to work under a certified trainer for 1,800 hours and to have a Bachelor of Science degree in either physical education or science. The NATA administers a written and practical exam to anyone applying for certification.

"Our program won't be NATA approved but the students must take the curriculum and 1,800 hours rather than 600," Smaha said. The curriculum must be reevaluated every 5 years by the NATA.

Trainers contend with psychological factors as well as physical.

"Most people don't realize how close a trainer has to be with the kids," Buickel said. "You have to get the kids to know you're interested and concerned. They must have trust in you. Trainers are very important psychologically."

A trainer must get to know each individual athlete. "It's a psychological game, you've got to outwit them," Buickel said. This may involve calming an athlete after an injury so the injury can be evaluated or getting them prepared to go back into competition after an injury.

Treatment and rehabilitation are also part of the trainer's job. "It involves a lot of time," Buickel said.

Smaha currently has five student trainers working for him. They are Brad Malm, Russ Simmons, Leonard Bauman, Tom Koto and Mike Holder. Their duties involve taping athletes, preparing equipment, stocking the training room, giving treatments and going to practices and games to watch for injuries.

They are required to take both Introduction to Athletic Injuries and Advanced Athletic Training before working in the training room for Smaha.

Six student trainers work in the women's training room under Buickel. They are Jenny Koski, Sally Muscat, Teresa Lowder, Linda Monroe, Karen Stambaugh and Terry Neuenschwander.

Each student trainer spends three weeks with each team, according to Buickel. They also participate in prepractice taping and initial first aid and treatment. During their time in the training room they learn to evaluate injuries and how to organize rehabilitation programs.

"To be a trainer you have to be concerned for others, love sports and be dedicated," Smaha concluded.

Lack of snow results in delay of IM ski meet

The intramural ski meet has been postponed because of lack of snow, according to Dr. Bob Whitehead, intramural supervisor.

Racquetball is scheduled to begin Monday and participants are asked to check the intramural bulletin board for schedules.

Deadlines for badminton and co-rec volleyball are Tuesday and Wednesday, respectively. Both are scheduled to begin March 6; however, the date for volleyball is tentative.

Orienteers head for Lewiston hills

The U of I Orienteering Club and Army ROTC will sponsor a score orienteering meet tomorrow at 11 a.m. in Lewiston. The meet will take place in the hills south of Lewiston above Hells Gate Marina on the Snake River. Registration for the event will run from 9 until 9:50 a.m. tomorrow, in the front entrance of Memorial Gym. Transportation to and from Lewiston will be provided.

New division could mean better football record

(Editor's note: This is the first of two stories on NCAA changes affecting U of I's football program. The second, scheduled for next issue, will examine television prospects and scholarship changes.)

Over the past ten seasons, Idaho football has gone through four head coaches and compiled a murky 45-53-2 record. The patient's been ill for some time, and difficult competition has been diagnosed as the ailment.

In a long-expected move last weekend, Idaho Athletic Director Bill Belknap went along with the other Big Sky officials in Salt Lake City who declared that the conference would move into a new division - Division 1AA.

At its annual NCAA convention in Atlanta last January, word spread that Division I was going to be ripped asunder — large teams such as Notre Dame and Nebraska were to form a "super league," Division 1A, while smaller teams such as Idaho would slide into a newly created 1AA.

The major difference between the divisions is ticket sales. A 1A institution must have a stadium large enough to hold 30,000 and over the past four years average a paid attendance of 17,000 per game. Idaho meets neither qualification.

"I kind of view this as a step up," said Belknap Wednesday.

"It's a step up because, for example, the Big Sky has competed at Division II, which is lower than 1AA, and now they want to come up to ours. Frankly, it's alright by me."

The only loophole by which a school may avoid the ticket sales requirement created by the NCAA is maintaining 12 men's intercollegiate sports. Idaho carries only eight. In effect there are few options for the school.

Some Vandal football fans have for years called for an easier schedule, one that

Bowlers hold toumey; first time here since '68

The U of I bowling team is playing host to the first tournament here since 1968, when it was co-sponsored with WSU. The tournament will take place today and tomorrow with competition beginning at 8 a.m. each day.

The tournament is opening with the men's event followed by the women's events this morning. "We have seven men's teams for sure and are waiting for confirmation from North Idaho College. We also have three women's teams competing and with NIC, possibly four," said Stephens.

Idaho hopefully could look better in. The division change probably won't be noticeable for years to come because "some of the games we scheduled go back ten years," said Belknap. There's an outside chance one or two teams will drop the Vandals over the next few seasons.

"There will be a lot of institutions that will try to play 1A level," said Belknap, pointing his finger at next season's opponent San Jose State. "The thing is they have to play at least 60 percent against other 1A schools, so it's possible some scheduling changes could come about."

"Each institution was sent a questionnaire on the level of football they wanted to play," explained Belknap. "It has to be sent back to the NCAA by March 15."

Noting that a bit of psychology is involved, he continued, "then we get a list back of all the teams and how they went. You get 30 days to change your mind. If you see that all the teams you play went 1AA, this would give you a chance to back down and not hurt your pride."

He said the final list is due in May and the schools have three years to meet the new division's requirements.

SUB location questioned along with ASUI services

Ideally, where would you like the SUB located? This is one question the Student Union Board asked students in a recent poll to evaluate the student union building and its services.

According to Dean Vettrus, General Manager of the SUB, most students want the SUB located on the side of campus nearest where they live. He suggested this indicated a compromise location in the middle of the campus.

Vettrus said there are no immediate plans for relocating the SUB or even expanding it but that he had "to be constantly looking ahead."

"We have to get cranking on planning," he added. "This is only a question to see if students think we should relocate."

Vettrus admitted that a relocation would be very expensive, but "the students can have whatever they want as long as they are willing to pay for it."

Some money is available to start the project if that is what students want, he said, but the University administration has not even agreed to let any land in the campus center be used for a new SUB.

Handicapped kids learning bowling

by Andrew Brundage

On the third Thursday of the month, the sounds of excited and happy children can be heard coming from the Bowling alley section of the SUB game room.

However, this is an unusual group of children. They are mentally handicapped, and some have physical handicaps as well. They are enjoying the benefits of a special program involving the U of I and the community of Moscow.

The co-directors of the group are Joan Mott and Peggy Yamamoto, special education teachers with the Moscow School District. The children belong to a local chapter of the national Special Olympics program, the directors explained. Supported nationally by the Joseph P. Kennedy Foundation, the Special Olympics encourages physical activity for the mentally handicapped.

Mott and Yamamoto praised the university for its encouragement and assistance with the local program. A section of the game room's bowling lanes is set aside so the children can bowl for an hour, free of charge. In addition, approximately 15 U of I students, mainly special education, physical education and recreation education majors, provide transportation and training for the children one night a week.

According to Mott and Yamamoto, the Moscow

Knights of Columbus supply most of the club's funds, although the Moscow Senior High School Office Education Association recently raised money to buy uniforms for the children.

The children will wear the uniforms when they participate in a regional track meet in Moscow in April. A U of I sorority, Delta Delta Delta, will assist with the meet. The children will also compete in the state Special Olympics in Pocatello May-18-21.

"The bowling program and the special Olympics are good ways of teaching game concepts and recreational skills," said Mott. "These are things that don't come naturally to the children."

Special arts festival planned in May

The State of Idaho has received a continuation grant of $5,000 from the National Committee, Arts for the Handicapped, to fund a Very Special Arts Festival.

"This festival gives handicapped people the opportunity to dance, sing, play an instrument, act or display their artwork in a festival setting," said Diane Walker, Idaho's program coordinator. Walker is also head of the Center for Dance at the U of I.

According to Walker, a large state-wide festival is tentatively planned for May 22 at Pocatello. Last year's festival held in Boise marked the start of Idaho's VSAF program. More than 1,200 children and adults participated as artists, performers and spectators.

Any organization wanting to incorporate a VSAF in their activities should contact Diane Walker, Center for Dance, U of I.

New computer job offers increased 'bytes' faster

Computer Services has created a new job class for those who need more bytes in less time.

Class D and E jobs, which made 320K available, "were at the bottom rung," said Charles Rice, manager of User Services. The thinking behind this was that "he who requires more resources should wait longer," Rice said.

Now a job class is open where one can use 320K for up to a minute without having to code a job class on the card.

Shelley tells design secrets

Jay Shelley, executive editor of the Lewiston Morning Tribune, will be on campus Monday evening to speak on "Newspaper Design and Layout."

His appearance is co-sponsored by the School of Communication and Women in Communication, Inc. The session will start at 7:45 p.m. in the Spalding Room at the SUB, and is open to the general public.

Shelley has supervised extensive changes in the Tribune's design in the last few years. His appearance is part of the regular course, Journalism 384—Publications Editing.

Those planning to attend are urged to bring along samples of newspaper design which they would like to have discussed.
