Campus News control wrested, future uncertain

by Kerrin McMahan

The U of I administration's dissatisfaction with Campus News, the School of Communication's faculty-staff newspaper, may result in that publication's being silenced after this semester, said Managing Editor Kristen Moulton.

The bi-weekly paper is staffed by students in the Reporting 222 class taught by Don Coombs, director of the school of communication.

According to Campus News staff members, Coombs was asked to meet with representatives of the administration last Friday to discuss the operation of the paper. Those attending the meeting included Academic Vice President Robert Furgason and Dean of Letters and Science Elmer Raunio, staff members said.

The outcome of the meeting, said Moulton, was that the School of Communication will stop publishing Campus News after this semester. Whether the paper will cease to exist entirely has not been settled, she said. "If the News Bureau wants to put it out, they can," she said. "But the School of Communication will have nothing more to do with it."

Coombs confirmed that he will not be involved with the paper after this term. "I've been given to understand, for quite some time, that the university administration has been unhappy with Campus News," Coombs said in a written statement.

"My direct personal involvement with the publication will end this semester, as discussed with Dr. Furguson last week. What will happen to Campus News after that is still up in the air, as far as I know," he said.

Moulton said Friday's meeting took her and Coombs by surprise. "But for a long time we've known they didn't like us," she said. "For some reason, they think we present a negative view of the university. And I don't know where they got that idea," she said.

An example of negativism cited by the administration was a story about cutbacks in the summer session due to the 1-percent initiative, Moulton said. The lead of the story said it had been necessary to cut 56 courses from the summer session, and the second paragraph quoted an administration source as saying there would still be a quality curriculum, she said.

The administration felt Campus News should have led the story by saying a quality summer curriculum would be offered, and mentioned the loss of 56 courses later on, she said.

Also, when the paper ran a front-page story saying a new assistant vice president would be hired at a salary of $35,000, the administration felt it was "sensationalizing," Moulton said.

Students working on the paper indicated that, although the administration did not directly issue an ultimatum, Coombs was made to feel he had a choice between remaining director of the School of Communication and ceasing his involvement with Campus News. This statement could not be confirmed.

Furgason described Friday's meeting as a general one, "Exploring a whole series of different things." He would not comment as to the administration's satisfaction or dissatisfaction with Campus News. "There have been some articles that we felt didn't depict what was going on," he said.

Furgason would not comment on the future of Campus News, or on Coombs' association with the paper.

Sources said the administration had contacted senior members of the communication faculty prior to meeting with Coombs to determine how they felt about the situation.

Raunio confirmed that faculty members had been consulted. Journalism professor Bert Cross said he had been contacted, but neither Raunio nor Cross would discuss details.

"What makes me mad is if they didn't like Campus News, they should have come right out and said so, instead of forcing it to be our decision," Moulton said.

The administration can damage their own credibility by trying to suppress negative news, she added. "They really don't know how to handle public relations at all."

Features editor Tena Chapman agreed. "If Gibb and Furguson were secure about the job they're doing, there would be nothing that Campus News or any newspaper could report about goings on at the university that would threaten them," she said. "So I have to assume that they're really insecure."

As for the future of Reporting 222, "I don't think the administration even gave that any consideration," Moulton said. "In the next few years we could be having journalism graduates who have never written for a newspaper," she said.

Although the future of Campus News is still "up in the air", according to Coombs, his statement went on to say that "preliminary discussion with faculty members in the School of Communication indicates they feel the school can't afford to keep publishing it."

"Those of us who have been involved with Campus News are proud of the publication," he said. "We thought it contributed a lot to the general university community, and facilitated faculty governance. And I personally appreciate the solid support given me by the School of Communication faculty and by the dean of the College of Letters and Science."

An afternoon with Jimmy; Fehrenbacher reports

by Emeka Gahia

In the summer of 1975 when Scott Fehrenbacher, ASUI president, was a tourist guide for a Washington, D.C. national youth organization, the closest he got to the White House was to drive past the historic building in a bus for the benefit of the tourists under his care. Last week, Fehrenbacher, the tourist guide, wound up a guest of the White House, one of several university student presidents invited for a meeting with President Carter.

"I had a lot of mixed feelings on my way to Washington," said Fehrenbacher. He said he worried the president would send them someone who would not answer student questions. "I was worried that some of the other schools would refuse to attend or that the president would just come in and say 'okay I have seen you. Hi.'" But he said he was not disappointed.

The meeting, held Friday, dealt with a broad range of foreign and domestic policy issues, including the nation's energy problems as well as registration and the draft.

Fehrenbacher said the president told students he has no plan now to initiate the draft and that registration is merely an important symbolic act. "He said registration should prevent the need for mobilization and for the draft."

"I had a chance to speak to him," Fehrenbacher said, "and he said to me: I want you to tell your student body that the president has taken a difficult situation and has made a difficult decision. He said I like you all to support me, but that he doesn't expect us to."

Fehrenbacher said the president extended the meeting considerably, taking the whole afternoon off for the occasion. "That tells me he wasn't just trying to please students. He was sincere. He wanted to know what we thought."

Fehrenbacher said he thought the president was under pressure. "You can tell there was stress," he added. But he explained that even those who were opposed to the president were impressed with him. "I think they were impressed with the president showing so much respect for the students," he said. "I don't think a lot of minds were changed," he continued. "There were many eastern students at the meeting who have no support for registration." He said 40 percent of the students who attended the meeting indicated in an informal student poll, they favor registration.

"I had expected a few minutes with the president," said Fehrenbacher. "But it was a major policy address. All the media were there. Sam Donaldson (ABC White House correspondent) and all the rest of them were there, and they kept asking us who we thought should be next president," he said.

Enrollment and interest on the upswing

by Bill Will

There has been an increase in requests for information concerning the Army ROTC programs on the U of I campus since the recent troubles in Iran and Afghanistan and President Carter's call for draft registration, but the requests stem from a genuine interest in ROTC programs rather than any fear of a possible draft, according to a U of I Army ROTC spokesman.

Students are calling for information because "I think that the programs we have to offer are appealing to them," according to Captain Raymond C. Gannaway of the U of I Army ROTC program. "There is a lot of interest in activities like the rifle teams and orienteering," he said.

Gannaway said there is an increase in enrollment in ROTC programs this year, but that registration for them had already occurred when the troubles in Iran and Afghanistan surfaced.

Gannaway explained that there are two ROTC programs. One program is for freshman and sophomore students, who are basically only taking ROTC classes and participating in some activities. If these students wish to continue and are accepted to the upperclassmen program, they sign a contract with the Army and become a member of the reserves. They then are ineligible for any draft that may occur because they are already in the military as reservists. As long as they continue in the program and meet their academic requirements, they will stay in school, but if they drop out of school and the program, they may become eligible for the draft.

College students who belong to a reserve unit can be called up to active duty if their unit is mobilized, but they can apply for a deferment if they are attending school, according to an Army Reserve spokesman in Spokane.

Reservists attending college were granted deferments during the Vietnam era, he said.

He added that being in college may not in itself be cause for deferment. Each individual request for a deferment is examined and other factors besides college enrollment might be considered.

Members of National Guard units may also apply for deferments in the same manner as reservists if their National Guard units are mobilized. According to Sgt. Robert Stratton of the Moscow National Guard Armory, there are currently 17 U of I students who are members of the local National Guard unit out of a total strength of 68 people.

Fehrenbacher

the Kennedy-for-President people worked the student group on the draft and registration.

Earlier in the day, the students had met with National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski, Domestic Affairs Advisor Stuart Eizenstadt and a few other White House officials.

Fehrenbacher said Brzezinski told them the Middle East is strategic to U.S. interests because any cut in Europe's and Japanese oil supplies will hurt the U.S. directly. He said Brzezinski also told them the new Soviet leaders are relatively young, conservative and more war-like. "He told us that from now on, we are going to be living in a difficult age."

"He is an impressive man," said Fehrenbacher of Brzezinski. "Even those who opposed the draft were impressed with him. He's brilliant, tough, sure of himself. He has a dry sense of humor that I think doesn't come across in newspaper columns. You can tell he's a man who commands respect," he said.

It was different with Eizenstadt, said Fehrenbacher. "He's the scholarly type with specific expertise." Fehrenbacher said a lot of the students at the meeting "got upset with the domestic affairs assistant."

As Fehrenbacher described it, the incident that led to the misunderstanding occurred when one student, who had said most people would sacrifice to save energy, registered a strong protest over the president's call for sacrifice to protect Persian Gulf oil pipelines.

"The student got a loud clapping of hands from the rest," said Fehrenbacher. "But in his reply, Eizenstadt called the student's remarks ridiculous. Most people were surprised how he tried to put down the student," he said.

Break-ins alarm hall residents, security unsure

by Jason Wiebe

"Gone with the wind—and so's your stereo. Lock your doors." Signs like these are posted on the walls of Wallace Complex every semester, but residents of the complex are finding the warnings to be useless.

A recent series of break-ins have put residents of Oleson Hall into a "paranoia state" said Resident Advisor Frances Trujillo. As reported in the Argonaut last week, two locked rooms in the women's hall were jimmed open and entered. The residents were there at the time, but were asleep in the middle room of their suites. A cassette radio was taken from one of the rooms, while prowlers were frightened away from the other room when the resident woke up, Trujillo said.

Ron Ball, assistant housing director, said the locks in the Complex are good institutional locks. "There is nothing on the commercial market that is any more secure," he said. "An expert can pick them, but the average layperson cannot."

"If you asked anyone in the Hall, they'd tell you that the locks can be jimmed," Trujillo said. A group of residents in the complex said they have slipped the locks on their own doors when they have lost their keys. "It's quicker than going to the R.A. for another key," said one. "Those new meal tickets sure come in handy."

Referring to allegations that the locks can be slipped with the new Validine system meal tickets, Ball said, "If you find anybody that can, I'd love to watch." In his five years in the Housing Office, Ball said he has never seen anybody slip one of the locks in question. "They'd have to have amazing dexterity," he said.

Trujillo said she put a work order into the Housing Department as soon as she heard about the break-ins. Workers have now installed chain locks on the inside of all doors in Oleson Hall.

"Those chain locks are only good if you're in the room at the time," one resident said. "They don't do anything for you if you're gone." Trujillo said a main security lock-up has been proposed to keep unwanted persons from entering the hall.

The break-ins haven't been confined to residents' rooms. A janitor's closet was broken into earlier this year, but was "fixed right away" after the janitor reported it to the R.A.

"The main problem is the 24-hour visitation system," said Ball. He said the Housing Office will provide chainlocks and keys to lock up the main doors to the hall, but that "security is up to the residents of the hall. The key to the whole thing is to be willing to challenge intruders," Ball said.

Hall lock-ups have been tried in the past, said Ball, but have met with little success. "These moves must be endorsed by everyone in the hall," he said. "In the past, someone who didn't like the system would just prop open the main door."

"I've been telling all my girls to be really careful about locking their doors," said one resident advisor, "but now I don't know how much good that will do."

Olympic patriotism

Watching the U.S. medal winners at the Winter Olympics has been a thrill in one sense, but extremely disappointing in another. While representing the largest free nation in the world, some of the U.S. athletes are not conveying the sense of pride that should accompany that representation.

For instance, Eric Heiden, when receiving his gold medal for speed skating, did not place his hand over his heart when the American flag was raised and the Star Spangled Banner was played. Both were done in his honor and the honor of the United States, yet Heiden, like other athletes, seemed to forget his accomplishment was a national, as well as personal, achievement.

Heiden was by no means disrespectful; he stood very attentively and watched the flag. The point is he did not openly demonstrate the respect and pride of a U.S. Olympic athlete.

To be sure, few people will sympathize with this disappointment. After all, how many people take off their hats or place their hands over their hearts when the national anthem is played. How many kids say the Pledge of Allegiance every day in school. How many people even bother to fly the American flag on Independence Day July 4 or on Flag Day June 14.

Patriotism is almost a thing of the past for Americans. We seem to forget how hard other generations have worked and fought to give us the life we now live.

Pride in one's nation and its government is illustrated by the manner in which each citizen treats the symbols of patriotism, such as the flag and the anthem. When people do not show a great deal of outward respect for those symbols, it is obvious to others they have no deep convictions of pride and respect for the country itself.

This passive attitude toward patriotism is widespread among Americans and is exemplified by our Olympic athletes. How can we expect people of the world to revere and admire the United States of America, if Americans themselves don't.

PATRIOTISM OR

obscenity is relative

tom campbell

The following was reprinted from the Feb. 17 Lewiston Morning Tribune.

During the brief flurry on the U of I campus over the nude photographs that popped up in the first section of the school annual, The Gem of the Mountains, a copy just happened to float onto my desk, and I peeked to see what had so upset some students that they wanted their money back.

I was not shocked, repelled, horrified, sickened or filled with loathing.

Nor was I titillated, or tantalized, or lathered. I was indifferent, not numb, just indifferent.

It was just another series of photographs of people in their birthday suits, artistically presented—to be sure—but relentlessly routine in keeping with one of those fads that so easily become fetishes.

The students who objected said it is unusual to carry such portraiture in the Gem, a publication that has a reputation for staidness, and they claimed also that the photographs do not portray student life, which is what the Gem is supposed to be all about.

The staff, on the other hand, was moved to toss in a bit of spice to offset intramural sports, dances and toothy grins.

There was certainly nothing obscene about the photographs, Dull, yes, obscene, no.

In my time at the university such photographs would have only enjoyed private circulation. They would never have been published in the Gem, or anywhere else. They would have been considered criminally obscene.

But that was another time—a time when the Dean of Women's manual for young ladies forbade sitting upon a lawn in anything but an upright position. Leaning back on the elbows was also forbidden, even though that is an awkward position for both parties if ravishment is in the wind.

The Sigma Chi fraternity, where I lived, had a dog-eared copy of Lady Chatterly's Lover (unabridged) floating around. It also had a weighty tome called Psychopathia Sexualis, or something like that, which detailed case histories of psychiat-rists exploring the Id. A person not acquainted with the facts of life, and there were a few around, could easily be tempted to consider celibacy after reading it. I recall one vivid case that concerned a woman with a whisker fantasy, hers, not her husband's.

As for public nudity, the case that comes quickest to mind is the girl on the balcony of the old Nobby Inn who divested herself of some of her garments and prepared to do a high dive into a pitcher of beer on the floor 20 feet below. She was hustled away.

It was all, of course, very silly.

The students who objected to the Gem photographs made their point. They were not relevant to university life, unless university life has taken a tack of which I am not aware.

And the editors of the annual made their point. They did nothing offensive or obscene by today's standards.

But there is a third point that involves the feeling that these days it is mandatory to let it all hang out. Nothing must be withheld in conversation or conduct. We must babble at each other, tearing away our own personal veils, set fire to our souls, and we will all be better for it.

Instead of dropping one petal at a time, we must set off explosions.

In an essay several weeks ago, Time Magazine said:

"Social habit in the U.S. has taken decisive turns toward the awful. Since the end of World War II, Americans have been steadily relinquishing their inhibitions about the consequences of their actions. As in some burlesque science fiction, the nation seems to have been injected with a truth serum designed to make people bore one another to death."

The essay is a good explanation why I was indifferent to the Gem photographs. The saturation point has been reached. Everything is hanging out, and out, and out.

Campbell attended the U of I from 1939-42 and returned in 1945 for his degree. He was co-editor of the Argonaut in 1945 and received his degree in journalism and political science.

False impressions

Editor,
Recent articles concerning the compliance of Greek houses with state and county health regulations have given the impression that several of the living groups are by no means safe for the consumption of food prepared there.

I will vouch for the sororities in this case stating:

(1) All sororities on campus are in compliance with the Idaho Code concerning health regulations.

(2) The Greek living groups on the U of I campus have cooperated to their best ability in correcting any deficiencies that may have been found, and will continue to do so despite the fact that it is only advisory, not mandatory (in the houses that passed inspection) that these deficiencies be corrected.

(3) The deficiencies that exist are basic deficiencies that can be easily corrected, not violations that would warrant terminating the use of the facility.

(4) I am Greek, I live on this campus. And, the only thing I'm "sick or mad" about is the impression of Greek living the Argonaut has portrayed in these past articles.

Symms again

Editor,
Friday's edition of the Argonaut erroneously printed the first paragraph of my letter. I realize the Arg staff need a break too and with back-to-back Argonauts—things like this will happen. The first paragraph of my letter as originally submitted is as follows: "On Jan. 16, 1980, a very special announcement was made by Congressman Steve Symms declaring his candidacy to oppose Frank Church for the U.S. Senate. Frank Church was a major contributor to the emasculation of America's vital intelligence organizations, unarming of the U.S. military (clearly verified by his voting record), weakness and pacification in foreign policy, and erosion of the dollar domestically and overseas. Steve Symms offers a different philosophy and rejects as an impossibility, if we are to preserve liberty, a policy of appeasement of communism. Steve Symms will help America, the leader of the free world, back into a position of strength, economic common sense, and prosperity."

Vandals clinch playoff berth

Although the U of I men's basketball team lost 89-74 to Montana State Saturday night, the Vandals are already assured of their first-ever spot in the Big Sky Conference playoffs, thanks to the conference's tie-breaker system.

Idaho is now 7-5 in conference play, a half game ahead of Montana State and Montana, both 7-6. Weber State, 12-1, has already clinched the top spot and will play host in the tourney Feb. 29-March 1.

The Montana schools play Saturday while Idaho is home against fifth-place Nevada-Reno Thursday night and Northern Arizona Saturday. Both games start at 8 in the Kibbie Dome.

Two losses would put the Vandals in fourth, meaning they would face Weber State in the tourney's opening round. A split or two wins would keep them at second, and the Vandals would play either Nevada-Reno or one of the Montana clubs in the tourney.

"We're definitely in," assistant coach Barry Collier said this week. "If we win one (at home), we'd finish second, and that's a lot more attractive to us than finishing fourth after what we've done."

"We'd like to finish out on a winning note and go into the tourney with a winning note," Collier added. "The Reno game will be a really pivotal game for us, and we're looking forward to both of them."

Saturday the MSU Bobcats built a 43-29 halftime lead at Bozeman. The Vandals cut the lead to three early in the second half, but the Bobcats exploded later on for the margin of victory.

The loss snapped a four-game Vandal winning streak.

Women stop Alaska twice

by Bert Sahlberg

The Vandal women's basketball team closed its home season over the weekend by beating the University of Alaska-Fairbanks twice in the Kibbie Dome. The wins tighten U of I's grip on second place in the Northwest Empire League.

The Vandals, now 8-1 in league play and 19-4 overall, will get a shot at first place Saturday when they travel to Bellingham to meet league-leader Western Washington University. WWU is 19-1 overall and 10-0 in league. Idaho suffered its only league loss to WWU in the Kibbie Dome in January.

Tonight the Vandals travel to Spokane to meet Whitworth, a team they clobbered 90-45 in the teams' first meeting.

Saturday night the Vandals had to hold off a late rally by UA-Fairbanks to claim a 68-55 win. Friday's win was a little easier for the U of I, as it took a 70-56 decision.

"I like these closer games better," said coach Tara VanDerveer after Saturday's contest. The Vandals haven't been in many close ones this season, winning most of their games by at least 20 points.

"We were in good physical condition, and we played good defense for the second night in a row," VanDerveer said.

The Vandals held a slim 30-24 lead at halftime, but for five minutes early in the second half they went scoreless. "We were executing our offense fine, but then we threw bad passes, and it took us a while to get going," VanDerveer said.

Alaska took a 50-48 lead with five minutes left, but Willete White and Karin Sobotta each hit two buckets to give U of I a 56-53 lead. Each team connected for two points, and then Denise Brose and Sobotta broke the game open with 10 Vandal points.

White lead all scorers with 14 points, followed by Brose, Sobotta and Renee Brown with 12 apiece and Patty O'Connor with 10. Brose was game-high rebounder with 15.

"Denise rebounded well, and that is important for our fast breaks," VanDerveer said.

Cathy Feely led the Vandals Friday night, scoring 13 points and grabbing 10 rebounds. Donna Regan, Liz Abel and White had 10 points apiece, while Regan had 11 rebounds.

Human Race produces records

A trio of Vandal tracksters set Kibbie Dome records in Saturday's Human Race track and field meet which drew 650 athletes.

Distance runner Patsy Sharples slashed the dome record for the women's 3,000-meter run, covering the distance in 9 minutes, 43.4 seconds. The previous mark of 10:10.6 was set last year by Montana State's Cindy Bradley.

Sharples, a freshman from South Africa, tied for outstanding female athlete of the meet with Oregon hurdler Lexie Miller.

U of I's Charlie Schmoeger set a record with his discus throw of 179-10, beating the old mark by more than nine feet. The throw also eclipsed Schmoeger's all-time best of 174-6. The old record of 170-8 was set in 1978.

Gary Gonser rounded out U of I's record-setting performance, establishing a record in the 3,000-meter steeplechase with a time of 9:06.3. The race, held in the dome for the first time, was run without a water jump.

Other Dome records were set in the men's 200-meter dash by Washington State's Georges Kablan in 21.2; and the women's 200 meters, set by WSU's Laura James in 24.9. Kablan was named outstanding male athlete of the meet. Oregon's Miller won the women's 55-meter high hurdles in 8.1 seconds and then claimed the women's 300-meter intermediate hurdles in a dome record time of 43.8. Idaho's Sandi Thomas placed third in the 55-meter hurdles in 8.4 seconds and took first in the long jump with a leap of 17-feet, 11½ inches.

Vandal Kim Ward took second in the long jump at 17-6 ¾. The U of I women's two-mile relay team won that event in 10:00.3.

Vandal men picking up firsts included Steve Saras, who threw the shot 54 feet, 9 ½ inches and Neil Crichlow, who recorded a triple jump of 50-6.

Mitch Crouser took second in the shot with a heave of 54-3; Chris Schrier was third in the steeplechase with a time of 9:54.6; and Dave Hardwood took third in the 55-meter dash in 6.3 and third in the 200-meter run in 21.6. The Vandal two-mile relay team took second in 7:32.6.

A highlight of the meet was the 600-yard run, won by WSU's Jeff Ramsey, which saw the entire field run times that qualified for the NCAA indoor meet in March.

GRADUATING ENGINEERS AND SCIENTISTS

Have you considered these factors in determining where you will work?

1. Will the job offer challenge and responsibility?
2. Will your future employer encourage job mobility?
3. Will your future employer encourage, support and reward continued professional education?
4. How much choice will you have in selecting your work assignment?
5. Big starting salaries are nice — but what is the salary growth and promotion potential in the job?
6. Can you afford the cost-of-living in the area?

At Naval Weapons Center we have given these things a lot of consideration and believe we have the answers for you.

Gymnasts fall to Boise State

Paced by Kelly Parker's performance, the Boise State Broncos gymnastics squad edged the Vandals 125.45-119.10 in the Vandals' last home meet Saturday.

Parker paced the eighth-ranked Region 9 Broncos in the NCWSA Division I and II by winning the all-around competition, uneven bars and vault.

Parker barely edged out Pam Gilmore for the all-around title as Gilmore paced the ninth-ranked Vandals by winning the balance beam and floor exercise.

Parker scored 31.30 points in the all-around competition to Gilmore's 31.20. Leanne Gibson finished fourth in the all-around by scoring 29.90 points for the Vandals.

Gibson finished fourth in the balance beam and fifth in the uneven bars.

Lisa Keithly also put on a good show for the Vandals by finishing fourth in the floor exercise and fifth in the balance beam.

The Vandals will take a week off as their next meet is against Eastern Washington, Montana and Seattle-Pacific in Cheney.

That meet is the last one of the year for the Vandals before they prepare for the NCWSA Regional Championships in Boise.

The NCWSA Regional Championships will include teams from Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho.

A Vandal gymnast gets ready for her dismount in the Vandals' last match against Boise State. The ninth ranked Vandals lost 125.45-119.0 to the eighth ranked Broncos.

Moscow celebrates Mardi Gras

Moscow is having its very own Mardi Gras celebration Saturday, Feb. 23 in David's Department Store on Main Street. The festivities will include a parade, theatre, music, dance, puppets, mimes and a few surprises. One of the purposes of the event is to bring together the various elements of the Moscow community.

The activities of the day will be climaxed by a Masquerade Ball at 8 p.m. Live music will be provided by the Snake River Six, Tick Fever, and another band, yet to be specified. Admission to the ball will be $2.50, with all proceeds going to the Moscow Community School.

Free entertainment, however, will be the order of the day. The parade will begin at 11 a.m. at Kenworthy Plaza and proceed to Friendship Square. At 2 p.m. the Idaho Public Theatre will present Beauty and the Beast, courtesy of the Idaho Public Library. As a prelude, the ninth grade Moscow Jr. High Drama class will perform Alice in Wonderland at 1 p.m. A dance presentation is also planned, as well as spontaneous entertainment from mimes, clowns and puppets.

Craft booths will be set up in David's from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. Various kinds of food will be available throughout the afternoon and evening. In conjunction with the celebration many downtown businesses will be featuring sales and specials.

In the afternoon KUOI-FM will provide Dixieland Jazz and other Mardi Gras music in a remote broadcast from David's. KUOI will broadcast the live music from the Masquerade Ball in the evening. Several downtown businesses will tune in to the Mardi Gras broadcast, contributing to the festive atmosphere of the day.

'Homegrown' productions created by KUID-TV

Sandpoint: Faces in the Shadow of Change, a new documentary filmed by KUID producer-cinematographer Arits Mebane, captures the essence of Sandpoint: its people, the old and new, and how they view their town. Faces will have its premiere showing on Channel 10, KUID-TV, tonight at 9.

With the new influx of people—wealthy retirees, transients, tourists and pioneers, the face of Sandpoint is slowly changing. What are the foreseeable problems... How much growth is too much... As the new decade begins, Faces presents a profile on Sandpoint's history, citizens, and its questionable future.

Ballet, Ho!, a new hour long documentary produced by Alan Bell and filmed by Bill McMillin, focuses on Moscow's Ballet Folk Company—quality ballet in rural America. The show, which will premiere Thursday, Feb. 21 at 8 p.m., reveals a professional ballet company that seems to be doing the impossible: surviving and even thriving among the wheat and lentil fields of North Idaho.

Ballet, Ho! not only records several performances, but explores the relationships of dancers to residents of remote farm towns, as well as the reaction of the townspeople to an art form seemingly far removed from their experiences and appreciation.
