Beta blaze could have been worse

Damage to the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity house was estimated at $500 as a result of a fire there on Jan. 20. However, Moscow Fire Chief Ralph McAllister said it could have been much worse had the fire not been detected as soon as it was. There were no injuries.

"I guess they had a fire going in the fireplace for three to four days, and the heat got through to some of the timbers around the fireplace," McAllister said. He also said the fireplace was old and there were some cracks in it and the chimney. "It could have been drastic if it went on undetected until later."

He explained that fires of this type can be very serious if more air enters into the walls and ceiling. When that happens, he said, the wall itself will act like a chimney and draw more air in to feed the flames.

The fire was out 20 to 30 minutes after the fire department arrived shortly after 10 p.m., and McAllister said it was confined to a small area in the walls and ceiling around the fireplace.

He praised the house members for their orderly evacuation, and the spectators that gathered for the way they conducted themselves.

Brady Lee, a freshman at the house, said there was a three-foot hole in the ceiling between the kitchen, fireplace and TV room where firemen had to cut a hole to get at the fire. But, he said the kitchen is still functioning and there hasn't been any great inconvenience.

He said there was still heat coming from the fireplace the next day. "We just had the fireplace going too high. The logs are pretty old and dry and it just caught fire," Lee said.

Drinking bill takes detour

A bill to raise Idaho's legal drinking age to 21 from 19 is up for consideration on the Idaho House floor, after three days of hearings last week.

The House State Affairs Committee Monday voted to send the proposal to the general-orders calendar for amendments after its sponsor, Rep. Linden Bateman, R-Idaho Falls, asked to withdraw his bill because of a technical error.

Bateman said he wanted to kill his bill and present a corrected version to the committee later. But the panel instead voted to submit the measure to the full House for consideration of amendments.

There, the proposal will be open to any amendments and will later return to committee before going before the House for a final vote on the issue.

Coaches' raises not on agenda

The UI Faculty Council will not discuss the proposed 10 percent raise for football coaches at its weekly meeting today.

The meeting originally was to include discussion of the issues raised by the proposed salary increases. However, according to Chairman Peter Haggart, the council will wait until the March hearing by the State Board of Education on intercollegiate athletics.

Haggart said he felt the council's position was being heard. He does not anticipate a heated discussion at today's meeting.

"We want fairness and consideration of raises for all areas of excellence," he said. "We believe they (the coaches) deserve salary increases, but it's a matter of fairness."

The council will meet today at 3:30 p.m. in the FOC East lounge.

ASUI Senate meets tonight

The ASUI Senate will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in the Chief's room of the SUB to discuss several bills concerning budgeting and appointments.

Vice President Scott Green said a new bill to appoint a committee to work on the ASUI election procedure will be brought up for immediate consideration.

Bills dealing with appointments of people to fill vacant positions like the ASUI Finance Manager may also be discussed.

Records

— Brett Burdick, Graham Hall, reported that unknown persons had removed three books from his dorm room during Christmas break. The books were valued at $71.

— Doris Lawson, Moscow, told police that a large flower pot was removed from the front of her residence. It was taken Wednesday from her home on Deakin St.

— Moscow police arrested Gregory L. Ramage, 19, Moscow, Wednesday, on a bench warrant for failure to appear in court.

— Herbert Andrae, Moscow, reported the theft of $100 from his residence at 934 N. Cleveland. The money was stolen between Jan. 17 and 19, he told police.

— Edwin Wayne Sanborn, 20, Moscow, was cited and released Thursday for possessing an open container of alcohol at the Kibbie Dome.

— Police cited and released George William Crookham, 20, Moscow, for the possession of an open container of an alcoholic beverage. Crookham was cited Thursday evening at the Kibbie Dome.

— Mark Dean Lesko, 22, and Kevin M. Cooper, 21, both of Moscow, were arrested, cited and released Friday night for possessing an open container of beer.

— Katherine B. Nemser, 25, Moscow, reported that her purse was stolen from the bar area at

J. W. Oyster's Friday. The value of the contents was estimated at $35.

— Gerald Arnen, Moscow, told police Friday that unknown persons broke the window of his vehicle and entered it. Nothing was stolen from the vehicle parked in front of Sigma Chi Fraternity.

— Ann O'Neal, Campbell Hall, reported her blue Takara 10-speed stolen. The bicycle was discovered missing from the residence hall Friday.

— Joyce A. Giese, 22, Moscow, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs early Sunday. Giese was incarcerated at Latah County Jail in lieu of $300 bond.

Settlement $1.9 mill. short

The $1.5 million out-of-court settlement the University of Idaho received in its lawsuit over the leaky ASUI Kibbie Dome roof has been deemed "an acceptable settlement" by UI Financial Vice President David McKinney.

However, this "acceptable settlement," made Nov. 19, falls $1.9 million short of the actual cost to the university to install a weatherproof top on the Dome. McKinney estimated that cost to be $2 million for the actual construction of the new roof and an additional $1.4 million in legal expenses and fees to architects and consultants.

McKinney said the university's legal representatives in the suit, UI Attorney Jon Warren and Winston and Cashatt of Spokane, advised the university to accept the settlement rather than risk incurring further expenses to continue the legal battle.

"We could've gotten zero," in court, McKinney added. He said the courts would take into consideration facts such as the Dome having had the roof for five years, in spite of its quality, and that the old roof has been replaced with "a better system."

The lawsuit was originally filed in Second District Court in Moscow primarily against the Dome's builder, Emerick Construction Company of Portland, and the Dome's architect, Cline, Smull, Hammill and Associates of Boise.

Vets coordinator retires

Harry Todd is a veteran of the University of Idaho — an armed service veteran, Farmhouse Fraternity veteran, and until this month, the Veterans Affairs Coordinator. Todd retired from the position this month after serving for five and a half years.

Todd first came to the UI in 1964. He graduated from Kansas State University in 1944 with a bachelor's degree in flour milling. He enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1942 and was stationed in several foreign countries, including Japan and Germany. He retired from the Army in 1963 with the rank of major. Since coming to UI, Todd has served as an ROTC instructor, assistant manager of the Student Union Building, adviser to various clubs, and in his most recent position, director of Veterans Affairs.

Todd is also active in fraternal organizations. He became an associate member of Farmhouse in 1964 and has served on the board of directors of the Idaho

Farmhouse Corporation, as well as three three-year terms as faculty advisor to the chapter.

Todd was offered the position of Veterans Affairs Coordinator by the registrar's office in 1977. Last year Todd was responsible for the financial benefits of 694 veterans and 392 Social Security recipients. As coordinator, it was Todd's job to make sure each veteran and social security holder was receiving his or her benefits, and if there were problems, Todd took it upon himself to look for the cause and remedy the situation.

Each veteran declaring benefits must be verified as a University of Idaho student in order to receive any funds. Veterans are eligible for a minimum of two years and a maximum of 45 months enrollment in a university.

Part of Todd's job included counseling the recipients concerning their veteran status. "I would tell them how many benefits they had remaining and things like anticipating their vacation pay," said Todd. Often, there were problems with the veterans receiving their checks and it was Todd's duty to straighten out the situation.

"It was a fun job. I thoroughly enjoyed it," stated Todd.

Nothing wrong with this raise

The furor raised over the proposal to raise Idaho football coach Dennis Erickson's salary would make sense if Erickson's raise was out of line, especially in tough financial times like these. But the raise isn't; instead, it is those members of the faculty who oppose it who're out of line.

A lot of the problem is the timing involved. Most of the faculty's contracts come up during the early summer, while Erickson's happens to come up during the early part of the year, largely because of the idiosyncracies of the coaching profession. Thus, his raise — which originally was proposed to be a 15 percent raise but has been cut back to 10 percent — tends to be conspicuous.

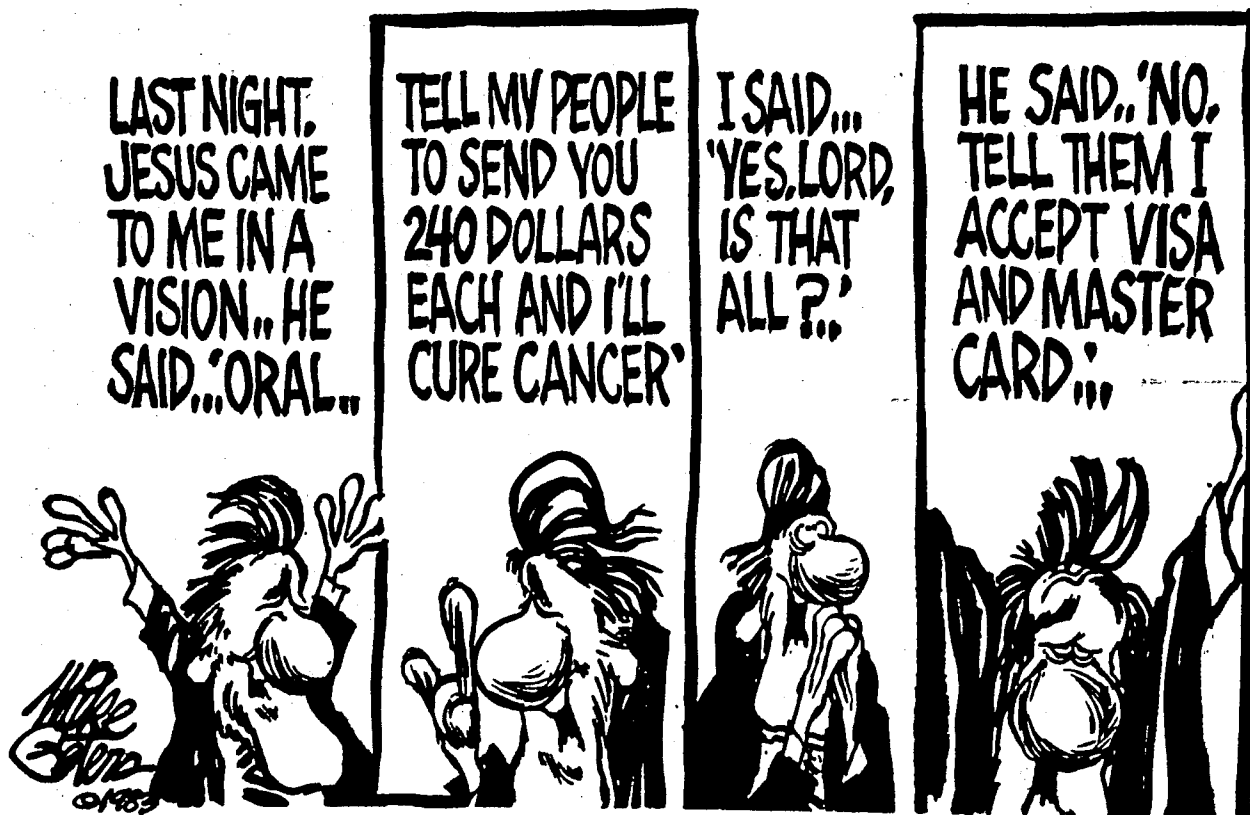

But Erickson, who just led the Vandals to their most successful season ever as a rookie coach, has not yet received any raise during his stay. Last summer, however, most of the faculty did receive raises — averaging 6 percent and running as high as 25 percent. Some 90 or so received the same 15 percent raise that was first offered to Erickson. Thus, it seems ethically questionable for some members of the faculty to protest a raise similar to theirs for the coaching staff.

It's not as if Erickson didn't deserve a raise. What occurred on the football field for the Vandals in 1982 — a 9-4 record, the co-championship of the Big Sky Conference, a trip to the NCAA Division 1-AA playoffs — stands as a testament to the single-minded devotion that Erickson and his staff gave to helping the UI in their own way. That devotion and new sense of pride filtered down to the players and even to some of the faculty. It certainly did so for the alumni, who've been increasing their donations to the school as a result.

Had any of the faculty achieved as much within their fields, they would have been in line for big raises, too. And it has generally been the case that when professors manage a similar academic or research-related achievement — even though it is done with considerably less fanfare — they have gotten raises, too.

It may come true there will be no raises for anyone in the immediate future. The administration may impose a wage freeze if the Legislature doesn't help the UI get out of this financial bind. But if that comes to pass, then that will be the time for faculty to protest any proposed raise for the football coach, because he should be expected to take part in the bad times, too. Until then, he should be allowed to receive the same kind of raise that the faculty received last summer.

Parting shots

Let me start off by saying that I have not abandoned ship. I graduated and have plans to help support the University by paying lots of taxes. It's awfully hard not to think I got out "just in time" however.

What I have in mind is a few words on an old but not untimely subject: Ethical conduct. It would seem to me that one of the precepts of an institution of higher learning must be that those participating will conduct their affairs with maturity and integrity. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if it says something to that effect in the Rulebooks for students and faculty.

The principle seems to be honored in the breach as of late. Sure it's good for a few laughs to have a dog run for the student senate. But how many students have any idea what the senate really does? Or who among the senators actually does useful work? The glib answers typically passed around are worthless — they only serve to illustrate how unwilling some people are to expend effort for anything other than self-gratification. It's much easier to say 'oh, the senate is a bunch of jerks that sit around and drink beer' than it is to find out the facts or get involved.

One example of a useful project supported by the ASUI through the senate is the ASUI tutoring program. Ask someone you know who has participated in the program how useful the senate is.

There's more to my point than goofing off or voting for a dog, though. The University should be a place where the well educated enlighten and inform the less well educated. An important part of the education process is Setting a Good Example, whether in academics, athletics or politics.

To look at a specific instance, what sort of example is it for a person in a professional capacity to bolt for the door in the middle of the semester? Sure times are hard, they're hard all over, but how does that justify leaving a position of considerable responsibility on short notice? A visit to the engineering office suggests that "60 days" might have been a euphemism for "I'm going to use up my sick leave and get the hell out of here, pronto." Maybe things are rosy in Long Beach right now, but I hope they know what kind of commitment they can expect from Mr. Williams.

After being an independent businessman for a while, I was acutely aware of the deference accorded the faculty and administration by students. I recognized that it would be in my best interests to fall in step. But after the preliminaries are over, respect has to be based on the person and his or her behavior, not a position or title. I think there could be a lot less standing on ceremony and a lot more honest, straight forward interchange at this

Tom von Alten is UI graduate in mechanical engineering now seeking fame and fortune in the real world.

University.

No matter how tight the finances or how crowded the classes, there is never justification for treating students or employees as supplicants or inferiors. There is no excuse for the attitude that administrators are more important than faculty. The purpose of the University is education (along with research and service) after all, and the administration's job is to facilitate that, not push people around.

Well, I can see I'm in danger of excess moralizing here, so lets move on.

The next item of business is salaries, prompted by the recent flap about giving the coaches a big raise. Personally, I think intercollegiate athletics ought to play a lot smaller role at the University, but since it does not, the coaches deserve a modest raise. They've been doing a fine job. The notion that the coaches' jobs are more tenuous than those of the faculty might be debatable these days, though.

My qualm is with giving everyone a raise for sticking out another year. If performance warrants it, a raise is in order, but if not, this business of "cost of living" raises is a fundamental source of inflation. Why should someone be paid more for doing the same thing, no better than last year?

Peter Haggart's comment that everyone ought to suffer equally in tough times is kind of interesting. Should we all benefit equally from flush times as well? Our society isn't ready to give up the incentive system just yet.

Enough of the jabs, already, it's time to pass out the laurels. After five and a half years at the U of I, I'd like to take this opportunity to commend the efforts of some people who uphold the highest ideals of the University. The list is not meant to be complete, but I can guarantee that all mentioned deserve to be on it.

My thanks go to: RJ Naskali, Frank Seaman, Bill Parish, Wayne Hagar, Terry Precht and Jeanette Ross.

Bad call for refs

Editor:

The intramural office has a new policy. This year each living group must provide a "certified" referee, otherwise they can't enter any teams. How fine a rule. They get swamped with refs, each has to get a few hours, nobody gets to call many games, and quality takes a dive because they're rusty. It could be interesting when ignorant bystanders mistake the game for hockey after watching a mob in the key, blood in the lane, and no call.

Ever look for a job in Moscow? Not too many around, hey? Five or six people apply for a snow shoveling position that begins when the snow does. Go to an interview and the potential boss doesn't show. Waitresses seem to ignore requests to see a manager. Sometimes it seems that only the company boys and girls get any openings, that every employer is seeking go-getters in search of a career. Yes, YOU can stay in Moscow all summer and work for McDonald's.

So, failing every January to land a job dishwashing or sweeping downtown Moscow's new bus stop, some people, gluttons for abuse, turn to officiating basketball. Refing won't bring fame or fortune, yet it can put bread in the refrigerator and Bohemian in the tea cups. It's also a great way to participate in the one truly American originated, American dominated sport.

It can be hard to believe that everyone who turned out did so voluntarily, because there is a history of forced labor among some campus institutions. It's also easy to let emotions run away and say this new policy simply reinforces the theory that those in charge are trying to keep everyone except the able - to - afford - it - comfortables out of college.

We're also not positive if these allegations are even semi-accurate. There's no choice but to guess. Around here not a whole lot of ambitious students practice digging for facts behind the scenes. They say that student activism went out of style some ten or twelve years ago. Yippie!

However, to quote B.D.'s dad: "...With welfare, my philosophy is, Who cares?"

Park carefully

Editor:

Last semester, I got done with finals on Tuesday, had my "beer thirty" call, and went home to southern Idaho. In the time that remained for finals, somebody, no doubt celebrating or testing his Incredible Hulk technique, moved my car a full 21 inches away from the curb, thus putting my car in violation by a mere three inches.

When I got back to school, I was greeted with not one ticket for this terrible crime, but two, and each one is now worth $15. Now, you must understand that I am not angry with the individual or individuals that planned this un-godly act, but at Moscow's Finest.

Until last semester, the only thing I thought that counted as close were hand grenades, horseshoes, and nuclear war, but now parking in Moscow has been added to my list. I guess they must be bored now that football is over and bota bag season is closed. Why, I'd be antsy too if I had new pistols and SWAT training under my belt and had to fight Mayberry R.F.D. with Andy and Barney for the highest crime rate.

There is some good news in this story, however. Be glad that one of these dedicated young men is not behind the control panel of a nuclear missile.

So in closing, remember when you shoot game wardens, rape and pillage, make sure when you're done you park correctly.

P.S. Dook for police chief!

Rhonda says thanks

Editor:

Last fall I was forced to withdraw from school due to being diagnosed as having acute lymphatic leukemia. I would like to express my deepest thanks for everyone's support both financial and moral — through letters, prayers, flowers, gifts, calls, etc. This support has greatly helped me through all of my treatments at MSTI in Boise and will continue to help as I undergo a bone marrow transplant at Fred Hutchinson Clinic at Seattle. I am hopeful that I will be cured when I am finished in May and will be able to return to school in the fall.

The money that was raised by Campus Chest Week, fraternity and sorority donations, business donations for raffles and individual donations has been a great help to me and my family. I am amazed that even people I do not know could be so caring.

Again, I thank you very much and may God bless you all.

The smoky blues

Editor:

The Blue Bucket is a new lunch area in the SUB. It appears to have comfortable atmosphere and provides a relatively inexpensive place to eat. To the non-smoking customer, however, the Blue Bucket is no better than other area restaurants. When I asked about smoking and non-smoking areas, I was told by the roving floor manager that the Blue Bucket was too small to allow separate spaces. A few moments later the woman at the next table lit a cigarette, and as I was enveloped by her smoke I realized that I couldn't return to the Blue Bucket. (That's how non-smokers tend to be eliminated as priority customers.) I would have liked to go there again sometime, but not unless I can eat without breathing someone else's addiction.

Some states and many federally regulated businesses (such as airlines) have space requirements to protect non-smokers from second-hand smoke. One hears lots of griping about government over-regulation, but if businesses were more sensitive to the health concerns of non-smokers, we wouldn't need to force our rights through government intervention.

Psych clinic

By Lewis Day
Features editor

The University of Idaho Psychology Clinic was created in 1972, at the same time the UI's graduate program in psychology moved toward a concentration in clinical psychology. Since that time the facility has served as a resource for the university and the larger Moscow community. During the course of its decade of existence the psychology facility has lived in the shadow of its highly visible cousin, the University Counseling Center. But the two facilities really serve a somewhat different purpose; the counseling center serves predominantly as a counseling center, while the psychology clinic divides its work between counseling and biofeedback.

According to UI psychology Professor Mary Kay Biaggio, the clinic has "treated a little over 200 clients ... in a total of about 1,400 sessions." Biaggio is the director of the clinic and the director of the graduate program in psychology. She stressed that the clinic serves both as a community resource and training ground for students in psychology.

Biofeedback, counseling can help students deal with stress, depression and problems

"(The clinic) is a service and training facility," she said. The services offered by the facility are free to university students and their families and are available to members of the community on a sliding scale, although she noted that no one had ever been turned away from the clinic because of a lack of funds.

In characterizing the types of problems the clinic treats, Biaggio noted that clients seem to have problems that fall into three distinct categories: personal relationships, stress problems and behavioral problems.

Problems in personal relationships include specific difficulties relating to marriage, family, depression, the trauma of rape and divorce. Some of the stress related problems Biaggio said the clinic treats include migraine headaches, tension, anxiety, chronic pain and muscle spasms. The enumeration of behavioral problems — which often mirror events in the list of personal relationships — includes smoking (and how to stop), overeating, drinking, and problems with children (i.e. in a university setting, the problems of raising children while a college student).

In treating the clinic's clients — women account for 65 percent of those served by the facility — Biaggio said half of the treatment provided is through biofeedback, and the other half she characterized as psychotherapy or counseling.

"One of our specialties is biofeedback," Biaggio said. "It's a key to helping a person to relax physiologically." Biofeedback, contrary to the image created by comic page features, is used in a clinical setting to help people get in touch with their feelings. Biaggio explained that to get in touch with these feelings — feelings which may be causing anxiety, compulsive habits or chronic pain — the client needs to learn to relax. Relaxation is important because stress is directly related to many tension related ailments, including muscle spasms, chronic pain and tension headaches.

The treatment used in biofeedback involves three machines: the electromyograph, the skin temperature machine and the galvanic skin response measurer (GSR). The electromyograph is used to measure muscle tension. It can be specifically used to treat tension, pain and muscle spasms. The skin temperature machine is the workhorse of the facility; it is used to help the patient regulate blood flow — redirecting blood from muscles and the brain to all parts of the body, thus leading to relaxation. The third machine, the GSR, is used to measure skin conductance — the level of relaxation. All of the machines, or any combination of them may be used as the clinicians attempt to find the correct treatment for problems the patient may have.

The treatment offered at the Psychology Clinic serves a twofold purpose: to serve the university and local communities as a center for biofeedback and counseling, and to serve as a training facility for graduate students in psychology.

Not again? Yep, travel takes its toll on Idaho

By Kevin Warnock
Sports editor

An analysis

After tracing the steps of the Idaho men's basketball team on its trip to Columbia, S.C., the map begins to resemble a maze similar to Union troop movements in the Civil War.

These guys went all over. An unseasonable freeze in the South closed the Atlanta airport which forced the Vandals, who were flying commercially, to reroute their journey through Washington, D.C.

It's in Washington where the flights began to add up and perhaps have an effect on the team's performance in a 56-54 loss Saturday afternoon to the South Carolina Gamecocks on CBS-TV.

Before Washington, the team stopped in Denver, Colo., and Louisville, Ky. After the nation's capital they went to Roanoke, Va., Greensboro, N.C., and finally Fayetteville, N.C. where they hopped a 200-mile bus ride the rest of the way, arriving at South Carolina approximately 18 hours after leaving Moscow.

Coach Don Monson was complimentary of his team's character and effort, which was 110 percent considering the circumstances. But like a repeating nightmare, Idaho lost a close one.

Idaho fans remember a 50-48 overtime loss last season at Notre Dame, another situation where travel caught up with the Vandals, who then played three road games in four days.

Pete Prigge, no stranger to bad luck, was set to inbound the ball with nine seconds remaining and his side tied up with the Gamecocks at 54. But as the five-second limit approached he had to throw the ball in and USC's Gerald Peacock was the one who swiped it.

It all ended seconds later as SC's Kenny Holmes sank a baseline shot before the buzzer.

While the novelty of a large regional telecast fascinated viewers back in Moscow, it was still easy to notice some critical errors in the Vandals' play.

Missed alley-oops, problems with the match-up zone and finally, an errant pass are simply not trademarks of an Idaho club of the past few years. Something gave, because the Gamecocks, despite the homecourt advantage and no case of jet lag, were the underdogs.

USC was up for the contest. USC appeared to play its game, although it's hard for this traditionally non-South Carolina watcher to say for sure. Idaho, on the other hand, appeared to be having problems. Yet the bottom line is that the Vandals stayed in the game and could have won it; maybe they should have won it, despite not playing a great game.

For this and all the other things like cross-continental travel which don't show up in the box score, I would say the Vandals are a better team than South Carolina.

But it's all ancient history now as Monson and Company set

At home: Vandal women begin a streak of their own

Not many people know that the Idaho women's basketball team has a winning streak they can literally boast about. But it's true.

The Vandals, despite a 9-5 overall record and 2-2 in Mountain West Athletic Conference play, ran their home court winning streak to 17 games Saturday night by trouncing Idaho State 86-60 in league action at the Kibbie Dome.

The winning edge on the home court is something Idaho coach Pat Dobratz likes to emphasize.

"It's nice to know we have won that many in a row at home," Dobratz said. "It really helps to come back from a road trip and play in a place where you are used to winning. We're trying to get a long home stand kind of like the men (who have won 41 consecutive games in the Dome) do."

Idaho began the game like they really wanted to win. The Vandals stopped Weber State in a MWAC game Thursday night and seemingly were destined to win again and even their league mark.

"We played fairly well to get the win," Dobratz said. "We were able to get into the game and we were helped that they didn't play as well. We'll take the win tonight but it might be a different story when we go down to Pocatello."

The Vandals broke the game open late in the first half when ISU tried to make their own "run" and get back into the game. The Bengals put in a full-court press trying to cause some turnovers, but it backfired.

Idaho's Leslie McIntosh finds traffic inside almost too much to look at against Idaho State last Saturday. The Vandal women won 86-60, extending their own Kibbie Dome streak for consecutive wins to 17 games.

Erickson's raise dropped to 10%

Idaho Athletic Director Bill Belknap has dropped his request for a 15 percent salary increase for the football coaching staff and will instead recommend a 10 percent raise for Dennis Erickson and his assistants.

Erickson stood a good chance of receiving a salary hike of 15 percent, but opted to maintain a better relationship with the faculty rather than take the extra 5 percent.

The issue came up while

Erickson was out of town recruiting, so he was unaware of all the reasons behind the request.

"My relationship with the people on campus is more important than any 5 percent difference in pay," Erickson said Monday. "We're all together in this thing."

If approved by the State Board of Education, Erickson's salary would move up to $41,802.20 from $38,002.

Vandals

their sights on more important things, namely the Big Sky race.

Montana will be rough

Montana's Dahlberg Arena is about as friendly a place to visit as the San Quentin cafeteria when they're serving liver and oatmeal. The Vandals, now 13-3 overall, will match up with the 14-3 Grizzlies, who own a league record identical to Idaho's at 2-1.

The 9,239 fans Thursday night will be rabid and the competition rough. For the spectator, this game offers a matchup between two of the conference's smoothest operators — Idaho's Phil Hopson and Montana's Derrick Pope.

Both stand 6-6, while Pope is 16 pounds the heavier at 206. Pope is one of four players in the Big Sky being considered for conference Most Valuable Player.

Whether the award goes to Pope, Idaho's Kellerman, who led the Vandals again with 21 points at South Carolina, or Reno's Ken Green or Billy Allen, probably will depend upon which team finishes highest at season's end.

By far, the favorite at this point is Pope. He ranks second in the league in scoring behind Green, carefully and solved the press. The result was two consecutive easy lay-ins with assists by guards Mary Bradford and Renee Brown. That seemed to break Idaho State's back and they were unable to get back into the match.

"We had been having trouble with the press, but we broke it twice in a row and got some easy shots," said Dobratz. "I think that was the turning point. They kind of fell apart after that."

"We have been trying to get a team effort in our games and so I was glad I got a chance to play everyone during this game," Dobratz said. "Now, at least, the girls will have a reason to show up for practice this week."

but rebounds (unlike Green) well enough to rank third in the league in that category. His shooting accuracy places him second in the Big Sky for field goal percentage and eighth for free throw accuracy.

Pope is one of four returning Grizzly starters. Tipoff is set for 6:30 p.m. Thursday, with KRPL-AM (1400) broadcasting.

Jackson acts again as dean of engineering

Melbourne L. Jackson, a veteran acting dean of the University of Idaho College of Engineering, assumed the post again on Monday, this time to fill in for resigning Dean J. Richard Williams.

Jackson, 65, retired from the university in 1980 after serving as acting dean for two years, succeeding Robert R. Furgason who was promoted to his present post of UI Academic Vice President. Jackson also served as acting dean during the 1973-1974 academic year following the sudden death of former Engineering Dean Sidwell Smith.

"I will serve until they get a new dean — I hope that will be by September," Jackson said.

In addition to his service as acting dean of engineering, since he first came to the university in 1953 Jackson has taught chemical engineering and headed that department, served as dean of the UI Graduate School and as coordinator of research from 1965 to 1970. He also served on the Idaho Air Pollution Control Commission from 1959 to 1972.

Al Deskiewicz, the SUB food manager (right), instructs employees Ali Maoyri and Karen Matteson on seating arrangements in the newly reconditioned "Blue Bucket" dining room.

A new dining area is being opened by the SUB food services which features table service, daily entrees and affordable prices.

This new dining experience is called The Blue Bucket, and is located on the first floor of the SUB, by the information desk. The Blue Bucket offers lunch from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Monday thru Friday.

"The Blue Bucket offers the first modular salad bar," said Al Deskiewicz, manager of SUB food operations. The restaurant also offers soup, two different sandwiches, a daily entree, a daily quiche and dessert.

"We opened the restaurant without fanfare, so we can work with the new staff and break them in," said Deskiewicz. He said his staff consists of a cashier, a waiter and waitress and two cooks. He said he employs mostly college students.

The Blue Bucket opened last Thursday with 52 customers the first day, and 70 on Friday, he said.

The name Blue Bucket comes from the name of the original SUB. Deskiewicz said approximately 44 years ago the students bought a restaurant facility from Dean French, the dean of women. French didn't think the town offered any place where the students could go for an inexpensive meal.

The last four and a half years the original Blue Bucket was open, beer and wine were sold on the premises unbeknownst to Dean French, Deskiewicz said.

Funds cut for non-draft registrants

If you haven't complied with draft registration requirements you'll be ineligible for financial aid next fall, the University of Idaho Education Department announced Friday.

"By this means, the U.S. government is saying bluntly that taxpayer funds will not be used to provide a college education for students who do not comply with the Selective Service registration requirements," Education Secretary T.H. Bell was quoted as saying in the Lewiston Tribune on Saturday.

The legislation for this amendment to the Military Selective Service Act was passed last fall and the Education Department published the regulations for the new law on Friday, according to Don Huskey, an adviser for the UI Student Financial Aid office. He said it would take seven to ten days before the regulations will arrive in Moscow.

"We won't know exactly how the program will be implemented until we receive the regulations," Huskey said. "We don't even know what they'll accept as proof of registration."

According to the Tribune article, any male student born in 1960 or later who hasn't registered for the draft within 30 days of his 18th birthday is ineligible for financial assistance administered by the Department of Education.

Guaranteed Student Loans, plus Auxiliary Loans, National Direct Student Loans, Pell Grants, Supplemental Grants, College Work-Study Assistance and State Student Incentive Grants are all administered by the Department of Education.
