Senate discusses anti-tuition strategies

by Debbie Brisbois
Political Editor

Strategies to launch a campus-wide letter campaign, in an effort to stop an in-state tuition bill from being considered by the House Education Committee on Monday, were discussed at Wednesday's ASUI Senate meeting.

Doug Jones, chairman of the Political Concerns committee, told the senate the committee will start visiting living groups on Monday to encourage them to write letters to their legislators.

The Political Concerns Committee is comprised of about 35 students representing various legislative districts around the state. It is an on-campus lobbying effort to open communication between students and state leaders.

Jones said he plans to take paper and pens to the living groups and sit down next to students while they write their letters.

"While they write, we'll just keep giving them more reasons to oppose in-state tuition, and preserve Idaho's tradition of free education," said Jones.

He said it is important the letter writing campaign begins immediately because the procedure to pass the bill onto the floor or to veto it could happen sooner than expected.

Jones said there isn't much time for students to show their opposition.

If the bill eventually passes both the House committee and the House floor and goes onto the Senate, Jones is proposing sending busloads of students to Boise to lobby.

He said they are also trying to establish a phone line so students can call their representatives and voice their opinions.

Jones said if the bill is defeated in committee, it will probably be because the bill is poorly written and a better-written bill could be proposed later.

Andy Artis, ASUI president, told the Senate that it is important for students to show support now.

"If we come out strong against this bill, it will be less likely for a bill to come along and steamroll us later," he said.

He added that Lewis-Clark State College and Idaho State University also want to be involved in the phone drive, and LCSC would participate in sending student buses to Boise.

Sending buses to Boise is an extreme, Artis said, but added, "We want people to know we will go that far if necessary."

Artis said large businesses in the state may be asked for support against the bill because their influence could help sway legislators' votes.

"We have to get close to the big guns or tuition will become a more positive issue," he said.

He added that legislators are usually willing to make a deal.

"Everyone has a deal for you," he said.

Artis said he will also ask the Alumni Association to get involved in the tuition issue when it meets at Sun Valley this weekend.

Faculty Council looks at PE requirements for degrees

A proposal brought before the Faculty Council at Tuesday's meeting to allow another exemption to the physical education requirement again brought up the old question of whether P.E. is necessary for obtaining a degree.

The council defeated a proposal to exempt from the P.E. requirement students enrolled in the ROTC Officer Education Program. Exemptions are now allowed for those with medical problems that have been excused by a University of Idaho physician, 30 years old or older, majoring or minoring in physical education, mothers, veterans who have served in the military for more than a year, or certified by the Division of Health, Physical Education and Recreation as having demonstrated equivalent skill.

The exemption proposal had been sent to the council before. It was referred to the University Curriculum Committee when a motion was made to do away with all the exemptions to the P.E. requirement. When the UCC considered the motion as part of the proposed core curriculum, it recommended to the council that the exemptions be eliminated.

The Faculty Council in April, 1980 rejected the UCC's recommendation and retained the current policy.

Director of the Division of Health, Physical Education and Recreation Dorothy Zakrajsek, who is also a member of the council, said only about 15 requests for exemptions are made each year.

"This is one reason to get rid of the exemptions because they aren't getting used," she said.

Zakrajsek added that if the P.E. requirement was dropped, it would be the "first step in reducing other requirements so that there are less requirements in choosing an ROTC program."

Faculty Council Chairman Heimsch said with each exemption that is approved the requirement is weakened until it is questionable if the requirement is really necessary.

In other action, the council approved a motion defining what types of courses may be challenged by a student.

Only lecture courses and associated lab courses may be challenged.

The original proposal stated only lecture courses may be challenged, but council member Arland Hofstrand questioned whether this included laboratory classes, since some labs have their own credits.

ASUI committee members needed

All ASUI Committee positions are officially open for UI students who wish to get involved in student government.

Those people who have the most experience and are best qualified are the people for the job, said ASUI President Andy Artis.

Getting involved in these committees is an excellent way to get involved on campus, a great experience for your major, and a way to get hands-on experience, said Artis. He said it is also a way to meet people outside your living group and helps freshmen and sophomores get involved early on campus.

The committee members experience unlimited involvement. For members also work with administrators and people in the community, depending on the committee the person is placed on. The advantages are endless, and some positions are even paid, said Artis.

The deadline for applications is Jan. 29, according to a memo sent out by Nancy Atkinson. If there are any questions, Artis recommends talking with ASUI officials.

The time involvement is as much as you want to put into it. Applicants are strongly urged to talk to the committee heads about how much time the committee involvement would take.

To apply for a committee obtain a form at the ASUI offices, the SUB information desk, or from Artis or Nancy Atkinson. Fill out the form and return it to Artis. Artis then reviews the forms submitted, interviews the applicants personally, and makes his recommendations. The Senate Government Operations and Appointments Committee interviews the recommendations and either accepts or rejects the applications. Their recommendation is given to the Senate, which ultimately votes on the appointment.

Some committees include the Entertainment Committee which organizes concerts and the Communications Board which oversees The Gem, The Idaho Argonaut, and KUOI.

The Institute for Resource Management guaranteed to open in fall of this year

by Deborah Kovach
Staff Writer

The twice-delayed Institute for Resource Management is guaranteed to open next fall, according to Hope Moore, executive director of the project. But, she refused to say whether any funds have yet been committed to the Institute.

"We said that by Feb. 1 we're either going to have the money or we're not going to have the money. And we're either going to sign the agreement to open the institute or we're not," she said cutting off further questions by restating that answer.

Moore has told other area newspapers, however, that $300,000 has been raised and that everything is going according to schedule. The University of Idaho and Washington State University asked the Institute last fall to guarantee $400,000 to assure the students of a starting date.

Wayne Hager, the Institute's UI director, said the agreement is to be signed in February. "We're sort of in the stages of legal agreement right now," he said. Hager added that Moore's office in Washington, D.C. is gathering funds by soliciting contributions from corporations and private individuals.

The institute is to be run jointly by this university and WSU. Its program is designed to present a balanced approach between resource development and conservation. Its intent is to promote "responsible" use of resources.

Robert Redford, chief proponent of the institute, said he chose the joint program because all the resource materials that make up issues—land, air, water, forests and minerals—are available in the Palouse area.

Redford visited the two universities last fall, shortly after it was announced that the Institute would not open for the spring semester.

When reporters asked him about the $300,000 in seed money needed to hire a professional fund raiser, Redford said, "That's our business. We're working on it."

Redford attributed funding problems to over-enthusiasm. He had hoped to open the program as soon as possible, but had not allowed sufficient time to gather the $6 million in endowments he felt the institute needed before opening its doors.

Moore indicated last fall that a plan was being considered in which six men, including Redford, would pledge money and get matching pledges from corporations and private individuals. Yesterday, however, she declined to verify whether other sources will also fund the institute.

Dear legislator...

This week the University of Idaho men's basketball team was ranked number eight in the nation by the AP and the UPI. The women's basketball team is also doing well, with a recent win in the Dial Classic tourney in Wyoming. UI track has had successful national and international competitors. Even football is looking up!

University of Idaho athletic programs are, in short, fantastic. But it didn't happen overnight.

For at least a decade, Idaho's universities have been pumping money into varsity athletics in hopes the money would produce winning teams and increase alumni support. It worked!

Campus spirit is "Big Sky High." Alumni, even in these rough economic times are coming up with the needed money to maintain the athletic quality for which the state has worked so hard.

Putting money into programs does improve the quality—athletics proves this. It's time to use the theory on academics. We're not suggesting athletic cuts, only giving quality education an equal chance.

State shortfall is the big problem. Idaho now ranks number 50 in the nation in state allocations for both public schools and higher education.

In the face of this dreary situation, the House Committee on Education is going to consider an in-state tuition bill this week. If the bill is successful, Idaho's college students would be forced to pay a percentage of the instructional costs of going to school. The percentage would be determined by the legislature.

Currently, this would be in direct violation of the Idaho Constitution. But the State Board of Education/Board of Regents supposedly set a precedent some ten years ago, which made it "O.K." to charge students for instruction.

When the University Classroom Center was built, it became necessary to use student money. It was illegal to use student funds to construct buildings with classrooms, but the Board decided it was fine and dandy to use the money—thus establishing a precedent which threatens to do away with the free education many Idaho legislators received.

The bill going before the Education Committee will probably start the percentage students pay at a pretty low figure.

The problem is that there is nothing stopping the legislature from raising the percentage as the years go on. Future Idaho students are faced with the possibility of no state funds to help alleviate the high cost of tuition.

In addition to education's financial woes, the legislature is looking at limited federal funds and political embargoes threatening Idaho's agricultural market, making it essential to investigate raising some taxes. (Agriculture, by the way, makes up over 50 percent of Idaho's gross state product.)

Far be it from this editorial staff to re-state the problems and not suggest a solution.

Consider Idaho's rock-bottom ranking in state money for education. Coincidentally, we rank pretty low with a three percent sales tax. This could be the answer to the Gem State's money (or lack of money) problems.

The possibility of adding a penny or two onto the state sales tax, even though elections are coming up, is something we feel should be looked into.

Students don't mind paying to improve their education as much as they mind paying to make up state shortfall.

"HEY. HOW'S ABOUT LETTING ME USE YOUR EQUIPMENT, TOO?"

Whose U?

Tom von Alten

While I was reading the story in last Friday's Idaho Argonaut about the Special Services project and the Learning Skills Center, my friend Herb, who was reading over my shoulder asked, "Development of the mind? Isn't that what college is for?"

"Of course," I replied, "but that doesn't mean that's what they're trying to do."

I've been around this university too long to really believe that the most important goal of those in charge is to develop students' minds. Develop careers, possibly (especially their own), but minds are only secondary tools.

What has me writing again is reading in the paper that the new football coach's salary is going to be $38,000. That's more than the budget for Agriculture and Forestry Instructional and Graduate Assistants combined. (I did a little research.) It's more than the Forestry Wildlife Research and Fisheries unit budgets combined. And it's more than the budget of the General Studies program.

What really hit hard is that the budget for the Learning Skills Center is only $36,200—less than for a football coach. That budget has to cover the salaries of two people as well as the Center's operating expenses.

If you've been up to the third floor of the Faculty Office Complex-West lately, you know that there are more than two people running the show. Four of them (plus assorted others) are paid by the Special Services project described in the article. Without that grant, the Learning Skills Center could barely serve one third as many students.

What's the big deal? Just that the Learning Center is one of the few places on campus where students can get personalized attention and a focus on the tools they need for success in college and out. In concrete terms, a tutor can mean the difference between an F and a C. Students who take Reading and Study Skills (GS 106) can expect their grade point to improve measurably.

But it's hard times here, right? Not everywhere, though. If you take the six budgets I've mentioned (Ag IA/GA, Forestry IA/GA, Forestry Wildlife Research, the Fisheries Unit, the General Studies Program and the Learning Skills Center) and add them together, you will be $5,000 short of the budget for salaries—just salaries—for intercollegiate athletics administration.

If you haven't started to wonder what the university's administrators are doing with all that money, consider that the budget item labeled "Executive" which includes only salaries related to intercollegiate athletics totals over $480,000—over three-and-a-half times those six budgets combined.

Arguments in favor of intercollegiate athletics become more tenuous as enrollment increases while budgets (for academics anyway) do not. When 40 percent of English 103 students fail, it is a sign of serious neglect (not high standards as some people think).

In short, people whom this university is supposed to benefit are getting the shaft. The state tax money and our fees are going to facilities we don't need and to paper-pushers who don't earn a teacher's pay, much less what they get.

I don't want to just complain—I've got a suggestion to improve the situation. It's too late to stop the East End Addition, but it's not too late for the administrators of the university to admit that the present financial exigency cannot be relieved by cutting everyone else's budget.

I propose that all administration salaries be cut 10 percent, from the Big Man on down, and further, that this money be spent solely for improving the academic quality of the university, through faculty salaries and educational facilities.

Come on you guys—you have to admit that three or four grand won't crimp your lifestyle that much. Your credit's good.

This way, you can take pride in our university rather than watch it deteriorate.

Tom von Alten is a student of mechanical engineering and works for Special Services as a tutor.

Solidarity alert

Editor,

National Week of Solidarity with El Salvador is being observed by the people in Moscow through the 24th of January. Upcoming events include a film and a candlelight vigil.

The film, El Salvador: The People Will Win, will be presented to the public at three different times this Sunday, January 24th. The first and third showings will be at 1 p.m. and again at 8 p.m. in the SUB on the second floor in the Gold Room. The second showing will be at 4 p.m. at Cafe Libre, 510 S. Main, Moscow.

Both Northern Idaho Committee on El Salvador (N.I.C.E.S.) and Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (C.I.S.P.E.S.) are sponsoring the film. It is 80 minutes long and focuses on the crisis in El Salvador with the point of view of the over 150 Salvadorean Organizations which on April 18, 1980, united to form the Democratic Revolutionary Front (F.D.R.). The candlelight vigil, a nation-wide observance, will be in Pullman at the High St. Mall on Main from 4:30-6 p.m. Friday, January 22.

At the national level, solidarity committees across the U.S. will engage in outreach and educational activities in their communities. Activities will be designed to make support by the people in the U.S. with the Salvadorean people as visible as possible. Black armbands, with buttons and slogans about El Salvador will be worn to work and in the schools throughout the week of activities. There will be candlelight vigils on the evening of Friday, January 22nd in public places in cities throughout the country.

There is good reason for observing National Week of Solidarity with El Salvador during the month of January. On January 22, 1932, peasants and workers had organized in El Salvador for better living and working conditions. Within three weeks, the Salvadorean military killed 30,000 of them. On the very same day in 1980, the masses organized and a peaceful march was started to protest the same grievances. The peaceful march was stopped quickly by Salvadorean government security forces, leaving 54 dead and an untold number wounded. On January 13, 1981, a general strike was called by unions and other businesses, but the government forces quickly responded by taking over the factories and controlling all public transportation.

The U.S. is currently training about 1000 Salvadorean soldiers at Fort Bragg, home of the Green Berets and of the J.F.K. Special Warfare Center which has directed U.S. counterinsurgency operations in the third world for two decades. Earlier this week 500 to 600 junior officers from El Salvador arrived in the U.S. to begin training at Fort Benning, Ga.

In response to this, more and more people in the U.S. and around the world will be opposing U.S. military involvement in El Salvador by celebrating the International Day of Solidarity with the people of El Salvador on January 22, 1982.

Murky air

Editor,

Early indications are that the 1982 Legislature will face budget decisions as or more difficult than those faced last session. Legislative leaders say that the Bureau of Air Quality will probably not be reinstated, and that Idaho's other environmental programs are threatened by further cuts.

At the present time the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) handles the air quality monitoring in Idaho. The federal program now underway by EPA is shrinking fast. Almost one third of Idaho's air quality monitoring network has been closed. No planning and virtually no enforcement are occurring. The state program had 23 employees; the federal program now replacing it has 10. And, EPA faces 40-60 percent budget cuts in fiscal year 1983, so further reduction is predicted.

Air quality is a state responsibility. This is the philosophy of the Reagan Administration, and is the rhetoric of the Idaho Legislature. But the Legislature's elimination of the Bureau of Air Quality is undermining the Reagan objective of returning environmental regulation to the states. A state program is cheap. Reinstatement will cost $250,000, or about 25 cents per Idahoan per year. The current federal program is just as costly as the state program was, with less than half the employees.

The only way to revive the Bureau of Air Quality is for hundreds of Idahoans from all parts of the state to contact members of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee (JFAC), and other legislators, starting right now. One of our legislators, Rep. Tom Boyd, is a member of JFAC. Last year he voted against elimination of the Bureau of Air Quality. This year we need his vote, but we also need his active voice for air quality. I urge you all to write to Rep Tom Boyd and to the rest of the JFAC to reinstate the Bureau of Air Quality. Present clean air is a positive economic benefit to our recreation industry and a key part of our great quality of life. It is important that you write and express your view. Write to: Rep. Tom Boyd, JFAC, Idaho Statehouse, Boise, ID 83720 or call 334-2000. Thank you.

Be aggressive

Editor,

The recent article "Idaho Agriculture future looks financially bleak" by Mark Croy, staff writer, brought out some interesting facts about the economic situation for the Idaho farmer, however, too many times we fail to get to the grass roots of the problem. Dean of the College of Agriculture Raymond Miller made the factual statement that farmers and others involved in agriculture may face hard times this year; he's right, but there is even a greater chance that it is going to get worse. The most important segment of agriculture, concerning today's youth is also being hit hard financially. Vocational Agriculture and the Future Farmers of America (FFA) are being kicked around these days in Washington D.C. and in many state capitals. I hope the University of Idaho Collegiate FFA chapter is aware of the behind the scene hedging of funds for all forms of Vocational Education.

What do educators have against Vo-Ag and the FFA? Some educators say that teaching Vo-Ag is "old hat" - that the number of farmers to be replaced are dwindling fast. Others point out that Vo-Ag is bucking the era of the squeaking wheel, where public money goes to those who shout the loudest and cause the most trouble. We know that our nation is in a time of an economic downfall and that we too must buckle down and try to follow the Reagan administration philosophy, however, agriculture is Idaho's number one industry and it serves as the backbone of this nation. It's high time that Vo-Ag, FFA and farmers in general get aggressive and fight for what they do. The idea behind Vo-Ag has been to teach students to farm. The number of commercial sized farms are increasing every day. A student can use his information to farm or he can use it to run a farm supply store, repair tractors or be a county agent. About half of the Vo-Ag graduates now go into agribusiness, the ever growing part of the food and fiber business that stretches from the farm to the shopping cart.

Many a student would be a highschool drop-out if it weren't for the Vo-Ag classes and the FFA. The FFA is unmatched at tying together the knowledge of leadership, citizenship and cooperation and giving that knowledge the opportunity to expand and to be placed in some sort of hands-on experience situation. There is no cop out culture. Doing your thing in Vo-Ag and the FFA is doing something worth while. The Vo-Ag and FFA kind of enterprise and youth leadership is priceless in today's drifting society. If you believe it, you'd better start telling it, shouting about it, and even causing trouble - if you want to keep your Vo-Ag programs and those students in the blue and gold jackets. To the collegiate FFA chapter here on campus I say this, we need to hear more from you!

Foto fun

Editor,

For a year and a half now I have been instructing a non-credit photo course. Because of increasing interest, I am planning to expand and create a FOTO CLUB. On January 27th at 7 p.m., in the Vandal Lounge of the SUB, the first organizational meeting will take place and all those interested are invited to come (all ages accepted).

Person on the Street

In light of the success of the Idaho men's basketball team, in both the AP and UPI polls, this week's question was, "What do you think of the Vandal basketball team and seating in the Dome?"

Diane Schaal, freshman in secondary ed / math: "I think they're doing a really good job, and I hope they go a long way. At the ISU game we had a hard time getting a seat. We had to be behind the score clock, and could only see part of the court, but we still had a good time."

Dave Connolly, sophomore in chemistry: "I think they're pretty good. You don't have any trouble getting a seat if you go an hour-and-a-half early."

Christine Sochinsky, senior in political science: "I think it's great that they're ranked eighth. It's quite an accomplishment for such a small school. It's good for the prestige of the school. I've worked at a few games as an usher, and I'm really glad to see the support that the students and the local people give the team."

Marvin Nottingham, college of education instructor: "I assume that the experts know what they are doing in ranking the Vandals. I think they'll run into some tough competition down in North Carolina, but I think they'll beat Notre Dame—they're getting kind of cocky."

Greg Diehl, junior in physical education: "I think they're doing great. They have as good a chance as anyone of making it to the top. Last weekend it was hard to find a seat at the games."

Lois Pace demands reinstatement to home economics position

by Steve Nelson
Staff Writer

Lois W. Pace, dismissed by the University of Idaho last year, has requested reinstatement in her former position, but Raymond J. Miller, Dean of the College of Agriculture, said Tuesday the position is filled.

In a letter to Miller, dated Dec. 24, Pace requested reinstatement as Home Economics Program Leader. The position became available in December, following the retirement of Ruth Spidahl.

Mary Ann Lawroski, an Extension Home Economist from Idaho Falls, assumed the position of program leader Jan. 4, on an acting basis for the next six months.

Miller refused to comment on why Lawroski was hired and Pace's request denied, but he did say a committee is being appointed to study how the Department of Home Economics should be structured on campus. "I don't know what report will come out of the committee," he said.

In her letter to Miller, Pace said at the time of her initial layoff in 1979, her duties included those of the Home Economic Program Leaders. Furthermore, she wrote that according to university policy, her former position cannot be filled until three years from the date of layoff, unless she has been offered the position and has not accepted the offer within 30 days. Pace requested reinstatement in the letter because she was laid off less than three years ago.

Pace is planning legal action to fight her termination June 30, 1981. At that time, she was the extension 4-H/youth specialist in home economics. Prior to that time, she served nine years as the state Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program Coordinator.

Pace has yet to file papers in court contesting her termination, and neither she nor her lawyer, Roy Mosman, are willing to discuss legal actions.

Pace is receiving financial backing from the American Federation of Teachers (AFT), American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Idaho Federation of Teachers.

Pace said she and her supporters do not understand how the university could lay off faculty members in the College of Agriculture last spring because of a financial emergency, and then allow the college to carry more than $300,000 over to 1982.

Miller said about $130,000 was "earmarked for federally funded programs," and could not be used to support areas declared in the financial emergency: Agriculture Research and Cooperative Extension. Another $130,000 was capital outlay money already committed, but due to bid processes, purchases were not made, Miller said.

He said the remaining $100,000 is used to cover increases in operating costs and unexpected expenses at locations around the state. He said the College of Agriculture's inflation increases have gone up about twice as much as the consumer price index, and the cost of operating agricultural programs has also increased.

"We can't deficit spend, so we must carry surpluses in our accounts," Miller said.

Despite objections from Pace, AFT and AAUP, Miller said the financial emergency was real. He said that at the time of the layoffs, the college had seven percent salary increases, 20 percent operating cost increases and only a three percent budget increase.

Don some armor, grab a sword and go back 400 years

by Lori Ann White
Staff Writer

I wasn't sure what to expect. Should I dress formally? In jeans? Should I be prepared to bow, curtsy, or use a special title?

I was as nervous as if I were going to visit royalty. I had been granted an audience by Milord Irone of the Blue Star, Seneschal of the Shire of the Blue Mountain.

Shire of the Blue Mountain? What's that? And what's a seneschal?

In this case, seneschal means president, and the Shire of the Blue Star is the Moscow chapter of the Society for Creative Anachronism, a "semi-historic group," as Milord Irone says. Irone is also known by a more mundane name. He is none other than Greg Chaney, a University of Idaho freshman from Oregon who is majoring in cartography and geography.

The SCA, Chaney explained, is an international non-profit educational society whose members learn about the past by choosing different time periods and creating characters from those time periods.

There are rules, however. A prospective member must choose a time period before 1600 and the character he creates should be human. This, said Chaney, is to help distinguish the society from various fantasy games which involve non-human characters and the use of magic.

"This is not Dungeons and Dragons," said Chaney. "It's all real. Maybe not authentic, but real."

Chaney said he became interested in the SCA three years ago and joined a group in Phoenix. There he became involved in such good old-fashioned activities as sword fights, wars, tournaments of various types, and revels.

The sword fighting and warring attracts the most attention, but Chaney is quick to point out that safety is stressed. Opponents on the battlefield use swords of rattan, often hand-made, and shields, also hand-made. Steel weapons of any kind are not allowed on the field, and fights are closely watched.

Chaney compares the risk involved to that of another more modern sport. "It's right about the equivalent of football or less, in danger to the participants," he said.

As a fighter's prowess increases from hard work in various raids, wars, and tournaments, honors mount. Finally a council of knights unanimously choose him—or her—to join their ranks. He or she then merits the title of Lord or Lady. But these titles are not given lightly.

"You don't start out saying, 'Well, I'm a knight.' We don't use the title

loosely." Sword fighting brings most of the attention, said Chaney, but that is not all there is to the society. Members can be anything they choose, just so long as such people existed in ancient times. SCA members are dancers, minstrels, jugglers, magicians, and craftsmen of various types, including armourers, costumers, and cooks.

One popular craftsman is the brewer, who brews the official drink of the society called mead. Mead, explained Chaney, is any alcohol made of fermented honey, and is very popular at the society's revels.

Revels are like "big parties," said Chaney, and everyone comes dressed in costume, prepared to listen to singers and dancers, and watch awards given to valiant knights or skillful craftsmen. Revels can get quite large in size.

For example, Chaney recently went to Seattle, Wash. to attend the coronation of the king and queen of An Tir, a recently formed kingdom within the SCA.

An Tir is one of the seven SCA kingdoms around the world that govern, in decreasing order of size, principalities, baronies, and shires, such as the Blue Mountain. The king of each kingdom is the best fighter in the realm, and after he is chosen, he picks a queen.

But the SCA is an equal opportunity organization, said Chaney. Sometimes, the best king for the job turns out to be a queen, when a woman is found to be the greatest fighter in the kingdom. She then chooses a king and they are crowned.

As the titles demonstrate, "Medieval Europe is where we started," said Chaney, but members are not restricted to any particular time or culture. This leads to some strange cultural mixes. "Like a Viking and a samurai, together, the best of friends," Chaney explained.

One important duty Chaney discharged as Irone while in An Tir was to ask to be officially recognized by the SCA. He did this by begging for the king's protection. When the king granted his boon, the Shire of the Blue Mountain became an official chapter of the society.

But there is still much hardship ahead for the little shire. On Jan. 30, said Chaney, "We're going to be raided by Waste Keep in the Dome." Waste Keep is a larger shire from the Richland-Kennewick, Wash. and, unfortunately, Waste Keep has the experience and the advantage.

That's all right, says Chaney. If anyone is killed, they're just resurrected.

But why would anyone want to join a club where he could be killed, even if he is resurrected? Wouldn't that be depressing, to say the least?

"I'm still trying to figure out why I joined," said Chaney. "It's the sense of adventure, probably....It's a chance to live in and halfway create the ideals of a time past."

Ideals are stressed, according to Chaney. Ladies are treated courteously and gentlemen are always chivalrous. Knights fight with the tokens of the various damsels, which means they fight for the honor and glory of their patronesses.

"Chivalry and romance is the underlying tone of the whole thing," said Chaney.

This may be the major reason why the society, begun about 15 years ago by college students in San Francisco and Los Angeles, has grown to a world-wide organization with about 10,000 members. It affords a chance to live, at least for a while, in a time when values were clear-cut and life was simple, while leaving behind all of the worst aspects of bygone times—death, disease, tyranny.

"In a lot of ways the SCA is like stepping back in time," said Chaney. "In a lot of ways it's better."

Evolution will round up Palouse musicians and the friends of Peter Basoa

By Christine Williams
Staff Writer

Evolution, a benefit concert featuring a variety of Palouse musicians will be held Monday at 7 p.m. in the University of Idaho's Borah Theater.

The concert is being staged to raise money for Peter Basoa, music director of KUID FM. Basoa, a recent cancer victim, has no health insurance. His concerned friends have formed an informal group called the Friends of Peter Basoa and have earned over $9,000 in his behalf.

Evolution was chosen as the name of the concert because, according to Jeffrey Dawkins, organizer of the concert, it is a pro-life, healing event.

Dawkins said, The Friends of Peter Basoa feel that music is one of the true evolutionary forces in life which expresses and supports the advancement of the human condition." Dawkins hopes the concert will "give people something warm and loving to help their spirits advance."

The scheduled concert performers are all friends of Basoa who, Basoa said, "are all fantastic."

Performers will include, Joshua Yeidel and Sharon Cousins of Sun-on-the-Mountain performing songs from the Grateful Dead; pianist Terry Ellis, accompanied by singer Lori Smith; a jazz fusion group called Eclipse; folk singer Dan Mahr; UI student Bonnie Hoar; and, in one of her last Northwestern appearances, Mary Myers.

Basoa has recently returned from Seattle where he was receiving radiation treatment. "It's great to be back in Moscow. After eight weeks of rain, the snow is great. People really care here."

Basoa still runs the Friday night KUID FM show but intends to take it easy and recover from the cancer treatments. Basoa said, "I'm just happy to be alive!"

The KUID show is just a small part of what Basoa has done for the music community of Moscow. During the past seven years he has organized the Renaissance Fair and has done "hundreds" of music shows.

Dawkins said, "Peter has dedicated his life to bringing music to people as a service excluding personal gain."

Because of Basoa's contributions to the music community the friends of Peter Basoa want to do as much as they can for him. A benefit variety show is scheduled for Feb. 12 and another concert is being planned.

Tickets for the Evolution Concert are $2.50 and are available at Bookpeople, Guitars Friend of Moscow, and at the door.

Ghost Story—a familiar story, familiar faces

by Tracey Vaughan
Entertainment Editor

The title of Ghost Story says it all.

This movie teams up four great actors: Fred Astaire, John Houseman, Melvyn Douglas and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. in this chilling but simple ghost story. Unfortunately, the plot doesn't let them show much of the great talent they have exhibited in decades past. Alone, they each shine, but together they tend to cancel each other out (something like the "too many cooks spoil the broth" theory).

Based on the novel by Peter Straub, Ghost Story weaves a classic tale of suspense and horror involving murder and its cover-up, complicated by the victim's revenge.

Astaire, Houseman, Douglas and Fairbanks play lifelong friends and members of their own elite club, the Chowder Society, to which admissions is granted by the telling of a tale—a ghost story. The friends have a haunting, real secret which is the worst story of all.

One of the friends' two sons, both portrayed by Craig Wasson, are unwitting victims of their father's secret and unwitting lovers with a ghost.

The victim and the ghost is played by Alice Krige, an English actress who's dark fathomless eyes and unnerving, enigmatic half smile make the viewer decidedly uneasy.

Ghost Story, although simple and predictable, is entertaining and has its share of gruesome details. Something of an old-fashioned thriller, the movie relies more on the actors than on fancy special effects and excessive blood and gore. In this case, old fashioned is refreshing.

Ghost Story is playing at the Kenworthy Theatre through Jan. 26 at 7 and 9 p.m.

Mary and her music—headed for the top

By Alicia Gallagher
Staff Writer

Mary Myers, a locally known singer/songwriter, will be making her last Northwest performance this weekend before moving to Los Angeles. She will be at Dutch Jakes with Cahoots as well as being one of many area performers at a benefit concert for Peter Basoa Monday evening at the SUB.

Sitting cross-legged on the floor of the Vandal lounge, Myers discussed her time in Moscow and where she's headed, between bites of a stale oatmeal cookie . . .

"It was a disaster—I was terrified," recalls Myers of her first performance in Moscow, on a stage set up in what is now the TV lounge of the SUB.

Although Myers began performing her songs at coffeehouses in her native Chicago, she had "pretty much stopped performing" before moving to Moscow.

"I almost didn't even bring my guitar out with me," said Myers, who enrolled as an art education student when she came to Moscow in 1976. "I was always writing, though," she said. "It was a release for me."

Later, taking time off school, "because it was interfering with my music," she began performing again, while supporting herself as a waitress. Now that she has resumed performing, Myers hasn't stopped, and has appeared "anywhere you could perform" in this area.

Myers said she feels Moscow provides "a really encouraging atmosphere for me as a musician. Not only because there are a lot of musicians—and there are a lot of good ones—they help each other out...that's why I could get out of myself and open up and start performing again."

Myers sings her own material as well as "songs I wish I had written." Her songs are triggered by different things she has experienced. Some-and Myers will try to get a band together.

"We're going for a soft rock—well, I don't know how to classify it," she said. "We're not shooting for dance music, although if people want to dance to it that's fine, and we're not looking for a Top-40 bag."

"We intend to form a band and perform locally, get to know people. L.A. isn't the only place to go, but it is an area geared towards music, music-makers and performers," Myers said. "There is times she gets an idea while "dinking around on the guitar. Suddenly there's a 'spark'...then it has to be polished. You have to work at it."

The hardest part about her music? "Finishing a song," she laughed.

While appearing primarily as a solo artist, Myers has also been singing with a local country-rock band, Cahoots, for the past year or so. Cahoots' lead guitarist Joe Knadler will also be making the move to L.A., where he so much there to pick up on, to be exposed to. As long as you have stimuli, it will keep you going."

Although she isn't "geographically crazy about L.A.," Myers sees this move as a "crossroad" in her life, and is anxious to see where it leads.

"It's like you're on the edge of something—you know something is going to happen and your life is going to change," explains Myers. "It will be hard to leave Moscow, but it's something I need to do."

Ella Fitzgerald to appear at Jazz Festival

The queen of American jazz, Ella Fitzgerald, will be the featured entertainer at this year's University of Idaho Jazz Festival, March 4-6.

Fitzgerald has been awarded six Grammys, has over 150 record albums to her credit, and has been named Best Female Jazz Singer six times by Down Beat Magazine, among other honors.

Lynn Skinner, UI associate professor of music, and festival coordinator, said one of the reasons it was possible to schedule her for a concert here is that "she is interested in doing a festival mainly for young people."

Many other performers, as well as high school students from all over the northwest will participate in the Jazz Festival. For more information, call the School of Music, 885-6231.

Undefeated Idaho puts number 8 ranking on the line tonight

by Kevin Warnock
Sports Editor

Just when the fun started for the Idaho men's basketball program, the schedule calls for three tough road games in four days.

The Vandals, ranked 8th on both major polls, find that with the roses come the thorns as they prepare to do battle with Montana State tonight, Montana on Saturday and Notre Dame on Monday, Jan. 25.

in over a decade, are tough at home and own considerable experience in dealing with ranked basketball teams.

Under coach Richard "Digger" Phelps, Notre Dame has upset in past years: Marquette, DePaul, Kentucky and Virginia...all while the opponent was number one ranked in the nation.

Statistically, the Vandals enter this weekend's play shooting 53.8 percent from the field as a team and 70.9 percent from the line. Defensively, Idaho is limiting opponents to 40.3 percent field goal shooting and 75 percent from the charity stripe.

state rival Montana at Missoula. The Bobcats were picked by Inside Sports to win the league title this year and boast a first team All-Big Sky pick in forward Doug Hashley.

Idaho, 15-0 on the year including a 4-0 conference mark, has not won a basketball game at MSU since 1974.

Turning right around and playing the Grizzlies Saturday is another element of on-the-road basketball the Vandals will have to deal with. Montana, 8-5 overall and 1-2 in league play, had beaten Idaho 12 straight times in Dahlberg Arena up until 1980 when the Vandals won 51-44. Idaho also stopped the Grizzlies in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome last season 77-67.

It's well known the toughest place to be the visiting team in the Big Sky is at Montana.

Coach Don Monson's club will conclude it's trip with the first ever meeting between Idaho and Notre Dame. The Irish, while off to their worst start

The conference games with Montana State and Montana, tip-off at 7 p.m. PST and 6:30 p.m. PST, respectively. Both games may be heard locally on KRPL radio (AM 1400).

The contest with the Fighting Irish starts at 5 p.m. Along with KRPL's radio broadcast, USA cable network will televise the game on a delayed basis. It can be seen beginning at 8 p.m. Monday evening on cable channel 3.

Montana State, 6-11 overall with a 1-2 conference record, is coming off a big win against in-

Idaho's five starters all average in double figures scoring. Ken Owens leads the club with 16.7 ppg, while Gordie Herbert is at 14.1 ppg. Brian Kellerman, Phil Hopson and Kelvin Smith are averaging 11.5, 10.7 and 10.1 ppg respectively.

SI eyes Idaho next issue

Sports Illustrated, a weekly national magazine which sent a three-person delegation to cover the Idaho men's basketball team last weekend, will feature the Vandals in their Jan. 25 issue.

The title of the two-page article is "A Case of Vandalism in Big Sky Country."

Jack McCallum's report begins: "In the town of Moscow, Idaho, college hoops is a hotter subject than the price of peas and lentils, which is saying something, because Moscows calls itself the pea and lentil capital of the world. Yes, the University of Idaho—bordered by Canada on the north, the state of Washington on the west and the PAC-10 psychologically on all sides—has 'em buzzing at the coffee klatches around town where farmers and businessmen gather each morning to talk about the Vandals.

After victories last Friday and Saturday over Big Sky Conference rivals Idaho State (73-62) and Weber State (59-44), the Vandals were 15-0, one of only

Women blast L-C in league play

A tough full-court press defense took a spark from the Lewis-Clark State Warriors as the Idaho women's basketball team raced to a 80-52 win Wednesday night in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome.

With the win, the Vandals moved to 12-4 overall and 2-0 in Northwest Empire League play. Idaho now takes the weekend off before tangling at home with Gonzaga, Jan. 26 in another league game.

The Vandals were fresh off impressive wins in the Dial Classic Jan. 14-16 in Laramie, Wyo, but appeared a little sluggish in their contest with the Warriors.

Idaho led throughout the game, but when they did compile a big lead, the Warriors would score a barrage of points to close the gap. It wasn't until Vandal coach Pat Dobratz had her team employ the full-court press that the Warriors folded.

"Our press had some effect on them," said Dobratz. "We were a little flat all the way through, but when the press was put on them we had a chance to pull away."

Dobratz said she was pleased everyone was able to play in the game. She added it would help the entire team if everyone had some playing experience.

four undefeated major college teams. Sports Illustrated ranks them no. 11, and they'll probably move up in both wire-service polls.

Not bad for a school whose principal basketball legacy until this year was the Gus Johnson memorial jumping nail at the Corner Club in downtown Moscow. "I don't mean to overstate this," says coach Don Monson, "But I guess this is as big a thing athletically as has ever happened to the school."

Monson, a four-year substitute at Idaho during the '50s ("I never started one damn game here," he says), came back to Moscow in 1978 following a three-year 16-62 downer at Idaho that ended in the dismissal of coach Jim Jarvis after the 1977-78 season.

Monson brought with him a big stick and a 2-3 matchup zone culled from two years as an assistant to Jud Heathcote at Michigan State.
