Bike path approved; beer licenses granted

by Bill Will

The Moscow City Council voted to establish a new bicycle route through the city during its regular meeting Monday night.

The new route will run along Jefferson Street between 1st and 6th Streets.

According to Moscow City Councilman Roy Krauss, the city currently has enough signs to mark that portion of a north-south route through the city. The route will be extended at some future date.

The new bicycle route will complement an east-west bike path that already exists.

The Council also voted to move ahead with plans to turn Moscow's abandoned Old Post Office building into a community center. The body established an account to receive donations and grants to go toward the establishment of a community center. A volunteer committee to solicit contributions for the center was also formed.

The committee, coordinated by Mayor Don Mackin, will use City Council members to guide and assist citizen volunteers in fund raising efforts.

Monies collected will hopefully make the community center project eligible for federal matching funds. The goal of the fund drive is the collection of $100,000 by this summer.

The Council also drafted a letter to Friendly Neighbors Senior Citizens, Inc. of Moscow granting the organization use of the completed community center facility for ten years.

Current plans for the center call for kitchen facilities, office space, a reception area, and restroom facilities to occupy the first floor of the Old Post Office.

In other business, the Council approved beer and wine licenses for the Pizza Haven restaurant, 2124 West Pullman Road, and for Little Big Men Pizza, 1222 Pullman Road.

Student possibly exposed to radiation at Mines College

A U of I student may have received radiation exposure when he stuck his hand in an X-ray diffraction unit at the College of Mines last week, said Chris Smith, U of I radiation officer.

But because there were no visible signs, such as burned skin, Smith said it is impossible to determine how much, if any, exposure the student received.

Smith said state Radiation Control officials investigated the incident, but also were unable to detect the amount of radiation exposure received.

The student, whom Smith would not identify, will be watched closely over the next several months to see if any signs of radiation occur, Smith said.

It was the first such incident in the state, he added.

SUB custodian celebrates 65th birthday today

by Dick Loughney

Today is his 65th birthday. He works at the SUB. He cares for the plants. He "keeps the place in good shape during the day." He's the general repair man. He is Howard Schoepflin.

Schoepflin came to the U of I 10 years ago. His last day is June 15.

Even though he is not required to retire, Schoepflin figures he may as well take advantage of the fact that he has his health and should enjoy not being regulated by work for a while. "I like to kid Dean (Dean Vettrus, SUB Manager), if he can't get along without me, I'd consider coming back," Schoepflin said.

He married in 1939 and bought 20 acres north of Moscow which he built into a 400-acre dairy farm. In 1960, his wife became ill. He sold the farm and nursed her until she died in 1968. Because of that nursing experience he worked seven months as an orderly in a Moscow retirement home in 1968.

Schoepflin remarried in 1969. He applied to the university in early 1970 and has been here since. "I grew up in the country, I was kind of a bashful kid. I never really had the chance to work around people, being on a farm. It has been a good experience for me," he said.

At first the job was more a custodial position, but now it is anything but. "If a vacuum cleaner needs fixing, or someone sticks a knife down a garbage disposal, they call on him, I guess his position has changed to general maintenance," Schoepflin's wife Sylvia said. Mrs. Schoepflin is also employed by the university.

"It isn't like I'll quit working; I'll find plenty to keep me busy," Schoepflin said. He owns a 160-acre patch of timber near Viola, which he plans to thin out to make it look like "a little park," he said.

Schoepflin has a good start on that little park. He has built a small log hut, rock retaining walls, some picnic tables and two sizable ponds, which house wild ducks at different times of the year.

Also, the Schoepflins are considering a trip to Denmark to visit relatives.

After seeing the handiwork at Schoepflin's place and having been subject to his congenial, enthusiastic ways, I can understand why Vettrus may want to ask him back next fall.

City ordinance enforced on campus

Dog owners subject to fines

With the onset of spring more and more dogs are being left unattended on the U of I campus. What some of the owners fail to realize is that leaving dogs tethered outside public property is illegal in Moscow.

According to an ordinance passed last fall by the city of Moscow, no dog owner may allow his dog to run at large in the city or leave his dog tethered on public property.

Dogs who are found on public property unattended are impounded at the Latah County Animal Shelter.

Owners may pick up the dogs at the shelter at a cost of $5 plus $1 a day on the first offense, $10 plus $1 a day for the second offense and $20 plus $1 a day for the third offense.

Dogs on campus are picked up for other reasons too. Any dog without a license can be impounded as well as dogs who aren't on a leash.

According to Clark Hudson, Moscow police chief, the problem isn't "huge," and the city has things under control.

"The university is only part of the reason the ordinance was started. There was also a problem within the city," said Hudson.

"It's something the students should be aware of," said Alan Fulton of the Physical Plant.

"It breaks my heart to see the police load up dogs in the back of one of those vans," he continued.

Craig says no to abortion, ERA

by Jim Wright

"I see nothing wrong with students working their way through school," U.S. congressional candidate Larry Craig said Thursday. "If there's a sound economy, then there will be plenty of jobs available for them to do it."

Craig, a Republican state senator from Midvale, said part of his campaign—a promise to cut federal spending as a means of controlling inflation—would probably include axing some educational grants in aid programs.

"The idea of doling out money to people just to get them into college is very negative to me," Craig said. "If people want to go, they can always find a way to do it. The reason we have (these programs) now is that inflation is so high the students can't make it on just summer or part-time wages."

Craig was in Moscow Thursday as part of a Northern-Idaho campaign swing.

In both an Argo interview and a KUID-TV program taped for airing in May, he had these comments on his attempt to replace conservative Republican Steve Symms as Idaho's first district congressman.

"If you examine my voting record, you'll find we (he and Symms) have similar stands on key issues," Craig said. The style of Larry Craig is different than that of Steve Symms, but if you were to examine my voting record after two years (in Congress) I think you'd find them parallel, if not the same as Symm's would be."

Craig said criticism that he has eschewed the earlier, more moderate philosophy he has been known for in favor of picking up conservative Symms supporters is "on the whole unjust" in light of his state-level voting record.

Craig said he would take a similar tact to Symm's congressional style if elected and concentrate on "standing up and speaking out my views and those of the first congressional district."

"It becomes difficult to complete (conservative Republican) aims against a majority, when they can have a committee meeting with just Democrats and not even need to have the Republicans there to conduct business," Craig said.

As a congressman, Craig said he would oppose both the Equal Rights Amendment (in 1978 he voted for rescision of Idaho's ratification of the amendment in the Senate) and abortion on demand in cases where incest, rape or endangerment of the life of the mother is not involved.

"Equal rights already exist," Craig said. "They're guaranteed by the 14th amendment, and it's clearly a matter of enforcing it. The civil rights laws of the 60's didn't end discrimination overnight, and you can't legislate bias out of existence."

Craig said as more women enter the job market, there will be less of a perceived need for the ERA, since women won't feel the amendment necessary to get good jobs.

Craig also supported in the Senate a call for a constitutional convention to outlaw abortion, which he said could be limited to just that one issue.

The Sagebrush Rebellion gets Craig's total support, as long as there is a state constitutional amendment to keep federal lands the state would gain in the public domain.

Craig said since state land-use policies return $1 for every $3 spent; the state would have plenty of money to administer the lands and would not be forced to sell the land to private citizens as critics of the rebellion have claimed.

In situations such as Iranian hostage crisis, Craig said the United States should "act decisively" with military intervention in the form of ground troops and support weaponry. Craig said the national defense posture should be kept high, and based on conventional weapons, rather than on nuclear weaponry, which he said should not be used in military interventions.

Olympics: Give and go

A group of American Olympic athletes has formulated a plan concerning the United States' participation in the Summer Olympic games that makes a lot of sense.

Instead of total abstinence, U.S. participation should be allowed, with certain qualifications.

Under the proposal, Olympic athletes would take part in all of their prospective events, but would not take part in the opening and closing ceremonies and would not participate in award ceremonies.

This kind of logic offers amenities to the United States with regard to their stance on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. American athletes would get to perform in the events they have trained for during the last four years, placating world interest in the spirit of competition.

By not taking part in the opening and closing ceremonies, the United States would be advocating its position on the Soviet invasion; making its point without making the athletes suffer.

The third point adds a powerful dimension to the plan. American athletes will undoubtedly win a good number of medals, whether they be gold, silver or bronze. Everytime an awards ceremony is staged, the American medal winner will be absent from the awards platform, serving as a constant reminder to a watchful world that the United States condemns Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The fact that the Olympics are being held in Russia makes the effects even more poignant.

The United States can save face and silently voice their opposition to Soviet expansionism more effectively than playing the role of a prima donna.

There exists, perhaps, a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity this summer. Tens of thousands of American citizens will be migrating to Russian soil. Ideas will be exchanged. There is no way the Russian political machinery can prevent a one-to-one communication between Russian and American individuals, not to mention exposure to misconceptions, truths and individual thoughts of spectators and athletes from around the world.

Under the worst of circumstances, the lines of communication between two opposing ideologies should be kept open. The United States, Russia and the world have everything to lose and nothing to gain if we fail to send our Olympic athletes to Moscow this summer.

Violence is no game

Monday afternoon a very irate local resident stomped into my office to inform me that he and other people in the community were fed up with college students vandalizing and terrorizing Moscow.

The names he called football players and coaches in particular were not fit to print but his message was clear: "They're (almost literally) getting away with murder and I want to put a stop to it."

He assured me many other people in and around Moscow are becoming increasingly bitter toward the university mainly due to the antics of certain athletes. He said he resented supporting an educational system which in a sense condoned athletic violence.

He was obviously under the impression that most fights in town are started by football players. That is probably not true, but when members of the community are of the opinion football players participate in more than their share of fights, there must be some basis in fact.

It is somewhat comforting to know that some people support the Argonaut in its staunch stand against certain U of I athletes who in their spare time make the entire university look bad. But it is quite disturbing when people feel they must accept that type of violence because it is "part of the game," or because they are downright scared to do anything about it.

No matter what the coach and athletic director say, they are indeed responsible for football players. They recruit players, they award scholarships to players, and they are responsible for the overall image of the team which reflects on the university.

President Gibb has said a winning football team would be a tremendous public relations tool for the university. Even with a losing record, the football team would be much more effective in the area of public relations if the entire community did not have to fear team members.

new adventures of

scoop mcclain

It was a rainy Tuesday in Heartbreak City; I was sitting at the desk of my very old, very dead friend Montana O'Smith cleaning my .357 magnum, wondering what muck I could rake for the next edition of the Argonaut.

Some might be embarrassed to work for a yellow sheet like the Arg.

Some might complain about the low pay.

Some might complain about the luscious advertising department women who prance around the office, but never come over to the news department.

But I don't let those things bother me. I'm Scoop McClain, Argonaut Columnist. Muck raking is my business. Telling people off is my avocation. Making people hate me my hobby.

As I stretched my feet onto the top of O'Smith's old typewriter, the leggy little Argonaut Secretary, Katie Makintheurf ran into the Newsroom to warn me of visitors.

"McClain, you've done it this time. The football team, all the campus Greeks, and even the Eagle Forum are outside....and they want to talk to you," she gasped.

I slid six dum dum slugs into my magnum and tucked it into my shoulder holster. I got up from behind the desk and swaggered over to her and pulled her close to me.

"Stall them until I can duck out the back," I whined.

I grabbed my trenchcoat from its hook behind my desk (the one with its back to the wall) and managed to clear the back door just ahead of about a thousand screaming, irate Argonaut readers.

As I ran up the stairs and out of the SUB into the cool chill of late spring, I wondered where I would go, what I would say if they caught me, and what I'd said about the Eagle Forum lately.

Behind me I could hear the screams of hatred...

"You scum, you called my coach Jerry....Kill him, he said we shouldn't be allowed to urinate where we want....and "You said nasty things about Wendy Ungricht and those other good Mormon wives and mothers, you want to subvert the American family and way of life, young man, so we'll just have to maim you....!!!!"

I was definitely in trouble, and things were beginning to get worse.

Ahead of me, two men, both bald, both dressed in leather and Jack Boots, one huge and peering myopically through his glasses — Dick and Gort — were blocking my way.

I dropped to a crouch and whipped out my magnum (except for a poison pen, that gun is the best friend of an Arg columnist) and shot out their knee caps.

Leaping over their painfully contorted forms, I threw off my trenchcoat and swam across Paradise Creek to safety, leaving the maddened crowd behind me on the creek bank howling for my blood.

The sun was beginning to dry the sewage effluent and nitrates on my clothes as I neared the Wallace Complex. I had a friend there who would loan me some clothes and let me use her shower. I was looking forward to getting some of the muck raked off me.

Suddenly a net and some garbage came sailing out a window high up in the south face of the tower. I was tangled up in the snarled hemp lines and sickened beyond resistance by the stench of the garbage.

As I stopped struggling, I looked up into a bloodshot set of shifty eyes as Ron Balls pushed aside a large snarling rat and snarled at me himself.

"Now we're going to see about doors that lock and dormitory violence," he smirked.

Greeks and athletes

Editor,

This is in response to recent articles and editorials regarding Greeks and athletes stimulated by an incident at a local drinking establishment.

I would like to make several points in an attempt to prevent misconceptions that one might develop from reading the Argonaut.

1. Neither our coaches nor myself condone acts of vandalism or violence by student-athletes, or anyone else, and make a strong effort to convey this to members of our teams.
2. The notion that we are responsible for acts committed by student-athletes on campus or in the community simply isn't realistic. These individuals are responsible for their own behavior. Other administrators are not considered to be responsible for actions by students in their programs nor are they expected to levy penalties on students for acts committed when outside of their direct control.
3. I neither want nor expect student-athletes to receive preferential treatment on campus or in the community. If an athlete commits an act for which he/she may be charged under civil or criminal law, I would hope they would be so charged—just as any other student. In conjunction with the recent incident, I personally urged the tavern manager to press charges, but he declined. He was quick to point out that athletes were a small part of the group causing problems that evening.

4. There are two ways by which we can levy a penalty on a student-athlete: suspension from the team and gradation of athletically related financial aid. We are very cautious in imposing penalties in that higher standards of conduct should not be required of student-athletes than other students. Gradation of financial aid during the period of award requires action through the university award system. My general position is that civil matters should be handled by civil authorities and athletic matters through the Athletic Department.

5. The notion that a marauding band of football players is terrorizing the campus and community is sheer nonsense. A very small percentage of student-athletes have been involved in any acts of vandalism or violence, and we would frankly like to be rid of them. The real shame is that a much larger group has been unfairly labeled as "animals," "dumb jocks," etc. This is grossly unfair and has been encouraged by Argonaut editorials.

6. Student-athletes, like other students, come in a variety of sizes, shapes, colors and aptitudes. There are student-athletes enrolled in every college on this campus, and I doubt that there are more than 15 percent in any single academic discipline. The concept of dumb jock athletes who are P.E. majors laying around the gym all day is grossly unfair to all concerned. The academic discipline of Physical Education has progressed to the scientific study of human movement in all of its aspects and is, unfortunately, still widely misunderstood. We have perhaps ten football players who are P.E. majors, and they take a degree of pride in their chosen field. For the most part, they aspire to teach and coach young people in our public schools.

7. Many of our student-athletes are also Greeks. We encourage student-athletes to become involved in the Greek system but recognize that this is not appropriate for everyone. There is a tendency on every campus for athletes to become a subgroup largely isolated from the student body. I abhor this tendency and certainly hope it doesn't occur at Idaho. Ideally we would have student-athletes in every living group on campus. I can't imagine a better college experience than to attend the University of Idaho, participate in intercollegiate athletics and be involved in the Greek system.

8. If there are currently tensions between certain athletes and members of the Greek community, I would hope that cooler heads prevail. For my part I'm extremely appreciative of the support given to the athletic program by the Greeks and urge closer involvement by the two groups.

Thank you for the opportunity to air some of my views. Sincerely,

Bill Belknap
Director of Athletics

Vandals finally catch Pilots

It took some doing, but the Vandal baseball team finally got back at the University of Portland.

The Pilots, in town for four weekend Nor-Pac Conference games, walked away with the first three only to have the Vandals run away with an 11-5 win on Sunday at Guy Wicks Field in a makeup game that had been rained out Saturday.

The Vandals took a 1-0 beating on Friday (the 13th time this season the Vandals lost a game by one run) and dropped the other half of the doubleheader 10-1. Saturday's rain shortened the meeting between the two clubs, but only after the Pilots amassed an 8-1 lead after five innings, making it a regulation game.

The first league encounter of the season puts the Vandals at 1-3 and Portland at 3-1. Overall, the Vandals are now 6-17 and play Boise State twice on the road Wednesday. Portland is now 13-6 overall.

Vandal Scott Ramsey went the distance for the win Sunday and evened his record at 2-2, the best Vandal effort of the season. He struck out six, walked six and scattered seven Pilot hits.

The Vandals picked up 11 hits themselves, with second baseman Tom Rose leading with three and third baseman Gene Ulmer picking up two.

U of I pitchers Brian Stokes and Steve Heckendorn absorbed the losses Friday, while Brent Hathaway took the rain-shortened loss Saturday.

Track

Crouser tops Moscow USA Games

SPOKANE—Vandal newcomer Mitch Crouser threw personal bests in the shot put and discus in the Moscow USA Invitational track and field meet here Saturday.

Crouser threw the shot 58 feet, 8½ inches for a personal best and a school record, beating the old mark of 58-3½ set by teammate Steve Saras earlier this season. Saras finished second to Crouser Saturday with a heave of 56-5.

Crouser won the discus throw with a 175-4. Saras won the hammer throw with an effort of 181-1.

Crouser came up with the performances in the non-scoring meet despite the heavy rains and wind. The bad weather eventually led Vandal coach Mike Keller to call off the final three events the 400 meter hurdles, the 200 meter dash and the mile relay.

In the women's portion of the meet, distance runner Patsy Sharples won and set school records in the 5,000 meters and 1,500 meters, while Sandi Thomas won the long jump to set a school record and won the 100 meter hurdles to tie the school mark.

Donna Regan also set school standards in the shot put and javelin, while Robin McMicken and Kori Kaufman placed behind Sharples in the 1,500 but still bettered the old school mark. The Vandal 400 meter relay squad also set a new mark.

Tennis

Vandal teams victorious over weekend

BOISE—The Vandal women's tennis team remained undefeated over the weekend with two victories over Division I opponents, while the men's team defeated Boise State.

The women ran their record to 7-0 when they edged Idaho State 5-4 in a five hour match. The Vandals had 15 minutes of rest before beating Montana State 6-3. The Vandal's third match, against Boise State, was rained out.

Picking up victories for the Vandals against Idaho State were Kellie Friddle, Kristi Pfeiffer and Ellen Cantrell in singles competition, while the teams of Pfeiffer and Karin Sobotta and Friddle and Leslie Potts picked up victories in doubles matches.

Against Montana State, Sobotta, Donna

Rademacher, Pfeiffer and Cantrell picked up singles victories, while in doubles matches, Potts-Friddle and Cantrell-Rademacher teamed up for wins.

The men's squad needed to sweep all three doubles matches against the Broncos to win the match 5-4. The men are now 3-5 on the year.

Singles winners for the Vandals included Jim Gerson and Mike Bailey. Doubles winners were the teams of Bob and John Simmons, Scott Moreland and Suresh Menon, and Gerson and Bailey.

The women play Eastern Washington University at Cheney, Wash. today at 2 p.m.

The men's next match will be against the University of Montana Saturday at 1 p.m. in Moscow.

Dome stars in magazine

The U of I's Kibbie Dome is featured on the cover of the March, 1980 issue of American School and University, a national magazine.

The dome is one of the largest trussed, wooden structures ever built and some of the methods used in constructing it were developed by Trus Joint Corp., Boise, which pre-fabricated the components of the building. Architects for the project were Cline Smull Hamill Quinteri Associates, Boise.
