

Iranian visas may be in violation

by Jeff Coupe

"There may have been several" Iranians at the U of I in violation of their student visas, according to William Carty, officer in charge of the Spokane Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"Our statistics don't show how many (Iranian students) were in violation at a given school," Carty said. "We show how many were checked at the school, how many were checked here and those that are okay and those that will require further investigation."

John Bauer and Kenneth Bryant of the INS checked 46 Iranian students on the U of I campus Thursday.

"But if they were found in violation, there weren't that many (at the U of I)," Carty said.

Phyllis Van Horn, international student advisor at the U of I, was ill Monday and unavailable for comment.

According to a spokeswoman at the foreign student advisory office here, "we don't know what the students status is here until we hear from them (INS)." The spokeswoman said she had asked Van Horn for input on questions from the press when Van Horn became ill.

The spokeswoman here also said Van Horn would release an official comment "through the university news bureau."

Carty explained to the Argonaut that "224 Iranian students have been checked in the Inland Empire. The status of 15 is still being determined and three students have been issued orders to show cause, which is the preliminary step in deportation."

The only schools in the Inland Empire to be checked are the U of I and Washington State University, Carty said. All other students were required to report to the Spokane office of INS.

"Those two schools (U of I and WSU) have the largest number of Iranian students in this area," Carty said.

There are 50 Iranian students on the U of I campus, according to Van Horn. Eighty percent of these students are male.

To maintain student status under INS regulations, each student must carry a full academic load and must be attending the school they were authorized to attend.

"Ninety percent of the Iranian students are in compliance with the regulations," Van Horn has previously stated. She has also estimated that only five students here may be in violation of visa regulations.

In most cases, according to Van Horn, students who have been told they must leave the United States have been offered "voluntary departure." This means they've been given a deadline by which they must leave under their own volition. Those who don't leave under their own power can never return. Those who do leave without force are eligible for re-entry.

Ex-Moscow resident is adventuresome character

by Jeff Coupe

There are many ways of looking at Mosconian Rick Furniss, a 1970 U of I college of forestry graduate.

One could view him as an adventurer deluxe. He's travelled much of Alaska and western Canada by foot, boat, horse, ski and plane. His trails have led over the wilds of the West, too.

One could see him as one of the major conservationists working today. His consultations and expertise perhaps prevented an unnecessary pipeline through arctic Alaska and Canada.

He owns, with a Canadian partner, hunting rights in two of Canada's prime big game areas, the upper Yukon Territory and northern British Columbia. A person couldn't touch either area for under $100,000 each.

Big game hunters the world over drool when they think of the former Moscow resident's accomplishments. He's bagged 26 of 27 big game species on the North American continent, something few people have done.

Furniss is a successful outdoor writer as well. He's sold articles to major outdoor magazines and says he's done "even better with my photographs."

And maybe you could finally see Furniss as being lucky beyond imagination. He's been in three light aircraft crashes on Alaska's northslope. He's survived them all.

Furniss and his bride of seven months, "my first marriage," Furniss says, now live in Whitehorse, Yukon, but his parents live on Orchard Avenue, in northeast Moscow.

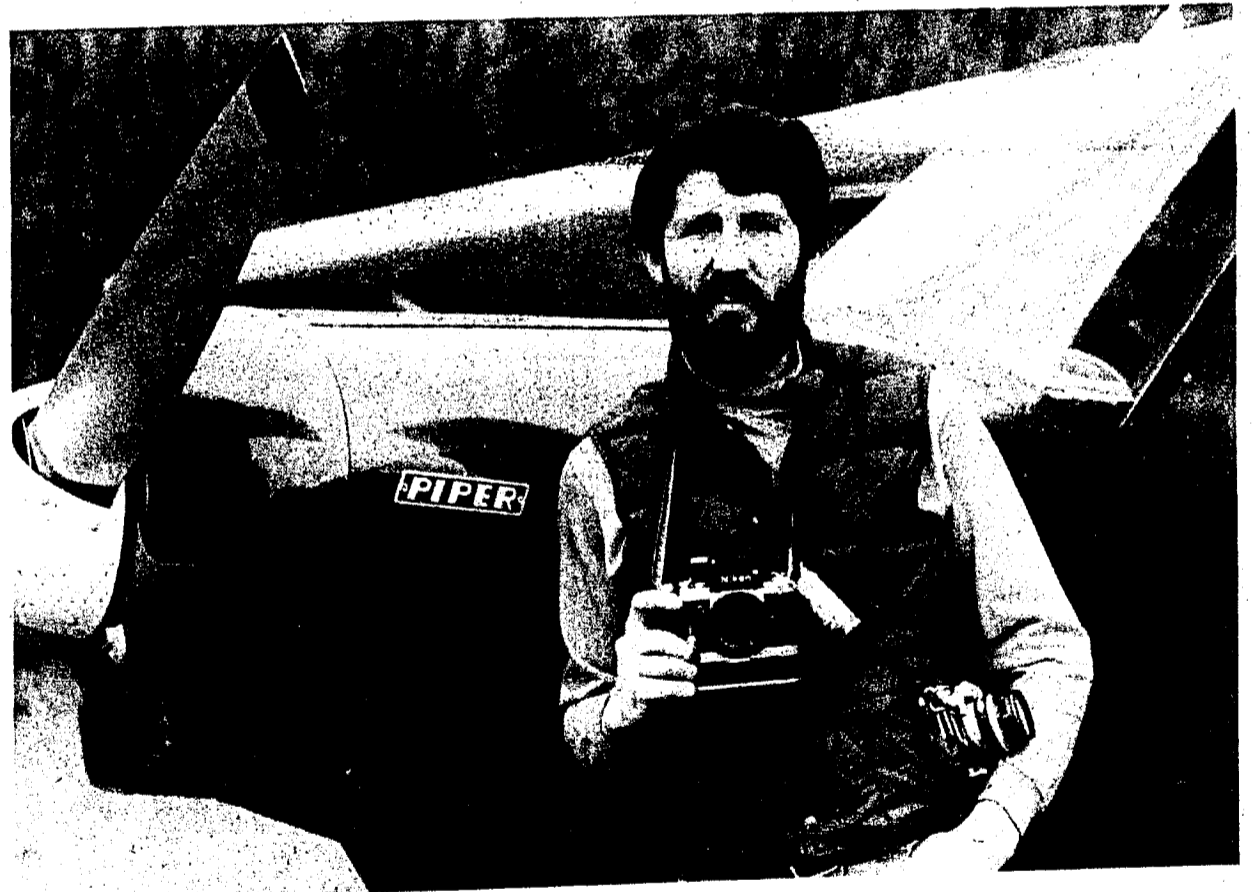

Rick was in town last month to pick up some of his trophies and officially depart Idaho.

"The Yukon is an incredible wilderness, I think it is the greatest place in North America," Furniss explained.

And Furniss has seen some of the wildest wilderness on the continent.

"Right after graduation I packed and immediately left for Alaska," Furniss explained. "I had worked on the Alaskan Peninsula for two summers while I was in school. When I moved up after graduation I was heading up a ten-man crew, while we worked on the commercial fishery in the area."

Furniss moved to Anchorage when his job with the Alaskan Fish and Game Department on the peninsula ended. His skiing ability came in handy when he was in Anchorage. He taught skiing at Alyeska ski area during the winter of 1970-71. Soon Furniss received a nine-month appointment with the fish and game department.

His new job? Working on a life history study of steelhead in southeastern Alaska.

"That was a great job," Furniss said from his parents' home in Moscow. "I had some excellent steelhead fishing."

Following his position in the southeast part of the state Furniss moved to Fairbanks in central Alaska.

"I got a semi-permanent position as a fish biologist out of Haines and soon was working on a Sheefish study on the Yukon (River)," Furniss said.

He wasn't to remain in Fairbanks long. "The department's man on the northslope got killed in an accident and they needed someone," Furniss said. "I was available."

His new position in the Brooks Range and the northslope had a poor history. The three men working there prior to Furniss all had been killed in either boating or plane accidents.

"My first trip didn't start too well either," Rick said. "We crashed on my first outing and beat up the plane pretty bad. We waited a week before

Iranian students

Visas checked at colleges around the country

Campus Digest News Service

Of the estimated 50,000 Iranian students in the United States, the Immigration and Naturalization service has interviewed 22,400 and found 3,050 deportable because of visa violations.

An INS spokesman said 350 of those students have decided to leave the country voluntarily, but deportation hearings would be scheduled for the remaining 2,700.

Hearings for nearly 700 cases have already begun.

Some college officials have refused to allow immigration officials onto their campuses because they fear the protests that may arise from Iranian students.

Others, who disagree with the government's policy agreed to the interviews so that the Iranians would not have to travel to regional INS offices.

"The philosophy behind the government's action has made a lot of us uncomfortable," said Michael D. Fels, international student advisor at El Paso Community College. "But I think there is an agreement that this is the best way to handle a very unpleasant, emotionally-trying situation in a way that would be least difficult for the students."

The often-violent demonstrations by both Iranian and American students at the beginning of the crisis have mostly stopped. These are being replaced by teach-ins and rallies that try to ease the tensions between the groups.

A small group of Iranian and American students marched to the Iranian embassy in Washington recently. The group called for a "peaceful resolution" of the crisis. The march was organized by the United States Student Association with help from the American Civil Liberties Union.

A.C.L.U.'s lawyers have filed a suit to challenge the deportation of Iranian students.

Local student groups have also shown support for Iranian students. One such group, the Associated Students of the University of Oregon, has written a letter to President Carter, requesting the government to be "respectful of students' rights" and to stop the "harassment of students for political reasons."

The board of governors of Greenville Technical College in South Carolina, has decided to prohibit Iranian students from the campus "until all of the hostages are released unharmed."

The INS reports that it has been "encouraged" by the number of Iranians who have willingly complied with the order to register. There are about 12,000 immigration officers assigned to the job of locating out-of-status Iranians.

Some Iranian students have openly defied the INS. Other students in the Southwest have attempted to enroll in Mexican universities to escape deportation. Some 200 have requested political asylum.

In Oklahoma, court officials say there has been an increase in requests for marriage licenses from Iranian men planning to marry American women.

Some students complain

Sub food section closes at nine

The SUB, with the exception of the food service area, will be open until 11 p.m. as usual through finals week, said SUB Manager Dean Vettrus.

Some students have complained because the cafeteria section closes at 9 p.m., forcing them to move to other areas of the building. However, it is necessary to lock the doors to the cafeteria after the grill is closed for security reasons, said food service manager Al Deskiewicz.

"The cafeteria hours haven't changed since I've been here," Deskiewicz added. "They're just being enforced more carefully."

Vettrus said if students requested extended hours for the rest of the building to study for finals, he would try to work out an arrangement with the student managers.

"We're here to serve the students," he said. "If they want extra hours, we'll try to give them to them." However, he noted, student employees must also study for finals, and it is sometimes difficult to adjust their schedules.

Cash Makes a Difference

Jay Jacobs has long made the commitment to offer the best values in men's and women's fashions. Through the years JJ has taken significant steps to keep costs down and in turn keep prices down.

Most recently, because of spiraling interest rates and State controls on finance charges, JJ took an even bigger step . . . a major cost cutting measure; the elimination of JJ charge accounts. Maintaining a credit department could only have resulted in increased prices. That is why cash makes a difference. There isn't a store in the Northwest or Alaska that comes close to the great values found at Jay Jacobs. Yes, cash does make a difference!

Jay Jacobs will continue our commitment to have the best values in men's and women's fashions, and we will cut costs whenever and wherever possible in order to always offer the newest fashions at low, affordable prices.

Here's Proof:

Commentary—

We're as guilty as they are

A sponge sits in the ocean in one general location and lives on the surrounding organisms that float in and out of its digestive system. Its main functions include eating and existing, with no importance placed upon dealing with creatures outside its environment on a social or political basis.

A typical U of I student sits in the SUB, drinks coffee and worries about finals. Its main functions include eating, sleeping, studying and chasing mates, with little importance placed upon social or political policies.

As a typical U of I student with definite sponge tendencies and after chastising faculty members for the massacre of effective student evaluations, I feel obligated to scrutinize the responsibility of students in the situation.

Only a handful of students showed up at the Thursday meeting, regardless of numerous articles and notices published in the Argonaut and other local media. Those few students who were given the opportunity to speak were fairly effective, but how much weight could their arguments carry with only 10 or 15 warm student bodies present to back them up?

Granted the meeting took place at an impossible time when tests, papers and final projects all come due. But by being too busy to at least show up at the general faculty meeting, the students, in essence, gave away their right to comment on instructors through student evaluations. Faculty members took advantage of our uninvolvement and ignorance of the system and passed a proposal which leaves us even more helpless.

Although it was before my time, images of the sit-ins and demonstrations of the 1960s are beginning to seem like feasible means of protesting the usurping of student rights. The only problem is, the unabashed questioning of the system of the 1960s seems dead and forgotten. It doesn't have to remain that way, however.

To use an old cliché, the faculty may have won the battle, but that doesn't mean they've won the war. The revised policy goes to President Gibb next, who is responsible for proposing it to the regents. Both parties are accessible to student input, and are in a little closer touch with the taxpayers and legislators of this state. Gibb can be reached in his office at the administration building or at 885-6365. Members of the Board of Regents can be reached by writing to:

Office of the Executive Director
Len B. Jordan Office Building, Room 307

Even if finals are closing in around you, take the time to do something that will help everyone in the long run. Help make policies at this university happen for you, not to you.

Kathy Barnard

Give it to us straight will ya?

By not releasing information about the status of U of I Iranian students' visas, university officials are not only leaving students uninformed but are leading them to believe something is being hidden.

The Argonaut had to call immigration officials in Spokane to obtain any concrete information on the subject, when the facts should have been available from university sources.

People at Student Advisory Services do have a responsibility to protect the best interests of the students it serves, including Iranian students. But acting secretive about the situation is certainly not helping anyone. It only serves to make people suspicious as to what those officials are trying to hide.

In a time of international crisis and turmoil, everyone should work to clarify facts of the situation as much as possible. Without information people are more likely to formulate their own facts and reasoning. That can be very dangerous.

ronco, k-tell and . . .

cary hegberg

It slices, it dices, it chops, it grinds, it grates, it makes your toast and takes your dog for a walk in the morning. Turn on the TV set and you are confronted with hundreds of those obnoxious commercials, and the closer it gets to Christmas the more of them you see.

Imagine the delight on your mother-in-law's face when she takes the wrapping off her wonderful gadget that scrambles eggs right in the shell. Her eggs and omelettes will not only be easier to make but will taste better, too. Isn't it amazing?

Personally, I can't see how civilized folks ever got along without the neat little unit. In a short time the Ronco egg-scrambler will be an integral part of every kitchen in America.

That's because only in America are people stupid and rich enough to consider buying some of the useless junk which is so successfully marketed here.

When buying Christmas gifts for others, a common thought which runs through our minds is, "I want to give her something she would never buy for herself." That is exactly the type of thinking that many companies prey on. Who in their right mind would buy themselves a Veg-a-matic or a Miracle Broom?

The other day I was wondering what ever happened to the Veg-a-matic commercials. Then I realized that every home in the country probably already has one sitting in a closet somewhere collecting dust.

I recall several years ago Dad used to threaten Mom with a Veg-a-matic for Christmas. If she wasn't doing things to his liking he would say, "I'll buy you a Veg-a-matic for Christmas!"

Several years ago I received the amazing new Miracle Broom from my Grandmother, who apparently couldn't find a sweater my size. Upon activating the convenient little device, which came complete without batteries, to pick up some small pebbles on the carpet of my car, I was indeed surprised by the power it possessed. The damn thing whipped one of the small rocks right into my left eye. I'm surprised no law suits have developed after someone went blind using their "safe, easy and convenient" Miracle Broom.

Then there's the K-tel record cleaner that methodically grinds the grooves off your record while attempting to get it sparking clean. I heard they are planning a shoe polish option to go with it next year to keep your records looking new.

The Vita-mix has a little better approach toward advertising by claiming you can create your own healthy foods at home easily and more economically than you can buy them. Just toss in a little of everything you have in the refrigerator; you know, carrots, brussel sprouts, celery, chocolate ice cream, hamburger, oranges etc., and you create your own delicious health drink. After drinking the pulpy mixture, you would no doubt think, "Wow, I could have had a V-8."

Or if you had a weak stomach you would probably throw up, which reminds me of another category of dumb products: dolls.

We now can delight children with dolls that realistically puke up their food. Isn't that nice. Some can also crap their pants, (or wet them), get a severe rash on their little fanny, cry real tears, grow hair and even develop breasts.

I shudder to think of what they may come up with for the 1980 model. Maybe a doll that explains and illustrates "the birds and the bees" by simply having a string in her back pulled.

Oh and I think of the wonderful record album collection you could enjoy in your very own home if you were wise enough to take advantage of all the "once in a lifetime opportunities" offered on TV.

Never fear if you neglected to purchase the hits of famous artists who suddenly and unexpectedly died. K-tel will sell you an exclusive collection of his favorite hits only 24 hours after he kicks the bucket. And if you order now they'll even throw in a lifelike poster free of charge. Supplies are usually limited to that on hand, however, so you better order yours now. That's 1-800-228-1800. Operators are standing by. Once again that's 1-800-228-1800.

By the way, I've got a used Veg-a-matic I'm trying to get off my hands. They are now collectors' items and I'm selling it for my cost, only $29.99. That's 885-6371, no collect calls please.

Assigning seats

Editor,

When the faculty voluntarily changed its rules several years ago to admit students to faculty meetings, it stipulated they must sit in a special section for a very practical reason. It wished to avoid any confusion about who was entitled to vote when there was a show of hands.

Sincerely,
Wm. S. Greever

A Beta thank you

Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to thank a number of people who demonstrated true friendship and compassion to the members of Beta Theta Pi fraternity following the untimely death of our cook, Ellen Pearson, on Dec. 2. Few people understand how close Ellen was to our membership, but she had not only cooked here for 5 1/2 years, but also had lived in our house the past 4 1/2 years. She had become much more than a cook to us, for she was also our housemother (in spirit, rather than in title), a close confidante, and was the best friend any of us could have ever asked for when we came to college. Her death stunned us every bit as strongly as if she were a close blood relative, and many people went out of their way to make the week following her death somewhat less trying for us.

I would like first to thank the men of Sigma Nu and Phi Delta Theta fraternities and the women of Gamma Phi Beta and Delta Gamma sororities for inviting us to share a meal with them in their homes, and to the women of Kappa Kappa Gamma and Kappa Alpha Theta sororities for providing us with cooks for the meals we ate at our house. I would also like to thank the men of Sigma Nu and Phi Gamma Delta fraternities and the women of Gamma Phi Beta, Delta Gamma, and Kappa Kappa Gamma sororities for their floral remembrances, and would like also to thank the women of Gamma Phi Beta, Pi Beta Phi, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Delta Gamma and Kappa Alpha Theta sororities and the men of Sigma Nu, Pi Kappa Alpha, Phi Gamma Delta, Phi Kappa Tau, Phi Delta Theta and Farmhouse fraternities for their written condolences and sympathy expressions.

I would also like to thank a group of people who might otherwise go unmentioned: the university professors who went out of their way to allow the rescheduling of tests and classwork deadlines due to our misfortune. Such rescheduling removed some of the psychological pressures encountered when something as emotional as this event comes into conflict with the main purpose we are all here: to get an education.

It has been said many times that a friend is someone who is there when you need him, and it appears as though the Men of Beta Theta Pi have many friends. Thanks to all!

As a memorial to Ellen, we have established a Portrait Fund, the proceeds from which will be used to have a portrait of Ellen, which will hang in the den of our chapter house. Any persons wishing to donate can send their donations to me, in care of: Beta Theta Pi, 727 Elm, Moscow.

Sincerely,
Corey M. Stanley

Cancer spreads

Editor,

Fact: The teacher evaluations will hold about as much weight as a piece of bazooka bubble gum.

Fact: Not only is the decision wrong, but it is indicative of an attitude that presently prevails like a carcinogen into every other area concerning the rights of students.

For instance, Sunday Dec. 9, at 9 p.m. the SUB was packed with students when the lights were turned out. Not only did it happen Sunday, but subsequently on other days as well. When there are so many students using this facility, it would appear that a revamping of hours is in order.

If a survey were taken the results would probably indicate more students study in the SUB than in the library. So regardless of the 1 percent rationale, if there are cuts to be made, perhaps a student consensus should be taken to determine "where."

In a day and age when the wishes of the students are of little consequence, it would also seem more students would be questioning, and rightfully so, their student rights, which have dwindled to the point of becoming extinct. Perhaps a revival of the radicalism of the '60s is in order. It would be sad indeed if we had to resort to this extreme to be recognized. So wake up—UNIVERSITIES EXIST FOR STUDENTS!

Iran vs. Iran

Editor,

To the Iranian Sign Hangers, Recently, I notice pro-Iran literature posted at the school and circulating around town. I know this propaganda is an attempt to win the American people over to the Iranian cause, but I'm, afraid it's having the opposite effect. Every one I know becomes infuriated when they see the signs, so I think it may benefit the Iranian cause to put those signs where the sun never shines.

As for the material in the propaganda, there is no need to inform Americans of the sins of the Shah. Everyone knows he is a murdering pig. In fact, he is almost as bad as Khomeini, but that isn't the point. The point is, Iran has invaded American soil, captured American citizens and threatened violence to a country that can blow them off the face of the earth. It is only because the American government realizes that the reasoning level of Iran is minimal, that they have had patience. This handicap is evident in the Iranian outrage at having spies at the American Embassy. Don't the Iranian people know that every embassy has spies in it, including theirs. If the United States kidnapped every spy in our country, we would have to hold the entire United Nations.

It is obvious that the whole reason for this conflict is that Iran needs a scapegoat for their problems. First it was the Shah, then the Ayatollah came under attack, but he tries to save himself by using the United States to field the blame.

The United States is not the cause of problems for the Iranian people. The Iranian people are the cause of their problems. The American people love those poor souls. Please write home and tell them to face the fact that they have got to pull their heads out of the sand. Iran's only problem is Iran.

Not just for me

Editor,

First I would like to thank you for taking time to tell my story concerning my job at Hoseapple's. Also I would like to take some time myself to emphasize a point. I can see that there has been an exaggeration concerning my appearance and why I was fired. It is true that I was hurt, but I was mostly shocked that they would give me such a reason for dismissal. I wanted to let the Sanders know that they must be more pragmatic, sensitive, honest, and fair concerning their employee relationships. As I've stated so many times, my main objective was to see that this did not happen to anyone else. I think I have accomplished this because several people have certainly sat up to take notice.

Men open three-game home stand

Fresh off a consolation win in last weekend's Malibu Classic, the men's basketball team opens a three-date homestand with a game against Whitworth College at 8 tonight in the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals round off the non-conference string with games against Seattle Pacific University on Thursday night and Gonzaga on Friday, Dec. 21. After that, Idaho finishes the 1979 portion of its schedule in the eight-team Far West Classic Dec. 26-29 at Portland, Ore.

Idaho claimed the consolation championship of the Malibu Classic with a 77-72 win over Pepperdine University on Saturday night, the second Vandal win over the Waves this season. The Vandals opened the year with a 78-72 upset over the Waves, the host team in the Classic. Idaho is now 2-2 overall.

Chicago State University stopped the Vandals 68-65 in the opening game on Friday, while Montana State clipped Pepperdine 76-73. CSU dropped MSU 63-59 for the tourney title.

Senior guard Don Newman paced the Vandals with game-high point totals both nights. He scored 25 points against Pepperdine and 20 against CSU. The other Vandal guard, freshman Brian Kellerman, had his best showing of the young season with 20 points against the Waves.

"I thought we played a good, hard, intense ballgame," Vandal coach Don Monson said of the win over Pepperdine. "Of the four games we've played I thought it was the most consistent."

Newman and Kellerman will start against Whitworth, as will center Jeff Burdie and forward Ron Maben. Monson said he'll probably start transfer Gordon Herbert at the other forward position after the junior came off the bench Saturday to score 12 points and lead both teams with nine rebounds.

"He came off the bench and did a good job," Monson said of the 6-foot-5 Herbert, who started the last two seasons at North Idaho College.

"Newman played his usual intense, hard game; you kind of expect him to do that, I guess. It was kind of an average game for him, although his best game this year," Monson added.

"Kellerman played awfully well in the first half and played more like a college guard than he has all year."

Brudie, who is playing more consistent this year, according to Monson, scored 11 points against Pepperdine and 12 against CSU.

Women close semester at home

by Bert Sahlberg

After a pair of games in Boise over the weekend, the Vandal women's basketball team returns home today to face Whitworth college. Tipoff is at 5:35 p.m. in the Kibbie Dome.

"They have a young, new team that has had a very good season so far," said Vandal coach Tara VanDerveer. VanDerveer said her Vandals would have to play good defense to stop Whitworth's hot shooting.

The Vandals suffered their first loss of the season at the hands of Boise State Thursday night. The Vandals committed 31 team fouls and starters Karin Sobotta and Donna Reagan fouled out. BSU won 78-68.

"We just couldn't capitalize on their turnovers," said VanDerveer. Boise State had 23 turnovers in the first half.

Willette White was the leading scorer for the Vandals with 12 points followed by Denise Brose with 11. Pattty O'Connor and Cathy Feely each pumped in eight.

Friday night a fired-up Vandal team played pressure defense en route to a 93-70 victory over instate rival Idaho State. That win put the Vandals at 3-1 for the season.

The Vandals rolled up a 50-34 halftime lead and seven players ended up in double figures.

Donna Reagan was Idaho's leading scorer with 14 points followed by Brose and Penny Aitchison, who had 12 apiece. Feely added 11 points and Renee Brown and O'Connor scored 10 apiece as the Vandals put on their best offensive show of the year.

"People were coming in off the bench and having outstanding games," VanDerveer said. The Vandals hit 52 percent from the field and outrebounded the Bengals 34-24.

The Vandals will also be at home Thursday to face Eastern Montana at 5:35 p.m. in the Dome.

This semester,
try something impossible.

Many young men and women say they are going to college for the challenge.

But it's tough to test yourself and find out what you can do just by taking quizzes and finals.

Add Military Science 298, Leadership Activities, (Zero Credit) with no obligation to your educational program and add a new dimension of excitement to your campus life.

Unlike strictly academic subjects, Army ROTC will teach you to think on your feet. To make decisions quickly. And it will help you to develop your confidence and stamina. One quarter at a time.

Naiads split duals; take month of R&R

Idaho's swimmers take more than a month off from competition after completing a weekend swing through western Washington.

The Vandal men's and women's teams suffered their first dual losses of the season Friday against the University of Washington in Seattle. The women's squad was whipped 90-49 and the men fell 74-36 to the Huskies.

Saturday's meet with Pacific Lutheran University at Tacoma was a different story, however, as the Vandal women rebounded for a dominating 102-27 victory, and the men raced to a 74-34 2in.

The next U of I aquatic action will be a co-ed dual at Central Washington University on Jan. 19. The women will carry a 3-1 record into the meet while the men will try to better their 2-1 mark.

The Vandals, who have been breaking records left and right this season, made last weekend no exception as two more women's times were broken.

Linda Holt beat one of the longest standing school records with a 50-meter breast-stroke win against UW. Her time of 33.1 seconds bested the 33.6 record set by Mary Beth Phlen in 1975.

On Saturday, Nancy Bechtholdt clipped three seconds off the 400-meter individual medley record time of 4 minutes, 56 seconds. Bechtholdt's time was 4:52.72.

Bechtholdt also picked up first-place finishes in the 200 freestyle on Saturday and the 100 and 500 free on Friday. Ann Mortenson recorded firsts in the 50- and 100-meter butterfly on Friday and the 200 fly on Saturday.

For the men, Bob Zimmer won the 50 free and Don Moravec the 200 fly against UW.

Vandal gymnast Cindy Bidart shows her winning form in the floor exercise in a home triangular on Saturday. Bidart also won the all-around competition. Teammate Pam Gilmore won the vaulting. Spokane Community College placed first, followed by Idaho and Seattle University. Photo by Bob Bain.

'Emmanuelle' has violence, rape

by Lisa Lombardi

If two rapes, naked ladies, soft porn and dirty old men appeal to you, Emmanuelle is the movie for you.

The plot is simple: a man brings his wife to Bangkok (for reasons unknown, although that may have been due to a garbled soundtrack), and she proceeds to take lovers, of either sex, with his blessing. She falls in love with a female archaeologist named Bea, who rejects her. Emmanuelle then turns to Mario, an elderly debauche who proceeds to teach her how to "be a woman."

There are several obvious flaws in the plot alone. How a male can teach a mature female of the species to be a woman totally escapes me — he certainly can't have had any first-hand experience. And archaeologists rarely let their lovers wander around on their digs in filmy white dresses.

The whole tone of the movie was distressing. Many of the scenes were violent. Women who moan when grubby strangers caress their legs are slightly unbelievable, not to say ridiculous, and even revolting. The seduction scene on the airplane was hilarious, although again slightly insulting.

The photography was pretty good. The characterization was horrendous—Emmanuelle, no doubt a meat-eater, goes into the delicate shudders at seeing a chicken slaughtered. Much too dirty for her, although that evidently changes as the movie progresses.

Don't go see this movie. It's insulting, degrading, obnoxious, violent, and boring. But if you feel you must, Emmanuelle will play Dec. 13-15, and 20-22 at the Micro at midnight.

'Arabian Adventure' pure fun

by N.K. Hoffman

"Rose of Elil, I come to you with an open heart. Do not turn me away."

It's pure camp, and it's a lot of fun. Arabian Adventure has enough strange names, British accents and magical special effects to please any but the most supercritical theatergoer (it's not Ray Harryhausen, for instance, but it's sufficient).

The adventure includes the requisite Prince Hasan (Oliver Tobias), a fairly handsome person who runs around being good incarnate; the requisite Princess Zuleira (Emma Sams?) who falls in love with Hasan and watches his exploits from afar in the cracked but magical mirror; and the requisite evil Caliph Alquazar, in this case marvelously portrayed by Christopher Lee, displaying all his powers of evilness. He also plays Alquazar's soul, trapped in the magic mirror, resembling the shroud of Turin and radiating Goodness.

In addition to all these stock characters, there is a little boy named Majeed (Capucine), almost always accompanied by his faithful squirrel monkey Shecti (translated from South America to Arabia by magic, no doubt). In a weird way, the story centers around Majeed; he is the nexus for all the magical events. This is very nice. He deserves to have a story built around him; frankly, he is delightful.

The special effects in this film, falling short of superb, are still more than adequate. There is one marvelous "air war" reminiscent of the finale in Star Wars, but instead of using TIE fighters the combatants wage war on flying carpets, swooping about the city of Jador in fine form and bombing each other with fruit.

If you are interested in taking children to a movie, this one is perfect; if you just enjoy Arabian swords and sorcery, sets that often look Persian but occasionally display Western influence, or large toads, you will probably enjoy this film yourself.

Arabian Adventure will play at the NuArt at 7 and 9 p.m., probably for a week (until next Sunday).

Undergraduate's work played

Four compositions by a U of I senior music student will be presented in a recital at 8 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 13, in the Music Building Recital Hall.

Dale Cavanaugh has written and arranged the music to be played by several students and faculty members.

The program includes Song Without Words for violin and piano; Variations on a Chord by D. Wilhelm Filopowicz, a fantasia for cello and organ; String Quartet in two movements and L'oiseau de la Mer for cello and piano, a piece in the style of the French impressionists.

Assisting with the program will be Debbie Hall, Boise, violin, and Catherine Burge, Moscow, piano, for the first work; William Wharton, associate professor of music, cello, and Susan Billin, Moscow, organ, for the second composition; Mark Guilbeau, Hattiesburg, Miss., and Chris Peterson, Moscow, violins, D. Robert Burroughs, Moscow, viola, and Janet High, Twin Falls, cello for the third piece, and Cavanaugh, cello, and Burge, piano, for the final composition.

Cavanaugh placed first in the Boise Tuesday Musicale Composition Contest last spring with his String Quartet and is also the first place undergraduate winner of the American Society of Composers, Arrangers and Publishers (ASCAP) composition competition recently concluded at U of I.

The recital is free and open to the public.

U of I students give recital

A variety of musical styles will be featured in a joint recital of cello and piano music by two U of I students at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 12.

Debra Moon, junior music major and cellist, will join with Catherine Burge, graduate piano student, in presenting the recital program.

Music to be performed includes Chaconne by Thomaso Vitali-Silva; Concerto in B flat major by Luigi Boccherini; Sonate by Claude Debussy; Trio No. 6 in B flat major by W.A. Mozart, and Sonata No. 1 in E Minor by J. Brahms.

The Vitali and Boccherini works are for cello solo with piano accompaniment, while the Debussy and Brahms compositions are chamber music for cello and piano. Chris Peterson, Moscow, will be violinist for the Mozart work.

The recital is free and open to the public.

17th Cent. music, dance performed

PULLMAN, Wash.—Seventeenth Century music and dance, including the first ever Northwest performance of a Monteverdi ballet, will be presented by Washington State University's Musica Viva Ensemble and guest artists Thursday, Dec. 13.

Nine dancers from Orchestris, WSU's performing dance honorary, will present Ballet of the Nymphs of the Istria Monteverdi's dedicatory piece for the accession of Ferdinand III to the throne of the Holy Roman Empire in 1637.

Musica Viva Director William Brandt said the work not only has never been done in this part of the country but is seldom performed anywhere.

The opening portion of the program will feature vocal duets and trios by Monteverdi by Barbara Kierig, soprano; Janet Brandt, soprano; and Peter McDonald, bass.

The Musica Viva wind ensemble will present a group of instrumental compositions and transcriptions of the 16th and 17th centuries. Helen Koehler, Virginia Shearer, alto recorders, and William Brandt, harpsichord, will do Henry Purcell's Three Symphonies (Orpheus Britannicus, St. Cecilia Ode and Chaconne from Diocletian). Brandt will be harpsichord soloist for Partitell sopra l'Aria di Monicha by Frescobaldi.

The ballet performance will follow presented by dancers

Julie Shattuck, Heidi Zalud, Debbie Helms, Camille Wadleigh, Sue Davis, Sue Liming, Jackie Richardson, Patricia Littlewood, and Jill Hirschberger.

Vocalists for the dance number are Kay Kalis and Sally Orsborn, sopranos; Wilda Hatch, alto; Jerry Daniels, tenor; and Peter McDonald, bass.

Other wind ensemble performers are Lie Chen Hwa, Mary Vivit, George Nimick, Chi-yin Pang, recorders; and Laurie Pringle, sackbut. A string ensemble will include Birgitta Wagman, violin, in addition to a cellist and violinist; and Jack Schuman will play the viola da gamba.

The program, at 8 p.m. in Kimbrough Concert Hall, is open to the public without charge.

Film has answer

Lost Generation, a film that "utilizes multiple screen images and a probing documentary style to investigate attitudes on dissent, violence, the mood of America, and the answers that can be found by this generation as they face the decisions of life," will be shown Thursday and Saturday, Dec. 13 and 15, in the SUB Borah Theatre at 7 and 9 p.m.

This film features Billy Graham and Jack Webb. Its showing is sponsored by the Seekers.

they found us. When we were over-due I bet they were thinking 'My god! We've lost another one'" Furniss laughed.

"That's how my first trip started and just about how I ended," he said.

Furniss was in charge of an area larger than the state of Idaho on the northslope. "I was supposed to access and manage it all," Rick said. "Most of my work, though, was directly related to the pipeline."

The controversial Trans-Alaska pipeline kept Furniss in constant contact with environmentalists and consultants for the competing oil and gas companies. After completion of the original oil line, a proposal to build a natural gas line across the Gates of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge forced Furniss's hand.

"I'd been working for the Fish and Game Department on the northslope for three years, so I figured I'd served my time," Furniss explained.

He quit the department and did something "pretty controversial," he said. He formed his own company with a research team member from Arctic Gas Company. They called themselves Alaska Biological Consultants.

Several gas companies were competing to construct a gas line from the northslope to southern refineries. Some of the proposed routes were environmentally unsound and Furniss said "I felt compelled to speak out. The only sane route was use the existing route taken by the oil line."

Furniss's company was hired by El Paso Gas to help convince the Federal Power Commission that Arctic Gas's proposed route across the Yukon was unfeasible. Furniss spent time at court hearings in Washington, D.C. testifying for El Paso Gas.

As it turned out in the end, "neither company got the contract," Furniss explained.

But Furniss made out well financially with his company and when it was disbanded in 1976 he knew what was next.

"I'd been negotiating to buy a hunting area in northern British Columbia for some time," he said. "When we had no more work (Alaska Biological Consultants). I bought the hunting area."

The hunting area Furniss and his Canadian partner have guiding rights to is over 10,000 square miles, about one-eighth the size of Idaho. The area is one of the "best grizzly areas in Canada." Moose, caribou, stone sheep, wolf, goat and black bear are also hunted.

"Our business has been so incredibly successful in British Columbia that I was able to buy another hunting area in north central Yukon," Furniss said. "We hunt in the Yukon like they did 50 years ago with packhorses. Most hunts are out of a lodge with side trips for certain animals. We're 185 miles from the nearest road and keep moving."

"We've got 28 head of horses and are hunting in the remotest mountains in Canada. After we take off we never see anyone. Locals never hunt that far from the road. We move our camp every few days."

The corporation takes four hunting parties a season, four hunters per party. After the specific number of days for any given hunt are up, a new party arrives by plane, the old party leaves, and the packtrain continues. Eventually the train completes a circle in the area which Furniss said was "twice again as large as Glacier National Park."

The demands of running a professional hunting camp and service aren't all shimmering sunsets, striking arctic char, lumbering grizzly and graceful dall rams, Furniss explained.

"It's a full-time job getting ready for the actual short field season. We have to move up 30 tons of feed from Whitehorse for the horses. We have to repair and put everything away, which is no easy task. We have all our book work that has to be done by Dec. 31. There are brochures to prepare, correspondence to take care of, planning, sportsmen shows to attend," he said.

"And after our short season, we're spending money the rest of the year."

A person desiring to chase caribou or moose with Furniss had better be prepared to spend some money. The hunts average about $4,000, give or take a $1,000, and more costly hunts are available.

Furniss's hunts have been successful in a fairly competitive business because he feels he offers quality and fairness. Three-fourths of his clients take a grizzly bear, a fairly remarkable success, during fall hunts in British Columbia. Furniss's education in wildlife management practices comes in handy in managing his area's game herds. He purposely keeps the number of hunters low each season, and doesn't attempt to harvest any more animals than he thinks can successfully be taken.

The results have made Furniss's service a sought-after hunt, especially for Europeans, where three-fourths of his clients are from, many of them Germans and Swiss.

"I deal with a very exclusive clientele," Rick said. "These hunts cost a lot and I've been seeing less and less Americans. I believe strongly that only the wealthy can afford conservation."

"When properly used, money can be a wonderful tool. As we near the year 2000 I think we'll start seeing conservation pushed aside some as economic survival becomes more and more necessary," Furniss said. "And there's no money in this conservation, environmental field; most of conservation depends on outside money."

"And I believe students in this field had better be prepared to find something else," he added.

"I feel strongly that so much of education is impractical. I think this is a good institution, and I got a good education, but students tend to study things that don't apply directly to their lives. When it comes down to it—to getting out and earning a living—there was nothing practical about my education."

"So many of the students that graduated with me are doing other things, they were overtrained. If they would have gone into the environmental field, then they were trained very good, but we need more education in basic lifeskills."

"I wish I would have taken more business, typing—things that are essential to me today," Furniss said.

And although Furniss graduated Cum Laude, at the top of his forestry class, he said "I learned nothing about life. It was just a mill. About the best, most useful class I had, was magazine article writing and typing."

Furniss wants to write a book about his adventures someday.

In the meantime Furniss said all he wants to do "is work hard at what I'm doing and build my business into a larger success."

The toughest job you'll ever love

We admit it. It takes a different kind of person to be a Peace Corps Volunteer. We won't mislead you with glowing pictures of exotic lands. The hours as a volunteer are long. The pay is modest. And the frustrations sometimes seem overwhelming. But the satisfactions and rewards are immense. You'll be immersed in a new culture, become fluent in a new language, and learn far more about yourself than you ever expected.

You'll also discover that progress in the Peace Corps is measured in small accomplishments. Such as rural health clinics established in Kenya. Irrigation systems built in Upper Volta. Fresh-water fish ponds started in the Philippines.

The progress may seem modest, but to people in developing nations who have never before had clean drinking water, basic health care, or enough to eat, the Peace Corps brings a message of hope and change.

We invite you to look into the volunteer opportunities beginning this year in 65 developing nations. See our representatives for details.

Plane crashes claim seven lives

This last weekend proved fatal for small plane pilots in Idaho.

Seven persons were killed in four separate crashes in different areas of the state.

Foggy conditions over the state played a part in two of the crashes.

Among those killed were two teen-age boys, two Mountain Home airmen and an Aberdeen man trying to follow freeway lights in the fog.

The two teenagers died on impact after the plane they were riding in crashed in a potato field fifteen minutes after take off from the Idaho Falls Municipal airport.

The two airmen died instantly when their plane wrecked an half mile short of an airport runway.

Two other men were found dead in the wreckage of their plane which crashed last Friday night 40 miles south of Burley.

Another man, flying by himself died when his plane crashed near Malad due to the thick fog. He was using freeway lights to guide his plane.

Legislators positive on '80 funds

The U of I, and Idaho higher education in general, will be funded at a higher level by the Legislature this year than last, predicted two Latah County legislators who spoke at the U of I Women's Center Thursday.

"It is my feeling that the U of I will be funded at between 106 percent and 109 percent of the 1979 level," said Rep. Joe Walker in an interview after his remarks. He, Sen. Norma Dobler, both of Moscow, and Rep. Tom Boyd of Genesee previewed their expectations for the upcoming legislative session with a small group of U of I students, faculty and staff.

The major issue facing the 1980 Legislature is working out implementation of the 1 percent property tax limitaiton law. Other issues are the site for a women's prison, aid for displaced homemakers, and reducing a $7 million shortfall in funding for the state Medicaid program.

In 1979, due partly to the 1 percent initiative, the U of I was funded at 2.8 percent above the 1978 level, but provided an average 7 percent salary increase to its employees. This and inflation forced the school to cut $3.2 million in programs, services and personnel to meet salary and program funding demands. If the university is funded at the 100 percent level for 1980-81, which has been suggested, it would have to find areas from which to cut $2.5 million next year. Most cuts would probably come in academic areas, according to President Richard Gibb, because support services, which sustained most of the cuts this year, cannot be cut much further.

Based on past history, the Legislature "acts like a pendulum in funding education," Boyd said. "One year it gives more money to public education, and the next year it will give it to higher education. I believe the Legislature will be better to higher education this year than last."

Boyd, a member of the House Appropriations and Judiciary Committees, said, in his opinion, the 1 percent initiative should be implemented this year, unless it is found to be unconstitutional.

The issues to be solved before the 1 percent law can be implemented deal with overlapping tax districts and making tax assessments consistent and equitable throughout the state.

According to the legislative auditor, Idaho will have a $10 million surplus, Boyd said. However, the governor's office predicts a $15 million shortfall. Boyd expects that a two-mill tax relief bill will be introduced, and if passed and signed, it will eliminate about half of any $10 million surplus. He also expects another bill to cover a 7.5 million shortfall in the state's Medicaid program ot be introduced early in the session. It would use up what was left of any surplus.

Summer financial aid forms due early next semester

Students who intend to enroll in summer school 1980 or for either semester in 1980-81 should pick up financial aid materials from the Student Financial Aid Office in UCC 228 before the start of Christmas vacation, according to Director Harry Davey. Most students will need parental data or signatures on their applications.

The package of materials contains the U of I's application, the financial aid form and supplement and a descriptive brochure. Students applying for scholarships will also receive a listing of applicable awards. When properly filled out, the form is sent to the College Scholarship Service in Berkeley, California, is also an application for a basic grant. It takes three to six weeks for this process to generate the data needed in the Student Financial Aid Office to make aid decisions. Students are warned by the federal government that Financial Aid Forms dated prior to January 1, 1980, cannot serve as applications for basic grants.

In order to be assured of receiving financial aid, an applicant's file must be complete by March 31, 1980, including the reports generated by the submission of the financial aid form to Berkeley.
