Eric Stoddard captured the ASUI presidency over opponent Neil Rice, 1,030 to 730, in Wednesday's ASUI election.

An unexpectedly large number of students turned out to vote—roughly 28 percent. Students selected a new ASUI president, vice president and six senators. They also approved a $3.50 per semester fee increase to maintain current ASUI operations.

Although five of the 12 precincts were fairly close, Stoddard over whelmingly defeated Rice in votes from the SUB, Administration Building and Theophilus Tower.

Two precincts differed by one vote. Stoddard had 116 votes to Rice's 115 at the library, while Rice garnered 127 to Stoddard's 126 at Wallace Complex.

Rice carried the forestry and law buildings, but voter turnout in these precincts wasn't high enough to make up Stoddard's lead.

Clark Collins finished first in the vice presidential race in a landslide victory over Jeff Thomson, 1,211 to 504.

With the exception of incumbent senator Scott Biggs, who led second place senator-elect Keven Grundy by 60 votes, the race for six senatorial positions was very close.

Biggs had 929 votes to Grundy's 869. Mike Smith finished third with 864 votes.

Melissa Friel had 828 votes, and Greg Cook placed fifth with 825 votes.

The cut-off between sixth and seventh place differed by only five votes. Tammy McGregor was the sixth senator chosen with 794 votes compared to John Derr's 789 votes.

Dave Cooper had 773 votes, Martin Behm 654, Peter Becker 636, and Kieth Kinzer 468.

Referendum 1, a proposed $3.50 fee increase to be used specifically for maintaining current ASUI operations, passed with 61.2 percent of the vote.

Of all those voting, 1,192 students agreed with the increase, 655 disagreed and 102 expressed no opinion. The votes of those students who didn't express an opinion will be counted as disagreements, according to Dale Davaz, election board chairman.

The State Board of Education/Board of Regents must approve the fee increase before it can be implemented.

Regents accepting testimony on $50 fee

A public hearing on the proposed fee increase for next semester is scheduled for Dec. 4 in Boise. Written testimony about the increases should be sent to the State Board of Education, Board of Regents office before Dec. 1.

Fee increases of $50 for full-time resident students, $4 per credit for part-time and continuing education students, and $100 in tuition for non-resident students, will be up for board approval following the hearing.

The fee hikes were proposed by the board when the higher education institutions, like other state agencies, suffered cutbacks of 3.85 percent in this year's budget. The presidents of the four higher education institutions support the increased fees.

The temporary, one-semester fee would mean resident students would pay $295 in January, and non-residents students would pay $850. At $295, the University of Idaho would be the most expensive institution in the state for resident students.

The full-time fee for resident students at Boise State University would be $289, and at Idaho State University it would be $285. At Lewis-Clark State College a resident full-time student would pay $240.

U of I and BSU would both be charging $850 for non-resident students, and ISU would charge $750. LCSC would charge $625.

The part-time fee for resident students would go up to $29 from $25 at U of I, and up to $34 from $30 for non-resident students. The continuing education fee for both resident and non-resident students would go up to $29 from $25.

The increases at U of I would bring in about $423,000. The 3.85 percent budget cut amounts to around $993,000, and of that, $221,000 should be offset by income expected to result from the board's action in August to create a uniform miscellaneous receipts pool.

The revenue from the fee increase for resident students is to be used for general institutional maintenance and not for the direct cost of instruction. That revenue will go into the miscellaneous receipts fund of the university.

The board could decide to change the fee increases, or could decide to not increase fees at all.

Anyone with comments about the increased fees should write to Kay Jensen, Office of the State Board of Education, Room 307, Len B. Jordan Building, 650 West State Street, Boise, ID 83720.

Appeal granted; students may get less aid

by Kristen Moulton
Managing Editor

A federal official's claim that the University of Idaho miscalculates some off-campus students' need for financial assistance will result in smaller grants for fewer students, said Harry Davey, U of I director of financial aid.

When a U of I student appealed a decision of the U of I financial aid office this fall, she prompted an inquiry that produced the official's condemnation of a procedure used on campus.

Under the procedure, financial aid advisers make a judgment about whether the student is the type who could easily live in the university's dormitories. If the student "seems to be a typical on-campus student," he is given an on-campus designation, and about $1,500 less than an off-campus student would receive.

Roxane Broadhead, a junior in geological engineering who lives off-campus, this week successfully appealed the financial aid office's judgment that she qualifies as an on-campus student.

The faculty-student advisory committee to the financial aid office granted Broadhead's appeal Wednesday, after determining that she did fit the informal criteria the office has set for off-campus students.

Davey said the office usually considers an off-campus student to be one with medical problems or children, or who is independent, divorced, or a graduate or professional student.

"She looked like she was a perfectly legitimate candidate for living on campus," Davey said.

Broadhead claimed that just because she is 21, and apparently able to live in the dormitories, she should not be forced to accept an on-campus grant.

"There needs to be a guideline that doesn't require as many judgments," she told the committee.

Now, Broadhead will receive $1,527 in grants that the office last spring put aside until her appeal was settled. This fall, she also received a federally-guaranteed loan, which she will repay when she gets the grant money.

If other students in Broadhead's situation decide to challenge it, the financial aid office could be forced to authorize the students for possibly $500,000 in federally-guaranteed loans from banks. Because no more grant money is available, the office will have to advise students to apply for loans, Davey said.

Davey is uncertain how many of the 350-450 students who were given on-campus designation actually live off campus.

Gary Musselman, a program review specialist with the Bureau of Student Financial Assistance in the U.S. Department of Education, told the Lewiston Morning Tribune Wednesday that the university financial aid office here is disguising students' needs. "Financial aid is supposed to be based on costs actually incurred," he said.

Musselman suggests the university should provide grants according to where the student lives, and if the student needs more money, the university should authorize him to get a federally-guaranteed loan. Musselman was unavailable for comment Thursday.

Despite a program review by regional officials of the Department of Health and Welfare in Seattle, the university's procecedure has never been found to be at variance with the federal practice of computing financial need. Last spring, Davey said, the Seattle office told the U of I the procedure used here is correct.

When he contacted Musselman in Washington D.C. last week, it was the first time Davey had heard that his office was computing financial need incorrectly.

Davey contends his office uses the judgmental process as a means of providing the largest amount of money to the highest number of students.

"I don't see how you can eliminate judgment calls," Davey said.

Musselman's directive, which Davey expects in the mail soon, will mean the university won't be meeting the need of many students through grants.

Because the size of grants for off-campus students is larger, the re-designation of many students as off-campus will mean less money is available for all students seeking grants.

"I don't know if this will work, unless the students are perfectly willing to take loans and the supply is unlimited," he said.

Just how the university will decide who bears the brunt of the shortage of grant money is unclear. In the past, Davey's office has operated on a first-come, first-served basis.

"But then there's the school of thought that we should fund the neediest students first," he said. "But is that right either?"

The question will have to be addressed by university officials and the financial aid advisory committee, he said.

The issue may all be resolved in the implementation of educational amendments to Title IV, which became law this fall.

Under the new law, which is effective retroactively to Oct. 1, the university would set grant

Discrimination claims not yet actionable

by Helen Meyer
Staff Reporter

Information leading to the charges of sex discrimination and harassment by Anne Nugent against the University of Idaho have not been specific enough to prove definite fault, according to Ed Fridensteine, Risk Manager of the State of Idaho.

Fridensteine, who is investigating the claim for the Department of Risk Management, said that so far, the department has not received any information that is considered "actionable."

Nugent, a former U of I teaching assistant, filed a claim with the Idaho Secretary of State's office Sept. 2. Nugent is seeking $237,000 in damages unless a mutually acceptable compromise is reached.

According to Carol Grupp, U of I Risk Management officer, no one legally representing Nugent has contacted the university. Elmer Raunio, dean of the College of Letters and Science, also said he had "no knowledge of her being interested in a compromise."

Nugent has taken her complaints to the Idaho

Human Rights Commission, but, contrary to earlier press releases, Carol Franklin, Affirmative Action Officer of the U of I, has not been contacted about investigating the claim.

Without specifying the precise instances of alleged discrimination, Nugent claims that while at the U of I her mail was opened, she received obscene phone calls and threats on her life, she was assaulted, had her office broken into, was evaluated on the basis of standards different than those for male candidates and was given different degree requirements.

Nugent claims there were numerous occurrences dating back to 1977, but said specifically that the discriminatory acts this year occurred on January 10, April 28, May 23 and June 16. She also claims that the university was notified of the acts.

The damages she is seeking are for alleged mental stress, pain and suffering, and for loss of income.

Terry Copple, Nugent's attorney in Boise, refused to comment on the future legal actions Nugent plans to take.

THE QUEST FOR NEWNESS

Everyone enjoys something new. A new hit record is something everyone wants to own. Every season brings in new styles of clothes, and a new car-it's so shiny, clean, and the carpet is fresh, and it smells so nice! It can't be denied that there is a strange fascination with newness that no one is immune to. That desire for newness that each person experiences actually serves as an inner force to encourage us to search for something better, higher and more rewarding than what we possess. We are all searching for something new.

Listen to Diane's (not her real name) quest for newness and happiness. She felt that if she could only meet the right man and get married, she would find lasting happiness for her, but before long, the luster began to fade. She still had needs not being met and still experienced her feelings of aloneness and futility.

Within a few months her growing dissatisfaction led her to be unfaithful to her husband in her companionship with a new lover. This relationship seemed to promise her new hope. She was happy. She divorced her husband and married a new man. Then, the old dissatisfaction set in, and it was on to yet another man. This cycle repeated itself 5 times as she sought hopelessly for fulfillment and newness that would permanently satisfy. She was living with a sixth man, not even bothering this time with the commitment of marriage vows, still searching when she met another man. And this one was really different.

She thought he was quite strange at first. No one had ever spoken to her like he did. While she was getting him some water to drink one hot day during an encounter at the village well, he told her that if she knew about the splendid gift God had available for her, and if she knew who he really was, she would have asked him for living water. Jesus said "Everyone who drinks of this water will thirst again, but whoever drinks of the water that I shall give him will never thirst; welling up to eternal life." She said, "Give me this water, that I may not thirst!" At last she found in Jesus that which she had been so long seeking. She discovered something new which did not lose its newness and could fill every need.

"Behold, I will do a new thing." Isaiah 43:19

Tell them what you think

The State Board of Education/Board of Regents will hold a public hearing on the proposed $50-per-semester student fee increase on Dec. 4 in Boise.

Most of us will not be able to be in Boise on Dec. 4, but we will be able to present written testimony to the board before Dec. 1.

This proposal has a direct effect on each of us, at least for those of us who do not have the proverbial money tree growing in our backyards.

And in a larger sense, in deciding whether to approve, reject, or amend the fee increase proposal, the board is deciding the crucial question of how it will deal with the financial crisis that threatens to cripple higher education in Idaho.

The proposed fee increase has been thoroughly discussed in all the local newspapers, including this one. None of us has any excuse not to be informed about this issue, and none of us has an excuse to be apathetic.

Each of us has the duty to express her or his ideas about the proposed fee increase and about the financial future of higher education in this state.

M.Y.O.B.W.

Editor,

No sooner have I taken an examination at this university than at least five people want to know my grade. I find my academic standing to be of no business to anyone but myself. The revealing of my grade has basically two effects: Either I feel wonderful and the interested party feels crummy or I feel crummy and the interested party feels GREAT. I would like to take this opportunity to publically announce that I no longer intend to reveal my grades to either friend, acquaintance, or foe. I would like all those currently interested in my academic standing to respect this decision and MIND YOUR OWN BEES WAX.

B. Wilton

Try courtesy

Editor,

Oddly enough, after the Argonaut published Dave Meyer's article concerning the shoddy enforcement of the law prohibiting alcohol in the dome, there has been a renewed attempt by dome officials to stop any and all alcoholic beverages from reaching the bleachers. No longer is a student just asked if she/he is carrying a glass container. Starting last Saturday night there was a genuine crackdown and students were stopped, purses were searched, coats had to be opened or removed, and backs were patted down.

Now that officials at the student entrance are strictly enforcing this law it is time for Dave to do a follow-up story concerning what is happening at the South Gate where alumni, parents, and friends enter. There is a dome employee posted outside this entrance who is paid to check for alcoholic beverages. However, I watched about 50 people pass through this gate Saturday night, and no questions were asked and no searches were conducted. Unless it can be shown there is no "problem" at this entrance then the officers should follow the same procedures used at the North Gate.

If these searches for alcohol are to continue, then it only seems fair that the alumni and others entering the South Gate be treated with the same disrespect the students receive, or in the alternative, perhaps the officers could try treating students with a little of the courtesy the "paying" fans are accustomed to.

Magic is here

Editor,

The Art and Architecture Department, University Gallery and especially I, as curator for the undergraduate art show would like to thank the following individuals and organizations for their support:

The Lubricants, KUOI, KUID, the Argonaut, The Idahonian, the Photo Center, the Alley Foundation, Fred Chapman's theatre make-up class, the Theater Arts Department, School of Education, Audio Visual Center, Phil Deutchman and the Physics Department, the School of Communications and their students, the students from the Art and Architecture Department, and this year's jurors: Kim Singhr, Arthur Okazaki and Nels Reese.

The opening of the undergraduate art show was clearly a remarkable occurrence on Saturday night. Close to 700 people experienced a synthesis of diverse and at times, conflicting concerns at a university. However, they all came together and produced one of the most amazing celebrations of the belief that magic still can be made. It is in magic, that central force of a civilization that motivates individuals to be powerful and creative forces; to be the dispellers and makers of myths; that was what was celebrated and in the celebrating, magic was made.

David Giese
Assistant Professor of Art

story is the same: The Argonaut is scattered in classrooms, the library and the SUB. I asked one of the ladies picking up the papers in the Satellite what she was going to do with them. I was really surprised to hear that they were all to be thrown away!

In a state such as Idaho where there is so much controversy surrounding the logging / wilderness issue, at the very least the people on college campuses should be aware of the problem and the need to conserve.

It may be a bit idealistic to hope that everyone who reads the Argonaut would take it home and recycle it themselves. However, I think it would be feasible, and certainly there is a need, for the Argonaut to take up the matter itself.

Perhaps the paper could provide return bins for used Arg's next to the areas where stacks are made available on campus. If these areas are convenient for students to get a paper, they should also be convenient places for their disposal.

It may be a small step, but any reduction in our nation's huge level of waste is badly needed!

Thank you,
Lisa Nasr

Recycle ARGS

Editor,

Each Tuesday and Friday the Argonaut is distributed to various points on campus, and each week the

Editor's note: Lisa, your observation is appreciated and well-taken. The proposal will be considered as well as other alternatives to the problem.

Agricultural contract cancelled

Salary disputes sever Gambian connections

by Dan Eakin
Contributing Reporter

Negotiations between the University of Idaho and the Gambian government for a $5.2 million agricultural contract, the largest contract offer in the U of I's history, have come to an abrupt end due to disputes over salary levels.

Gerald Marousek, U of I professor of agricultural economics, said the University is "no longer looking at the project."

Marousek explained that the U of I belongs to a group of 11 western universities called the Consortium for International Development (CID), which contracts agricultural expertise worldwide on projects similar to the one in Gambia.

Gambia received the $5.2 million grant from the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) to be used specifically for improving crop production and livestock forage management. Gambia then contacted CID in search of a university willing to work on the project. After proposals from several other universities had been considered, the U of I was chosen as the lead university in the project.

The negotiations came to an end when the consortium representative acting as negotiator between the U of I and Gambia didn't take a strong enough stand on salaries contracted for project personnel, Marousek said.

As chief contract negotiator for the U of I, Marousek said he couldn't accept the salary schedule that the consortium representative just sat back and agreed upon.

He said the representative should "be willing to negotiate, but also be willing to argue." He expressed disappointment in the negotiations.

Marousek said the project could have worked if the university was directly involved in the negotiation process rather than having worked through a CID representative.

He suggested the lower salary level was accepted by the CID negotiator because both AID and CID people get jealous when project personnel salaries start looking better than their own.

AID and CID people don't understand that their jobs are career positions and that project personnel's jobs are only temporary. Project staff need higher salaries because in many instances they are leaving behind employment, and an employer won't often grant a two and one half year leave of absence, he said.

It can't be said for certain what part the U of I will play in the future of this project, Marousek said, but it looks like Colorado State will begin negotiations for the contract.

Marousek said that if Colorado State does get the contract, they may have to hire someone to run the project who doesn't have to sacrifice a job to go to the small African nation of Gambia.

Will the real Grundy please stand up?

Senator-elect Kevin Grundy's picture did not appear in Friday's Argonaut, but instead his campaign manager replaced the unavailable Grundy with look-alike George Paslaski.

Brian Beesley, Grundy's campaign manager, didn't let Grundy know in time about pictures being taken for Friday's Argonaut and Grundy went to Lewiston for the day, Beesley said.

"I decided to do it in a moment of panic," he said. "I was concerned about getting Kevin's picture in the paper."

Grundy came to the Argonaut office Thursday and explained it wasn't his picture that appeared in Friday's paper.

According to Grundy, he arrived back in town about 6 p.m. one hour after deadline. Since Paslaski's picture already was taken it "didn't seem like that big of a deal," Grundy said.

Later he was at the Candidates Forum when it was held up while Keith Kinzer left to have his picture taken.

Grundy said he thought about going to have his taken but neglected to say anything.

ASUI President Scott Fehrenbacher said, "I think this is an irresponsible act, I hope it doesn't reflect his real interest in the senate."

"Many times it will be inconvenient to be someplace," Fehrenbacher said, "and if Grundy thinks he can fulfill his responsibility by sending a friend, he's got a lot to learn."

Beesley said no misrepresentation was meant by replacing Grundy in the picture.

"We apologize to all of the other candidates," he said. "It doesn't make us look good, our ethics were thrown to the wind."

U of I students feed OXFAM

Nearly $1,000 was raised this week by University of Idaho students representing themselves and living groups in a one-day fast and fundraising campaign. The money will be contributed to OXFAM America for use in Cambodia and East Africa.

The campaign and fast was sponsored by St. Augustine's Catholic Center and the Campus Christian Center.

Individual and living groups who fasted but who have not turned in their pledges may do so at the Campus Christian Center.

Crash landing due to icy engine

A recent Federal Aviation Administration inspection of President Richard Gibb's plane determined that the fuel injection system of the engine "iced-up", according to John McHenry, general manager of Palouse Aviation at the Moscow Pullman Airport. Gibb was forced to make an emergency landing Monday after the plane's engine quit during take off.

Since the inspection was only a "surface inspection," the conclusions at this point are only theory, McHenry said. He said it is rare for a fuel injection system to freeze, thereby cutting off the fuel and stopping the engine. "Ice-up" occurs as warm, very moist air goes into the carburetor and injection system and causes the unit to freeze. If this happens while airborne at cruising speed the pilot can usually correct the situation, but during take-off he cannot.

McHenry estimated the damage to the plane at $7,000. The flaps, propeller, exhaust pipes and the underside of the fuselage were damaged.

McHenry said he will not know the exact engine problems until his crew "gets inside it." He hopes to do this as soon as the insurance companies are through inspecting the plane.

Against UNR Vandals end season Saturday

The last football game of the season awaits the Idaho Vandals Saturday when they travel to Reno, Nev., to meet the University of Nevada-Reno Wolfpack in a Big Sky Conference match up.

The game is very important to the Vandals who assured themselves their first winning season since 1976 last week by beating Northern Arizona 14-7. Idaho is now 6-4 on the year and 4-2 in conference action.

Boise State leads the conference with a 5-1 record but plays Idaho State Saturday in Pocatello. An ISU win combined with an Idaho win will clinch the Vandals second place. However, if ISU wins and Idaho loses, the Vandals will finish fourth in the Conference. Nevada-Reno is also looking at second place with a 3-3 conference record and a 5-4-1 season record.

"It is very gratifying to have a winning season already assured going into this week's game, but that doesn't mean we can pack it up for the rest of the year," said Idaho coach Jerry Davitch. "One of our team goals at the start of the year was to finish as high in the conference as we possibly could, so we will be trying to do that this week by gaining our fifth league win."

Idaho will be trying to tie the 1976 season when the Vandals finished 7-4 on the year. The Vandals also won five conference games that season.

But the fifth win won't come easy for the third-year coach or his Vandal team. "No, it won't come easy," said Davitch. "In fact, none of them are easy."

The big plus the Wolfpack has is a running back by the name of Frank Hawkins. Hawkins, a 5-11, 210-pound senior, comes into the game needing only 110 yards to catch Archie Griffin for the No. 4 spot on the NCAA all-time rushing list.

"They have one of the best running backs in the nation in Frank Hawkins," said Davitch. "He is a quality athlete who could play for any team in the country, including people like USC and Notre Dame. We will have our hands full this week trying to stop him."

Hawkins currently has 5,068 career yards rushing, including 202 yards on 30 carries last week against Montana when the Wolfpack edged the Grizzlies 10-7. For the year, Hawkins had carried the ball 272 times for 1,454 yards. He is only the sixth player to ever rush for more than 5,000 yards in the history of the NCAA.

Both Idaho and Nevada-Reno match up evenly on offense. Idaho ranks sixth in the nation in total offense, averaging 377 yards a game, while the Wolfpack averages 360. Idaho ranks second in the nation in rushing, averaging 269 yards a game, while the Wolfpack is sixth in the nation at 236 yards a game.

Scoring is the only difference between the two schools. Idaho averages 26 points a game while Nevada-Reno averages only 16.

But the Wolfpack has a tough defense. Their defense leads the conference, giving up only 222 yards a game. The Wolfpack's rushing defense ranks second in the nation, giving up only 66 yards on the ground. The Wolfpack ranks fourth in the nation in scoring defense, allowing their opponents to score 10 points a game.

But when the explosive Vandal ground game meets the powerful Reno defense, something will have to give. Idaho is led by quarterback Ken Hobart. Hobart has rushed for 758 yards this season and has passed for 1,038, hitting on 54 of 131 passes.

Close behind is running back Terry Idler who rushed for his third 100-plus game last week when he got 110 yards on 17 carries. Idler has 636 yards on 88 carries this season.

The Vandals received some good and bad news last week after the Northern Arizona game. Running back Russell Davis is healed and will get the starting nod this week after a three-week absence. Wally Jones, however, suffered a leg injury two weeks ago and will miss Saturday's game. Tim Payne adds a powerful punch to the Vandal backfield also.

Regionals await Volleyball team

With a season mark of 28-4-1 and the Interstate League title, the Idaho women's volleyball team begins play this afternoon at Bellingham, Wash. in the NCWSA Division II Regional Championships.

Coach Amanda Burk's Vandals will be the tournament's first seed due to their first place finish in the region's toughest division.

Should the squad capture the event they would advance to the AIAW National Tourney set for Dec. 11-13 at Cal-State Northridge. Currently the Idaho women are on an 11 match winning streak. Their 28-4-1 record also eclipsed the old mark for wins in one season by an Idaho team.

The Vandals' last win came last Saturday in a five game match against Eastern Washington University. The women from Cheney shouldn't have a long wait for a rematch.

"I expect we'll be playing Eastern in our first match. They play Montana Tech and we'll meet the winner of that match," Burk said. "We're going to have to be sneakier than they are, because I think they've finally figured us out."

Burk was referring to the fact that her team will have to develop some new offensive attacks. "We've tried to incorporate some new things into our offense this week, but they all take time. We watched the U.S. National team in Spokane last Sunday and have added a few of their plays to our repertoire," she said.

To win the tournament, Burk says she'll need a total team effort. "We can't have any half efforts. If three or four of our players have bad games (like we had against Eastern last Saturday) we won't win it," Burk said. "Everyone will have to play well."

Idaho takes a well balanced attack into the tourney as shown by the final regular season stats. Five players lead the several categories of play with others following a close second.

In the service department Linda Kelling has mounted up a 98 percent consistency figure, while Debbie Cox has recorded the most aces with 40 on the year.

Coach Burk points out Pam Bradetich and Linda Kelling are the team's leading service receivers. Bradetich's 88 percent mark in this category leads the team, while Kelling has 393 assists for the year.

Burk reports her team's attacking pleases her as much as anything else as "we've got quite a few players who are capable of putting the ball on the floor with high percentage."

Jenny Rothstrom, Yvonne Smith, Pam Ford, Beth Johns, Karen Dolan and Patti Bennett all have attacking percentages in the 30-40 range. Burk points out, "anything over 25 is pretty good."

Idaho prepares for Huskers

The Vandal basketball team will head into the regular season opener against the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, Neb. on Nov. 29 with one victory to its credit after defeating an experienced Athletes in Action - Canada team, 65-63.

The game was an exhibition and will not count officially on Idaho's record this season.

The Vandals opened their season last year against this same AIA-Canada team and came out on the short end of an 80-76 score. However, it was a different story Friday as the Vandals limited the Canadians to their lowest point output of their season by using a tough match-up zone defense while on offense, four of Idaho's starters hit in double figures.

The winning baskets came with 12 seconds remaining in the game when Brian Kellerman hit both ends of a one-and-one situation at the free throw line.

The Canadians came into the contest with a 6-0 record.

Thanks to Phil Hobson's (44) block of an Athletes-in-Action shot with 12 seconds left in the game, the Idaho basketball team won its season opener in an exhibition game over AIA, Canada, 65-63. The Vandals kickoff the regular season next Saturday against the University of Nebraska in Lincoln.

Swimmers off until Huskies

The University of Idaho men's and women's swim team will face a short break in action before entering the prestigious Huskey Invitational Dec. 5-7.

The Idaho teams opened the season with a "splash", dominating Eastern Washington in a dual meet at Idaho Nov. 14 after taking the Third Annual Idaho Relay Meet. The Vandal women have qualified three individuals and three relay teams to the AIAW Division II National Swimming and Diving Championships to be held at Marquette, Mich., March 12-14.

Freshman Ann Kincheloe joined a swimmer from her home town, Bonnie Flickinger, in earning a berth in nationals when she set a school record in the 50 breast in a qualifying time of 31.88. She broke the old record of 32.10 held by Linda Holt set in 1980. For her effort she was named athlete-of-the-week for the swim team.

35 years
at KUOI-FM
by Tracey Vaughan
Staff Reporter

November marks KUOI-FM's 35th anniversary on the air.

KUOI was born in the attic of the former Engineering Annex (now the Graduate Arts Center) in 1945, the brainstorm of a group of engineering students. According to Mike Mundt, former station manager of KUOI and creator of the Macklin comic strip, KUOI's first power source was through carrier currents, a simple low power system running through heat tunnels under the campus.

KUOI has always striven to be independent of administrative control. Although it has been student-operated, it is the Idaho Board of Regents that owns the station's FCC license, not the students. The regents were content to leave KUOI under control of the students until 1978 when the station's power was increased to 50 watts. This growth in the station, both in power and listening audience, caused the regents to worry about their legal responsibilities for the station.

Consequently, the regents saw a need to appoint a U of I liaison between KUOI and the Board to be held responsible for the station. Their selection was then, and still is today, Don Coombs, director of the School of Communication.

This exercise of the regents' rights caused many students, especially the staff of KUOI, to feel that the students' control over the station was being threatened. Outraged students protesting against an "administrative takeover," wore KUOI armbands showing their support for the student-run station.

Although Coombs technically has the power to veto a student selection for KUOI station manager, he emphasized that his role as liaison is "strictly a technicality."

Controversy over the style of KUOI's music has been a main topic of controversy on the U of I campus throughout the years. In a recent meeting with the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, who had made a complaint against the station, the KUOI staff explained why they play the style of music they do.

Since the station's FCC regulations prohibit advertising on the air, KUOI can't raise the revenue to buy records. They must depend on the promotional records sent to them by recording studios. If students don't like what is now being played, KUOI has a shift each week that living group members can sign up for. The group can play any type of music they choose during that shift.

Failure to grant land kills living history farm

by Carol Allen
Contributing Reporter

A plan to develop a living historical farm museum was put to a stop Nov. 11 when University of Idaho President Richard Gibb announced that no university property would be donated to the project, according to G. Ellis Burcaw, project leader.

Burcaw, professor of museology, said, "The project, since its beginning four years ago, has been based on the expectation that we could use university land. After President Gibb's recent announcement to the contrary, the project has been put on hold."

The proposal was to build the Palouse Hills Historical Farm which would be an agricultural museum, as a branch of the university.

According to the plan, the project would be a research center for students and would be open to the public.

People would actually live at the museum in a setting which authentically reproduced rural life of a specific colonial time.

Burcaw said Gibb's announcement came with no advance warning. After study and recommendation by a number of faculty members, "The campus planning committee had recommended that we be given the land," he said.

Burcaw said they never expected nor asked for money from the university, but that now they must get both the funds and the land from private sources.

"The project is not dead," Burcaw said, "But it's definitely stopped. There's nothing more we can do until we get some land."

Burcaw added that land, being so valuable, is very difficult to acquire. He said they have no prospects for outside sources of land at this time.

"The university has hundreds of acres of farmland," Burcaw said.

According to the project proposal report, the museum would allow the university to expand the program of museology to include a master's degree. Financial benefits from public visitation would go to the university.

There are currently no state museums in northern Idaho, and no institutions in the state are exclusively devoted to collecting the agricultural heritage of Idaho, according to the report.

President Gibb and several others who were apparently in on his decision were unavailable for comment this week.

Terry Armstrong, executive assistant to the president, said he hadn't heard of the recent announcement. Armstrong said the decision may have been partly due to a Moscow bypass from Highway 95 to the Pullman Highway, which is proposed to go through university property.

"They wouldn't want to commit land which was ultimately to be used for another purpose," Armstrong said.

"Hoot out" starts shouting match

A fraternity "hoot out" culminated in a shouting match between a group of Greek men and a group of independent men late Monday night and early Tuesday morning.

The "hoot out" apparently started with members of two fraternities shouting at each other. This group moved from fraternity to fraternity, collecting the members of each fraternity's pledge class among others.

Police estimated the group included 100 to 150 men, who went to the Wallace Complex, Theophilus Tower, and Gault Hall.

Some members of the group filed through the Ballard/Stevenson wing of the complex.

As the fraternity group was returning to Greek Row, a group of about 100 dormitory residents followed.

A shouting match developed between the two groups at Sixth and Line streets. According to a police report, "After approximately 10 minutes of shouting at each other, (both groups) sang the Idaho fight song and left the area." The "hoot out" and shouting match took place between about 11:30 p.m. Monday and 1 a.m. Tuesday.

police blotter

...Peggy Davis, Boise, reported that a blue cloth wallet and seven or eight tapes were stolen from her car on the night of Nov. 14 while it was parked near the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. The wallet contained identification, some cash, and an Alaska driver's license.

...Six rubber mouse costume heads were taken from the attic of Ridenbaugh Hall between Oct. 27 and Nov. 15. The heads were worth about $100 each.

...Someone broke the right front window of a car belonging to Rosilind Hirsch between Saturday and Tuesday while it was parked on Idaho Avenue in front of the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. About $100 worth of damage was done to the window.

Murin trial postponed indefinitely with agreement he return home

University of Idaho student Michael F. Murin's trial on charges of trespassing and disturbing the peace was postponed indefinitely Monday on condition that he leave the area and not return.

Earlier Monday, Murin had pleaded innocent to the charges, which were filed in connection with an incident at the Alpha Phi sorority on Sunday night.

Judge Robert T. Felton told the Argonaut, "He needs to be back with his parents where they can help him."

Apparently, Murin had bothered the members of Alpha Phi house many times before Sunday's incident with questions about a woman who no longer lives there. The Alpha Phis were worried enough by Murin's behavior to contact police in mid-October.

Felton said Murin had not been responding to treatment at the U of I. "He doesn't report to the psychologist when he's supposed to report to him," Felton said.

Murin's parents sent him a bus ticket and $50 to enable him to return home to New York state, Felton said. About 4:30 p.m. Monday, Murin agreed to return to New York if the charges against him would be held in abeyance.

levels for students both on and off campus, and grants would be made according to where the student lives, not according to where he could reasonably live.

"Depending on the implementation, these could be quite helpful," Davey said. The rules telling the university how to implement the new law probably won't be completed until late spring. Davey isn't sure how his office is expected to compute financial need until then.

Go Ape This Fall

It's a jungle out there, especially on campus, so we suggest you stock up on great-tasting Mountain Fresh Rainier, sign up for Survival of the Freshest 101, and send for your Apeperson gear. Our full-color posters are $2.00 each, and our swinging t-shirts cost just $5.00 apiece. Or come "get it yourself": take the brewery tour and discover the whole treasure-trove of Rainier-related stuff we sell in the world-renowned Beeraphernalia Shop. If you can't come in person, fill out the coupon, and we'll take care of the rest. Send coupon, check, bankcard number, or money order to:
Beeraphernalia, Rainier Brewing Company, 3100 Airport Way South, Seattle, Washington 98134.
