

Lost in the shuffle

McCoy Hall was one of the two University of Idaho dormitories displaced in the Theophilus Tower move last spring. Actually, scattered would probably be a better description.

Most of last semester's residents of McCoy are now residents of someplace else, mainly by choice. They either didn't want to leave the Wallace Complex compartments they had grown used to, or they didn't want to "admit defeat" to the administration, so to speak.

However, the three members who stayed with the hall when it was moved to the 11th floor of the Tower don't hold any grudges. This is the second part of Lost in the Shuffle, and looks at McCoy Hall, a dormitory that's

There is an imposter on campus. McCoy Hall is not what is used to be.

Only three of the 31 women now living in the transplanted women's hall were members of last year's version. Verlene Kohler, a sophomore in animal science, Robbin Warner, a sophomore in international business, and Janine Gosselin, a sophomore in musical education, returned to their old-new hall and found in full of new faces, not the ones they knew before.

Technically not much has changed. McCoy is still a one-floor women's hall, but it's now located in the 11th floor of the Tower instead of the Wallace Complex, a direct result of the Theophilus Tower move. It is one of four new floors in the Tower that replaced Willis Sweet and Chrisman Hall. The 10th floor is composed of graduate and older female students and has yet to be given a name, while the 8th and 9th floors make up what is now called Neely hall, named after Marjorie Neely, a previous dean of women at this university.

The trio composing what's left of the original hall, for the most part, are content with the arrangement and like their new home.

"I was burned about the move, but I figured if I had to move, it was less of a hassle to move here. I wanted to stay with the hall, but not many of the girls showed up," said Warner.

Though Warner said the three like their new residence and are getting along fine, she said the hall isn't as close as the old one and is disorganized because it has all new officers.

Kohler agreed that the hall isn't as close as the previous one, and explained why so few women came back.

"Some of the girls graduated, three couldn't afford to come back, but most of the girls didn't move here because they didn't like the setup," she said.

Ron Ball, assistant director of student housing, was perplexed about the return rate to the hall and the reasons why.

"It's disappointing (that only three returned)," he said. "All of us spent a great deal of time making an accommodation the girls of McCoy Hall could be comfortable with."

That accommodation included a stipulation made by the women of McCoy that if they were going to have to move, they wanted the 11th floor of the Tower.

Bruce Pitman, dean of Student Advisory Services, said, "McCoy was placed on the 11th floor because we wanted to honor their preferences. They gave us an assurance there would be a fair amount of returnees. We tried to place them where they wanted to be."

Unfortunately, most of the old residents just didn't want to move into the Tower. Ann Gerosin, a sophomore in communications and former McCoy resident who moved to Campbell Hall rather than the Tower, felt the administration wasn't totally straight with the hall.

"We thought the decision had been made that we were going to be moved, so we thought if we had to, we were going to get the best deal we could," she said. "The administration must have taken this as an affirmative sign that we wanted to move, so we played right into their hands."

She said nobody initially wanted to move and explained that Olesen Hall the women's dorm one floor above McCoy in the Complex, fought the administration and ended up staying where it was. Gerosin said she stayed in the complex because she liked its set up and had friends living in Campbell.

Laura Ogren, a junior in secondary education, said one of reasons she didn't stay with McCoy was because she wanted to protest the move.

"The main reason I didn't move to the Tower was because I like the rooms here (complex) better and the privacy they offer. But, I also didn't move because it was my way of telling Housing I was upset at the way they did the move," she said.

Regardless of the reasons so few members of the old hall moved, McCoy Hall faces the same problems that are confronting the other new living groups in the Tower.

"The women in the new floors are having to 'invent the wheel', so to speak," said Pitman. "It's difficult for a new group to establish responsibilities. Other groups have traditions that carry over from year to year -- they have things expected and planned for. The

Davey: Idaho taxes go to New Hampshire students

"Those of us that are obese will continue to be obese; those of us that are starved will continue to starve," said Harry Davey, director of student financial aid, in explaining federal financial aid for higher education in Idaho.

Last week Davey released some figures that indicated that Idaho students were being shortchanged when it came to getting education assistance from the federal government.

Federal aid allocations are based on four criteria, according to Davey. Total populations, student populations, per capita income and cost of education are considered when it comes to handing out federal funds. Davey's figures show that Idaho, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont all should be receiving about the same amount of money since all states are about equal in the four categories.

However, last year, Maine received $12.8 million of federal money, New Hampshire got $9.2 million, Vermont got $8.8 million, while Idaho received only $3.6 million.

Davey said that a couple of factors are involved in the inequities in federal funding. One of those factors, he said, could be an ineffectiveness on the part of Idaho's representatives in Washington, D.C.

"They're (Idaho's delegation) all well-acquainted (with the inequity). We've been talking to these people since 1979 about this problem," he said.

Scott Fisher, of 1st District Rep. Larry Craig's office, supported that contention, saying, "I hate to say that Idaho's reps weren't back here pushing hard enough," but he admitted that could be the case.

Davey also said that political gamesmanship has much to do with Idaho's inability to get a larger share of federal education funds. He explained that several years ago when the federal legislature was faced with the fact there would not be enough money, several Eastern legislators began lobbying efforts to ensure that their states were not going to lose money. There were no measures taken that would equalize disproportionate funding levels.

A spokesman for Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, though, didn't see any discrepancy in the way the funding is allocated, other than the fact that it is based on 1970 Census information. Anne Canfield of Symms' Washington staff said that it costs a lot more to go to school in New Hampshire than it does in Idaho. She said the funding is based only on student need.

"If the University of Idaho raised their tuition, then students would be eligible for more aid," she said.

Davey, however disagrees with the contention that it costs more to go to college in the Northeast than in Idaho. His figures show that it costs an average of $4,440 for each student at this university compared

Business college seeks accreditation

University of Idaho's College of Business and Economics has embarked on a lengthy process geared toward enabling the college to join a comparatively small group of high-ranking business schools nationwide.

Last May the University of Idaho filed an application with the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), located in St. Louis, Missouri, petitioning for accreditation from the group. Nationwide, 200 business schools, among 1,200 or so schools in the nation, are recognized as having quality programs by the agency.

The AACSB is recognized by the Office of Post Secondary Education of the Department of Education as the sole accrediting agency for baccalaureate and master's degree programs in business administration, according to a policy booklet put out by the group.

The university as a whole is currently accredited by the Northwest Association of Colleges and Schools.

The whole process generally takes about two years to complete. The first step is called the self-study report. This is a period of time, usually a year, when the universities review their programs and determine if they match the standards set by the assembly. The self-study includes looking at things like the university's library and computer facilities, the quality of faculty members and the curriculum. This study will be conducted by the business college's Committee for Accreditation and Curriculum.

Adrian Kline, UI accounting department chairman, will head the accreditation committee. He will be joined by two other members, one from the

TV as learning medium

Students who are interested in expanding their academic pursuits without the bother of attending classes may find just what they're looking for at the University of Idaho — on television.

UI's Engineering Education Outreach Program has designed a program called Video Outreach that will make graduate, undergraduate and continuing education courses available anywhere by producing the courses on color video-cassettes.

"The program was developed in 1975-76 in response to the needs of high technology industries," says Anthony Rigas, the director of outreach program. "When companies like Hewlett-Packard began to relocate in Idaho, they needed a means to provide advanced education for engineers and other technical employees."

Television was the medium chosen because the video-cassettes take less time to produce and their use is flexible. They can be easily transported through the mail system to locations throughout the country.

Individuals take video courses for university credit as well as personal enrichment. The diverse selection of courses ranges from engineering to mythology. Several non-credit mini-courses are also available. The video-cassettes are mailed to the students,

Breakfast with the gov

Gov. John Evans will spend a full day in Moscow on Thursday visiting students, teachers, city officials and fairgoers, seeking votes in his bid for re-election in November.

Evans will begin the day with a breakfast in the University of Idaho Student Union Building. The breakfast, open to all UI students and faculty, will be from 7 to 8:30 a.m.

"We encourage students and faculty to attend the breakfast," says Linda Pall, Evans' campaign coordinator for Latah County. "We scheduled it early so interested people could have a chance to express their views about problems facing higher education to the governor and to hear his views on the subject."

The American Federation of Teachers is sponsoring the breakfast and free coffee, juice, and doughnuts will be served.

After breakfast Evans will tour the UI campus and then will be busy giving interviews to The Idahoian and KRPL Radio until 10:30 a.m. At 1 p.m., he will begin face-to-face campaigning at the Latah County Democratic Headquarters located on Main Street and then will tour downtown Moscow and the malls. From 3 to 4:30 p.m., the governor will campaign at the Latah County Fair. He will return to the fair at 6:30 p.m. to officially open it.

Pall said that Evans' visit will provide an excellent opportunity for Moscow residents to talk to the governor one-on-one.

with $6,600 at the University of New Hampshire. That's not a large enough difference to warrant the discrepancy in federal funding, according to Davey. He said there are other factors that must be considered.

Taxpayer support of higher education is one factor. In Idaho, each student is subsidized by in-state taxpayers to the tune of $2,264; in Maine, $1,599; Vermont, $1,115; and New Hampshire, $810. Davey said that Idaho taxpayers are paying for education on a state level and then their federal taxes go to New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont to subsidize education there.

Figures also indicate that Idaho is getting a disproportionately low share of the money that goes to the state. From the federal government, each Idaho student is subsidized $84; Maine students get $291; Vermont students receive $287; and New Hampshire students get $190.

Protect that trademark

In a way, the reports are the kind of things we find refreshing in a campaign year. Steve Symms is upset that a former employee of the Department of Interior should deign to send out a parting shot at the secretary, James Watt. It's considerate of Senator Symms to give us a break from the monotony of the election rhetoric by bringing up this issue.

It seems that on leaving federal service UI Associate Law Professor Dale Goble circulated a mock letter of resignation. The letter, which was intended for private distribution to friends, found its way into the hands of our junior senator. Symms contacted UI President Richard Gibb, who, apparently took as dim a view of the letter as did the senator.

And what of the offensive epistle? It was certainly a terrible and black document, indeed. The gist of the letter stated Goble was "no longer obligated to create legal-sounding lies allowing James Gaius Watt, his cronies, henchmen and flunkies to break the law, rape the land and give the public's resources away." Pretty awful stuff there, senator.

Now, why was President Gibb drawn into the fray? Well, Goble made the mistake of announcing (in that self-same letter) that he was leaving the arms of Watt for the UI College of Law. The use of that all-important "UI" was a no-no. We don't really understand it all, but maybe it's all tied up in Coca-Cola. Surely the university needs to protect its trademark, as does Coke. If this incident is any portend, you can expect to find university attorneys lurking in the alleys of Moscow, just waiting for someone to utter a wayward "UI".

This isn't just another silly sidelight from Washington, though. The whole issue of the interior secretary and/or the senator bringing up this letter smacks of an attempt to pressure the university and intimidate Dale Goble. The whole thing would be funny if it weren't for the fact that an issue has been made of an individual's expressing his right of freedom of speech. Maybe the folks in Washington haven't realized everyone does not agree with every decree handed down in that glorious city. Perhaps we should force everyone to comply with whatever administration is in power, but then that wouldn't be a very democratic way of doing things, would it?

Road etiquette

In consideration of both bicyclists and motorists, city planners had a bike path built on 6th Street — that street which sees the most traffic to and from the university core.

Consideration is the key word here; there seems to be a lack of it on the part of many bicyclers who are headed for the university. That lack is most noticeable early in the morning -- between 7 and 9 a.m. -- as university-bound travellers are hurrying to work and class by way of 6th street.

There hasn't been a serious bicycling accident in Moscow for quite a while; it would be nice to keep it that way, bicycle accidents are generally messy and not much fun for anyone. Moscow motorists are, for the most part, alert and considerate toward bicyclers they share the road with. Bicyclers using 6th Street should reciprocate that consideration by staying on the bike path.

If bicyclers are lucky enough to make it through the trio of street lights on 6th Street and have the momentum of 6th Street hill, they can count on moving at a fast enough clip to keep up with the motorists. Otherwise, if stopped at a red light, most bicyclers are hard pressed to keep their speed up with that of cars.

Some bicyclers who, while not considerate enough to use the path, are still considerate enough to hug the shoulder of the road. Even so, they are horrors to motorists who have to keep a close eye out for times when those bicyclers are forced to swerve out into the mainstream of traffic to avoid a parked vehicle.

But there are many bicyclers who jauntily pedal down the middle of the road -- sometimes two, even three, abreast -- oblivious to any other vehicles using the same road.

What's wrong with the bike path? Few pedestrians are stupid enough to walk on that blacktopped strip next to their sidewalk, much less walk out in the street. The path was made wide enough for faster moving bicyclers to pass those moving slower. And the city street crew seems to do a decent job of keeping it clear of glass and debris.

Again, what's wrong with the path? It's just a matter of consideration. Until the snow flies and forces all but the most intrepid to park their two-wheelers for the winter, why not take advantage of that nice clear, blacktopped path -- why not be considerate to those you're sharing 6th Street with?

Elitism in the ASUI?

Mike Borden

Democratic institutions claim legitimacy on the principle that participation is open to a maximum number of individuals with a minimum of qualifications. To do otherwise casts so-called democratic institutions in another class, leaving a democratic title on something less than a democratic function.

Limiting participation to persons who meet particular standards, or increasing already low standards are actions which deny the right of participation to a select group of individuals. When persons creating artificial standards are already members of the franchise, then it is appropriate to challenge such actions.

Student government is considering minimum standards for elected officials. The ASUI Executive and Senate are working on legislation that would establish a minimum GPA requirement for any student at the university to run for office. This sounds nice, and is probably well intended. However, in reality it is a subtle form of political elitism.

Apparently, persons whose GPA is less than a certain level, are unable to credibly participate in the legislative process. Faced with GPA discrimination, people have a right to be offended.

The university currently has regulations prohibiting students on academic probation from participating in extracurricular activities. Evidently, students who are not doing well in school should refrain from activities that detract from scholarly pursuits. Student government is considered to be extracurricular for this purpose.

Recognizing this, the ASUI is trying to establish minimum qualifications for elected members. Since I don't know many students with a 2.5 GPA who are on academic probation -- although maybe the college of engineering might be an exception in their continuing effort to limit enrollment -- it seems the ASUI is trying to play one up on the university. The 2.5 standard sure looks nice and cozy and academic elitists the world over must be applauding, but it is inconsistent for an organization claiming democratic status.

GPA is marketed by many students as a commodity for the future, whether it be for the job market or graduate school. As such, GPA can be viewed as a form of property. Therefore, the ASUI is placing a minimum property qualification for electoral eligibility. In the real world of American politics, convicted felons, foreigners and underage persons are among those denied public office. Does this mean that ASUI equates low GPA with a criminal record? Does anyone remember Juko Wani, from Sudan, who once served as an ASUI Senator?

ASUI should, at least, be consistent. Are any of the legalistic senators inquiring into the depths of the ASUI bureaucracy to ensure conformity with the university requirement prohibiting students on academic probation from extracurricular activity? Since membership in ASUI activities is extracurricular, some offender must surely exist somewhere. There has to be a violator posing as a photographer, programs manager, or even as a columnist.

Searching for these vile offenders would give ASUI elitists something nicely elitist to do. Perhaps the ASUI should have a similar minimum GPA qualification for voting in elections?

Since all full-time students at Idaho are members of ASUI by virtue of the fee structure, it is ironic that under this proposal a percentage should be left out of the decision making process by statute. Maybe students below 2.5 should be offered optional ASUI membership, which presents a paradox where students would have good reason to make low grades. Student government on the electoral level should be open to all wishing to participate. There should be no minimum GPA requirements for participation.

Senators working on the problem should contemplate democratic principle for a while. Instead of limiting the franchise, ASUI should open it even farther. Instead of trying to be better than the university, the ASUI should set an example for it. The ASUI should be consistent to those principles they pretend to hold dear and offer the chance to run to any student who wants it.

Michael Borden is an ex-ASUI senator.

Letters

Yo, women

Editor,

Advice is the intent of this letter. Advice to women, particularly freshmen, attending this university. As you know (maybe the reason for selecting this school), men easily outnumber women at the U of I. What you may not realize is the adverse effects that may result. "The Freshman 15" is a slang term used to describe the weight gain so common among first year women. Obesity is a small concern compared to the attitude change most females face upon attending the U of I. Most guys can handle a fat chick, but few can handle a stuck-up fat chick. Remember, next summer you're going to be home where men care what you look like and how you act.

If you live in a sorority here on campus, I would like to clear up a few things: you cannot be arrested for talking to an independent or having a friend in the dorms; accepting an invitation to a dorm party doesn't commit you to group sex; fraternity members are not gods, and there is life after greek row. I'm glad that's straightened out. I think you'll find that there is an abundance of nice, intelligent, good-looking guys that live in the dorms. Should they be punished because they choose the life of an independent? Enjoy ladies, but be careful. In four years you're going to face reality.

Cracking yokes

Editor,

I would like to address a point raised by Mr. Tolman in his letter of rebuttal to K. Nelson's column Number one is better. Specifically, whether Israeli aggression, U.S. support for military regimes, and napalmed Vietnamese villages listed by Tolman as evidence of American imperialism preclude our right to make "accusations" and cause us to live under a double standard. I would hope his denial of our right to make accusations does not deny our right to make distinctions. Mr. Tolman's examples and counter-examples imply that U.S. or Western behavior is analogous to the behavior of the Soviets and other totalitarian regimes and that no distinction may be made, especially with reference to the Soviet-American arms race.

Referring to his example of Vietnam, the question of whether the Vietnamese are worse off now than during the war to save them from Communism might best be asked to the ten of thousands who suffered the conqueror's "re-education" camps. It is also at least interesting to note that the boat people were put to sea after Saigon fell, not before.

Implying that Israel is a client state of U.S. much as Cuba is a client state of the Soviet Union is also inappropriate. Israel is a free society with internal opposition. Cuba's opposition is in prison. Cuban troops carry out Soviet goals by proxy. They seek to de-establish other countries, not to defend themselves. Israel's reprisals are at least directed towards those who have attacked it.

Authoritarianism under military regimes has the potential of being lifted, with time free elections often occur. The totalitarian yoke is historically more permanent and its control more totally encompassing of society.

If we live, as Mr. Tolman would have it, under a double standard, it is the double standard of political morality which gives every benefit of the doubt of totalitarianism and denies that benefit when judging the actions or intentions of the U.S. and free world.

The distinction to be made in the arms race is the distinction between a government committed to freedom and democracy and a government that rules by coercion and believes it is entitled by History to perpetuate its power, and extend that power to all the world.

Money's worth

Editor,

What could you have done with an extra $21.50 this semester? I could name off a few items from food to books that my dollars would have gone fore, but as a full-time student I paid my ASUI fees and because I take advantage of the services offered I get my money's worth and more. I get my money's worth because there are many worthwhile programs the ASUI subsidizes. Who is it that makes these decisions about where my money will be spent and what programs will be offered? ASUI senators.

These senators, elected every semester for a year's term on a rotating basis, not only decide how to spend my money or what programs will be offered, they represent me and other students. A senator sits on faculty committees, works with deans and administrators and lobbies legislators. Thus, a senator is a business executive of sorts, a type of financier, an administrator, policy maker and representative. Someone with those responsibilities I feel should have a good sense of time-management.

Time-management involves goal setting, priority listing and a respect for time's value to yourself and others. A person that sets goals realizes their limitations, but strives to be their best. By setting priorities a person doesn't over-extend themselves and find they never complete a job because of other commitments. Having respect for others' time is essential for good time management. Someone that has developed a method of managing their time and their life is a very responsible person.

The ASUI needs responsible people to manage your money, your programs. These people have set goals and can manage their own life and their schooling. These people are better than average and should show it in their school work. If I'm going to be paying $43 every year to the ASUI I want someone responsible enough to manage their own life before they start managing my money. Call your senator now and urge him/her to vote for a 2.5 GPA requirement for senators.

Margaret Nelson

Squash SB86

Editor,

Requiring a 2.5 GPA for ASUI elected offices is unwise and unnecessary. Senate Bill 86, now before the ASUI Senate, proposes to raise the minimum GPA from 2.0 to 2.5. There are several reasons why this legislation should be soundly squashed.

First, SB 86 is unrepresentative from a democratic standpoint. Students with a 2.5 GPA or below deserve an equal chance to serve in the ASUI.

Inferring that GPAs (or academic capabilities) can be used as a sound measure of one's ability to serve capable is dangerous. There may be among us many energetic, motivated students with an ambition to "get involved" in the ASUI. But they may likewise have below a 2.5 GPA. We should all be concerned with the betterment of the ASUI. However, tying academic capability to the ability to serve well only fosters an attitude that ASUI elected posts are reserved for the academic elite.

Moreover, raising the GPA only discourages students from taking part and may ultimately deny all students quality representation.

Every student should have the right to serve in the ASUI. We all pay compulsory student fees. As such, we all become, perhaps involuntarily, members of the Associated Students University of Idaho (ASUI). Anyone who pays into the system has the right to participate in that system.

GPAs should only be used to set minimal standards. Ingenuity should not be used to restrict the ability to serve. Rather, this ingenuity should be tapped to better the ASUI. Students with below a 2.5 GPA possess the same creative ingenuity necessary to accomplish this. This ingenuity is possessed by all and not just the more academically-inclined. You and I are members of the ASUI. As such, the right to serve in this membership should not be restricted to a few.

Second, there are constitutional problems with SB 86. No elected officer or body should be left to decided for itself what its membership requirement should be. If the membership requirements for ASUI elected office are to be constrained, the ASUI as a whole must make that decision. A constitutional amendment is necessary. It is not within the vested powers of the ASUI President, Vice-president or any other elected body to make this decision.

Three types of action are needed on SB 86. First, more thorough research on the question is needed. Second, the ASUI Attorney General must offer an opinion as to the legality of the senate taking such action on the students' behalf. Finally, public hearings are warranted, since this issue affects all students.

Editor,

The people of Idaho's 1st District deserve a mature, experienced person to carry our views back to Washington, D.C. We do not need to hear the complaints and fabrications coming from Larry LaRocco's campaign. It is obvious that LaRocco is trying to steal the election by convincing voters that he is in tune with our wishes. Wrong again, LaRocco!

While Larry Craig has been in Washington helping to bring the federal government under control, LaRocco has been running around espousing the same liberal rhetoric that has caused our current economic problems.

Larry Craig comes back to Idaho every other weekend, if not more often, and holds town meetings. His representatives in Boise, Lewiston and Coeur d'Alene regularly hold public meetings throughout the district.

Larry Craig has the courage and common sense that is needed in Washington, D.C. Help make America great again. Vote for Larry Craig on Nov. 2!

Rattler research may solve many mysteries

by Mike Stewart
Staff Writer

How frequently do rattlesnakes breed? How far do they roam from their dens?

These are just a few questions that may be answered by University of Idaho researchers on this most unpopular reptile.

"It's important to get some basic information about them and get it down in print," said Richard Wallace, associate professor of zoology, when asked why anyone would want to know as much about rattlesnakes as he and Lowell Diller, visiting assistant professor of zoology, were trying to find out.

"Someday someone will want to use them, control them or reintroduce them into an area," Wallace said.

The research Wallace and Diller are involved in grew from a project done by Diller in the Birds of Prey refuge in south-central Idaho several years ago.

Diller conducted studies on the relationship between the raptors (birds of prey), the rattlesnakes and gopher snakes, and the small animals that they all prey on. The study's goal was to determine whether the snakes were creating enough of an impact on their prey's population to create a problem for the raptors.

His results generally indicated they were not.

There were some local areas where the populations of snakes were high enough to cause problems, and there were areas where there were very small numbers of snakes with little or no impact at all on rodent population.

"We're mainly interested in the reproductive biology of the snakes," Diller said, describing a primary goal of their research. He said most literature on the subject claims they breed every other year.

Lowell Diller, visiting assistant professor of zoology.

But, some recent research has demonstrated otherwise. Wallace and Diller hope their research will add to recent findings that prove it is not genetic or inherent in the snake.

Their study is based on the theory that female snakes need to build energy to a certain level in order to breed. If that energy level is not reached, they will not breed during that given year.

They are attempting to tie in food availability in a certain area with the percentage of female snakes that are pregnant. This was done in the past by collecting and dissecting snakes to obtain body fat information and data on the condition of the reproductive system of the snake.

Recently, however, they've begun a program of trapping snakes and branding them with numbers. "This way we'll be able to say, old Number 62 there, she's pregnant this year...or whatever," Diller said.

In addition, twice annually they'll index the mammals in the area to see if food availability is high or low. That information will then be correlated with the reproductive success of a den, giving them a good indication of whether or not body fat does in fact influence reproduction.

Other aspects they're eventually hoping to work into their research deal with radio tracking of the snakes, and tracking amino acids as they move from the female snake into the young.

The radio tracking would be an attempt to discover where snakes go when they leave a den. Diller explained that the males and the females that are not pregnant leave the den for the summer, while the pregnant females spend their summers near the den. This study is planned for the future.

"It'll take fancier equipment and more effort on our part to see how much they move," Wallace said, explaining that rattlesnakes are wanderers, but no one knows just how far they wander.

The research involving the tracking of radioactive amino acids came about when it was realized that young snakes, which are born alive, appear to be larger than they should, given the size of the yoke in the egg from which they developed. Diller said he theorized there must be some sort of placenta arrangement that provides additional nourishment to the young.

A preliminary study seems to bear him out. A pregnant female rattler was injected with a radioactive amino acid. The snake was then "sacrificed" and studied to determine where the amino acids had traveled. Traces were found in the young indicating that there had been a transfer of additional nutrients between the mother and offspring.

The research has required both Diller and Wallace to spend a lot of time around the snakes. However, they've had no serious incidents in han-

Vandals soaked 34-14 behind Matthew's TDs

by Kevin Warnock
Sports Editor

Although the Idaho Vandal football team lost another "Battle of the Palouse" to Washington State on Saturday night at Spokane's Joe Albi Stadium, they inflicted enough damage and scared the Division IA Cougars enough to reap strong praise from the opposing coach.

"If they take out after the Big Sky teams and play the world like they played

Washington State, they will be very, very good in the Big Sky," commented Cougar head coach Jim Walden following his team's 34-14 opening win against the Vandals. "They played with enthusiasm and intensity and are an excellent group."

Had the game extended later into the evening, players on both sides may have had to trade in their turf shoes for swim fins and shoulder pads for wetsuits because of a steady downpour that began toward the close of the second quarter -- Idaho's most impressive quarter of the game.

Nonetheless, it was a better football team and not the weather that stopped Idaho.

Opposing defenses will be wise to remember Ken Hobart's running ability in their game plan. Above, WSU defenders Keith Millard (93) and Ken Emill (34) put pressure on.

Hobart's arm should keep defenses honest

by Kevin Warnock
Sports Editor

It took the Idaho Vandals five possessions before the new offense had its first trophy of the 1982 season, a 29-yard deflection touchdown pass to Ron Wittenburg. Although a well-established and veteran offense for Washington State dominated the show in this "Battle of the Palouse," Idaho fans may have reason to hang on to their season tickets after watching the premier in Spokane.

Quick-strike capability will keep the Vandals in many games in the upcoming season, if not ahead. Against the Cougars, Idaho had touchdown drives that covered 87 and 78 yards in time fast enough to please a computer jock in engineering.

Idaho's first touchdown march began on their own 13 and reached the WSU end zone nine plays and 3:57 later. The Cougar defense was backing up faster than the American Indian across the Old West.

The Vandals' second score, also in the second quarter, went 78 yards in five plays and just 1:34. The passing game at Idaho has yet to prove itself, but literally it won't take as long as the old Veer attack.

It's a far cry faster than last season's game against eventual NCAA Div. I-AA champion, Idaho State. As die-hards will remember, the Vandals possessed the ball for 14:12 of the first quarter out of a possible 15 minutes. But just two plays into the second quarter Mike Machurek put the Bengals into a 7-7 tie with his passing arm.

"With Ken Hobart, Idaho has big play potential constantly," said WSU coach Jim Walden after last Saturday night's game. "He kept drives going. We won't face quarterbacks at the level of the Pac-10 much better than he is at bailing out when he's under pressure."

Analysis

When Hobart did leave the pocket against WSU it wasn't but a few times that the rush was about to succumb him, but rather it permitted him a better view of his receivers downfield.

"The roll-outs were all planned, save two or three," Hobart said. "I was having trouble seeing the receivers."

Idaho's offensive line faced a four-man rush most of the evening and did not have to put up with many blitzes. The five of them gave Hobart adequate protection, who quite often was alone in the pocket without a running back to pick up the first lineman who breaks through.

"Our offensive front is young, I thought they did a great job. They played hard and never quit," Erickson said.

It was an offensive line minus one Steve Seman, who was honorable mention All Big Sky in 1981 but will watch for at least a month to come while his foot rests in a cast.

Statistically, Hobart was 15 of 31 for 178 yards, without an interception. The junior from Kamiah needs only 44 yards to become Idaho's second all-time leading passer.

His problems with the weather will occur less often in the Big Sky Conference, where the Vandals will play half of their home games in the Kibbie Dome, plus road games indoors at Idaho State's Minidome and at the Walk-Up Skydome at Northern Arizona.

The Vandals did have a few kinks to work out early in the WSU game, as Hobart had a few passes dropped. After completing three of eight initially, Hobart soon was at 12 for 19 and went into halftime 12 of 21 with 160 yards.

Idaho's leading receiver was Wittenburg who caught five passes for 81 yards. Tight end Kuri Vestman plagued Cougar linebackers for 44 yards on four catches and tailback Kerry Hickey gained 20 yards on four passes. Curtis Johnson caught one pass for 19 yards and Vic Wallace had one for 24 yards.

Men harriers open at Pelleur

Backed by the experience of five seniors, the Idaho cross country track team begins its season Sept. 18 at the Pelleur Invitational at Whitworth College in Spokane.

Idaho head coach Mike Keller sees sophomore Andy Harvey and senior John Trott as having the best chances of winning for the Vandals. Harvey, from Beaconsfield, England, holds the school record in the 5000m at 14.03 set last season. He placed 28th in last year's Big Sky Conference championships. He enters this season as the No. 1 Idaho runner.

Last season was Trott's first experience competing on the cross country team. He was UI's second-best runner behind Harvey. He finished his UI indoor and outdoor track careers by placing fourth in the 800m run at the NCAA outdoor championships. Trott also nearly broke the four-minute barrier for the mile when he ran the distance in 4:03.78 last season.

Other seniors fighting for positions on the squad are: Mark Blanning, Dohn Rondeau, and Kevin Wolf. All are letter winner returnees. Blanning, from Kenai, Alaska, red-shirted last season because of a hip injury. Rondeau is from Kingsford, Mich., and Wolf hails from San Marino, Calif.

Six other runners make up the remainder of the team. They are sophomore Mike Bartolus; juniors Kevin Brophy and Don Martin; and freshmen Paul Lagrou, John Olson, and Tom Price. Brophy is a transfer student from Oregon State and Martin is a transfer from Eastern Oregon.

but certainly the effectiveness of Idaho's passing attack, which riddled WSU's secondary in the second quarter, was handicapped by the wet conditions.

"It was difficult for us to do what we did in the first half in the second half with the weather we got," Idaho's new head coach, Dennis Erickson said after his debut. "I've always felt with the passing game the only problem you have with the weather is in a downpour and that's what we got."

Instead of rolling over and waiting for it all to end when WSU took a 14-0 first-quarter lead, Idaho quarterback Ken Jobart and the offense opened the second quarter with an 87-yard drive culminated with a corner-of-the-end zone TD catch by Ron Wittenburg.

The play covered 29 yards and Cougar cornerback Tracy Adkins all but autographed the ball for Wittenburg, who caught Adkins' deflection of Hobart's pass before falling to the turf.

Suddenly it was 14-7 and the Vandals had a long march to their credit and the 25,321 crowd paying attention to a possible upset in the making.

Before the intermission both teams put another touchdown on the board and an enthusiastic Vandal team went to the locker room down 21-14 with momentum on their side. Unfortunately, the weather wasn't.

"At halftime we felt we had a chance to beat them. Then on a third-and-nine they made a streak up the sideline and that was a turning point," Erickson said. "Plus our kicking game gave them two touchdowns."

Spikers open home season on Friday

Some tough teams and some unexpected disciplinary problems hampered the efforts of Idaho's women's volleyball team last weekend, and it wound up settling for fifth place in the six-team Wyoming Classic in Laramie, Wyo.

The Vandals opened the classic by losing to host Wyoming, the nation's 16th-ranked team last year, in straight sets 15-5, 15-12. Idaho then rebounded to defeat Montana State, a team in the new Mountain West Athletic Conference with Idaho. But Idaho then lost to Illinois in three close sets and had to beat Montana State again for fifth place.

Burk said that she experimented a lot in the tournament, an event the Vandals won last year. She said she was forced to keep some starters on the bench because of discipline problems and that hurt the team's chances.

"We didn't play very well in that first game," she said. "Wyoming is a tough team. The whole tournament is full of tough teams, but I think we could have done a little better."

"Overall, we improved a little and so things went pretty fair. We still have a ways to go."

By playing MWAC member Montana State twice Burt said that helped her views on how the conference might look this year. The Vandals defeated the Bobcats in three sets the first time and then 15-12, 15-11 in the second match.

"When we played well, we did well because we played as a unit," Burt said. "When you play as a unit you can't help but play well. That's about one-half of the battle."

Burt said she was especially pleased by the way the team worked together as one unit. Burt cited Kellie Gibbons, Beth Johns, and Linda Koetting as the top performers in the Laramie Classic.

"I found out that we have a tremendous amount of depth on this club, much more than last year," she said. "I was pleased with our side-out program, and our serve reception was good. But our transition game was poor and we had trouble scoring points when we had to. We have to work on those things soon."

The Vandals return to open their home schedule by hosting the Idaho Classic next weekend. Entered in the tournament are Eastern Washington, Washington State, Spokane Community College, Whitworth, Lewis-Clark State College and Idaho.

"This is OUR tournament and it is at home," said Burt. "I hope to see some of the people that didn't get a chance to travel and play in the Laramie Classic. The competition should be as tough and I predict that we will do well."

ter Shawn Jackson had trouble executing the long snaps. Ball was sacked on both plays and the Cougars had the ball on the UO 13 and UO 16 on two separate occasions.

Idaho recovered three Cougar fumbles on the night, while losing only one themselves, but defensively Idaho made some key plays to keep the contest close. In particular it was Idaho's two inside linebackers who enjoyed big games.

"Darcy Lewis got hurt in the fall and I felt going into the spring he would have a good season ahead, so I wasn't surprised that he played so well, and Sam (Merriman) too," Erickson said. "Their offensive front is bigger than ours; I think we showed a lot of courage."

The WSU offense was effective, piling up 482 yards in offense to Idaho's 255, including a larger passing game. 275 yards to Idaho's 207. Cougar fullback James Matthews, thrust into a starting role less than a week before the game, set a WSU team record with five touchdowns. He rushed for 172 yards on 21 carries after expected starter Mike Martin was ruled ineligible because he played three downs in a Stanford game his freshman season before dropping out of school because of his father's death.

The Cougars recalled 25 first downs to Idaho's 17 and controlled the time of possession 33:40 to 26:59.

Idaho players of the game included Ron Wimsburg on offense and Darcy Lewis on defense.

engineering professor, and Karen VanHouten, professor in computer programing, produced two popular classes for sale to large corporations.

The number of individuals enrolled in the program for college credit has jumped from 26, in 1976, to 226 students enrolled in over 20 courses this fall. Degree programs offered are Master of Engineering in Electrical Engineering and Mechanical Engineering, and Master of Science in Computer Science.

"The program is almost totally self-supported," Rigas said. Costs are reduced by videotaping classes during the regularly scheduled sessions. The questions from the class are also recorded on the cassette.

"The difference between our program and those offered by other universities is that we offer credit for our courses," said Rigas. He said that the majority of universities do not distribute courses on an individual basis, but only to large groups.

The recorded courses are available, free of charge, on the campus cable network to students who are absent from a scheduled class. Some courses are available on a regular basis for students to review lectures and supplement normal instruction.

In order to receive credit for a video course, a student must obtain an application for admission and an official registration form a week before registration. The forms must be returned to the Engineering Education Outreach Division.

Students wishing to take video-taped classes for credit on campus can arrange to have the courses shown on a regular basis at specific times by contacting the Central Cable Division Center located in the Johnson Engineering Building, Room 24.

"To have more faculty and students involved in the production of software for the program is the major goal for the future," says Rigas. "We want to use technology to provide a more effective educational system."

"However, we have done tremendously well in the past years in terms of building facilities and stretching resources," continued Rigas. "We're excited we have made a few dollars go along way."

dling them.

"The big males are pretty aggressive, particularly in the spring," Wallace said. "But, almost always, when you get them they're trying to get away from you." Wallace's advice when confronted by a rattler is to "back up a step or two and try to see them, then walk around them."

"For someone to go out of their way to kill them is ridiculous," Diller said, summing up both of their feelings about the rattlesnake round-ups that have become social events around the country. "There's just no reason for it," he said.

Both are hopeful their research will add to some understanding that will remove the stigma of bad guy that's been delegated to the rattler.

By playing MWAC member Montana State twice Burk said that helped her views on how the conference might look this year. The Vandals defeated the Bobcats in three sets the first time and then 15-12, 15-1 in the second match.

"When we played well, we did well because we played as a unit," Burk said. "When you play as a unit you can't help but play well. That's about one-half of the battle."

Burk said she was especially pleased by the way the team worked together as one unit. Burk cited Kellie Gibbons, Beth Johns, and Linda Koelling as the top performers in the Laramie Classic.

"I found out that we have a tremendous amount of depth on this club, much more than last year," she said. "I was pleased with our side-out program, and our serve reception was good. But our transition game was poor and we had trouble scoring points when we had to. We have to work on those things soon."

The Vandals return to open their home schedule by hosting the Idaho Classic next weekend. Entered in the tournament are Eastern Washington, Washington State, Spokane Community College, Whitworth, Lewis-Clark State College and Idaho.

"This is OUR tournament and it is at home," said Burk. "I hope to see some of the people that didn't get a chance to travel and play in the Laramie Classic. The competition shouldn't be as tough and I predict that we will do well."

Football from pg 8

ter Shawn Jackson had trouble executing the long snaps. Ball was sacked on both plays and the Cougars had the ball at the UI 13 and UI 16 on two separate occasions.

Idaho recovered three Cougar fumbles on the night, while losing only one themselves, but defensively Idaho made some key plays to keep the contest close. In particular it was Idaho's two inside linebackers who enjoyed big games.

"Darby Lewis got hurt in the fall and I felt going into the spring he would have a good season ahead, so I wasn't surprised that he played so well, and Sam (Merriman) too," Erickson said. "Their offensive front is bigger than houses; I think we showed a

The WSU offense was effective, piling up 482 yards in offense to Idaho's 255, including a larger passing game, 275 yards to Idaho's 207. Cougar fullback James Mathews, thrust into a starting role less than a week before the game, set a WSU team record with five touchdowns. He rushed for 172 yards on 21 carries after expected starter Mike Martin was ruled ineligible because he played three downs in a Stanford game his freshman season before dropping out of school because of his father's death.

The Cougars totalled 25 first downs to Idaho's 17 and controlled the time of possession 33:41 to 26:19.

Idaho players of the game included Ron Wittenburg on offense and Darby Lewis on defense.

new groups don't."

Pitman said SAS is working closely with both McCoy and Neely Hall in establishing hall governments and constitutions for both.

"A new hall has to create its own set of bylaws and constitution, which are nothing more than a basic agreement that people make about rules and regulations," he said. There are also other issues, such as intramural participation and other hall functions that have to be decided upon.

Pitman also explained that the new groups have funding problems because they don't have any money carried over from last year, and they haven't established hall dues. This hurts new halls because they just don't have the money other halls do.

Ball said that a lack of upperclass members in a hall also shortchanges the newer residents.

"If you have a good mix of upperclass students and new students entering, the upperclass students can help add a measure of stability to the hall," he said. "I think there are some leadership situations which will take a while to iron out, and it might make it a little more difficult, but they'll come."

McCoy Hall has started over, and its new residents are optimistic about its future. Warner said the hall organization is confusing now because there are a lot of freshmen and exchange students in charge, but she has faith the floor will "get together and get organized."

Peddle for prizes and pulchritude

If you have a bike, some brains and a partner with the same attributes, you have a chance to win up to $100 in prizes and you can add money to the University of Idaho Beautification Fund at the same time.

On Sept. 25 at 1 p.m., a "Mystery Bike Rally" sponsored by the Wildland Recreation Club and KRPL radio will start at the McDonald Elementary School on D street. All proceeds of the event will be donated to the Beautification Fund.

After paying a $6 entry fee, couples can win one of 43 prizes by riding to the correct mystery sites after receiving a packet of clues. There are eight sites in all and each site has a mystery number and clues to the next site. All site clues culminate in an eight digit number. The team that gets the correct eight digit number first wins the grand prize.

The money raised from entry fees will be used by the UI Beautification Fund to improve the appearances of the street closures and walkways on campus. The fund's next project is buying trees to be planted on Line Street.

People interested in signing up for the rally may do so at the SUB information desk, T-Shirt Plus, Sam's Subs, JP's Bike Shop, Northwestern Sports, Hickory Farms, or Velo's Cyclery Shop. After September 23, the entry fee is $8.

economics and the business areas of the college. Kline's first move is to attend a workshop, given by the assembly this fall, so he can gain specific knowledge of all the requirements the assembly sets for accreditation. Some of these requirements change each year. He also will get help from AACSB members on just how to go about the year of study.

After the year's study the university must submit the report to the assembly by June 1, 1983. The study is then reviewed by the Accounting Accreditation Committee, comprised of representatives from other accredited colleges and business and industry organizations.

Following the review is a visit to the university by AACSB representatives. The visiting team will examine university facilities and talk with administrators, faculty and students. The visiting investigators then submit a report to the accreditation council, which gives a final recommendation to the Executive Committee of the Accreditation Council at the AACSB Annual Meeting.

The university is applying for accreditation at the bachelors and masters degree levels. The application fee for these two levels is $3000. The fee will be paid when the self-study report is submitted next June. If the university receives the accreditation, annual dues will be $1850.
