Argonaut

The University of Idaho elk herd has been reduced to just three, two bulls and one cow, because the Veterinary Science Department could not justify keeping them. It was costing the department too much to feed the animals and the elk were not being utilized in experimentation, according to Erik Stauber, associated professor of veterinary science. Seven of the herd have been sold in a closed bid auction to a man in Salmon who raises elk. Photo by Regina Spicer.

Communication gap severs ASUI government

by Kerrin McMahan

A serious communications gap and lack of cooperation exist between the ASUI President and senate, and may be damaging the effectiveness of the ASUI government. That seems to be the consensus of an informal survey during which the Argonaut interviewed each senator, President Bob Harding, and Vice President Gerry Wright.

The student officials were asked to comment on Harding's cooperation with the senate, the senate's cooperation with Harding, and the overall state of communications between the two. The senators' personal attitudes toward Harding ranged from hostile to supportive, but all agreed that a problem exists, with the exceptions of Mark Nuttman, who rated Harding as "good" in all areas, and Greg Switzer and Daniel Prohaska, who declined to comment.

Nine senators rated communications between Harding and the Senate from "poor" to "nonexistent." Only one said communications were good. Most agreed that Harding was easy to approach, but difficult to talk to. "He has to be in the right frame of mind," said Rob Mitchell. Several senators called Harding "overbearing."

He's "talking at" us, not "talking to" us, said Bruce Moorer. Dave Lockhart agreed that Harding could be "more tactful." But much of the problem lies with individual senators, he added. "Some senators won't even talk to Bob," he said.

A major complaint of the senators was that Harding does not let them know when something is bothering him. "If Bob gets upset he won't say anything," said Lockhart. "He just lets it build up, then 'drops the bomb' at the senate meeting," he said. Several other senators agreed, saying Harding tends to speak out at senate meetings rather than talking the problem over with the individual senator.

Harding said he talks to senators who come in to see him, and is communicative at senate meetings and weekly "bull sessions." He does not seek the senators out individually, he said. "I don't like to spoon feed information," he said. His job does not allow time for "one on one" communication with the senators, he added.

The senate was divided on the question of cooperation with Harding. His cooperation with the senate was rated as good by five, and poor by six. Six senators said the senate makes an effort to be cooperative with Harding, and five disagreed.

Although five senators rated their personal cooperation with Harding from "good" to "excellent," most agreed that personality conflicts are a major problem.

There is "a lot of back stabbing" and "underhanded remarks" at the meetings, said one senator. "You either get along really well with Bob or disagree with him completely," said Vickie Tucker, who rated her own cooperation with Harding as "high." "His personality does have its peaks and valleys," said Mitchell.

Several senators described Harding as "intimidating." "His suggestions come across more like orders," said

Moorer. Most of the senators agreed that Harding "tends to dictate" to the senate. Some said that a reason for this may be Harding's high ideals as to how the senate should function. "Bob was an active and good senator," said Mitchell, "and he has direct feelings about the role of a senator."

Harding rated his own cooperation with the senate as "poor, if not worse." "You can't talk to a brick wall," he added. Harding cited disorganization and a lack of efficiency within the senate.

"The difficulty I have is that somebody says they're going to handle something and it doesn't get done," he said. He added that much of his time is spent doing work to "cover up" for senators who don't do their job.

The senate has been cooperative in some areas, notably in ASUI appointments, Harding said. But, he said, often the senate gives him the "runaround" and "nothing is achieved." He said cooperation could be improved and the senate would be more effective if everyone would do research before trying to make decisions.

The "middleman" in the conflict is Vice President Gerry Wright. Since he acts both as an ASUI executive, working with Harding, and as President of the senate, he is in a position to see both sides.

"Bob expects certain things of the senate," Wright said. "If they don't fulfill their obligations, he gets upset." Wright said Harding cooperates well, giving the senate information and all the facts about a situation, telling them what needs to be done and when it needs to be finished.

"Some of the senators make an effort to communicate and cooperate with Bob, and some don't," he said. He added that personality conflicts, differing viewpoints, and a poor delivery on both sides contribute to the problem.

A problem definitely exists, he said. Is there a solution? "The senators and Bob should sit down and talk," said Wright. "Rather than arguing, they could understand each other's points of view."

Presidential press secretaries face journalists at forum

by Mark Erickson

If you take four respectable presidential press secretaries and add four probing journalists, your results will be far from boring.

Nearly 3,000 spectators witnessed just such a potpurri of media personnel Saturday night at the Presidential Press Secretaries' Forum held at Gonzaga University.

The forum quickly became a miniature battleground as journalists bombarded the various secretaries with questions on topics ranging from the Bay of Pigs incident to Watergate.

The press secretary panel included Pierre Salinger, press secretary to John F. Kennedy; George Reedy, press secretary to Lyndon Johnson; Ronald Ziegler, press secretary to Richard Nixon and Ron Nessen, press secretary to Gerald Ford.

The secretaries fielded questions from the audience and members of the panel, which included Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist Seymour Hersch, and former NBC-TV correspondent Liz Trotta, besides engaging in debate over current and past issues regarding the relationship of the press to government and the use of national security claims by government to suppress the news.

The role of the press secretary is overinflated, Ron Nessen told the audience, and should be made less important. Nessen cited a heavy work load, an inaccurate accounting of the news and a "target" attitude toward the press secretary by members of the press as reasons for a lower profile.

"White House reporters should be willing to get out of the Press Secretary's office more often and go out and see the people who really have the vast amounts of information that the public needs," Nessen said. "These people are White House Staff members and officials of agencies and departments who deal everyday with the substance of issues."

Ronald Ziegler mirrored Nessen's concern about the press secretary's importance but attributed it to an over-programming of new dissemination by government.

"I'm very concerned about the fact that those who deal with communications in the government today are becoming too programmed in terms of how they disseminate information to the American public through the press," Ziegler said.

"I feel that good press relations on the part of government is similar to good human relations and I think that the over-programming that is taking place and the expansion of press offices is breaking down the more natural relationships that should exist between the press and administration officials," he said.

George Reedy, by far the most articulate of the four expressed his concern that the mass media have changed forever the relationship of the press with government by their immense growth. Reedy, the son of a newspaper man, told of when he remembered president's sitting down everyday with the press in a room completely void of television cameras and tapes, when the President actually talked to the reporters instead of having to defend his every decision and policy.

Reedy also pictured Lyndon Johnson as a man who feared the media. He condemned Johnson's efforts to project images of Kennedy and Churchill but commented that Johnson was perhaps the greatest stump speaker of the century.

"When President Johnson appeared on television he was always trying to project an image. In other words, he was trying to be President Kennedy on television. He was trying to be Winston Churchill and sometimes Franklin Delano Roosevelt," he said.

When he forgot eloquence when he forgot voice coaches, he was marvelous. But the thing is, as soon as he saw the camera he would start to freeze up," he said.

Labeling the adversary relationship that exists today between government and the press as natural, Pierre Salinger dispelled the claim that the relationship was originally intended to be anything but an adverse one.

"No history of the United States, from George Washington to Jimmy Carter has ever gone through his administration without having a collision with the press. It just doesn't happen," Salinger said.

The forum will be broadcast on public television May 16th at 10 p.m.

On entertainment

The Entertainment Committee, and particularly committee chairman Scott Baillie, is sure catching hell these days. And with England Dan and John Ford Coley and Bob Hope coming in the next two weeks, these are rather tense times around the ASUI. We'll know soon enough if the ASUI will lose shirts, shorts and all in entertainment.

As far as what's gone on thus far this year, there are some things which need clarification.

1. Firefall did indeed lose us $18,000, admittedly due to poor scheduling. It came right after our spring break, during WSU's, and too soon after the Heart concert. But, as I understand it, Firefall switched dates on us, (it was scheduled later this month, but we were bound by a $30,000 contract, alas.

2. We wanted concerts. We yelled and screamed when entertainment was not included in last year's budget. We got concerts. Perhaps not the best ones, in some people's minds, but not everyone likes any one group.

3. Entertainment is admittedly a money-losing venture. The ASUI doesn't mind subsidizing some concerts (although even they thought $18,000 was excessive), such as Leo Kottke, because if we only booked concerts we knew would make money, we'd have few, if any. So, don't expect to make a bundle too often.

4. Beer and alcoholic beverages are backstage during performances, but at the specific request of the performers. This is traditional (not to say, of course, that it is right). In some cases, it is even written into the contract. Who all gets into the stuff backstage is simply a matter of policing. And if having it there violates any laws or policies, then it's up to the departments or boards with authority in that area to stop such practices, if indeed it is seen as a problem.

As far as all the above goes, Scott Baillie is doing his job. He's bringing you entertainment. If you don't like the concerts he's brought, that's another thing. He's happy to get help and suggestions.

Election petitions available

Petitions for ASUI Senate and Faculty Council candidacy are due 5 p.m. April 14.

Seven senate seats and three Faculty Council seats, two undergraduate one graduate will be vacated at the end of this semester.

Candidates must return petitions with 75 signatures to the ASUI offices. Elections for the seats will be April 26.

Interested students can pick up petitions at the ASUI offices between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays.

turn about fair play

When I was a child, I had a reputation for being smart. But some of this so-called intelligence was as much a matter of style as of substance. Although I had horrible problems with mathematics, (and still do) I did have an impressive vocabulary.

One day, in fifth grade, I tried to answer a question in class, and made a complete fool of myself. I knew what I wanted to say, but I just couldn't find the right words. My answer consisted of a very few shreds of sense mixed in with a very large amount of gibberish. The teacher, of course, couldn't figure out what I meant, and had to ask me to repeat myself. But, later that day I found out that my classmates had been quite impressed. "Wow!" they said. "Betsy's so smart that not even the teacher can understand her!"

This sort of attitude might be amusing in children, but unfortunately, my friends were only echoing the outlook of much of the academic community. The idea is that the smartest people speak unintelligibly, and the best ideas are difficult to understand. Occasionally, this is true. Some complex new ideas take a bit or work to comprehend. However, usually even the best thinking can be explained simply. The true sign of intelligence is the ability to express oneself clearly.

Yet, many of the professors who teach classes and write textbooks actually seem to try to be totally unintelligible. Perhaps some mysterious inferiority complex drives them to fear that if everyone understood what they were trying to say, no one would think they were smart anymore. Other professors may really try their very best to make sense, but are simply incapable of expressing themselves. Whatever the reason, academicians who can't or won't speak and write understandably are simply functional illiterates with large vocabularies.

This "educated illiteracy" has one particularly unfortunate side effect. Elevated double-talk is likely to cause people to ignore otherwise good ideas. After all, most of us have a tendency to reject intellectual snobbery.

The problem is by no means new. Newspapers often carry editorials complaining about people who use overly elaborate language. The usual targets of these editorials are lawyers and bureaucrats, rather than college professors. Now, I've got no idea what to do about the lawyers and bureaucrats, but with tongue only half in cheek, I think I have a solution to the problem of unintelligible professors.

Students are expected to be able to express themselves clearly. Every candidate for a bachelor's degree at the U of I must complete the equivalent of six credits of English composition. Many majors also require Speech 131, the basic course in public speaking.

So why shouldn't instructors be able to express themselves at least as well as their students? What I am suggesting, of course, is that every teacher at this university, regardless of academic rank, be required to pass the equivalent of English 104 and Speech 131. Until this requirement had been met, a teacher would not be permitted to teach any class, nor would the university consent to publish any of that person's scholarly works.

Of course, my proposal would never work. Faculty members would undoubtedly scream like stuck pigs at the insult of being expected to prove that they can express themselves coherently. And most of our textbooks are written by authors from outside the university. Besides, if such a requirement were strictly enforced, there is always the possibility that the university would be threatened with a teacher shortage.

But as we wade through another semester of dull classes and difficult-to-decipher assigned reading, you have to admit: it's a nice thought.

Letters G.H.V.F.D.

To the Editor, An open letter to Steve Risken:

We would like to make a few points in response to your letter on March 31.

1. As a political science major, you should know enough that one shouldn't go around accusing people on heresy and without bothering to find out the correct information. What are you doing, playing Woodward and Bernstein?

2. Gault Hall as an entity was not involved in the concert. The Gault Hall Volunteer Fire Department (G.H.V.F.D.) was the entity involved. (Scott Baillie is not a member of this organization). The G.H.V.F.D. is a non-profit, volunteer organization which tries to promote school spirit and activities through various projects. Due to one of our projects running over the anticipated budget and our planned Fireman's Ball, we were forced to raise some money. This is the reason why we are working these concerts.

Also, your letter implied that we were getting paid for nothing. Au contraire, my dummy. For our money, we built the stage, tore it down, worked as stage hands setting up the stage with roadies, and worked some of the security. If you've never been exposed to this kind of activity before, it is very hard and strenuous work, with most of the work being done at late night and early morning. And about this wasted money that was mentioned in your letter, here again you are wrong. For example, during the Heart concert, we worked approximately 400 man-hours and received $500. Now that's a bargain, especially considering what the physical plant would have charged.

3. The beer that you referred to which was set up behind the stage was meant for the band and roadies. It was not meant for the "guys in the yellow shirts." If you did "see" any of us behind the stage, then those people were wrong and should not have been there. It also seems that your associates at KUOI were seen back there drinking some of that beer. Also, the G.H.V.F.D. were not the only ones in the "yellow shirts."

Now a word on behalf of Mr. Baillie. It seems to us that everyone wants concerts here at the U of I. Mr. Baillie, through his hard work, has given us some. After the Heart concert, he was praised as a hero. Now that he made a mistake (let's face it, he is human) everyone wants him crucified and the rest of the concerts cancelled. Besides being unfair, it is also a defeatist attitude.

One more thing, Mr. Riskin. If your apartment ever catches on fire, don't call on us. James Easton, David A. Doerr, and 13 others.

great many misconceptions that Steve Risken presented in your March 31 issue.

1) Yes, there was beer backstage in the Firefall concert—provided by the group's road manager and caterer for the group.

2) Yes, a number of the security people are from Gault Hall, the same people John Hecht applauded so loudly after the Heart concert. In fact this group has been the best concert security the ASUI has ever had.

3) You (Steve Risken, Chief announcer for KUOI-FM) didn't seem to mind that the security crew allowed yourself and other members of the KUOI-FM staff backstage without a pass for interviews with the group (while you yourself consumed the beer you were so upset about).

It is not these points that truly anger me, but it is that you (and other members of one ASUI Department) have made cheap, libelous cuts at another member of a different ASUI Department.

It really distresses me to see that because you (Steve Risken) have used the Argonaut for your one-sided views a number of students have become "fair weather believers" in the ASUI Entertainment effort.

Scott Baillie has tried to provide a much needed service to the students of the university. For that he should be commended and not stabbed in the back.

Fountain prank

Editor,
Last week was one of the most exceptional spring weeks that Moscow has seen in many years. Warm, sunny days, flowers in bloom, people throwing fisbees and baseballs, and—oh Yes—the University fountain between the UCC and the Library was again going.

It was some "Big joke" when someone put in the annual dye and soap suds wasn't it? Well for those of you who enjoy such "jokes" that may very well be the last time you see the fountain in operation. It costs a great deal of time and money to clean the plumbing after such a "joke," and the university is tired of footing the bill. In all honesty I can't blame them if they never start the fountain again, because of someone's childish prank. It is a shame that a few people can't leave things undisturbed for the rest of us to enjoy.

So to whomever this year's prankster is, thanks for again demonstrating that college students are a childish bunch that the University Administration and Regents shouldn't waste their time listening to (You make my job much easier).

Sell your books

Editor,

If you spend a lot of money every semester on books and you find your investments have become useless because the books are either outdated or the book requirements have changed, read on.

The University Bookstore participates in a nationwide booksale between universities. A salesman comes to the bookstore the last week of every semester to buy books no longer used here but used at other universities. The price at which books are bought depend on the nationwide demand for these books. It is possible to sell books that are considered outdated editions here.

The bookstore is also willing to buy back books that are used here. If they were bought new, the bookstore will buy them back for half of the original price; if they were bought used, the bookstore will still pay half the original price. You can sell your books back to the bookstore at the end of the semester and the bookstore takes the risk of the book requirements changing. Any books that are not needed are donated to the Learning Center.

These aren't the only alternatives available, but they are large scale and close by. They accomplish the goal in mind, i.e., turning useless books into valuable money!

Marriage and career—topic of program

Marriage and a career: are the two compatible?

Obstacles that arise and possible solutions will be suggested at a 7 p.m. program Thursday in the SUB Blue Room.

Three speakers, one planning to marry, one married and one divorced, will discuss the positive and negative aspects of combining marriage and child rearing with a career.

Jennifer Klindt, Moscow president of National Organization for Women, Lincoln Pain, executive producer of KUID-TV, and Wendy Kastelic, public information director for KUID-TV, will speak.

Scheduling, promotion kill Firefall

by Marty Trillhaase

Scheduling mishaps and a lack of promotion were major factors contributing to the financial beating the ASUI took on the Firefall concert, the ASUI entertainment chief said Friday.

ASUI Entertainment Committee Chairman Scott Baillie said the Firefall concert may end up costing the student organization roughly $15,000 - $17,000.

Baillie was heard on KUOI-FM's Media Analysis.

Baillie said the Firefall concert initially looked like a profitable venture. "At the time, this was the only concert we had scheduled," he said. He added concerts are usually scheduled months in advance. "Being the only concert...., we should have been able to pull it off," Baillie said.

But then Heart came along. And then came Leo Kottke. Finally England Dan and John Ford Coley were signed to perform at the U of I.

All were scheduled within a five week period.

Baillie said this left the ASUI in a predicament. In terms of advertising campaign schedules, several concerts conflicted with each other. For example, the ASUI could not advertise for Firefall while Leo Kottke was still being promoted.

Baillie acknowledged events largely controlled him. "The poor timing of the shows would be to blame for the poor promotion," he said.

He said the ASUI had not ordered he re-pay the $15,000 debt. But he added, "I do feel I am obligated to see this through," he said.

Baillie said the loss will not be made up this semester. "It was never my intention to lead people to believe we would make it up on the England Dan and John Ford Coley concert," he said.

He noted two of the three concerts held this semester lost money. Heart brought in a profit, he said. Leo Kottke lost some money, he added. Firefall was the second and biggest loser, Baillie said.

In order to recover the losses, Baillie plans to work through promoters. "Promoters are like an insurance policy—no risk," he said.

The morning following the Firefall concert, Baillie was the subject of a critical commentary on KUOI-FM. Among the charges made by the commentary was that Baillie had permitted security personnel to drink beer.

Beer drinking is prohibited in the Kibbie Dome.

Baillie said he was unaware of such activity. "Personally I did not see any of my people consume any beer," he said. He added the road show manager, not the ASUI, footed the bill for the beer.

Baillie, has also been criticized for hiring members of his living group, Gault Hall, as security personnel. He responded, saying the group approached him. He said they offered to work at a low rate in order to pay a debt. He added the low salaries enabled the ASUI to save at least $1,200.

Peace Corps needs volunteers

by Kristen Moulton

The Peace Corps is looking in a new direction for recruits, according to Diane Redd, volunteer recruiter who will provide information about Peace Corps and VISTA today, tomorrow and Thursday in the Student Union Building main lobby.

"For five years we've looked for people with technical degrees, but now we're looking for liberal arts and social sciences people," Redd said in a telephone interview.

One reason for the new direction is a change in programming of the Peace Corps. Redd said that for many years the aid given to foreign countries was at par with the U.S. standard of living but inappropriate for many under-developed countries. "We're becoming less highly technical and more culture-oriented," she said.

The Peace Corps is also expected to double in size by 1980, Redd said, and will need the volunteers to provide the services. People with liberal art and social science backgrounds are trained in agricultural and health services before being sent overseas for two years. VISTA volunteers spend one year in the U.S.

VISTA will have 800 openings this summer and Peace Corps will have 3,000, according to Redd. VISTA, she said, "is a human service organization for low income communities across the U.S." Peace Corps "sends volunteers to work in villages to help them raise their standards of living."

Peace Corps and VISTA are also changing in that both now accept some volunteers who have not completed degrees, she said. Peace Corps is likely to accept someone with a strong agricultural background and VISTA accepts some with little college education.

Though a volunteer should have a desire to do something worthwhile, he or she must also have some self-interest to make it through the commitment, Redd said. The hardships involved require that one get something out of it, she said.

"The biggest advantages are gaining an understanding of another culture and living and working in another locale," she said. The job responsibility can also be adventurous and exciting, she said.

Another benefit Redd cited is that each Peace Corps volunteer learns another language. While overseas, the volunteer gets a six-week paid vacation and the organization puts $125 aside each month for the returning volunteer. Each is paid enough to live comfortably while on the job, she said.

A former Peace Corps volunteer, John Gessner is U of I campus representative for the two organizations. Gessner is a graduate student in veterinary science and has office hours from noon until 1 p.m. weekdays except Wednesdays.

Peace Corps-VISTA representatives will show informational films during the noon hour in the Sawtooth room of the SUB each of the three days.

Entertainment Academy Awards Argonaut right

"Good evening and welcome to the real Star Wars," said Bob Hope, emcee at the 1978 Academy Awards. His words were prophetic in a way he didn't intend. Star Wars copped seven Academy Awards Monday night, including best special effects, most outstanding original score and best costumes.

Argonaut predictions came true: Annie Hall won best picture (also best director, Woody Allen; and best screenplay, Woody Allen and Marshall Brickman); Richard Dreyfuss won best actor; and Diane Keaton won best actress.

For their roles in Julia, Vanessa Redgrave and Jason Robards won best supporting actress and actor.

Close Encounters of the Third Kind won an award for best cinematography.

Spicing up an otherwise saccharin evening, Vanessa Redgrave, in accepting the first award presented, made a political speech. After condemning Nixon, McCarthy, and a variety of other political figures and philosophies, she said, "I pledge that I will continue to fight against anti-semitism and facism." She was received with boos.

Paddy Chayessky, on the other hand, got prolonged applause when he got up later to present the screenplay awards.

"I'm sick and tired of people exploiting the occasion of the Academy Awards for the propagation of their personal political beliefs," he said. He added he hoped Miss Redgrave realized her award was not a stupendous occasion.

Students present potpourri of dance

What is a dance? It is a marvelous mesh of pathways: music incarnate.

To the audience, the dance is light reflecting off moving bodies, combined and synchronized with melodies, harmonies, rhythms, even dischords. Each observer has a different view of a live dance.

The University Dance Theatre presented a potpourri of lively dances Thursday and Saturday.

Led off with a top-dancing duo performing to the tune of "In the Mood," the evening's entertainment progressed from boogie to hilarity to gentle beauty.

Music ranged from Brahms to Debussy to traditional African rhythms.

In My Raggedy, Raggedy, Raggedy Ann, choreographed by Vicki Blake, rag dolls came to life more convincingly than the Scarecrow in The Wizard of Oz.

People impersonated parts of the film The Chase, choreographed by Nancy Vas. Special credit should go to the lighting crew for adding an extra dimension to this and several other dances.

Under the Apple Tree, a repeated last semester's concert, was just as delightful and touching the second time around.

Ballet returns after national tour

Nearly 30 performances, 10 weeks and 14 states after it set out on a national tour, the Ballet Folk Company is back in Moscow.

Ballet Folk will perform 8 p.m. Friday in the Hartung Theater. The performance is the company's first in Moscow since September.

Tickets are on sale at the SUB and at Cox and Nelson in Moscow. Admission is $2 for students and $3 for non-students.

The performance will include some of the company's most requested ballets.

For the first time in several years, Beauty and the Beast will be presented to the general public. Jeanette Allyn, Ballet Folk artistic director, choreographed Beauty and the Beast.

Watercolors, which premiered last September, will also be part of the performance. Watercolors is danced to a medley of songs by seven contemporary singers, including Janis Ian, Cat Stevens and Joni Mitchell.

In its recently-completed third national tour, the company played before its largest audiences to date and received high acclaim.

"Their greatest strength is their unswerving drive toward a uniquely American dance experience," according to the Brookings, S.D., Register.

The company was described as "compelling in its American view of freedom, humor, and beauty" by the Waseca, Minn., Journal.

Ballet Folk received a standing ovation from the students of Gallaudet College, an institution for the deaf and mute.

The company will rest for a week before starting a tour across southern Idaho, up through northern Idaho and into eastern Washington.

ACADEMIC YEAR²

If you have at least two years of graduate or undergraduate education ahead, and you keep getting clues that your money is running short, then a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship may be the solution. Currently we're seeking young men and women who would like to serve their nation as Air Force Officers. Consequently, if you're majoring in a selected, technical/non-technical, scientific, nursing, or pre-medical field, or can qualify for pilot, navigator, or missile training, then you may be eligible for a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship. The scholarship pays your tuition, lab fees, (plus incidental fees), books, and $100 per month tax free. And even if you don't qualify for the two-year scholarship, you still receive the $100 a month while enrolled in the Air Force ROTC two-year program.

What do we ask in return? That you serve America at least four years as an Air Force officer. Your Air Force ROTC counselor has the details and qualification requirements. Check it out. It might even make your education finances seem elementary.

Nor-Pac play continues for Idaho at Gonzaga tomorrow

Nor-Pac Conference play opened for the U of I yesterday afternoon as the Idaho team split a doubleheader with Portland University. Conference play will continue tomorrow at Gonzaga.

The games with PU were originally scheduled for Sunday but were postponed because of rain. Another doubleheader was to have been played Saturday against Portland State University but was cancelled because of the weather also.

In the first game yesterday the Vandals scored with two outs in the bottom of the seventh inning to win 4-3. Kelley Davidson went to first on a walk and advanced to second on a wild pitch. A single by Pat Bailey brought Davidson home.

The Oregon school scored three runs in the first inning of the second game and eventually won the game, 3-0.

"If you don't score you don't win," Vandal Coach John Smith said after his squad's loss. "We didn't do much hitting, especially in the second game."

Smith made some changes in his defensive lineup for yesterday's games. Third baseman Rick Britt was moved to shortstop and left-fielder Ken Druffel was moved into third base. Bill Stokes took the duties in left field.

"We might be pretty solid on defense now," Smith said. "Our defense was real good today. We turned a couple of double plays each game."

The Portland State game will be made up only in the event that the outcome of the game will have some bearing on league standings, according to Smith.

Britt, Stokes and Dennis Phillips collected two hits each in the first game while Britt also drove in two runs. Phillips and Stokes rapped out one hit each in the second game for Idaho's only hits of the game.

In tomorrow's contest at Gonzaga, Smith expects to meet a tough team.

"They are real good. They have a lot of good ball players back," he said, adding that they also have a strong pitching staff. Smith believes that the Spokane school will be one of the top teams in the league this year.

Brian Stokes will start on the mound for Idaho tomorrow in the nine-inning contest.

Injuries hamper tracksters

The U of I men's track team braved cool weather in Spokane this weekend in a double dual meet with Washington State University and Oregon State University, but lost to both schools.

"We have four or five key people out with injuries," Vandal Coach Mike Keller said. Sprinters Greg Illorson and Claude DeFour are out along with high hurdler Chuck Gangnuss. Also on the injured list are javelin thrower Mark Worley and triple jumper Osita Nsofor.

"Three or four of them did well," Keller said of his team's performances Saturday. "The rest didn't compete well, you could say they choked."

Idaho's Rick Ward placed second in the 5,000-meter run for the Vandals. "He ran well, very competitively," Keller said.

Keller had words of praise for discus throwers Don Allemeersch, Charlie Schmoeger and Jeff Johnson.

Blues take second in St. Paddy's tourney

Idaho's Blue Mountain Rugby Team placed second in a field of 12 teams at the St. Paddy's Tournament in Spokane this past weekend. The Blues were defeated by Snake River of Caldwell, 4-0, in the championship game.

Skagit Valley and Gonzaga both fell to the Idaho team on Saturday and Spokane lost to the team on Sunday before the Blues advanced to the championship game.

Idaho's women's team, the Dusty Lentils, took third out of five teams in the tournament. On Sunday the Lentils defeated Snake River of Caldwell, 7-0. The first three points were scored on a penalty kick by Martine Bichon. Bichon's score was followed by a try by Peggy Clemons.

The Lentils tied the first game with Elliot Bay. The game was decided by a kickoff which was won by Elliot Bay. A try in the closing minutes of the Idaho women's game against Missoula showed Missoula come up on top, 4-0.

McClure cites economy as main issue

by Marty Trillhaase

This year's election may produce some surprises. But if Republican U.S. Senator James McClure has his way, his 1978 campaign will look nothing like that of six years ago.

McClure was a two-term congressman when he ran for the senate in 1972. The race against democrat Bud Davis, of Pocatello, was one of the state's noisiest.

McClure emerged on top following an announcement that Davis had signed a petition supporting Caesar Chavez. Chavez and his United Farm Workers union scared enough farm votes away from Davis to decide what was a very close race.

McClure said the major issues in 1978 will be economic. "The management of the economy is a complex job and the government can't do it all by itself, but certainly government action affects what happens," he said.

McClure added another major issue will be the performance of the Carter administration. McClure, a Republican, is naturally critical of the Democrat administration. But McClure said the performance of the administration may cost Democrat votes this year.

"The Carter administration will be an issue in itself because of a growing feeling on the part, not just of Republicans, but of independents, Democrats, and objective observers of government, that the administration is really an inept administration," McClure said.

McClure said energy and natural resource management issues will also figure heavily into the 1978 campaign.

On at least two bills dealing with those issues, McClure has differed with his counterpart, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho.

Church sponsored the Gospel Hump Bill. McClure opposed it. McClure said he opposed the measure because several groups were not involved in hearings conducted on the proposed legislation in Grangeville last year.

"I think it's wrong for us to make decisions until all the people who are affected by it have a chance," he said.

McClure said the bill had been amended as a result of the Grangeville meetings to include a study of the possibility of a snowmobile route in a limited area. That route proposal hinged on whether any environmental damage would result, he said.

McClure said the amendment "was an honest attempt on our part to meet the requests of the people who might have used the area." He noted the amendment died in a conference committee. "Because we had not kept faith with that particular commitment to that particular group, I voted against the bill that came out of conference," McClure said.

Church has also sponsored legislation that would, if passed, required U.S. oil companies to produce and market gasoline-alcohol mixtures by 1981. McClure has said he will not support the bill. He does support the concept but not the deadline.

"I think we can move 'gasohol' much more rapidly," McClure said. "The government of Brazil has ordered a 20 percent gasohol program to take effect in 18 months. I don't see why the United States can't move just as fast," he added.

McClure said he has no position currently on the proposed spraying of up to 60,000 acres of Northern Idaho forests with a diluted herbicide. The chemical, 2-4-5-T would be used to reduce underbrush in the area. The proposal has been a source of controversy in the area.

McClure said he has requested information on the proposal from the Forest Service and the Environmental Protection Agency. He added he will not decide until he receives that information. But if the EPA can show a possibility of environmental damage, "then of course, I'll press the Forest Service to abandon it regardless of its other justifications," he said.

McClure said he did not oppose investments by the U of I in corporations with holdings in South Africa. He added U.S. relations with the South African government are good.

But he said that does not mean the U. S. supports the racial policies of that government.

"We have a tendency to try to require of some people a reflection of our own social and political values while at the same time having a remarkable capacity to accept very offensive actions on the part of other regimes," McClure said. He added black African governments are more oppressive than the South African government. "I don't like selective application of human rights standards," he said.

McClure has been a strong opponent of the Panama Canal Treaties. Again, he opposes the position of Church. Church, a ranking member on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, is the Senate floor manager of the treaties.

McClure said the issues of university investments in South Africa and the canal treaties are related.

"There are those of us who are fighting the Panama Canal Treaties right now because we believe it's a violation of the security of the United States. At the same time we seem to be going along with a dictatorial government in Panama with all kinds of direct investments by all kinds of bodies in this country," McClure said. He added the Panamanian Government owes over $2 billion to New York banks. One stronghold of support for the treaties are those banks, he said. "They're afraid they'll default," McClure said. "We don't seem to have any compunction at all about putting taxpayer's dollars into bailing that dictator out," he added.
