Borah Symposium '83

UI hosts debate on Central America

By Steve Nelson
Staff writer

Jose Napoleon Duarte, the former president of El Salvador, said Monday night he adamantly supports a revolution in his country — but not a violent one.

Revolution, Duarte said, is necessary for his country, and the means to bring about true and lasting change is, simply, raising the "conscience of the people."

"I do not believe in violence," Duarte said. "I believe in the change of structures for the better of the people. This cannot be done overnight. It needs time and the will and participation of the people.

"Revolution has to be democratic," he added. "And democracy means the will of the people is used to establish their own destiny."

Duarte made the remarks at the 54th annual Borah-Symposium before an overflowing crowd of nearly 1,000 people in the SUB Ballroom at the University of Idaho. Francisco Campbell, a representative of the Nicaraguan Embassy in Washington D.C., also spoke.

Monday night provided a unique opportunity for the public in that Duarte represents a country on the verge of revolution, while Campbell represents a country who own government was overthrown three years ago by a revolution.

Appearing with them and contributing heavily to the discussion were Robert E. White, the former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador, and Cleto Di Giovanni, a former CIA official. The moderator of the discussion was E. Bradford Burns, a professor of history at UCLA.

Many people see the problems in El Salvador strictly in terms of a confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union, Duarte said, simply because the U.S. chose to see them that way.

"That put El Salvador on the map," he said.

But the real problems, he asserted, are the social and cultural inequities which exist now and have existed for many years.

He listed seven problems, existing both now and inherited

Council set to discuss GPA, core

Changes in regulations regarding repeating courses and grade changes; guidelines for limiting class size; and a proposed core curriculum will be the top priority items at the Faculty Council meeting today.

Regulation E-5 governs raising a grade by repeating a course. Currently, a student who received a "D" or "F" in a course is allowed to repeat that course to raise his grade. Both grades remain on the record, but only the highest is figured into the GPA.

The proposed changes would still allow a student to repeat a class as many times as he wishes, but all grades received will be used to compute GPA. The new regulation would go into effect after the summer session of 1983.

The change in regulation O-5, which provides guidelines for limiting class size, would allow enrollment precedence for students taking a class for the first time. Students who are repeating a class would be put on stand-by status and allowed to register only if there is additional space.

This process would be carried out at the discretion of the various departments, and no student could be kept on stand-by for more than two consecutive semesters for any one course.

The council will also discuss lists of core courses proposed for university students by the University Committee for General Education.

Senate petitions are due today

The deadline for submission of petitions for those running for ASUI Senator and Faculty Council positions is today at 5 p.m.

Dale Davaz, chairman of the Election Board, said he was "extremely pleased" by the turnout, and has expectations of it being a "typically competitive" election.

Davaz said, however, that he is afraid that the graduate position on Faculty Council will have to be appointed.

The cutoff point was extended by the Election Board after the Senate pre-session last week.

"Due to the unique scheduling of the petition period and to the fact that spring break fell right in

Tenure argued again at UI campus

A University of Idaho tenure committee's decision not to give an economics professor tenure may be overturned by the UI administration, according to an article in the Idahonian March 12.

The economics department's tenure committee voted against granting tenure to Jack Wenders. However, Academic Vice-president Robert Furgason recommended to President Gibb to grant tenure to the professor.

Gibb has not made a decision on the issue yet, but said he will do so sometime later this week.

According to the Idahonian article, critics of Wenders said they thought he was well qualified and did not question his teaching ability, but they cited several reasons for not granting tenure to him.

Some of the reasons given were as follows: to be granted tenure, a faculty member has to be a full-time employee, and the committee contends that Wenders is working only part-time; the department resented what they thought was the heavy-handed way the administration forced Wenders on the department; they said Wenders is receiving special treatment; and the UI faculty voted against reappointing Wenders after he taught one year.

In answer to these objections raised by the committee, Furgason said, "In a nutshell, we gave him a commitment and he fulfilled the commitment, so I don't understand the beef."

The commitment Furgason referred to is the job offer Wenders received from the university which stipulated that Wenders was to be considered for tenure during the fall of 1982 after fulfilling the requirements of his contract.

Furgason said he is satisfied that Wenders fulfilled the stipulations. Furgason also sent Wenders' credentials to 11 peer universities of the University of Idaho asking them if they would recommend Wenders for tenure. Of the nine that answered his query, eight said that they would grant tenure to the professor.

the middle, we just felt that out of fairness to prospective candidates we should postpone the deadline," Davaz said.

A candidates' meeting will be held at 8 p.m. in the Senate offices to discuss rules and regulations.

Senate to discuss ASUI elections

The ASUI Senate will meet tonight to discuss several bills, including a bill restructuring the Programs Department. ASUI election procedures will also be discussed.

The pre-session begins at 6 o'clock, and the regular meeting begins at 7 o'clock in the Chief's Room in the SUB.

UI leads Big Sky in research funds

When the 1981 figures are tallied, one University of Idaho administrator charged with overseeing grants and contracts believes the UI should rank first among Big Sky schools in dollars spent on research.

According to Dr. Kenneth Laurence, a survey based on 1980 fiscal year figures conducted by the National Science Foundation showed that the UI placed a close second to Montana State University in research and development expenditures.

MSU spent $13,737,000 on research, while the UI spent $13,721,000.

Fiscal year 1981 figures indicate the UI has spent $20,127,000 in research expenditures, an increase of $6.4 million over fiscal 1980.

The 1980 ranking in terms of research expenditure among Big Sky schools put MSU first, followed by UI, Nevada-Reno, the University of Montana, Northern Arizona, Idaho State University, and Boise State University and Weber State tied for last.

A national ranking of research expenditures places MSU 113, followed by UI at 114. In Idaho, UI received 95 percent of the research grants, and ISU the remaining 5 percent.

Group calls for volunteer help

Volunteers in Moscow, an organization designed to match interested students and living groups with community work, is once again offering gainful employment. The following positions are available:

The Adult-Child Development Center needs several volunteers to assist in collecting data and interviewing developmentally disabled individuals as a part of a special project. Contact Tom Partinger at 882-0562 or VIM at 882-7255.

Latah County Historical Society has various openings for volunteers. These are exhibiting work, collecting oral histories, typing, cleaning and cataloguing textiles. For more information, dial Carol Young at 882-1004 or VIM.

The Good Samaritan Village has assistant positions with arts and crafts, sing-alongs, exercise, reading, companionship, and giving rides to the elderly. For more information, contact Cindy Bruce at 882-6560 or VIM.

Latah County Library needs volunteers to help sort and rotate book collections at the nursing homes and will need individuals to assist with the children's summer reading program. Contact Gloria Gehrman at 882-3925 of VIM.

According to Laurie Henberg, a member of VIM, campus living groups and/or the individual student can become very orientated and integrated with their community, which is the Volunteer's in Moscow purpose.

Order your caps and gowns now

Caps, gowns and hoods for University of Idaho spring commencement ceremonies, May 14, can be ordered from the alumni office today and Wednesday during the regular office hours, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Faculty members needing regalia should place their orders during these times also.

To order the correct regalia, students must know which degree they'll receive and what college they'll march with.

Pool provides research info

Students at the University of Idaho are providing area public schools with programs on natural resource management and getting valuable experience in the process.

Called the Resource Pool, the program is a service of the UI Department of Wildland Recreation Management.

Sharon Bone, a wildland recreation management graduate student and one of the coordinators for the program, said the program has two purposes. "We want to provide a public service by making students available to present programs on natural resources," she said, "and we want to provide students with presentation experience."

She said the program gives the students a chance to use what they are learning about slide shows, demonstrations and other presentation techniques, and that the experience will be useful to students when they begin looking for jobs.

The Resource Pool is strictly a volunteer program. A student with a particular area of expertise offers to make himself available for a presentation on that subject. Bone then compiles the list of subjects and sends it to schools in the area. Teachers at the schools select topics they'd like to have presented and then contact Bone, who passes on the requests to the UI students.

Bone said the teacher evaluates the student's performance and sends that evaluation to Sam Ham, assistant professor of wildland recreation management and one of the coordinators of the program. The student then receives feedback on his presentation from Ham.

Although students can get extra credit in one of Ham's courses for presenting a program in the Resource Pool, Bone said that most of the students think that the main reward is the appreciation shown by their audiences.

"Kids appreciate so much the efforts these students make to come out and talk to them," said Bone. She thought that the programs can have a lasting effect on the children, and "turn them on to caring" about the environment.

from the past, which have brought El Salvador to its current situation:

— Inherited cultural characteristics which have created two distinct societies with economic and social differences whereby "one society has everything, the other has nothing."

— Different levels of social services provided for the different social and economic groups.

— Low educational levels.

— Concentration of "richness" in the minority of the people and concentration of "misery" in the majority of the people.

— A wide array of influences on the people of El Salvador which lead to frustration. "You cannot create a just society when you impose upon the people the desire for something they cannot obtain," he said.

— Low participation of the people in social and political decisions.

— And, the use of force as an instrument of oppression.

These social, cultural and political problems, Duarte stated, must be handled first before any lasting changes in El Salvador are realized and violence is not the solution.

White, a former ambassador to Latin America for 25 years who was fired when President Ronald Reagan assumed office, wholeheartedly agreed with Duarte.

"President Duarte, the man whom I admire most in Central America, went through his speech without once linking the problems of Central America to U.S./Soviet intervention in the region. He emphasized instead the hunger, the brutality and the force. He condemned the violence; violence of people dying from hunger, infants dying from dirty water ... the kinds of violence we have to solve before we can even think about any just solutions in Central America."

But Duarte was pressed from Campbell as to the specifics of how he would bring about change without widespread violence associated with revolution. How, he asked, when an oppressive government is in control and backed by the military does one change the condition of the masses of the population?

Although Duarte equivocated on the question, he did list three basic reforms — economic, democratic and military — that must occur before peace reigns in El Salvador.

Campbell, for his part, brought to the symposium the experience of seeing a successful revolution in Nicaragua and he based that success on four main elements: improved literacy rates, agrarian reform, general health improvements and increased political participation of the people.

He said, for example, that following the revolution in 1979, it was discovered that 52.2 percent of the population could not read or write. Immediately the new government, the Sandinistas, instituted a literacy campaign that reduced the rate to 12.5 percent.

Moreover, Campbell said prior to the revolution the best agricultural lands were concentrated in the hands of Anastasio Somoza (the former dictator) and his "lackeys." The majority of the people worked these lands but did not see any of the fruits of their work. Crops produced were exported, he said, and the money from these exports landed in bank accounts in Switzerland, in stocks and bonds in New York, or in real estate.

Today, he said, that has all changed because of land reforms that give the land, and the sale of the products, to the people.

Another reform which Campbell said has proven vital to the success of the revolution has been the formation of the Council of State, a governmental body composed of people from all levels of society and all areas of the country, which is involved in political decisionmaking.

"The government tries to insure that the people can have a voice in the affairs of their lives," he said.

Di Giovanni, a former CIA official and presently a senior research associate of the Advanced International Studies Institute, questioned just how great this participation amounts to.

"The Council of State may have large numbers of people in it and they might come from large walks of life," Di Giovanni said, "... but the question is how much power do they have in the government? And I would suggest they have damn little."

"The real power in the government rests with the nine men who form the directorate in the Sandinista Government," he said.

As an example of this, Di Giovanni told of a poll taken by a Nicaraguan newspaper that asked the people whether they were satisfied with the current government and its policies. The results showed 27-28 percent of those polled as dissatisfied with the Sandinista Government. Within days of these results being published, Di Giovanni said, the Sandinistas declared that no such polls could be taken without first obtaining the permission of the government.

Di Giovanni criticized the literacy campaign, too. The books the people of Nicaragua read contain such phrases as, "The imperial U.S. is the enemy of all people," and when people learn to read this," he said, "they will learn to believe it."

In his defense, Campbell said, "Our literacy campaign really was an effort to try and teach the Nicaraguan people how to read and write in the context in which they live."

The total process of reform has been thwarted, Campbell said, because of action of the U.S. Government and the CIA.

"We are doing these things under very difficult situations because the Reagan administration is trying to overthrow the Sandinista government," he said.

The CIA, he stated, approved $19 million to finance a campaign operated out of neighboring Honduras, employing the "Somoza National Guard," to conduct raids within Nicaragua. These attacks have increased and on March 24, Campbell said 2,000 insurgents invaded his country. These actually do not pose a threat to Nicaragua, he said, but if the Honduran Army were to move, "Nicaragua would have to respond in kind."

Tuition isn't the answer

Many Idaho university students will face losing the chance to continue their education if the Legislature considers seriously a recommendation to rewrite a provision of the constitution that makes it illegal to charge tuition.

A task force studying the plight of higher education in Idaho came up with a number of ideas to get our flagging institutions back on their feet again. The report, funded by the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry, calls for higher salaries and fringe benefits for professors.

Of course these things will cost money. And where is that money going to come from? The students, also according to the preliminary report. And the bill for these recommendations will run anywhere from $3 million to $15 million a year.

The framers of the Idaho Constitution had the right idea when they came up with the document years ago. The state of Idaho has a vested interest in giving students an education — one of quality and one that isn't priced out of reach by charging tuition.

The most dangerous aspect of tuition is just that — denying otherwise competent students a chance to further their training simply by making that education far outside their monetary range. Many students know how hard it is to scrape up the money each semester for the UI's measly $500 student fee charge. How many will be unable to come up with the money if that $500 is raised any higher?

It's a move that would shift the chief burden of funding higher education from the Legislature to the students. What many people refuse to recognize is that quality education benefits not just the student, but to an even greater degree Idaho and the corporations and industries based here that rely on the university-trained professionals for their lifeblood.

It is likely that the economic crises the state and higher education have been dealing with over the last two years will disappear given time and right answers to the problems. Abolishing the constitutional amendment that rightly places the responsibility of education on the state is a long-term solution to what is an immediate, not indefinite problem.

The report recommends that tuition not exceed one-third of the average statewide per-student costs. But, if that recommendation is adopted and tuition is approved, what is to keep legislators from taking out that tuition provision in the future? Absolutely nothing once they have gotten rid of that troublesome part of the constitution that forbids charging tuition.

It may be troublesome to some, but to the students of Idaho it is essential, for it guarantees them a good education at a state university which is, and should be, supported by the state.

A shopper's delight

"Welcome, shoppers, to the new ASUI Mall on the beautiful University of Idaho campus. We hope you find all your shopping needs in the many various stores on all three of our towering floors, and in the basement, too!

"This opening day for the new mall, formerly known as the Student Union Building, is a special day for shoppers in the Moscow area, especially those of you who are connected to the university. We hope you'll find our new mall to be so convenient that you won't mind its ridiculously high prices and shop here all the time instead of at the town's two other giant malls.

"Just look around, shoppers. On our first floor you'll find an Albertson's store, a Karmelkorn shop, a bookstore, and a restaurant, all for your shopping convenience! Some of these shops may seem a little familiar, since some of them existed in similar forms from the days when the students owned the building. We wanted to mix a little of the old with the new, just for your shopping convenience!

"Quick! A blue light special! The flashing blue light is on the second floor at the Brown Fern Plant Shop, where you can purchase aphid-infested philodendrons at the special discount rate of 25 cents a plant! In fact, if you get down there quick, they might even pay you to take them away!

"While you're up on the second floor, you can check out Rhinestone Jewelers, our complete jewelry shop. You romantically inclined students who're toying with the idea of tying that knot should drop in and pay a visit. We can find the diamond of your girlfriend's choice, no matter how deep it'll put you in debt!

"Other shops on the second floor of interest are the Wooden Blender, a shop specializing in elitist, modern cookware for the snotty cook who likes to buy overpriced imported stirring spoons; Tobacco Nose, with the most complete selection of tobaccos and ostensibly legal smoking equipment this side of Jackson Street; and Curl Up N' Dye, a beauty shop specializing in purple mohawks and other modern hairdos.

"Some of you may remember the beauty shop — then located on the first floor — as one of the pioneer shops in the mall. Of course, the new shop, like all of the shops in the mall, has a new owner now — that is, the J.G. Kreepie Corporation. But we all owe a debt to the original beauty shop for helping to pave the way for our beautiful new mall.

"If you go up to third floor, you'll find a Smudgit Tapes and Records store, offering records, tapes and rock magazines at supposedly reasonable but still ridiculously high prices. Located next door to them is the Aryan Nations Bookstore, an 'alternative' bookstore for all of the campus' little bookburners. You can find swastika armbands, deluxe leatherbound copies of Mein Kampf, and full-color photos of cross-burnings. They're having a special on David Rockefeller dart boards this weekend.

"Of course, the Argonaut, the UI student shopper, is located in a five-by-five room on the third floor, while KUOI-FM now operates out of a tape machine and transmitter jammed into a closet nearby.

"If you hop in the elevator and take the slow ride to the basement, you'll find the recently refurbished bowling alley, with a pinball machine that actually works; the post office, which some of you may remember as the big addition to the old SUB after the beauty shop; and Jim's Kayak and Canoe Shop, which had more or less the same function back in the old days.

"Some of you may have noticed that we've tried to make this new mall as much like the old SUB as we could, because familiarity always helps, right? With that in mind, let's go back upstairs.

"Here we'll find, still intact, the Blue Bucket restaurant. Yes, this is the famous institution that really started the whole landslide of turning the SUB into a place full of various shops. We've preserved for the sake of history and cheapness the tacky old blue decor and uncomfortable wire chairs. The only thing different is the prices, which we've jacked up considerably. And you still can't buy a beer with your meal — although you can thank the state board of education for that!

"Tacked on the wall here you'll find a plaque commemorating the occasion of the ASUI Senate's approval of the sale of the SUB to the Kreepie Corporation. Some of you may remember that famous day when seven senators on J.G.'s payroll blackjacked six of the others in an alley behind the SUB and then voted for the sale with the quorum available. Sealed in amber next to the plaque is one of the blackjacks used to seal the deed.

"So much for your tour of the new mall. Shop, spend, and enjoy!

"Welcome, shoppers, to the new ASUI Mall ..."

Shirt watch

Editor:

I have, at this point, lost my faith in human nature. Someone at this university has hit the bottom of the barrel. Last week I went down to the basement to do my laundry — what I thought was an innocent task. I was mistaken. I washed my clothes without a hitch. I proceeded to put my clothes into the dryer. It is a well known fact that if you don't time the dryer and get down there the minute your clothes stop going around, someone will take your clothes out and throw them on top of the dryer. This always annoys me, but I can live with it. What I can't live with is the person who takes your laundry out, sees something they like and decides to steal it. I had a shirt stolen on this occasion. The worst part is that it was a shirt I had borrowed from someone.

What will happen if one day, when the thief is wearing the shirt, the owner of the shirt or I see the thief wearing it? I will not be afraid to confront the thief. If you (the thief) read this, BEWARE, because I will be on the look-out. What good does it do to steal a shirt that you can't wear, just in case someone (like me) sees you in it? Just remember — I'm watching for you.

Help for Maud

Editor:

On March 30, friends of Maud Sterling will be sponsoring a wine and cheese tasting benefit fund raiser. Maud is a University of Idaho law student who was seriously hurt last summer when she was hit by a drunk driver. Fortunately, she has recovered enough to once again attend school. However, the costs of the surgeries and rehabilitation have far exceeded her insurance coverage, and since the perpetrator of the accident was uninsured, we are planning a series of fund raisers to help out. The first one is this wine and cheese tasting, which will be held at the Cafe Libre, 510 S. Main, in Moscow, from 7-9 p.m.

It may at first seem odd that the victim of a drunk driver would advocate a wine and cheese tasting as a means of raising funds, but we believe in promoting responsible drinking, except in the case of alcoholism or other diseases which require abstinence.

Everyone is invited to attend this wine and cheese tasting. If you cannot attend, but would like to contribute to Maud's trust fund, contact the UI Women's Center.

Lin Colson

High-rolling UI

Editor:

Don't bother reading this letter, for it is only written by a faceless Joe-Blow, know nothing, struggle-to-get-through student. This collection of personal thoughts is an unresearched, unsubstantiated jumble of pseudo-facts. I can't prove anything I say here, and even if I could (my English prof would have said that was too many Is), it wouldn't be worth the effort. If you insist, however, read on.

The U of I (a registered trademark) is in need of a reevaluation of priorities. I see this school's priorities drifting away from academics and toward something else, namely athletics.

Let's face it, the overwhelming majority of students (or "estudents," as my Iranian Calculus professor would say) here are not athletes. Most are physically fit, but by the same token, most don't run five miles a day. Some even smoke cigarettes. However, all students are here for an education (theoretically).

Consider the three words "University of Idaho." Somewhere in this institute of higher learning is a tenured professor willing to dissect "University" into its component parts to show its origin and meaning. Enough professor-hours have been wasted on that. "A place to learn" seems close enough to the definition. "Of Idaho," the rest of that registered trademark, means, well, it means, "Of Idaho," or "for Idaho." "A place to learn for Idaho." Then why the hell are we spending money to import tall people from North Carolina, or Illinois, or New Mexico to play basketball at The Place to Learn for Idaho? Just think of all the underprivileged sons and daughters of unemployed Idaho residents who could really utilize an athletic scholarship to obtain an education otherwise unobtainable. These kids are athletes too, maybe not world class, but athletes nonetheless. Let's get back to making the UI a place to learn for the children of Idaho. Let North Carolina educate its own tall people.

There is a disparity between salaries paid to coaches and professors. Don't ask for figures here. I don't have them. But we all know a top assistant football coach is paid more for his somewhat narrow range of responsibilities; than, say, the department head of Geology, which is an intellectually (and physically) demanding, socially productive position. Where are our priorities?

The dome gets a new set of bleachers, the football squad gets a new weight room, yet the College of Letters and Science ends up with an abundance of TAs and instructors that no speakie English and talkie so funny, that their unfortunate students not only have to struggle with foreign concepts, but also with foreign accents (contradict me if I'm wrong, but this is also a violation of the university's language code or some such official document, which demands a total command of the English language of instructors).

Face it folks, Idaho is a poor state, and our state budget really can't afford the T-bone steak of high-roller athletics. I can't help thinking of all the macaroni and cheese and hamburger that my one hundred dollars per academic year involuntary donation to the athletic fund would buy. Monson is a great basketball coach, but I'm not sorry to see him go. We can't afford him. Erickson is a good football coach too, but we can't afford him either. As a matter of fact, this college can't afford to be a farm club; for pro sports (although not many UI grads have gone pro). Maybe we should seek donations from the NFL and the NBA. Their response may indicate our net contribution in the arena of professional athletics.

Speaking of budgets and macaroni and cheese, this (don't stop me now, I'm on a roll) school could probably direct money away from some of their nonsense projects and back into education. A prime example that comes to mind is the recent on-campus road closures. Come on guys, let's be serious. When God gave you brains, he expected you to engage them now and then. I don't recall the exact cost, but I believe it was in the five figures category. A couple of hundred dollars would have purchased wooden barricades sufficient for the purpose, and potted trees are OK, but we don't NEED them ... got it? We also don't NEED concrete benches for students to sit on. Do you know how cold concrete can be? You faceless people who fondle the purse strings had better start acting like you're scraping bottom, because you are.

Idiot or liar?

Editor:

I greatly enjoyed the essay joke you so generously shared with the readers of the Argonaut. I read it at least 20 times and wound up laughing for hours. The way you twisted the facts to fit your biased story line was incredible. The most amusing part overall was when you called the President of the United States a liar and a lunatic. Louie, I take my hat off to you! I only wish there were more people like you. Your satirical writing was wonderful. Only a idiot would believe a editorial like yours. I am looking forward to seeing more of your comical contributions to the ever-boring Argonaut. Good luck on your career as a rising comedian.

Alpha Phi fundraiser buys heart machine

The Good Samaritan convalescent home will soon receive an electrocardiograph as a result of this year's annual Alpha Phi Heart Association fundraiser on March 3.

The University of Idaho Beta Zeta Chapter of Alpha Phi chose "Cardiac Arrest" as the theme for this year's drive. Prominent political, university and athletic figures throughout the area were "kidnapped" and held for ransom at the Alpha Phi house. They were asked to help solicit donations for the fundraiser.

A goal of $2,000 was set in order to purchase an EKG machine for Good Samaritan Village. This goal was surpassed, with the fundraiser bringing in a total of $2,200.

Some of the biggest contributions were collected by Judy Mohr ($306), Alan Tramal ($270), Bruce Pitman and Terry Armstrong (combined, $440), Don Monson ($240) and Dennis Erickson ($205). Other participants included Verla Olsen, Jim Pilcher, Jim Lyle, Jim Casey, Grace Wicks, Mark Brigham, Brian Kellerman and Ken Hobart.

Alpha Phi International Fraternity has been honored twice by the American Heart Association for fund raising and volunteering hours for heart research, education and treatment.

WSU's team dominated the meet, but Idaho's Dave Smith won the glory event — the 100 meters in a wind-aided time of 10.5 seconds Saturday to become the fastest man on either side of the Palouse.

Smith wins sprints in dual with Cougs

By Don Rondeau
Staff writer

The powerful Washington State track team dominated Idaho and Montana in double dual action Saturday, despite another brilliant showing by Vandal sophomore sprinter Dave Smith.

The Cougars overwhelmed the Vandals 116-53 and the Grizzlies 128-41. Idaho defeated Montana by a score of 74-66.

Smith was the meet's only double individual winner, capturing the 100 meter dash in 10.50.2 and the 200 meter dash in 21.46. Both races were wind-aided.

Smith used strong kicks to win his events. "The way I run, my last 100 meters is very important, because I don't have a good start. In the 200, I'm not very good on the corner," he said.

Mike Kinney received Idaho's other first place, winning the 400 meter intermediate hurdles in 52.94.

Everton Wanliss gave teammate Smith plenty of competition in the dashes. He placed second to Smith in the 100 meters at 10.59 and third in the 200 meters at 21.59.

Other Vandals to score were as follows: the 400 meter relay team of Vic Wallace, Dave Harewood, Wanliss and Smith, second with a time of 40.5; Craig Christenson, third in the javelin, 217 ft. 4 in.; Kinney, third in the 110 meter high hurdles, 14.68; Rob Kelly, third in the high jump, 6 ft. 10 3/4 in.; Wallace, fourth in the 400 meter run, 49.19; Mike Rousseau, third in the 800 meter run, 1:54.22; Eric Van Zanten, fourth in the pole vault, 114 ft. 7 1/4 in.; Kevin Wolf, third in the steeplechase, 9:34.04; Glenn Mitcham, third in the 400 meter intermediate hurdles, 53.72; and Neil Crichlow, second in the triple jump, 51 ft. 9 in.

The Vandal women's and men's teams will host the Moscow USA Games this Saturday on the University of Idaho track. Teams from Spokane Community College, Eastern Washington, Whitman and Montana State will be present.

Schoenborn's javelin qualifies for NCAAs

Sherry Schoenborn's NCAA Division I qualifying javelin throw of 163 ft. 4 3/4 in. was the highlight for the Idaho women's track team Saturday on the University of Idaho track.

The mark earned Schoenborn the MWAC Athlete of the Week award for the second straight week.

The Vandals competed against Montana and Washington State in a non-scoring meet.

Schoenborn was followed by teammate Mylissa Coleman, who took second with a toss of 157 ft. 6 in.

Idaho also received firsts from Allison Falkenberg-Ryan in the 400 meter dash at 58.6; Sherrie Crang in the 1,500 meter run at 4:33.9; Julie Helbling in the discus with a toss of 126 ft. 2 in. and the 1,600 meter relay team of Annette Helling, Wende Rosten, Amy Trott and Falkenberg-Ryan with a time of 4:05.6.

Other strong Vandal finishes were as follows: Karen Voss, second in the 3,000 meter run, 10:17.7; Helbling, second in the shot put, 42 ft, 10 in.; Wendy Partick, third in the 100 meter high hurdles, 19.3; Mary Bradford, third in the long jump, 16 ft. 9 1/2 in.; and Rosten placed second in the 100 meter dash with a time of 13.1.

The Vandals will be in action this Saturday on the UI track as they co-host the Moscow USA Games with the men's team.

Gridders begin spring drills

The "off season," the spring football season, opened last week as head coach Dennis Erickson and his staff prepare to get the University of Idaho team in shape for the annual spring intra-squad game April 23.

The Vandals, coming off a 9-4 year, are holding practice every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. The team will also have intra-squad scrimmages every Saturday at 11 a.m., according to assistant coach John McMahon.

Idaho boasts the return of quarterback Ken Hobart, the Vandals' leading career passer, and wide receivers Ron Whittenburg, Brian Allen and tight end Kurt Vestman to help out the offense that ranked No. 1 in the Big Sky Conference last year. Running back Kerry Hickey is not playing this spring because of academic reasons.

The schedule for next season has been announced as the Vandals will have five home games to go with six away. Some of the non-conference teams Idaho plays are Southern Colorado State (home) and Portland State (away). Homecoming is Oct. 22 against defending Big Sky champ Montana, and the Vandals finish the season hosting Nevada-Reno and Boise State.

PEACE CORPS Special Work For Special People

Peace Corps volunteers are people pretty much like you. People with commitment and skills who have assessed their lives and decided they want to be of service to others in a troubled world.

The problems our volunteers deal with overseas aren't new. Such as the cycle of poverty that traps one generation after another because they're too busy holding on to get ahead. The debilitating effects of malnutrition, disease, and inadequate shelter. Education and skills that are lacking, and the means to get them too.

Your college training qualifies you to handle more of these problems than you might think. Such as teaching nutrition and health practices; designing and building bridges and irrigation systems; working on reforestation and fisheries programs; introducing better agricultural techniques; advising small businesses and establishing cooperatives; or teaching math and science at the secondary level.

The number of jobs to do is nearly as great as the number of volunteers who have served since 1961: Nearly 90,000. More volunteers are being chosen now for two-year assignments beginning in the next 3-12 months in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and the Pacific.

Our representatives will be pleased to discuss the opportunities with you.

Coaching applications double

The number of applicants for the new head men's basketball coaching position has about doubled since last week, Athletic Director Bill Belknap said Monday.

The list, which was near 25 last Friday, has expanded to nearly 50, including more interested people from the eastern United States. This is giving Belknap somewhat of a headache trying to look at all of the information.

"We have had a little more interest. I don't know if that is good or bad," he said. "The job is finally reaching a few more people and this decision is obviously not going to be easy."

Assistant coach Barry Collier is still the only member of former head coach Don Monson's staff to apply for the job. Monson resigned March 21 to take the head coaching job at Oregon. Belknap added that he will try to find Monson's replacement by April 1, but due to the increased number of applicants, wouldn't be held to that date.

Tennis lineup juggled prior to WSU match

This year's trip to Utah, Arizona and California may have affected the Idaho men's tennis team's season record, but in the long run, head coach Jim Sevall believes the trip will be beneficial.

The team, which lost three of nine matches to bump its record to an uncharacteristic 5-6, will try to get back onto the winning track tomorrow when it travels to Pullman to play Washington State at 2:30 p.m. Idaho then returns home Saturday to host Eastern Washington at 1 p.m. and Lewis-Clark State on Sunday at noon.

"We are approaching the season differently than we have done in the past," said Sevall, whose club was 9-1 at this time one year ago. "Last year we went on a trip to California and did really well, but I think we peaked too soon, because we went to the Big Sky Championships and didn't do well. So now we want to experiment and work our way into shape and be there around championship time."

Sevall also changed the starting lineup during the break, trying to find a "winning" style. Senior Mike Daily has been moved to the No. 1 seed, from No. 2, and Meng Kai Fong has advanced from No. 4 to No. 2. He also served as the No. 1 seed for three matches.

Idaho's starting lineup now looks like this: Daily is No. 1, Fong No. 2, then Suresh Menon, Doug Belcher, Dave Long and Jon Brady. In doubles, Daily-Belcher have moved to the No. 1 seed from No. 2, while Menon-Fong have dropped to No. 2.

Brose earns Kodak honor

Idaho's Denise Brose is one of five players named to the Kodak District VII All-American Team.

Brose joins Utah's Debbie Asper, Weber State's Cindy Stump and Arizona State's Kym Hampton and Olivia Jones. All five, along with players from eight other such regions across the U.S., are now eligible for the national first team which will be announced March 31.

"I can call her 'Miss Consistency' with no reservation. I am very happy for Denise to receive this recognition for her contribution to the team. She is an outstanding player," said Idaho coach Pat Dobratz.

KUID manager inherits money problems

By Bruce Smith
Staff writer

The first problem KUID's new station manager, Bill Campbell, was forced to face on his opening day was a problem he had already anticipated — money — or lack of it.

Money is said to be the root of all evil, but Campbell thinks he can change that idea since he took on the job March 18. He's had to think of other ideas to combat that foe in the past while working at public television stations in Colorado and West Virginia, and believes he can come up with new ideas here, too.

"There have been some problems with money here, but that is going on everywhere," said Campbell, who accepted the post after working almost five years at KTSC-TV, a public television station in Pueblo, Colo. "I think KUID is different, however, in that it has a lot of followers who care about it. I didn't come here just to watch this thing dry up. I believe we can continue build a respectable television station here."

In his first weekend as station manager, KUID collected $30,866 in pledges at its annual "Festival." That amount was more than his co-workers and he had expected, and sent Campbell believing, even more, that Idaho public television in can win out despite the state Legislature's 50 percent spending cut (currently at $612,000) in public television over the past four years.

"We have the backing here to continue on," said the 40 year-old Campbell, brushing his slightly graying hair, which, he says, was caused by the Colorado sun bleaching his hair, not his age.

"We are hoping to produce some exciting programs with the money we make. After all, the people who watch our programs are actually our board of directors, and they provide the money. So we want to know what their preferences are."

Campbell stepped into the position vacated by Art Hook, who resigned last August. Communication Professor Pete Haggart then took over the position, but only on an interim basis. He left the position when Campbell was hired and believes the university has found the right person for the job.

"He'll do fine," said Haggart. "He has had a lot of experience, especially in management. He is outgoing and is the type of person that will meet people and do something to increase public support. He will be a strong voice and advocate for KUID."

Haggart particularly noticed Campbell's enthusiastic view of his new job. Campbell's boisterous voice, which can be heard almost throughout the building, seems to show he is ready to begin trying to combat KUID's problems.

"I am excited to come here. It was hard to leave the Colorado sunshine and my friends, but from what I've seen of Moscow we (including his family) should be able to do the same thing here," Campbell said.

"The job isn't so bad, either. I've been here this long and I'm still smiling."

The reason for the smile, Campbell seems to believe, is that he doesn't think he is in such a bad situation. He likes the idea that the public television stations (KISU-Pocatello and KAID-Boise) have merged with KUID to work together to help stay afloat, and says that is the trend for many public television stations. He added that the merger can help unify the three different areas of the state.

There are, in fact, very few things Campbell mentioned that he didn't like. One of those problems will hopefully be soon remedied. His family hasn't arrived from Pueblo yet. Currently, they are still trying to sell their home and Campbell's 10-year-old son and 6-year-old daughter are finishing the school year. Campbell said his wife and children said they don't mind the move from Pueblo since they are all skiers and Idaho can compete with Colorado in that respect. They also like having the ocean within a day's drive.

"We haven't been to the ocean in five years," Campbell said. "It will be nice to have that fairly near and the mountains close also. We all like to ski and mountain climb, too. In fact, I plan on climbing a few Colorado mountains with my son when I leave to see my family in May and then in July, too."

Mountain climbing and skiing are a few of Campbell's hobbies that seem to indicate he's a outgoing person. He says he uses his outgoing abilities in his job and hopes to show the people how outgoing KUID can be, as well.

One of the ways he sees to help KUID, and KUID-FM radio, of which he is also in charge, is by getting local people involved in station activities. He even considered asking some local citizens to work there, but added the UI students will still continue to get as much exposure to KUID as they have in the past.

"I don't have many major changes as far as the students working is concerned," he said. "We're trying to do more things about getting them more involved. We also want to meet our audience and I feel having them get a close look at the station would do that. I want to make KUID, and myself, more available to them."

The students, Campbell added, are a valuable working force. They provide the manpower that enables the station to transmit at a low cost. The job, in return, benefits the student with experience. Campbell, himself, learned about television production at his first job as production assistant at WWVU-TV in Morgantown, W.V., at a college television station.

SILVER & GOLD DAY CELEBRATION 1983

Thursday, April 7

The University of Idaho will be celebrating its third annual Silver & Gold Day on April 7. This is a new and exciting tradition developing on and off the UI campus. Across the nation and around the world, alumni and friends will be gathering to salute their common heritage—the University of Idaho. The governor of the State of Idaho has joined with the Alumni Association and the university community in proclaiming April 7 "Silver & Gold Day"—a special day in which to remember Idaho.

"The exposure the students will get here is most beneficial to what they will get outside," he said. "We want the best possible students to work for us. They have an obligation to us, too. They should act professional because they are going to have to do that when they get out of school anyway."

Campbell went to college at the University of West Virginia and majored in business, but soon discovered it wasn't his top interest. So he decided to enlist in the Navy after his sophomore year.

"I had a good time that year, though," he said. "I partied."

After serving for four years, he returned to WVU and changed his major to journalism. He added a radiotelevision option soon after when a friend (who now works for ABC) said there were better job opportunities there.

"If I would've majored in business, I would've had everything taken care of," he said. "My father was a big banker and probably could have gotten me a job at any bank on the East Coast. I just didn't go for it, though. All in all, it looks like I made a good decision."

Money didn't matter for Campbell then, but now it has to be a major concern. But he tries not to let it worry him and hopes KUID won't have to either.

Eating disorder help available on campus

An eating disorder group for students with bulimia and anorexia nervosa has been formed under the direction of Marilyn Murray, counseling psychologist at the University of Idaho Student Counseling Center.

The group is for UI students and their spouses who are caught in a cycle of gorging on food and purging by self-induced vomiting or laxative abuse. Murray said the purpose of the group is to reduce the physical and psychological problems which result from these eating disorders.

Murray said eight people currently participate in the group but others are welcome, following an interview with her.

The group atmosphere tries to eliminate the attitude, "I'm the only one with this problem." A group feeling gives everyone a chance to talk to someone with the same related problem, she said.

The most common victim is the single young women who is of normal weight and has just completed a diet. The problem starts because she is unhappy with her weight and is trying to obtain the "Playboy image" or the thin and sexy society image.

"They see fatness in themselves but someone else will see them as normal weight," Murray said. When these women do get underweight, other people will see the problem but the women, themselves, won't, she said.

The problems are handled through an overall awareness of both the physical and psychological complications. By becoming aware of the food intake and the feelings which cause the gorging, the eating disorder can come into perspective and be curbed, Murray said.

The problems occur most often during stressful periods such as tests, failures, disagreements with someone close and relationship break-ups.

Many of the people are perfectionists and have the additional pressure of performing perfectly in every thing they do. Murray said many of the people are bright students, some with 4.0 grade point averages.

She said relaxation training, physical activities and hobbies can be used to reduce tension and pressure.

Marchers want U.S. out of El Salvador

On the eve of first day of the Borah Symposium, nearly 100 protesters marched from the University of Idaho Library to the Moscow Community Center to protest the United States' involvement in Central American countries.

"We're doing this to make the community at large aware of the situation in Central America and to make the participants (of the Borah Symposium) know we know what's really going on there," said Jim Wittebols, a spokesman for Latin American Support Organization. "We want to express our opposition to U.S. involvement and raise people's interest."

Wittebols' organization and the North Idaho Committee on El Salvador sponsored the march. This was its second year.

The sign-carrying protestors chanted "stop the troops, stop the war, U.S. out of El Salvador" and other slogans on their way to the center. After arriving at the center, protesters of all ages joined in some songs and then several speakers informed the audience of what they thought of the happenings in Central America.

Last year approximately 250 people attended the march. Several of this year's participants thought less people came this year because of the cold weather.

Reactions from people watching the march varied from full support of the marchers to ridicule of them.

Neighborhood watch can apply on campus too

The Neighborhood Watch Program, which started in some Moscow residential areas in January, will work around campus too, according to Moscow Police Sergeant Dan Weaver.

The program was created to get citizens involved in preventing residential crime by reporting suspicious activity to the police.

Weaver said students should look and listen for suspicious circumstances. He suggested that students get to know their neighbors.

"If students notice something weird or a person acting suspicious while their neighbor is away, they should report it to the police," he said.

Several family housing projects have been successfully active in the Neighborhood Watch Program, according to Weaver. He suggested that living groups and university departments change the name to dorm watch, office watch, or fraternity or sorority watch to apply the program to their particular situation.

"There seems to be a lot of vandalism and burglary in the sorority and fraternity areas, and hopefully this program will aid in decreasing that," Weaver said.

Weaver said people should contact the police if they suspect someone of committing a crime or if they hear a crime tip.

People can contact the police for more information on the watch program. Weaver suggested that people talk to their neighbors and organize meetings so police officers can demonstrate different types of locks, self protection and how to report a crime.

Blood drive set for early April

Have you ever given blood before? Have you even contemplated it? Your last chance to use this on-campus opportunity is just around the corner.

The ASUI Blood Drive Committee will once again be tapping into arms on the third floor of the Student Union Building on the University of Idaho campus. The Blood Drive will be conducted on April 5th, from noon to 4 p.m.;

6th, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.; and 7th, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

A Blood Drive is a community event. In the past, students, as well as Moscow residents, have participated in donating blood to those in need.

"We hope this drive will be as successful as the last one," said Margo Hikida, UI senior in Electrical Engineering and Co-Chairman of the ASUI Blood Drive Committee.

"With the last drive, we filled more than our quota — which is 110 pints a day — for three days."

The Boise Red Cross transports the blood from Moscow to Boise. There, it is processed and distributed to patients who need it.

Persons wishing to donate blood will have a form typed out for them if they don't hold a donor's card already. Blood tests will also be given before the blood is taken.

Refreshments will be served and all students are urged to chip in.
