Budgets

Legislature deemed generous in education appropriations

by Jim Wright

With little argument and unexpected generosity, the Idaho Legislature Budgeting Committee left almost intact the state appropriation for higher education.

The Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee voted 13-7 to give higher education a 10.5 percent increase in funding over last year.

The only cut made from the governor's recommendation was $500,000 earmarked for a Dental Plan for university employees.

The committee has uniformly made the same cut in all budgets.

Legislative observers were surprised at the committee's action. Last year the committee labored long into the night and tried thirteen different budgets before settling on a 2.5 percent increase for higher education.

The same amount of discussion, and substantial cuts were expected again this year as budget cutters had directed some six million dollars to be taken from the general fund and returned to local governments in a revenue-sharing plan.

The State Board of Education in their March meeting, had gone so far as to draw up contingency plans in expectation of large budget cuts. If the committee recommendation makes it through the full legislature, those plans will not be needed. The appropriation recommended by the JFAC should adequately maintain the colleges and universities of the state.

About the only argument during the committee session concerned a motion made by Sen. Dane Watkins, R-Idaho Falls, who wanted the committee to consider each institution's budget separately rather than giving the State Board of Education the money — some $65.8 million — in a lump sum as is usually done. "This motion is clearly out of bounds," Sen. C.E. "Chick" Bilyeu, D-Pocatello said. "We spend two or three days in hearings on this, but on the other end the State Board spends approximately one week every month managing the institutions."

"Some of us remember when these institutions were all in here competing, and I'll tell you, there could be blood on the floor," Sen. Dick Egbert, D-Tetonia, said. "It could go on and on in distributing these funds."

Sen. Dean Van Engelen, R-Burley, said the State Board would have the same pressures on it when it decides the funds as the legislature does. "I think we're being somewhat naive if we don't think politics enters into it on the State Board's part."

Van Engelen has in the past attempted to close Lewis-Clark state college, and Watkins told the Argonaut he wanted the committee to consider each institution separate with cutting LCSC as "one consideration."

Alums offered controversial cancer insurance

by Bill Will

A pamphlet distributed by the U of I Alumni Association aimed at selling a cancer benefit insurance plan to alumni association members quotes statistics compiled by the American Cancer Society, (ACS) despite ACS's criticism of cancer insurance.

A letter to association members, signed by Director of Alumni Relations Dick Johnston and enclosed with information about the plan states: "Why, may you wonder, do you need coverage specifically for cancer? Just why is this (plan) such a valuable benefit? According to the American Cancer Society, one person out of four will have cancer sometime in his lifetime. Furthermore, the American Cancer Society states cancer is the number two cause of all deaths in the United States.

For these reasons, we feel that the Cancer Benefit Plan is one of the most vital association benefits we would provide, and we urge you to take advantage of this valuable plan."

Other groups are not so enthusiastic about cancer insurance plans. Even though the American Cancer Society is quoted in the information pamphlet supplied by the Alumni Association, the ACS has taken an official policy of discouraging people from purchasing cancer insurance.

"We recommend that people have a good, comprehensive major medical insurance plan rather than buying cancer insurance," said Sylvia Wildman, program director of the Idaho Division, Inc. of the American Cancer Society. "A major medical plan will cover you for things besides cancer and the protection is just as good and often better than that offered by cancer plans," she said.

The State of Idaho has "no problems" with cancer insurance other than requiring that "limited coverage" or "limited policy" be printed in bold print across the cover of such a policy, according to Wayne Soward of the Idaho State Department of Insurance.

"One problem with these plans," according to Soward, "is that they do not cover diagnostic treatment. You could run up $500 worth of tests and if the doctor said 'sorry, no cancer' the cancer insurance wouldn't pay."

According to Don Sower, Executive Director of the Idaho Medical Association in Boise, his organization "does not have an official policy concerning cancer insurance."

"But," he said, "if someone inquires to us about a cancer insurance plan, we request that before they purchase anything they should ask themselves if they aren't already covered by an existing policy that they might have."

"Most catastrophic coverage (health insurance) policies will provide adequate coverage for the expenses of cancer treatment," he added.

Roger Hawkins, MD, of the Moscow Clinic, was also critical of cancer insurance when asked.

"I wouldn't buy it. I think it's a bad idea," he said. "The chance of someone under age 50 or 60 getting cancer is pretty slim. I would buy comprehensive medical insurance. It is going to cover cancer anyway."

The plan being offered by the Alumni Association limits coverage to people under age 60.

"However," the pamphlet reads, "during the charter application period (Alumni Association) members and their spouses age 60 through 69 will be issued coverage if they have not had cancer in the past 10 years and can meet additional health requirements."

The cost of the plan is $47 a year for Alumni Association members, $38 for a spouse and $6 to cover all children of a member.

Johnston said that he was aware of some reports that there were some "less than reputable" companies selling cancer insurance. He said that he asked the association's board of directors at a meeting last spring "to consider if cancer insurance has a negative connotation in the public's mind."

"We determined that we weren't dealing with that kind of company," Johnston said.

Johnston also said that the stand of the

Drugs

Drug violations may net abusers stiffer sentencing penalties

by Jim Wright

BOISE — Two legislative committees Wednesday approved four printing bills that will strengthen drug laws.

The first bill would establish mandatory minimum sentencing for people convicted of drug violations.

Under the bill, any person possessing an illegal narcotic such as heroin would face a minimum sentence of five years to a maximum of life imprisonment. The financial penalty would be raised to a $25,000 maximum.

Other controlled substances would net the abuser no less than three, and no more than five years in the state penitentiary.

Possession of more than three ounces of marijuana would mean a minimum of three years for the drug user.

The bill is being sponsored by Reps. Dan Emery,

R-Boise, who told the Argonaut his first drug-related idea was to propose a constitutional amendment refusing bail privileges to people arrested on drug charges.

"I don't want to play games with these people; they're killing our young," Emery said.

"There are people out there who have had three or four arrests and they are laughing at the law. They're buying their way out of the charge."

Emery said studies he read in Reader's Digest show marijuana is more harmful than earlier studies indicate so he included it with harsher penalties suggested by an attorney from the legislators' legal staff.

When asked about possible problems of making marijuana possession a minimum three-year sentence in light of decriminalization efforts in other states, Emery answered, "If they want to smoke, that stuff, then let them move to California or Oregon."

Emery said the bill is aimed at the pusher, not "the poor dumb kid that just bought some." He said the three-ounce marijuana figure was arrived at because "If they're just using it, they wouldn't have that much on them, but if they were pushing they would."

Emery had told the House, Judiciary and Rules committee state narcotics agents know of large "greenhouse" marijuana growing operations in many parts of the state but he would not specify where those greenhouses are, other than to say marijuana is being grown in cornfields and potato cellars.

The committee voted 2-7 to have the bill printed. Opponents of the bill agreed while something should be done about the use of drugs in Idaho, mandatory minimum sentence may not be the way to solve the problem.

The second drug-related bill would outlaw the manufacture, possession, and use of "drug paraphernalia." The bill was offered by Sen. Dane Watkins, R-Idaho Falls, and contains all the paraphernalia listed by the U.S. Justice Department as being used by the drug culture.

The list includes everything from waterpipes and exotic chemicals to balloons and regular spoons.

Under the bill some use and sale of paraphernalia would be felony offenses, while others would simply be misdemeanors. For example, selling a pipe to a minor would be a felony, while selling the same pipe to an adult would be a misdemeanor.

"This is aimed at every aspect of manufacture, sale and possession of these articles," Watkins said. "It would strike at the heart of an industry that makes more than $3 billion."

Watkins admitted the new law would be hard to enforce, since the person arrested on paraphernalia charges would have to be proven as intending to use the articles with illegal drugs.

"It was brought up in the (Senate Health Education and Welfare) committee this morning that we wouldn't go out and arrest people for buying baggies in super markets. There would have to be intent involved. A lot of that would be based on circumstantial evidence.

"It would at least be a moral concept for the state of Idaho," HEW Committee member Leon Swenson, R-Nampa said.

"Whether it's enforceable or not, it will let people know we don't condone that kind of thing here."

Gem and Photo departments may be eliminated

A proposal to abolish the Gem of the Mountains and eliminate the ASUI Photography Bureau was approved by the ASUI Communications Board Tuesday.

The elimination of the two departments was proposed by ASUI President Scott Fehrenbacher in an attempt to counter financial difficulties.

If the proposal is approved by the senate, the ASUI can save $15,000 annually and still provide the same basic services, Fehrenbacher said.

The Photo Bureau currently serves the Argonaut and the Gem. If the bureau is eliminated, the Argonaut will hire its own photographers and a private firm may be contracted to publish books similar to the yearbook, but at no cost to the ASUI.

Fehrenbacher said he does not want to eliminate the departments, but he would rather see the ASUI with 16 quality departments, than 18 mediocre departments.

If the proposal fails the senate, other ASUI departments will suffer because we will have to compromise on budgets, he said.

Inflation is the primary reason for the ASUI's financial problems, Fehrenbacher said. Expenditures have increased considerably over revenues, he said.

Problems with this year's Gem were not a major factor in Fehrenbacher's decision to seek its elimination but it did play a part, he said.

In a survey taken last week of 35 living group presidents, 93 percent said they believed sales of next year's Gem would decrease due to the Gem this year, he said. The loss in sales revenue would have to be replaced with a larger ASUI subsidy, and we don't have the money to do that, he added.

Although the Communications Board did not approve it, Fehrenbacher suggested an alternative to the traditional student yearbook.

Institutional Services, a California firm, could be contracted to provide a yearbook consisting of two small hard-bound sections. The first section would be of all incoming freshmen who would provide their own pictures. Institutional Services would do the layout of all photos. Twelve pages in the front of the book would be left open to any material of the ASUI's choice.

A second book would include the senior class in the same way as the freshman book. But it would have 32 pages left free for the ASUI to fill. Both books would be available to all students.

By using this method, the ASUI would save nearly $9,000 because students would buy the books for $7.50 each and the ASUI would not have to provide subsidy, Fehrenbacher explained.

Because the Photo Bureau would no longer work for the Gem the Argonaut would control photographers, eliminating duplication of administration costs, Fehrenbacher said. The Production Bureau would expand to incorporate the photography equipment and allow the Argonaut to use it, he added.

The system would save the ASUI about $6,000, Fehrenbacher estimated.

In other student government business this week, the senate Wednesday approved $400 in the rebudgeting of KUOI. KUOI requested more than $1,000 to pay overdue bills, but the U of I Budget Department would only allow $400 to be appropriated.

The overdue bills were incurred by KUOI because station manager Tom Neff was led to believe that the station had more money than it actually did.

He told the senate the $400 would do "little to no good." The senate said it would do what it could to come up with more money for KUOI.

The Production Bureau also received $2,700 for rebudgeting purposes.

The senate passed unanimously a resolution congratulating the men's basketball team for being the first U of I history to make it to the Big Sky Conference playoffs.

Staff committee won't adopt code of ethics

A request by the SUB Food Service director that the Staff Affairs committee adopt a code of ethics was rejected by the committee Wednesday.

Al Deskiewicz asked the committee to adopt a code of ethics to cover "future problems".

His request was in response to comments made two weeks ago by Lane Alexander, the committee's chairwoman. Alexander told Campus News she had received complaints from some former food service employees who said they had been treated unfairly while working for Deskiewicz.

None of the former employees have filed formal grievances.

Committee member Judy McGavin, administrative secretary in veterinary sciences, said she thought Deskiewicz's request for a code of ethics was in essence a complaint against Alexander for her comments to Campus News.

The committee indicated to Deskiewicz that it is covered by the code of ethics in the Faculty/Staff Handbook, and it did not need a policy of its own.

Deskiewicz said the present statutes are quite broad and there is nothing to prevent one staff committee from usurping the power of another.

But committee member Keith McIntyre, staff electrical engineer, told Deskiewicz he thought it would be more appropriate to deal with problems as they arise, since no such problems have surfaced in the past.

Call it spineless

It had to be done. Until now I have maintained a policy of leaving letters-to-the-editor completely unedited.

The decision to reserve the right to edit letters was reached this week after receiving several letters which were libelous in content. In most cases, the libelous remarks were not crucial to the opinion expressed by the author.

When a logical, intelligent opinion cannot be presented the easiest method of expressing oneself is to resort to tasteless name-calling trouble. Especially the Arg, and namely me.

Rather than risk a few grand ($) so one student can call another student names and accuse him (her) of performing various distasteful activities, I've decided to exercise minimal editorial discretion and save us all some time and money.

Granted, many people do not understand defamation and libel laws. Basically, anytime a person's character, reputation or career has been unjustly injured by something printed in a newspaper, a libel exists and that person can file suit against not only the person making the statement but the newspaper as well.

Another recurring problem involves people who write scathing letters and then either ask to have their names withheld or sign false names.

There are some cases where it may be necessary to have a name withheld to prevent someone from being fired from a job or physically molested, but most of those people who ask to have their names withheld simply lack the fortitude to "put their name where their mouth is." In nice terms, they are "spineless."

If you're planning to write a letter, try to use some discretion, sign your name, and PLEASE type it.

Believe it or not

A state legislator using Readers Digest as a reference source in proposing legislation? Sounds absurd. As early as junior high school most of us were sternly warned that Readers Digest was absolutely an unacceptable reference source in conducting research for a speech or paper.

Rep. Dan Emery, R-Boise, however, is apparently not that well informed. In proposing stiffer legislation for drug law violations, Emery cited studies he had read in Readers Digest.

Anyone with even minimal experience in research who was seeking information on the effects of marijuana would have looked through hundreds of sources without giving Readers Digest a glance. Emery probably subscribes to various other information packed publications such as National Enquirer.

It is reassuring to know our respected legislators, especially those ultra-conservative folks from southern Idaho, introduce legislative bills with such a solid information base to stand on. Who would dare argue with Readers' Digest?

bald is beautiful

jim wright

I started going bald shortly after I was born. At least that's what it seems now. In a few years I'll look like a walking billiard ball, but for now I'm just getting a little more forehead every year.

You'd think it would at least have the decency to turn gray before it falls out.

Every now and then (like every 15 minutes) I think back a few years when I had more hair than I knew what to do with. My parents didn't like it much, but there was a lot up there.

I was pretty sure of it, too. I'd always kid my father about his lack of hair. Now he kids me. I think they call it poetic justice.

At least until he was middle aged before it left town. I'm only 22.

Going bald is supposed to be exclusive of those guys who wear suits all the time and act like upstanding citizens of the community, not looney college students. It's supposed to fall out when you don't need it anymore, not when you're young and extremely handsome.

Everytime I look in the mirror, I ask myself, "how could something like this happen to a nice guy like me?"

It's hard to admit you're actually going to be bald. At first you deny it and pretend it's just a phase the top of your head is going through. You kid yourself it'll stop someday, and it'll all grow back.

"Hee, hee, had you fooled there, didn't I?" you hope to hear your hair snicker as it pokes back up through your scalp.

Then something happens that shocks you into admitting the truth.

You're lying there on the couch with your head romantically resting on the lap of a beautiful woman. She looks down at you and smiles as she runs her fingers through your hair. "You know, you're getting a little thin up front," she says, ruining your evening.

How could she ever understand what it's like to be going bald? How could any woman understand? The closest a woman can come to understanding is if she's flat chested. Even then it's not really the same. Having it and losing it is much more traumatic than never having had it.

After you accept it, you start rationalizing. You make lists of all the great leading men who've gone bald and still make it as sex symbols. Sean Connery is my favorite.

You start commenting about how great it is that your hair isn't hanging down in your eyes.

You start wearing hats wherever you go. (And you thought those guys were just being stylish in their cowboy hats, didn't you?).

You start checking out other balding men for how they fix their hair.

You start wearing your hair shorter. I know that sounds funny, to cut what you have left, but if it's short you don't have to cover as much ground with what you do have.

Combing your hair becomes a paramount task. If you're careful, and you have some background in engineering, you can cover those rapidly expanding patches of skin for a little while longer.

But after a while you just give in and accept it. You're bald.

But then again, aren't bald men supposed to be more virile? Seems like I just read something about that a few days ago. As a matter of fact, I just happen to have a couple of copies of the article here in my pocket. I've also got a few more back at my apartment. I'm mailing them out to my friends.

But they'd better watch themselves these days. The first one that calls me baldy gets beaten to death with my toupe.

Exception taken

Editor,

I would like to take exception to Jim Smith's letter of last Friday. He complained that various music students were being "forced" to perform "Christian" music in a CHURCH.

I think some of the facts should be noted:

1. This performance is to be given for the annual convention of the Idaho Music Educator's Association, not for a local prayer meeting.

2. Their performance is an official project of the School of Music at the U of I.

3. The music to be performed—Noyes Fludd by Benjamin Britten is one of the fine works of the 20th century, based on a tale which, from Smith's point of view, is bad merely because it came to the attention of Western Civilization via the Bible.

4. The School of Music is a professional school intending to train professional musicians. Would Smith, if he held such a position, resign from the New York Philharmonic if they scheduled the Mozart Requiem on the Bernstein Mass? I doubt it. Professional musicians play what they are engaged to play. They play it as well as they can, and they usually recognize the needs of their craft and as surpassing sectarian considerations.

Blindfolds and cigs

Editor,

Although I am strongly opinionated with regard to the draft issue, I have not been prompted to express my views until now. As I went to dinner at the Wallace Cafeteria last weekend, I passed a table manned by Students Against the Drafters. I found it very difficult to pass the table without making some cold, biting remark. Although I disagree entirely with the SAD organization, I respect the opinions of its members and their right to express them. However, rather than engaging in what would have been a futile argument, I felt that my viewpoint might be better served with a letter to the Argonaut.

The anti-draft protest march of Thursday served to emphasize to me that the privilege of living in the U.S. and calling oneself a citizen of it carries with it some responsibilities. Citizenship is a reciprocal agreement between each of us and our country—it is a give-and-take situation. Each of us should take what this country has to offer; freedom of the press, freedom of religion, freedom of speech, etc. These are not without their price, however. We are entitled to them only if we are willing to give for them. Give and take. We all take...what can we give in return?

Although the idea of being drafted is not appealing, this country would be foolish not to prepare for the possibility of a war and a draft. Registration is the first step in this preparation because we need to know the availability of our men and women. If Students Against the Draft is "successful" in preventing even registration, it's conceivable that they may have to supply us with blindfolds and last cigarettes, too.

One of the favorite themes of anti-drafters is that a government which institutes a draft infringes upon the freedom of its citizens. Where do you think freedom comes from, anyway? Whether we like to admit it or not, freedom is interpreted and instituted by governments. We as individuals view freedom as a right; as a nation, this country grants freedom as a privilege. The right to freedom may exist everywhere, but the privilege of freedom doesn't. It is something to be cherished and protected. To be asked to serve the United States isn't an infringement upon our freedom of choice.

The choice of serving or not serving must still be made. The underlying choice, which answers the question of whether or not to serve, is: "Do I, or do I not, feel this country offers me enough to be willing to serve her?"

As always when the word "draft" is whispered, there is talk of "going to Canada." Personally, I can't justify such an action, but it is a personal decision. For those who are considering it, consider this: If you go, you are forsaking this country. Apparently, the United States of America doesn't offer you anything for which you are willing to make a sacrifice. Go ahead and go...but don't ever come back.

Scott Bell

P.S. Webster defines "forsake" this way: "to renounce (as something once cherished) without intent to recover or resume;" also, "to quit or leave entirely."

Take five

Editor,

Last week a sub-committee of the House Appropriations Committee voted against President Carter's draft registration plan. The sub-committee called registration unnecessary as reason for the negative vote. This does not kill the proposal, though; the full committee will soon be voting on it. Now is the time to take five minutes and a postcard and write to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to state your opposition to resumption of draft registration. The address is:

Chairman Jamie L. Whitten
House Appropriations Committee
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Postcards are available at the Campus Christian Center, so there is no excuse not to write today.

Speak up and out

Editor,

I would like to publicly urge any food service workers at the SUB who have been subject to harassment or intimidation during the course of their employment there, and feel that they would have continued to work there if not for that reason, to speak up and let it be known. No one can do anything about it, if you don't let it be known that it happened. No one can do it for you, nor should they have to. You wouldn't want this to happen to some one else, and by saying nothing you open the door to exactly that.

Food service workers work because they need money. They depend on the hours, also the wages promised, and also the tips. If you were promised one thing, and given another, let it be known. You are not alone. Nothing can be done until you speak up. If you don't know how to, write a letter to the editor. He can tell you what to do, or at least publish your letter, and then a whole lot can be done. But it has to start with you, because it happened to you. And you are just as important as anyone else. Especially Mr. D.

Sincerely,
Sally Smith

Olympic boycott wrong

Editor,

In response to Kriston Burrough's support of an Olympic boycott I submit this response.

I personally reject President Carter's initiation of such an action. It is an ill-conceived decree and an ineffective answer to Soviet aggression in Afghanistan. I also condemn the methods used to advance this "patriotic" cause.

We've been told to "show our disgust world-wide for the Soviet Union" because "we can't let them do this and expect to do business as usual."

It is ironic to note that business is as usual.

The President ordered a grain embargo recently. It turns out that this applies only to this year's extra tonnage. Usual yearly shipments are not affected. Even the sale of some high technology items continue. In short, our trading with the Soviets goes on as usual.

How could a boycott hurt the Soviets? They have NBC's money and deposits from American (and other boycotting nations) Olympic visitors. Their Olympic facility will more than pay for itself in propaganda value alone, with or without athletes.

Carter has said, "If the Olympics are not held in Moscow because of Soviet military aggression in Afghanistan, this powerful signal cannot be hidden from the Soviet people." I find this unbelievable, considering the fact that all the Russians have been told that they had to enter Afghanistan to counter American aggression. Soviet athletes at the winter games hadn't even heard about the boycott. When the writer spoke with Jacek Wezola (Olympic high jump record holder at 7-4) at a recent international track meet, he termed the situation as a misunderstanding. When it comes time for the Olympics, the Russians will undoubtedly accommodate our hand-slapping boycott with an appropriate excuse.

Aside from this, I'm vigorously opposed to anybody's thoughts that my views are unpatriotic. I would like nothing better than to see the American team in Moscow, showing the world what we can do with our system. It would be a creative and equally effective response to a hostile predicament.

Bob Peterson
Olympic hopeful

Depressors of agitation

Editor,

The belief of the anti-draft sentiment on this campus appears to be that registration of the draft will perpetrate war. I would like to contradict that belief. Preparation, strength, and strong attitudes to preserve world peace are the most effective depressors of aggression and world conflict. A lackadaisical stand on national defense and a weak foreign policy invites conflict. We have a history of this in the Iran Crisis. I am confident the anti-draft groups and I seek the same outcome — to prevent war in the future. But, without an attitude of readiness and concern for world problems we only invite conflict.

Basketball champions — Congratulations to TMA 56 and Off Campus 19 for winning the campus basketball championships Tuesday night in the Kibbie Dome. TMA 56 beat Alpha Tau Omega 37-33 to win the men's title. Off Campus 19 beat Kappa Alpha Theta 28-14 to take the women's crown. Borah Hall won the B league championship by right of its 7-0 record.

Sunshine Saturday Morning — begins at noon in the U of I Swim Center and lasts until 2 p.m. It will be centered around new games which can be played in the pool, such as josting, platform tug of war, earth ball volleyball, earth push, plus a crazy style of water polo.

Managers — There will be an important meeting Tuesday to choose softball teams and discuss further business.

Vandals stop W. Montana

by Bernie Wilson

A lack of concentration settled over the Vandal women's basketball team Thursday night, but not until it built up enough of a lead to claim a 60-50 win over Western Montana College in the first game of the Northwest Women's College Sports Association Division II regional championships in the Kibbie Dome.

Idaho, host team in the tournament, will move on to play Carroll College of Montana's Frontier League today at 6 p.m. Carroll is 9-4 and is the No. 1 seeded team from its conference in the six-team regional tourney. Idaho, now 23-5 overall, is the No. 2 seed from the Northwest Empire League.

Western Montana slips into the losers' bracket, where it'll meet the loser of Thursday's University of Alaska-Fairbanks-Rocky Mountain College game at 4 p.m. today. The winner of that game, which was still going on at presstime, plays Western Washington, the No. 1 NEL seed, at 8 tonight. Carroll and Western Washington drew first-round byes, by right of their league championships.

The winner of the tourney will advance to the AIAW Division II nationals. Several at-large berths are up for grabs, and the tourney's runnerup faces a good chance of receiving one.

Newman All Big Sky

U of I's senior guard Don Newman has one of two unanimous choices to the all Big Sky Conference basketball team selected by the league's coaches.

Idaho failed to place any other players off its 17-10 team on either the first or second team, but junior center Jeff Brudie and freshman guard Brian Kellerman were honorable mention picks.

Newman, a 6-foot-4 native of New Orleans, helped the Vandals to their best record since the 1962 season, when coach Joe Cipriano's team went 20-6.

Newman's place on the first team was well deserved, as he ended the season as the conference's individual scoring leader with an 18.3 points-per-game average. He was the leader in the category much of the season.

The other unanimous pick was Bruce Collins, Weber State's 6-5 senior guard. A unanimous selection for the second straight season, Collins is only the seventh player in the history of the league to be named to the all-conference team three times. He also became the conference's leading all-time scorer in the season that saw Weber State win the conference title while amassing a 13-1 league and 26-2 overall record.

In addition to those achievements, Collins was named most valuable player of the Big Sky tournament for the third time. The Wildcats won the tourney by beating the U of I and Montana.

The rest of the first team includes Nevada-Reno's Gene Ransom, Northern Arizona's Mark Stevens and Weber's David Johnson, a first-team pick last year.

Net team heads south

"California or Bust" may be written on the luggage of the U of I women's tennis team as it heads for the Sacramento State Invitational at Sacramento. The Vandals compete today and Saturday in the preliminary rounds with the finals set for Sunday.

The tournament will feature 18 teams from throughout the west, including four teams from the NCWSA (Northwest College Women's Sports Association). They are Southern Oregon State College, University of Oregon, Washington State and Idaho.

From Nevada, the University of Nevada-Reno; and from California, University of the Pacific, Stanislaus, Fresno State, UC Davis, UCFullerton, Chico State, Fresno State, UCHayward, Westmont, University of Santa Clara, Humboldt State, Sonoma State, Viola and the University of San Francisco will compete.

"This will be a good tournament for us," said U of I coach Amanda Burk. "We have played several of the teams and beat them in dual matches last year. We are a much stronger team this year so it will be interesting to see how we do against those we feel will be in AIAW National competition this year."

The invitational is a flight tournament with a draw into the elimination tourney. At this time Burk was not sure if it would be a single, double or a single with consolation round tournament.

Baseball game rescheduled

Although it's in the middle of the Banana Belt, Lewiston took on the same wintry appearance as the Palouse Wednesday, forcing the cancellation of the U of I-Lewis-Clark State College baseball game.

The game has been rescheduled for 3 p.m. today at LCSC's Harris Field.

The Vandals return to Lewiston Sunday to play Washington State University.

Vandals

took a slow start, but six minutes into the first half Idaho exploded for 16 unanswered points to take a 20-7 lead. By halftime the Vandals had built up a 38-19 cushion.

Western, the No. 3 seed from the FL, outscored the Vandals 31-22 in the second half, but it didn't come within 12 points until five minutes left. Debi Strickland hit three quick buckets from the right side with two minutes remaining to pull within 10, 58-48.

"It was a sloppy game, not an intense game," Vandal coach Tara VanDerveer said afterward. "We look to execute things better Friday. Tomorrow's game will be a lot tougher."

"This is the first regional for most of the kids, and there's a little more pressure. Tonight it was hard to concentrate with a 19-point lead. Things didn't seem to go right."

Strickland was the leading scorer in the first meeting between the two clubs, hitting for 13 points. Vandal guard Karin Sobotta was Idaho's only player breaking double figures, picking up 10 points. Donna Regan added nine, Willette White eight and Patty O'Connor seven.

Veteran jazzman Dave Brubeck and backup group have vintage year

by Linda Weiford

Unless you've been an avid follower of Dave Brubeck, or were fortunate enough to have been exposed to the "less than abundant" publicity, you probably missed Monday night's concert in the Washington State University Performing Arts Coliseum.

Seven years ago, I first heard Dave Brubeck, his two sons, and two other musicians play on a hot summer night at Ravinia Park in Chicago.

Since his arrival on the jazz scene in the early 60's, Brubeck had changed his distinctive style to accommodate his two sons. In doing so, he had lost the support of many of his followers, because of the inclusion of electric instruments.

The original quartet Brubeck recorded with consisted of Paul Desmond on saxophone (now deceased), Gene Wright on acoustic bass, and the famed Joe Morello on drums. One of the reasons they gained fame was because many of Brubeck's compositions were based on classical or folk themes within a complex rhythmic framework. Brubeck and his quartet experimented with compound meters such as 5/4, 9/8, and 7/4 in many of these compositions. The most famous example of this is the familiar jazz classic, Take Five.

In the early 70's, Brubeck separated from the original quartet and reorganized to include his two sons. Although Brubeck continued to play acoustic piano, the electric bass and keyboard considerably changed the continuity of the music. Many jazz purists lost contact with Brubeck's development.

In recent years, Brubeck has returned to the original quartet format. His son, Chris, still plays electric bass. Jerry Bergonzi has taken Paul Desmond's place, and Randy Jones has replaced Joe Morello on drums.

In opinion, this aggregation surpasses the original quartet for one main reason: versatility. Ordinarily, jazz quartets adhere to a strict format; Monday night's performance was a definite exception to this.

Chris Brubeck played the string bass and trombone with amazing adaptability. Both instruments were played with utmost expertise and skill.

Tenor saxophonist Bergonzi and drummer Randy Jones also gave convincing performances as outstanding jazz musicians. Both appeared to be in their late twenties — their ages not indicative of amateur quality. There's no doubt these two men have practiced countless long and hard hours. This was especially evident as they performed instrumental solos; their ostensible talent couldn't be denied.

Dave Brubeck was seated at a large and seemingly old black piano. A distinguished man of noble stature, his eyes continuously expressed his pride and enthusiasm — with good reason. This original and outstanding jazz composer played with a stronger style and drive than when I'd first seen him seven years before. His hands glided over the piano keys with fluid ease and grace, producing a superb assortment of lyrical and tranquil compositions.

Together, the music of these four musicians was refined, fresh, and remarkably well synchronized. An inspired audience demanded more after the third encore. Seven years or fifteen, Brubeck and his quartet have experienced change, and 1980 finds them better than ever.

Faculty Council adopts academic priorities

By Debbie Brisbois

After three weeks of discussion, the Faculty Council voted Tuesday to accept a statement on academic priorities to be included in the faculty/staff handbook.

However, the Council did not accept the report on academic priorities prepared by the ad hoc committee on that subject, but rather a statement on the subject prepared by mechanical engineering instructor Richard Jacobsen.

After moving into committee of the whole to discuss the matter informally, Jacobsen said his report, which is a shorter version of the original statement, was an attempt to answer some question and take into account some things that should be incorporated.

The adopted statement listed only three academic priorities, whereas the original statement had listed five, leading to early objections.

The statement lists undergraduate education, upper division; graduate programs and associated research; and research activities not involving graduate programs as the university's priorities.

The Council amended the statement to stress that these priorities were established as such beyond the continuation of all undergraduate education.

Agriculture instructor and member of the ad hoc committee on academic priorities, Dale Everson, said the statement was a much shorter version of the original and had a much more positive outlook than the original.

John Dickinson, professor of electrical engineering and another member of the ad hoc committee, said it would be a better size for the handbook, but added it stated things without offending anyone, and it had become an "inoffensive nebulous blob."

Another point of discussion was again the listing of the priorities. Some members questioned the listing of undergraduate education, upper division first.

Jacobsen said listing upper division at the top would improve the ones below it.

Hal Godwin, assistant professor of guidance and counseling and of psychology said he didn't think the general public would understand the faculty feels undergraduate lower division is just as good and is understood as such.

The approved statement was then given to Bruce Bray, Faculty Council secretary, to adopt into faculty handbook wording. The statement will be presented at next week's meeting for final approval.

Insurance

American Cancer Society is probably the result of the actions of disreputable companies.

Johnston defended the sales campaign by saying, "It is all direct mail. People are not being contacted by salesmen. If they don't want or need this plan, they can throw the mailing away."

Johnston said that the Association will not take in a significant amount of money from the cancer insurance program.

"There will be a small administrative fee that we will get. We receive about $2500 a year from fees from our life insurance program. The money from this program will probably be somewhat lower, because I am not expecting the same volume (of participation) as with the life insurance."

Johnston said that response to the first mailing "was rather light," according to the sales representative. He said that there have been problems concerning the mailing. The notices were sent third class and there may have been wide gaps in the times that alumni around the country have received the mailing.

"People often automatically roundfile the first mailing, Johnston said. We've found with our fund-raising campaigns that second or third mailings are as, or more, productive as the first."

Tired of the same stuff? Try New Wave Camping

by Freida A. Chance and Fritz O'Lay

If you're tired of spending your weekends stranded in Moscow then try spending them stranded elsewhere.

Try getting into a new space...try new wave camping.

It began like this: Every four years it happens. That culmination of leap year and enticing weather, which results, of course, in the new wave camping experience.

Wine. Cheese. Beer. And old men with Geiger Counters that go, beep...beep...beep all assets (yes assets) of new wave camping.

And for intellectual readers dying to discern the origin of the word damn, new wave camping can provide insights. Ever try getting out of a locked Lower Granite....Dam? Lower Granite is infamous for perpetuating the new wave camping experience by making hostages of the entrants who can't read.

And for the more Republican sportsmen, don't read further.

And for the more Republican sportswomen, why go to the health spa? You too can lose pounds through the new wave camping experience.

And remember, new wave camping can occur anywhere. But it's best to have a guide. One who's been there and back; with a compass showing two norths.

New wave camping in the northwest can be treacherous though. There are things out there, unforeseen things. New wave campers must be aware of these unforeseen things.

The moon for instance, in a Merlin like manner, could cool down the escarpments of the arid Snaker River hills.

And what then of the Washington State University rowing team? And the music of their megaphones?

Or for example, there's the wind. One must watch the wind during the new wave camping experience.

But, keeping these things in context, (the new wave camping context that is), the bold new wave camper should fare well on his or her adventure.

Assuming you're adequately equipped for your new wave adventure, you are ready for the next step. You'll need to develop a stiff upper lip. And depending on whether you remembered your Bonne Bell, you may develop a sandy complexion from one of the dunes at

Camping

Lower Granite.

(Or a sandy appetite, depending on your grapes.)

All of these are different waves to enjoy during your new wave camping experience. There's a myriad of waves to enjoy!

We chose the flying tent wave!

During gale velocity winds we hoisted sails on our tent and braved a journey across the dunes in search of a more acceptable wave.

All part of the new wave camping experience, of course.

And don't forget the talking ducks admiring our sailing tent, as of yet, unfamiliar with new wave camping.

And if you're lucky during your new wave camping experience you'll receive an encore from the beastial varmint. They show their cultural sophistication as well as their adaptation to new wave camping, by drinking your rose between the hours of midnight and.....new wave.

The journey back to Moscow after our new wave camping experience left us with whiplash of the tent and a residue of long range new wave benefits.

Among these benefits:

- A peaceful return home to watch our truck roll backwards, narrowly escaping disaster with an oncoming car, and culminating in a harrowing experience with the mailbox and a hysterical date.

- You may miss classes on Monday.

- You may be evicted on Tuesday.

- You may write an article
