Council supports street proposal

by Steve Nelson
for the Argonaut

The Moscow City Council unanimously supported the university's proposed street modifications Monday, although final approval will wait until Monday, October 19.

The council asked the city staff to prepare a resolution addressing specific proposals that warrant city action. These are: seven street closures, a new one-way street system and additional on-street parking. This resolution will then be voted upon.

Students, faculty and city representatives invited to voice opinions gave the proposed closures some nods and some "no's".

While it was lobbied that the closures would aid students and handicapped people, increased congestion and bad timing were also spoken of.

William McLaughlin, former campus planning committee chairman and assistant professor of wildland recreation management presented the proposals in a crowded room.

"These are proposals with tremendous support and are well thought out ... the building blocks came from the public we contacted," McLaughlin said. "A critical point is that over 85 percent of students feel the street modifications are appropriate."

McLaughlin outlined the two basic concepts behind the long-range campus plan: the academic core area and the ring road.

The core area is "where we will have concentration of campus use," and the ring road is an arterial road surrounding campus that will allow limited access to the core area, he said.

The first step in initiating the long-range plan is the planning committee's street proposals. "This long-range plan is an important consideration as we look at the street modifications," McLaughlin said.

Ron Ball, director of student housing, said of the 1,000 students living in the residence halls, 900 need to cross Rayburn Street every day to eat in Wallace Cafeteria. "The council will do students a service by maintaining the closure of Rayburn," he said.

The planning committee is proposing the closure of Rayburn between Sixth and Paradise Creek Streets. Half of Rayburn will become sidewalks with grass and trees, and the other half will be additional parking spaces.

Mary DuPree, associate professor of music, said, "With the street closures, it is much easier for handicapped people to get to the central core area."

The city staff also gave its full support to the proposals.

Larry Betts, head of the city staff committee, said, "the proposed closure is an acceptable design based on current standards in the city of Moscow."

ASUI President Eric Stoddard said the senate supports the proposals in principle but the timing is inappropriate because of the university's state of financial exigency. He said money given to street modifications could be better spent on academics.

Mike Mundt, an employee of KUID-TV, said due to closing the interior streets of campus, traffic congestion on other streets around campus has increased.

Mundt noted traffic problems at the intersection of Sixth and Deakin Streets and congestion on Nez Perce Drive caused by service and delivery trucks that stop in traffic lanes because there is no off-street parking.

The Campus Planning Committee proposed the closure of seven streets, a new one-way street system, creation of additional parking spaces and improved lighting for campus.

Curriculum reviewed

by Lewis Day
of the Argonaut

The University of Idaho Faculty Council is currently debating the issue of the proposed core curriculum. The council has been discussing the core for the past two weeks, and at this point the controversy appears to be far from over.

In its Oct. 6 meeting, the council talked about the problems of definition of the core, and possible expenses involved. Richard C. Heimsch, chairman of the council said, "We all have our sectional points of view ... we're all a little paranoid" about budget cuts. He also commented on the voluminous stacks of notes and memos the members of the council must read, saying, "Each of us needs time to digest it."

Charles McQuillen, dean of the College of Business and Economics said, "I wonder if it is sufficient to create a core ... and then like Pontius Pilate, wash our hands." He said he saw two areas of core content which need to be addressed; the first being a need to identify the scope of effort, and the second being a necessary decision on which courses are acceptable, and which should be excluded.

McQuillen went on to say that the creation of a "blue-ribbon" panel to make these decisions might be beneficial. He stated that such a committee could be made up of emeriti faculty and administrators who still have an interest in the university and its concerns.

William Parks, professor of finance agreed. "Putting this into a smaller body with a more specific charge would be advantageous," he said.

Several council members voiced concern about from where the choice for core courses would come. "Input from the colleges has been negated," said Rosario Fasolino, professor of architecture. He also felt the core should extend beyond the first two years of university work. "The core should cover the four, or five years a student is here," he said.

The proposed core curriculum will expand the number of credits required by the university from 8 to 35. Instead of covering just communications and physical education, the new core will include courses in natural and applied science, mathematics, statistics, computer science, humanities and social science, as well as those currently required.

Heimsch said he foresees the most problems with the areas of natural and applied sciences, humanities and social science.

The University Curriculum Committee was given the mission of selecting and recommending a suitable list of courses for inclusion in the core. On Sept. 11, the UCC released its list. The list included 137 courses in all areas of the core.

Even before the report by John Dickinson, UCC chairman, a minority report was issued by two other UCC members, Joseph Ulliman, professor of forest resources, and Donald R. Scott, professor of entomology. Their proposals were substantially more extensive than the UCC report.

Senate shifts funds

by Bobbi Humphries
of the Argonaut

The ASUI Senate approved a bill Wednesday night transferring $400 from the ASUI general reserve account to the coffee house section of the programs department to replace money that was used to fund a "back to school" dance in August. In addition, more ASUI appointments were approved.

At the time of the dance, there was no dean of Student Advisory Services to authorize money for such an event. John Weatherly, formerly of SAS, was in charge of freshman orientation. Weatherly assumed if the event was placed on the orientation brochure, it would be taken care of financially.

In previous years, the dance had been organized and funded by the Inter-fraternity Council, the Panhellenic Council and the Tower Board, according to ASUI President Eric Stoddard.

This year however, these organizations weren't involved, and since SAS wasn't planning on funding the dance, the ASUI was left with the bill. They had the option of either cancelling the dance or coming up with the money to fund it.

For lack of any other department to draw the money out of, the $400 was taken out of the coffee house fund.

The bill passed by the senate was to reimburse coffee house for their financial deficit.

Stoddard requested that Bruce Pitman, dean of SAS, put some effort into finding the appropriate funds to reimburse the senate.

Juniors in ROTC to battle

The Army ROTC junior class will get a taste of battle conditions this weekend during a field training exercise at Laird Park.

The exercise will be conducted by the 104th Training Division from Spokane, according to Capt. Terry Steinhebel of the ROTC faculty.

The 27 participants will practice firing M-16 rifles and M-60 machine guns, set up anti-personnel mines and learn to take enemy fortifications with fire and maneuver tactics. They will also practice proper use of protective masks in chemical warfare situations, and conduct combat and reconnaissance patrols, along with several other battlefield exercises.

"This is the first chance we've had this year to get the junior out of the classroom for hands-on training," Steinhebel said.

"Our junior class as a whole is real good," he said. "They're a good cross section of the university, and they're enthusiastic about the training."

Council sets 10-year calendar

At its Oct. 6 meeting, the Faculty Council approved the university's 10-year academic calendar, presented by R. Bruce Bray, faculty secretary.

Having the calendar determined through the 1992-93 school year will be to enable the administration of WSU to plan their calendar. Before long, the two universities may have the same calendar. A major benefit of concurrent semesters would be increased cross-enrollment, with enhanced opportunities for both UI and WSU students.

The calendar was approved by the council unanimously.

Play ball

Editor,

This year's homecoming will be highlighted by yet another event - the ASUI vs. Administration football game. Kick-off is at 6 p.m. on Thurs., Oct. 22, in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome (weather provided!).

Anyone who wants to help the ASUI defeat the Administration should attend the two practices scheduled for this weekend. The practices will be held on Saturday and Sunday at 3 p.m. on the practice field just north of the Dome, between the Dome and the Law School parking lot. Officials are also needed for the game.

We're looking forward to a fun, light-hearted game and we encourage your involvement, either as a player or a spectator. If you have any questions or want to play please contact me or any other senator.

More on rights

Editor,

Christian Action Council and all Right to Life Members, Mr. Moore:

I would like to address a side of this grave issue that is never given when people sensationalize the abortion issue. First and foremost, Mr. Moore, I have to laugh at any man that thinks he has the God-given right to tell women how to live their private lives, let alone government. When you're on the operating table having a Caesarean section to save your and your baby's lives, then pop off.

We were all sperm and egg once, too. They are at the same level of life that a fetus is up to three months, so is menstruation murder too? It's not any more asinine than what you would have us believe.

And what of the thousands of children killed, maimed, and battered every day by all those unwilling parents? You know, those loving parents that put cigarettes out on their children. Or the unwilling mother that goes heavily into drug and alcohol use to kill the baby she hates so much; but only manages to grossly disfigure the child. Then there are rape, incest, and Down's syndrome. Should a twelve year old child have to bear her father's baby? If your little sister was a victim of rape, according to Right to Life legislation she would have to bear that child. Down's syndrome, DNA disorders and hundreds of other diseases are now detectable in the early maternal stages. How would you like to go through nine months of pregnancy knowing full well that your baby will never be a normal functioning human being in society, if it even lives? These examples affect millions of Americans yearly. What of their right to normal childhoods and lives? If only our world was as black and white as you paint it.

Fact: the cost of abortion, monetarily and in human suffering, is a fraction of that of the alternatives. Foster homes, government institutions, orphanages, and adoption agencies all have their own special horror stories of corruption and neglect. To read the paper is to know these alternatives don't work, haven't worked, and never will work—not from a humane point of view anyway.

Parenthood is not only one of the most beautiful things we can share with someone; it's the ultimate commitment we make to society and mankind. It's something to be carefully thought out, and not something to be pushed into by fanatic groups of mental midgets that have no concern for the long range ramifications of what they are advocating.

What is ironic is that these are the same people that went screaming into the streets about low morality in the late 60s and early 70s when the government tried to get sex education into high schools and junior highs. They blocked any real sex education in the schools, so kids learn the same way we did: touch and smile with no idea of what to get or how to use contraceptives. So let's give credit where credit is due—to all those religious groups—for the abortion rate we have now.

I'll support laws against abortion if they have this clause: all Right to Life members and supporters have to adopt all unwanted babies and give them all the love and care to which they have the right. What makes me nauseous is that these groups hide behind our God. They hide their own sick ambitions to manipulate others' lives. These kinds of people and groups have always been a black mark on religion and society.

Community Free U

Editor,

Would you like an alternative to the formal education the University provides? Why not try the Community Free University? Moscow's Free U ended several years ago, but Pullman's still provides for both cities. Schedule programs are at the SUB Information Desk. Late registration can be made at any time, hopefully before the class is finished. Just call the instructor. The Free University is staffed by volunteer teachers who wish to share the knowledge they have.

Why not walk?

Editor,

In rebuttal to Charles Christopher's letter on campus parking:

The University of Idaho parking "problem" is more complicated than having "x" amount of parking spaces for "x" amount of vehicles. University students want to be delivered to class in an identical manner as high school. That is, taxied to school in a bus or chauffeured by Mom or Dad. We have evolved into such a mechanically-minded society that when asked to walk from the Kibbie Dome to the University Classroom Center, we shudder in despair!

The so-called parking "problem" would not exist if University students were willing to walk a fraction of a mile to class. During the past four years, ample parking space has been available for use west of the Kibbie Dome. If students would use this area and walk the short distance to class, many "problems" would be solved.

As for our administration, let them keep their reserved parking spaces, most of them are too old to walk a mile anyway.

My solution to the parking "problem" is to simply pave over the existing lawns and allow vehicles parking space next to university buildings. University students and faculty would then only have a 50 ft. walk to class.

Back to doldrums

Editor,

After reading Ron & Marguerite Huggins' letter, I had to say to myself, "Ah yes, isn't it nice to know that we have proved to ourselves that the destruction of Jericho happened just like the Bible said. Now we know that all is right in heaven and on earth. We can go back to our spiritual doldrums, realizing that all the religious propositions we cherish must be true, and never really dealing with the question raised by Nick Gier"; and that question is this, "Why are the fundamentalists always making such a wrang-wrang about the need for proofs of the Bible's authenticity when, for the major Protestant reformers like Luther and Calvin, this position was blasphemous?"

For Calvin, the Bible is self-authenticating and it is not "right for it to be made the subject of argument." He also said that "we seek no proofs, no marks or genuineness upon which our judgment may lean."

Luther and Calvin knew the difference between faith and reason, religion and science. They shared with the Apostle

Paul the view that "faith is a gift of God, and not of your own doing," or as Luther would say, "I cannot by my own power and strength believe in Christ my Lord, but I have been called by the Gospel, enlightened by its gifts, and kept safe in its promises."

Next, it is important to note that "truth" in the scriptures is not seen as a set of propositions or dogmas that can be proved true or not true but is something that can only be known through historical praxis, or as Jesus says, "those that do my truth will know the doctrine." "Truth" is thus seen as arising from the telling of different parts of the Biblical story: that is, it is essentially parabolic in form.

In conclusion, the only real "truth" that has any value, biblically speaking, is that lived out in relationship to the neighbor in acts of loving kindness. The neighbor of course being anyone: male or female, straight or gay, since all people, though sinners, are created in the image of God.

Un-American

Editor,

I think the reason we're experiencing all this hostility toward bicycle riders is a lack of understanding.

What is the American cyclist? He is an industrious, honest and good-natured individual who will rescue a kitty or walk girls home on a dark night.

But more than that, he is American; Made of the stuff that allowed this country to be great. No gas pedal, no motor, no cassette deck. Using only leg power, he is quiet, clean and usually inoffensive.

Contrast this to the motorist. Walking home this afternoon you may cross paths with a car or two. Look carefully at the driver. There's a good chance you'll see a narrow-minded, self-righteous and inconsiderate being that aligns itself with the Nazi/Commie party.

All very un-American.

Puttin' on my top hat

Who are we trying to fool? It occurs to us that this university is putting on a false-front to make some somè kind of super-positive impression on Robert Redford. Last night Redford was feted at a by-invitation-only reception in Gault Hall. But it was hardly the Gault Hall you may have stumbled through.

Nobody's telling how much or where it came from, but a considerable number of dollars were spent sprucing up the old cafeteria and lounge areas. Paint and carpet and new drapes and couches borrowed from other dorm areas and rented napkins and student servants—all for two hours of basking in the radiance of a motion picture actor/director who surely has been to ritzier places than the University of Idaho could ever aspire to be.

Redford, one wants to believe, chose to house his Institute for Resource Management at WSU and UI because their academic and research credentials were impressive. It is ludicrous and provincial for us to put on the dog this way for anybody. If we cannot be proud enough to show our face as it is, there's something wrong.

Holy concrete!

We thought surely by now the downtown would again be safe for human habitation; in the last few months we've been assured the revitalization project would be completed by the beginning of school, then it was before the weather turned. Now we hear that it may take still longer. What gives?

Downtown Moscow used to be navigable, even if not terribly attractive. Today it's positively obscene. There are holes everywhere, and those few hole-less places have been firmly paved over with tons of concrete. It looks hideous, and from what we see now it won't get much less hideous. In fact, the trend seems to be toward more concrete, not less.

Somehow we got the impression the downtown would be green; we understood that one of the reasons for making the streets narrower was to plant trees and shrubbery. We obviously were wrong. The city has assiduously paved over the large areas of Main Street that are no longer in the traffic flow. We simply can't imagine why they chose paving instead of plants. Perhaps someone in city government was once attacked by a raging houseplant.

This is not the first time the Argonaut has spoken on this issue. We have gotten very little response, if any. Those in city government who have been so good at foisting this boondoggle on the citizenry of Moscow ought to be held accountable for this disaster. There is an election next month; candidates will be seeking your votes. Don't give them the votes they need until they explain why downtown Moscow is such a mess, and what they intend to do about it.

Hot time in C d'A

This weekend, residents of the Inland Empire have the unique opportunity to make themselves heard. For the next couple of days the bigwigs of the Republican Party will be gathering in Coeur d'Alene.

Notables at this Western States Conference will include Idaho Senators James McClure and Steve Symms, Lt. Gov. Phil Batt, Washington Gov. John Spellman, and Interior Secretary James Watt. All will be involved in speeches, discussions, panels and a wind-up banquet Saturday night.

If you are enamored of what the Republicans have been doing since the Reagan administration took over, you might enjoy trekking north to support them.

On the other hand, if you have some trouble with Reaganomics and Watt's bizarre environmental stance, you might join the coalition of folks who are getting together Saturday at noon to protest governmental policies that affect labor, foreign affairs, women's issues and the poor.

Either way, you probably owe it to yourself to get involved with the national political scene while it's so close to home.

Tokenism ... no thanks

Lewis Day

Sandra Day O'Connor sits on the Supreme Court today, a milestone for women's rights. So what?

I fear that it will be hard to view Justice O'Connor as little more than a token until President Reagan makes some substantial moves to really do something for the status of women in this country. With the single glaring exception of O'Connor, Reagan's record on women and minorities has been a disaster. He seems to think the appointment of one woman to the Supreme Court will somehow absolve him of his record regarding women. He has given us Samuel Pierce as Secretary of Housing and Urban Development as his token black. Samuel Pierce? See what I mean? I would wager that no more than ten people on this campus have even heard of Pierce. Reagan's token appointees seem to get buried. Aside from Pierce and O'Connor, Reagan's minority appointees are—virtually nonexistent.

Reagan has exhibited his hostility towards improved conditions for minorities—the poor, needy, and powerless. He persuaded the Republican Party to drop its long-standing commitment to passage of the Equal Rights Amendment last year. This year he has decided to reopen the war on poverty, only now it's war on the poor! His cutbacks in social services—food stamps, CETA, health programs, and education—show him to be insensitive to the needs of the people of this nation. Reagan appears to be of the conviction that "anything is possible in America," and seems to think that the poor are poor by choice. He justifies his positions by claiming he too, was poor at one time. That may be true, but ol' RR has a couple things going for him—he is white and male.

Reagan isn't the only one to blame. After all, institutionalized injustice is not the product of his administration, it is merely a facet of it. There is a whole mindset which says women have their place," and minorities (be they Amerindian, blacks, Asians, Hispanics, gays or the handicapped) aren't deserving of the same rights as whites.

Progress has been made in the area of civil rights for blacks. Not much has been done to provide them with economic rights so that they can compete for jobs and education. Racism is still very alive, even in northern Idaho.

Women, like blacks, have made strides in the areas of political and economic rights. The Equal Rights Amendment is essential for the maintenance and continuation of these rights. Most Americans believe in equal rights for all citizens, yet a handful of men in a few states have thwarted this necessary progress. It's time for women to stop asking for, and start demanding their rights.

Social acceptance of gays was on the rise before the election of Reagan. With his tacit approval, the religious zealots of the right have attacked gays, and are attempting to turn the clock back to the middle ages. Gays are no more deserving of prejudice than are people with blue eyes or blond hair.

The Reagan administration seems to be out to get the handicapped, too.

Program cutbacks are sure to cut into support programs for the handicapped. Perhaps Ron doesn't like to see wheelchairs—they remind him of Franklin Roosevelt, who started a good many of the programs Reagan seems bent upon destroying.

Maybe if it were put in political terms, Ronnie might understand. After all, of the voting age public, women make up 50 percent, 13 percent are black, and gays constitute 10 percent, and with all the others Reagan has alienated ... that's a pretty formidable group! Perhaps it's time to send him a message; give him a real mandate from the people.

Joe meets Kit Carson in The Time Of Your Life.

New Hartung production explores lives, loves, dreams

by Lewis Day

An aged waterfront saloon of the late '30's is the setting for the William Saroyan drama, The Time Of Your Life. The show, which opens tonight, is about the lives and loves of a host of characters who pass through the bar. The bar was once one of San Francisco's finest.

At the beginning of the play the bar is beyond its prime, but traces of the elegance of times past can be seen. Set designer Nancy Thompson said, "...you really have to be giving of your creative self," in design. Thompson pedaled throughout the Palouse in search of the perfect bar but eventually found what she was looking for on an old postcard. Although the final design was hers, Thompson created the set in close collaboration with Director Roy Fluhrer, costumer Emily Ellis, and lighting designer Jon Putnam. The construction of the set was done by Theatre Arts students, under the direction of Thompson, Putnam, and Graduate Assistant John Herzog.

The show takes place in the San Francisco of 1939, with references to the impending storm of World War II mentioned frequently. The central character is a "mysterious man" named Joe. Just Joe. According to theater comment, Joe's sole reason for being in the bar is his desire "to help people." Jack Colclough stars as Joe.

Fluhrer, who is also the chairman of the Theatre Arts department says Joe is a man who accepts people as they are. He permits people their dreams, without throwing the grim reality of life back at them.

"Joe takes the time most of us don't, to be with people without putting any restrictions on them," Fluhrer said. He said his job as director is "revealing as much as my understanding permits me in this play." He also said that Saroyan responds to the impending threat of war by showing Joe as the force that can renew people's hopes.

Saroyan's characters come alive as Fluhrer "assists the actors in developing characters that will achieve the greatest emotional impact for the audience."

A "gung-ho" policeman named Blick is seen as a reminder of the Nazi threat; and there's also the bartender (usually the one to hear life's troubles) telling his to Joe instead.

Throughout the play all kinds of characters wander in and out of the saloon, including hoods, sailors, prostitutes, and bums. Others who come into the bar include Kitty Duvall, a farm girl turned hooker, and Tom, Joe's slow-witted friend. Kitty and Tom fall in love.

"The Time Of Your Life" won the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award in 1940. The show plays at the Ernest Hartung Theatre on campus with opening night tonight. The play continues its run Saturday and Sunday, and also Oct. 23-25. Curtain time is 8 p.m. each evening. Tickets are available at the Bon or at the door. Student tickets are $2. Non-students must pay $3.50.

FILM

by John V. Sullivan

There are two kinds of people in this world: those who read comic books and those who don't. If you're the kind who likes to sneak off with an old issue of "Green Lantern," then Heavy Metal is for you.

Heavy Metal, a full length animated movie based on the "adult" comic book of the same name, comes from the same people who gave us Animal House, Meatballs and Stripes. These guys know how to shoot for the student audience, and Heavy Metal is no exception, with the obligatory sex and violence. Lots of it.

As long as you're willing to check your brains at the door, Heavy Metal is good fun. It's actually a collection of short features tightly interwoven by the big theme of—you guessed it—good versus evil. Fortunately the moral of the story is smothered by all of the sci-fi sex and violence. Don't worry about having to feel uplifted by this show.

Somehow the cartoon sex is just a little on the wierd side. I found it hard to suppress laughter every time one of the immensely muscled guys ended up in bed with one of the immensely chested girls, which happened again and again. I was sorry to see such a primitive view of women being thrust upon such soft brains, but with these moviemakers it unfortunately comes as no surprise.

This animation's for adults only

The Heavy Metal animation was pretty good most of the way through. It doesn't surpass Fantasia, but it comes closer than anything else I've seen. They didn't wimp out with lots of still shots or long psychedelic film sequences, an easy trap for animators to fall into.

The celebrated soundtrack for this flick reads like a "Who's Who" of seventies rock. Black Sabbath, Cheap Trick, Devo, Journey, Stevie Nicks and more fill the metallic cast. All of the tunes were written for this movie, and most of them are good stuff. My only complaint is, naturally, they weren't loud enough. The screams of people being vaporized were plenty loud, so it isn't the fault of the Kenworthy Theatre.

All in all, Heavy Metal presents a pretty dim view of human nature, if they were trying to present any view at all. Lots of random sex and lots of random violence. It's probably a good idea not to try to pull any message from this show, but just to look at it as good visual entertainment. Surely that's all the four bombed-out guys in front of me were doing, with their periodic exclamations of "Oh, wow!"

If you're burned out on Neil Simon comedies and true-life family movies, Heavy Metal is for you. Every now and then it's good to see a show with absolutely no redeeming features, as long as you don't feel guilty about it.

Moody Blues to play at WSU after No. 1 Long Distance Voyager

One of the most enduring acts in rock and roll, the Moody Blues, will be playing in the Washington State University Performing Arts Coliseum Sunday. They will play Pullman as part of a 17-city American tour.

The Moody Blues started in Birmingham, England as a rhythm-and-blues act, their first hit being "Go Now" in 1965. When subsequent singles failed to go anywhere, two members quit.

In 1967, with two replacements, the Moody Blues hit with the album Days of Future Past, and their now-characteristic sound of lush orchestral arrangements, heavy classical influences, and lots of strings and synthesizers.

After a string of successful albums and singles and the building of an enormous following, the band began to feel stagnant. In 1974, the five members went their separate ways to pursue various solo projects, none of which were commercially successful.

The band reformed in 1977 with the release of the LP Octave. The current line-up was completed in 1978 with the addition of keyboard player Patrick Moraz, who had previously replaced Rick Wakeman in the group Yes.

With the release of Long Distance Voyager, the Moody Blues' latest album, the personnel consists of flutist

Ray Thomas, 39, drummer Graeme Edge, 40, guitarist Justin Hayward, 34, bassist John Lodge, 38, and Moraz, 37. After 16 years, the Moody Blues have sold over 35 million records.

Sunday's performance will start at 7 p.m. Tickets are $9.50 and $10.50, and are available at Budget Tapes and Records in Moscow, Pullman and Lewiston, the Coliseum Box Office and the CUB in Pullman.

Unique clay works visit UI Gallery this week

Unique clay works are the subject of the Northern Rockies Clay 1981 exhibit at the University of Idaho Art Gallery through Oct. 25.

The exhibit, according to Beth Sellars of the gallery, is not a typical pottery display. The 100 displayed pieces are unusual in the sense that they are non-functional—not the usual pots and bowls. Sellars said some of these pieces do not even look like clay.

The exhibit is the creation of artists from Montana and Wyoming, and eight artists from Idaho, including two UI students, Clare Harris and Scott Plummer.

The exhibition was assembled by the Hockaday Center for the Arts in Kalispell, Mont., sponsored by the Atlantic Richfield Foundation and brought here with funds from the University Ceramics Group.

University Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9:30 a.m.-4 p.m. The gallery will remain open through homecoming weekend, Oct. 24-25, from 1-4 p.m.

Counseling center forms support group

If you are divorced, separated, or in the process of separating from your partner, a support group being formed by the Student Counseling Center may provide help in the adjustment.

James Morris, a counselor at the center, said the new group is designed to offer support and encouragement during a time which is very stressful for most individuals.

Morris said the group will assist individuals in coping with the confusions of leaving a partnership and re-entering single life.

Those interested in joining the group should contact Morris at the Student Counseling Center in room 309, UCC, 885-6716.

The Washington Idaho Symphony will open its 1981-82 season by featuring the world premier of Concerto for Orchestra Monday and Tuesday nights. The concerto was written by University of Idaho school of Music faculty member William Billingsley.

Billingsley is considered Idaho's foremost composer and teaches theory and composition here. His works have been performed nationally, including a performance at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

The concerto, to be performed in Pullman and Lewiston, has the musical idioms of blues, jazz, and country fiddle that Billingsley uses in his work.

The program will include pianist David Yeomans of the WSU faculty as guest soloist, performing the orchestra in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in d minor. Also in the program is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, Op. 11, No. 2.

Directing the 64-member ensemble will be James Schoepflin, of Pullman.

Monday's performance will be at 8 p.m. at Lewiston High School, and Tuesday's will be in WSU's Bryan Hall at 8 p.m.

Faculty

Many members of the council expressed concern that both lists were too long. James R. Reece, assistant professor in foreign languages and literature said too many courses are listed, and yet he has been told that some courses which should have been included, were not.

McQuillen noted that there is a lack of direction in the selection process. He said one group wants to create the "renaissance man or woman in Moscow," while another group seems to want to select courses that would generate large amounts of credit hours, to their own benefit.

The council heard discussion on the possibility of creating new courses that would be tailor-made to the core. It was noted that these new courses would cost money to create, and that money for new courses is currently unavailable.

Heimsch said, "If we're doing our job, we're training students. . . to look toward the future." He stated the university may eventually have to create those new courses for the core, and said it's an issue the faculty will have to face.

Members of the council, in an attempt to keep the number of proposed courses down, made several suggestions on how to limit the amount. Peter Haggart, professor of communication, said the council should define a general philosophy and then allow each college to prepare a list of courses.

Engineering Dean J. Richard Williams, proposed that each department in the university select four courses of its own to be included in the core, and then recommend other courses they would like to see from other departments.

Frank Seaman, director of general studies said, "There ought to be a quality check." Seaman has been outspoken in his desire to see poor courses eliminated from the core. Parks suggested that each department be requested to prioritize their lists.

Heimsch said the communication, physical education, and mathematics areas could be passed by the council with little problem.

He also said whatever courses were eventually selected, wouldn't be acceptable to everyone. He said he feels upper division courses should be included.

Alan De Lucia, associate professor of geography, said concepts of the core differ. "We have lost the thread of what we want the core to be," he said.

Daniel Junas, a UI student and member of the UCC felt the core had gotten too large. "The proposed list of the courses is so large as to be unwieldy," he said. Junas also commented, "We have to have some common core of knowledge," and said the core needs to be focused on areas of education that are basic and fundamental.

If the proposals are approved, construction on Campus Drive and Line Street is scheduled to begin no later than Dec. 1, 1981, according to the agenda prepared for the council meeting. But, McLaughlin said, "all the changes are not going to occur overnight."

Money to pay for the modifications would come from the Physical Plant budget and donations. Initial modifications would cost $95,000 in the first year and final changes would be completed in five years at an estimated cost of $400,000.

Pitman has agreed to look into the orientation budget to try to come up with at least part of the money, Stoddard said.

"It was just a miscommunication and it won't happen again," Stoddard said.

In other business, the senate approved the appointments of Stan Holloway to the judicial council; Walter Hellinger, communications board; Brent Crossley, golf course board; Dave Cooper, SUB board; and Sue Evans, promotions department. These were each one year terms. Cindy Peterson was appointed to the SUB board for a half-year term.

The senate also approved the appointment of Tom Crossman to ASUI finance manager.

In addition, the senate approved a special ASUI committee to revise the job description of the ASUI programs co-ordinator position. A special committee was formed for this purpose because the current programs coordinator, Imogene Rush, will be retiring sometime this semester.

Two resolutions were approved thanking Bill McLaughlin and Nels Reese for their efforts on the proposed street modification project.

Stern test awaits gridders in Bozeman

It wasn't supposed to happen this way, but it's true; the Idaho Vandals, six games into the 1981 season, are still looking for their first conference victory.

The chore won't be an easy one, as Coach Jerry Davitch's club will be on the road—in Bozeman to face the Montana State Bobcats, ranked seventh in the nation (Div I-AA) at one time this year. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m. (PDT) and the game will be broadcast on KRPL (1400 AM) beginning at 12:40 p.m.

"We are out of the conference race, playing away, it's their homecoming and we're coming off a loss. Because of all of those things, it's going to be difficult to reach down and come up with a good game," Davitch said.

Record-setting running back Russell Davis won't be available after injuring his back in last Saturday's 16-14 loss to Montana.

Montana State is 2-3 overall in 1981 and 0-2 in league play.

Spikers pick up two wins

Victories this past week over Washington State and Gonzaga have boosted defending Interstate League champion Idaho to a 16-6 overall record and perfect 3-0 league mark.

The scores from Pullman were 15-1, 9-15, 16-14 and 15-9, avenging an earlier loss to the Cougars. Against Gonzaga, Idaho prevailed in straight games 15-5, 15-7 and 15-8.

Today and Saturday, Coach Amanda Burk's squad will compete at Portland in the Tachikara PSU Classic.

Trot set Sat.

The Annual Turkey Trot will begin at the Golf Course Saturday morning, Oct. 17, with pre-registration preceding the 2-mile race for those not already entered. Participants may register today or 8 a.m. tomorrow.
