Would you buy a used car from this man?

Probably not, because Jim Barnes sells the UI

By Charles Gallagher of the Argonaut

INE years ago, on the eve of the University of Idaho's first official fall recruiting tour, UI administrators were still searching for someone to head its newly created High School Relations Office.

Finally, on the Monday of the tour's first week, the administration — after much deliberation — selected for the job an enthusiastic young man with a "gung ho" attitude. By that Thursday he was in Salmon giving his first sales pitch.

On that maiden trip, the UI admissions director drove down with him. But after only one day he decided to return to Moscow, leaving Jim Barnes on his own to sell the university.

And he's been doing it ever since.

"There wasn't anybody telling me how to do it, so I kind of developed my own style," Barnes said.

It's a style not easy to forget; he often uses wild hand gestures in his sales pitch to express himself, and laughter is often the result. He has also developed a trademark of dispensing university promotion pamphlets by throwing them to his student audiences. Lunacy can be charismatic, and his comic, offbeat ways self.

"I don't care if the students think I was a little crazy; it just might work in my favor," Barnes said. "I enjoy having fun in those sessions and have learned that I can't take myself too seriously. You've got to try to remember what kind of mood these kids are in. We try to entertain them a little bit."

A relaxed professional approach is also Barnes' key to surviving on the road and keeping his life in some sort of balance. He travels from 15 to 20 weeks a year, to high shools and college fairs, and has seen people burn out from the rigorous schedule of promotion tours.

"You can't live comfortably on the road if you're always worried what is happening 300 miles someplace else that you have no control over," he said. When Barnes leaves Moscow, he leaves a wife, three children and several university classes he is taking toward his doctorate in education administration.

"You have to have an understanding spouse and have to maximize your time with them, but I have to work really hard at it," he said.

Mary Barnes has traveled with her husband occasionally since that first year, and she understands what it is like out on the road. They have also taken the children around the state once or twice, and they also understand the traveling demands of his job.

"I think the University of Idaho is the neatest thing in the world to sell," Barnes said, adding that the turbulence felt within higher education in recent months has not hindered his work. Recent budget cuts and the lead institution proposal "just make my job more challenging," he said, noting that education is hurting financially all over, not just in Idaho.

"If we start to say the 'lead institution,' it becomes so political that it almost closes the door to even compromising a little bit on ways to save money," he

Barnes favors the university presidents council's direct emphasis plan, and said he appreciates the fact that the presidents will be working together with Charles McQuillen, executive director of the State Board of Education, on the proposal.

Election board says yes to 16 but nixes two

Sixteen students have tossed their hats into the political ring, kicking off campaigns in readiness for the Nov. 16 ASUI election.

However, two students who took out petitions were ruled ineligible to be placed on the ballot by the Election Board, said Chairman Mike DeBoer. They can, though, run as write-ins, DeBoer said.

Vying for the six open Senate spots are: Teri Campbell, Tammy Fitting, Renee Grimmett, Sally Lanham, Doug McMurray, Brian Merz, Jim Pierce, Nathan Riggers and Jim Stoicheff, Jr.

Contending for ASUI president are: Chris Berg, Anthony Hoover and Tom LeClaire. Candidates for vice president are: Rob Collard, John Edwards and Jana Habiger.

The two students ruled ineligible for inclusion on the ballet are John Hecht and Blake Worthington.

Hecht, who was running for president, did not sign a release which would authorize the registrar to release his GPA, a requirement of every candidate. Blake Worthington, who was running for one of the Senate spots, turned his petition in one hour after the deadline, which was Friday at 5 p.m.

"I think the requirement is silly," Hecht said. Students should have the right to choose for themselves who their president will be, he added. A candidate should be able to gain student support based on experience and not on a grade point indicator, he said.

Hecht said he declined to sign the release in order to challenge the ASUI Rules and Regulations which require a 2.25 GPA in order to run for an ASUI elected office. He has a meeting with Rick Lierz, judicial legal advisor with Student Advisory Services today, to seek advice on the standing of a possible appeal.

But, if the ballot goes to press as scheduled on Wednesday. the appeal to the University Judicial Council will not be made on time.

Hecht may then seek a postponement of the election. Right now, though, his only recourse is to run a write-in campaign, which he has already began preparing, he said.

Official verification of the GPA requirement check on all candidates will be made today.

'Invisible Senator' may get dumped

By Kathy Amidei of the Argonaut

An ASUI reprimand against the "Invisible Senator" may turn into more than just a "slap on the hand" if enough senators voice approval for impeachment proceedings at pre-session today.

A reprimand taking the "Invisible Senator." David Borror, to task is to be submitted at the Senate meeting on Wednesday.

Borror, who has attended four of the ten regularly scheduled Senate meetings this semester, is cited in the reprimand for "malfeasance of duties." Malfeasance is wrongful conduct of a public official.

Senators have expressed displeasure at Borror's absence, increasing the call for action to be taken against him.

But Jeff Kunz, president pro tempore of the Senate, had said repeatedly he would not initiate a reprimand against Borror. That is a responsibility which rests on the shoulders of the executive branch.

Senators had dubbed Borror as the "Invisible Senator" or simply as "Senator No. 13" in accordance with an unwritten maxim not to mention names at meetings.

Vice President Teresa Madison, who authored the reprimand, said, "It's more of a public slap on the hands."

However if enough support from senators is expressed at the pre-session on Tuesday, the reprimand may change into a bill seeking his impeachment.

"It's hard to say where they (the senators) stand on it." Madison said. And she doesn't want to initiate impeachment proceedings if the support for such an action isn't there, she said.

The impeachment process begins with a bill of impeachment followed by an advertised public hearing, which is held at the Senate meeting the next week. At the meeting the Senate would call for public testimony and then vote on the bill, which requires a two-thirds majority for the impeachment to be effective.

Requirements of senators include attendance at pre-sessions and committee meetings, as well as the regular Senate meetings, and visiting assigned living groups.

According to Madison, Borror has attended only two or three interviews conducted by the Governance, Operations and Appointments Committee (GOA) of which he is a member and has not visited his living groups at all.

As a theater major with a role in the play The Matchmaker, Borror's absences were excused because rehearsals fell on the same night as the Senate meeting. constituting valid academic purpose.

However, before Homecoming, Madison issued him a friendly warning that he should at least make an effort to see his living groups if he couldn't attend the meetings. When he didn't visit his living groups or attend the meetings, senators began complaining, which led to the reprimand.

In other business a resolution will be submitted at the senate meeting supporting the Faculty Council's efforts in aettina the ball rolling to look into the expansion of the old building or construction of a new one to house the UI Bookstore. It's basically a push to get a report going by the Office of Facility Planning which would look at the feasiblities, costs and possible sites for such a project, says Sen. Tom LeClaire, author of the resolution.

Although senators are working to get a referendum put on the Nov. 16 ASUI election ballot seeking student approval or disapproval for a 2.25 GPA requirement for all ASUI elected officials, they may not have enough time to get it put on. The ballots were scheduled to be sent into the printers on Monday, Madison said. Unless the printers will allow it to be put on later, the referendum won't make it on the ballot for this election.

The Idaho Task Force on Higher Education's preliminary recommendations will be the topic of a question and answer forum, Thursday at 8 p.m. in the basement of the Theophilus Tower.

Residents of Gault, Upham, Shoup and Willis Sweet halls as well as those of the Tower are encouraged to attend the forum which will feature brief talks by senators explaining how the recommendations of the Task Force would affect students. The question and answer period will follow the senators' talks. The forum, originally scheduled for last Thursday, was postponed a week.

Kunz said names and addresses of students living off-campus should be computerized by Wednesday, making possible a tentative publishing date for the ASUI newsletter of early next week.

said DeBoer.

A candidates' forum is scheduled for Sunday, Nov. 13 at 6 p.m. in the Borah Theater of the SUB. Each candidate will be allowed five minutes to speak. followed by a question and answer period.

UI enrollment sets record

Fall semester enrollment at the UI has set a new record with a total of 9,237 students enrolled. That total surpassed the previous enrollment record of 9,185 which was set last fall.

Total on-campus enrollment is 8,589 students which includes those taking courses through the Video Outreach program. Offcampus enrollment includes 546 students registered at the Idaho Falls Center for Higher Education and 102 at the Coeur d'Alene Graduate Center.

Overall at the UI there are 6,877 undergraduate students, 280 law students, 1,401 graduate students and 679 nonmatriculated students. UI students registered for 118,632 credit hours this fall.

Continuing Ed seeks ideas

University of Idaho Continuing Education is currently preparing the schedule of non-credit class offerings for spring semester and is seeking ideas and suggestions for new classes.

Mary Lou Thompson, noncredit course coordinator, said that ideas from the community for new classes would be welcome and that anyone qualified to teach a class is encouraged to contact the Continuing Education office by Nov.

Classes in physical activities, career improvement, art, music, languages, hobbies and special interests and some academic subjects are some of what is included in the enrichment program.

FC considers policy changes

The University of Idaho Faculty Council will again consider the proposed changes to the policy on financial exigency and staff reduction procedures in the Faculty/Staff Handbook at today's meeting.

At last week's meeting, the council referred some of the revised proposals back to the Faculty Affairs Committee (FAC). Today the council will now look at the response the FAC has sent to the faculty council. The FAC stands behind some of their original recommendations and offers some substitutions.

The members of the council will also hear a request asking that the council support the university's Special Services for Disadvantaged Students Program. The purpose of the program, which began in 1980, is to "improve retention rates of disadvantaged students."

The request, from the director of the program, Mary L. Morris states that the application to the federal government for another four-year funding cycle must be completed by the end of November. The request also asks for a letter of support from the council if they do decide to support the program.

A Proposed Videotape Policy recommended by the FAC will also be considered by the council. The proposal details the rights of instructors concerning videotaped material such as lectures.

Peace Corp to recruit at UI

The University of Idaho will be the focus of a Peace Corps recruiting drive Wednesday through Friday, Nov. 9-11, when visiting agency representatives seek to sign up graduates for two-year assignments beginning next summer and fall.

Recruiters for the volunteer agency will be providing information and applications from a booth in the SUB Lobby from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. each day of their visit. Scheduled interviews will be held Nov. 10 and 11 in the Career Planning and Placement Office. Students are required to sign up in advance for their interview at the information booth or the Placement office.

The UI recruitment effort comes as the total figure for Americans who have served as Peace Corps volunteers since the agency was founded in 100,000. tops 1961 Approximately 400 of those have been UI graduates. according to Ann Trutner, 29, recruitment team leader who served as a volunteer in the West African nation of Liberia. More than 5,200 Peace Corps volunteers are now serving in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Pacific.

Those persons with the best chance of being accepted as volunteers, according to Trutner, are graduates with majors or minors in the physical and life sciences, math, health, nutrition, economics. home civil engineering, industrial arts. French, special and secondary education, business, forestry, fisheries and agriculture. Graduates in other disciplines, including the liberal arts, are encouraged to apply.

Trutner pointed out that two of the goals of the Peace Corps are to encourage more minorities and mid-career, older Americans to apply. In the last four years the number of minorities serving in the Peace Corps has risen from five percent to eight percent. "We've expended a great deal of effort to let minorities know of the unique experience available to them," Trutner said, "and more are responding." Approximately 350 volunteers over the age of 55 are also serving, she noted. "Age is respected in many of these countries," Trutner said. "The experience of life is very much honored and older volunteers are readily accepted - and listened to - in these cultures."

Trutner explained that Peace Corps development efforts are continuing to focus on the areas of agriculture and food production, health and nutrition, alternative energy sources, education and income generation. "With their teaching skills, business skills, construction skills and farming skills, volunteers are building bridges in Nepal, helping Filipino fishermen improve their catches, designing water systems in Belize, and constructing fresh-water fish ponds throughout Africa." Another emphasis, she noted, is income generation, wherein farmers, craftsmen, fishermen and others who have need to market their products are taught how to establish cooperatives, and to manage their small businesses. "Rather than teaching people only how to subsist we want them to learn how to get income developed and move past the subsistence level" she said.

Peace Corps volunteers serve for two years and are provided with a living allowance, travel costs, medical coverage, cultural and language training, and a cash readjustment allowance of $4,200 paid in a lump sum at the end of two years service. There is no upper age limit, but applicants must be U.S. citizens. and if married, have no dependent children.

Inquiries may also be directed to Robert Phelps, UI Peace Corps Coordinator, who is located in the Student Advisory Services Office UCC 241.

Moscow council

Citizens will decide which of six candidates will assume three Moscow City Council positions when the polls open today at noon until 8 p.m.

The candidates are William Bode, co-owner of the Moscow Hotel, and the only candidate running for re-election; Jessie Hillbrick, an Affirmative Action secretary at Washington State University; Michael Johnson, a police officer in Pullman; Donald Papineau, owner of a Moscow insurance agency; Gary Tragesser, the corporate pilot for Bennett Lumber Products; and Bill Voxman, a mathematics professor at the University of Idaho.

Bode said that the university and Moscow's "futures are in each others hands." He said students should make an impact and vote in local elections.

Hillbrick said that it was imperative that Moscow and the university work together. She said that she is concerned with the economic growth of the city, but not just the downtown area.

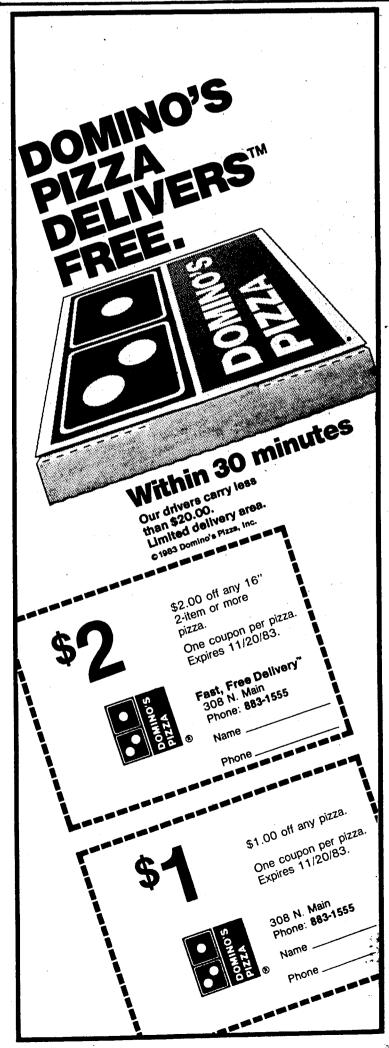

Johnson said that it was important to not only listen to what the candidates had said, "but also to what they had not said."

Papineau said he wanted Moscow to secure "light, clean industry." He said that the city had too many ordinances that need to be reviewed and cited an ordinance to repair side walks that he felt was unnecessary.

Tragesser said that Moscow did not "need growth just for the sake of growth."

Voxman said that the university and Moscow could benefit each other. He said that he had spoken with a professor in landscape architecture concerning plans for a recreation trail for use with bicycles.

Alcohol: image over propriety

If the University of Idaho's alcohol consumption policy is anything to judge by, then those in charge of running the institution are plainly more concerned about its image than about running it fairly and properly.

Since its inception, the UI has forbidden alcohol consumption on its premises; but that's no different than most campuses. Most universities forbade alcohol during Prohibition and thereafter.

But, since then, most other campuses have rescinded such regulations.

Not the University of Idaho — nor, for that matter, has any other university in Idaho. It's generally conceded that the principal cause for that lack of change is a conservative, anti-drinking temperament emanating from the Mormon-dominated southern end of the state. And, because the UI's money comes from a Legislature dominated by southern Idaho, its administrators have shied away from changing that status.

There's no denying that UI students like to drink. Indeed, Moscow is such a small town that there are really only two prime extracurricular activities: going to movies and drinking.

Unfortunately, the lack of activities is translated in the ears of southern Idahoans to the notion that the UI is a "party school." The only thing that students can talk about when they go back to Boise or Idaho Falls is the parties they have.

That doesn't mean that it's any worse at the UI than at any other Idaho university. Drinking is something that college students — including those at Boise State and Idaho State — almost universally enjoy. Yet the UI has been saddled with the "party school" image.

And that image is why UI administrators won't back a policy change. They don't want to make things worse for the school image — even if it makes things worse for the UI moneywise

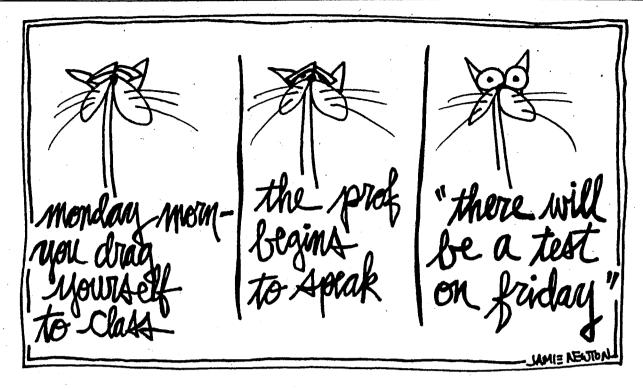

The UI students, through the ASUI, could make considerably more money than they currently make if an alcohol policy was established. The ASUI golf course, for example, would see a lot more business if beer were sold there.

More important, though, is the fact that most UI students are grown-up boys and girls. They are of drinking age. And if they want to drink, they will, despite any silly regulations the UI may impose. In refusing to recognize that, and in attempting to keep it all under wraps, the UI is only practicing hypocrisy.

Such hypocrisy is really unnecessary, especially considering that the only reason for maintaining it is concern about the UI's "image."

Since when did an image take precedence over the proper administration of a university?

Going underground

"It's approaching the platform now, I can see ... Wait! It just burst into flames. Ohh, this is terrible — oohhh, the inhumanity of it all. I don't know how much longer I'll be able to continue ... get out of my way please. Ohhh, the destruction, there's pieces falling to the Earth, burning and charred pieces of wreckage ... ohhhh this is terrible."

I know what you're thinking, "This passage is an excerpt from a reporter's account of the zeppelin Hindenburg's explosion in the 1930's," right? Wrong.

Actually, this quote was taken from the oral transcript of the last meeting of the SWS.

What is the SWS? You mean you don't know? Well, as university President of this hitherto unknown group, let me inform all of you that the SWS stands for truth, justice and white bread. The SWS is an underground organization and its initials stand for one thing and one thing only — "Save the Worm Society."

Yes, at the last meeting of the SWS, treasurer, Sonny Zenith uttered these now immortal words. The opening statement, in a nutshell, sums up the essence of our earthy organization: We will leave no stone unturned in our righteous quest to improve the habitat, health and attitude of the worm or any subterranean dweller.

I know many of you must be thinking, "Just what exactly does the SWS do?" Well, before I explain, I will first outline the history of our organization.

The SWS was first conceived back east, where the radicals hung out in the 1960s.

Of course, I'm talking about Harvard. Soon, the SWS had chapters across the eastern seaboard when, on December 13, a miracle of miracles occured. The SWS came west.

On December 13, known as "Washington Worm Day," to members, a SWS chapter was founded at the University of Washington, and, well, Idaho just seemed to fall in line.

Today, the SWS chapter boasts a membership well into the teens.

So what do our 12 or so members stand for? Why, as I outlined earlier, we stand for the protection and preservation of the worm.

Take this last weekend's rainstorm for example. Do you realize the number of worms who were wantonly slaughtered by the countless hordes of students at the UI? The worm has no protection from a student's waffle-stomper or cowboy boot. The poor worm, all he/she/it can do is just lie there and take it. Squish, splattered all over the sidewalk. "Ohh, the inhumanity of it all," as Zenith said.

So what does the SWS exactly do?

Well, we save the worms, stupid! Any of the little critters who crawl out onto the sidewalk, we save. We put them in our pockets, in our bookbags ... anywhere but on the murderous sidewalk.

"A worm on the sidewalk is like a pedestrian at Indianapolis," as Wa-Ida regional vice president Jeff Corkey once said.

Frank Hill is a UI senior majoring in sports journalism.

I realize that any of you who have read this far must be wondering, "Why did I read this far?" Well, let me reassure you, your eye strain was not in vain. For now I come to the crux of the issue.

On this campus a survey was recently held. A survey that, when tallied, rated the University of Idaho a G minus ... only one mark above failing. In fact, if we had not had a SWS chapter, the UI would have been blacklisted by yet another organization.

Something must be done to raise our rating from a G minus. And that something is involvement. According to the survey, only one in 20 students on this campus had ever heard of the SWS. Simply terrible! And worse, only one person in 55.84 would be willing to aid the worm in any way, shape or form.

Thus, I implore you: watch the campus calendar in the Argonaut, and attend our next meeting.

Most of you undoubtedly are thinking, "Hah, another dry meeting where nothing ever gets done." Pooh-pooh and pish posh, I say. For one, our meetings are never "dry," and secondly, the UI SWS has a number of projects in the works.

Our main project is to buy enough two-by-fours to board up all of the sidewalks on the UI campus. These boards would create a gutter protecting not only the worm from the student but vice versa.

Also, the UI SWS has ordered over 10,000 coffee can lids from Maxwell House. Face it, once the sidewalks are boarded up, the worms will have to crawl somewhere — thus the reason for the coffee can lids. These lids will be scattered among the grassy areas on the UI campus to provide a refuge for the poor worm. Without the lids, it would be Catch-22 for the wormy critters — do they drown in the grass or be crushed on the sidewalk. Not a pretty option indeed.

And finally, let me urge all of you to attend our next SWS meeting. The dues are cheap — just one coffee can lid and some of your native soil. We're hurting for members.

As Public Relations Manager "Snake Eyes" Adonis said, "I urge all of those worm lovers out there to join. I know there are millions (potential members, not worms) who would be willing, and capable members of the Save the Worm Society."

Indeed, the worm can't speak, only the SWS can.

Those crazy senators

The ASUI Senate bill which lowered the GPA requirement to 2.25 for senators undermines the spirit of excellence in academics. UI has held the reputation of being the most challenging university in Idaho long before this group of temporary senators decided to send a message to promote academic mediocrity instead. This bill, in effect, concludes, "UI students don't have to be that intelligent to hold an ASUI office."

Senators ignored this as a time to vote according to what is intrinsically right; instead, they were swayed by their Greek-system constituencies who elected them (Only three senators are not Greek). Just think, now these "allknowing" Greek-system coalitions can vote into office a "Jane Airhead" who barely qualifies with a 2.25 GPA! I can't wait to see debate in the future:

"Oh wow (sigh), I simply love it when we get out $75 checks for being senators every month."

"Furr sure, let's go shopping!" "Meeting adjourned (knock)!"

Are you senators positive you polled outside the Greek system when you developed your consensus? Greeks poll Greeks, I suppose. What other group would support a bill which lowers longstanding standards?

Personally, I feel this standard should even be over the 2.5 GPA requirements. I really hope this issue becomes a referendum on the ballot; I'll be sure to vote against it, and also the senators who supported it. By the way, here's a list of their names; I noticed they were not present in the last Argh when all of that support was aired:

Jeff Kunz, Chris Berg, Tom LeClaire, Andy Hazzard, Jane Freund, John Edwards, Mike Trail, Frank Childs and Jana Habiger.

Oh yes, the candidate for office, Nathan Riggers, also supported it in a letter to the editor.

I don't expect my one off-campus vote will be much of a match to the party-line votes of the Greeks, but at least I brought forth an opposing view point. That's what a democracy is all about. God bless America!

The pacifists did it

After reading June Sawyer's, Paul Thomson's and Nick Sanyal's letters, I m beginning to wonder if a pacifist with a memory longer than a month even exists. The consistancy in their arguments was about as abundant as the "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" Miss Sawyer cherishes is in Vietnam, Cuba and Eastern Europe (areas that the U.S., due to pacifist pressure, abandoned).

Mr. Thomson called "fighting for peace" a contradiction of terms. How much sense did Miss Sawyer make speaking of "an unjust and illegal war?" What is war?

Mr. Sanyal, while expounding on the virtue of protest, referred to the Boston Tea Party. Can't any of you remember what that precipitated? Hint: Mr. Thomson's contradiction.

Then Mr. Sanyal called the President an "ignoramus" (C.A.M.) and a "warmonger." The spineless pacifists of the 20th century have been the cause of more slaughter and bloodshed than mankind has ever seen. Neville Chamberland's career was based on peace at any price (ask a Czech). Six million Jews and millions of soldiers later, have the pacifists learned anything?

LBJ and the pacifists labeled Goldwater a warmonger in '64. Remember? Fifty thousand soldiers and countless Vietnamese later, have the pacifists learned anything? Vietnam would have probably lasted two weeks under Goldwater; more important, we wouldn't have lost.

Then, as if the climax of Mr. Sanyal's argument, he asks "What has war and bloodshed bought us?" Will somebody show this guy a map!? The country you're living in and your right to protest. Remember the war and bloodshed following the Boston Tea Party? It, like the rest of what I mentioned, happened more than a month ago.

Those crazy tyrannists

Editor:

Three cheers for Paul Baier! It's about time someone spoke out against people who would have you believe that someone else can corrupt you. The truth is, if you want to drink (or take drugs or have sex with someone), you're going to do it, whether you see a beer T-shirt or not. Everyone has a mind and a will of their own - no one else can make you do something unless you want to. The people that try to are called tyrannists and the people that let them are being tyrannized.

Endorses candidate

As a senior living on campus for four years, I have had the opportunity to observe many Senate campaigns and the candidates. I have come to the conclusion that the qualities of an effective senator include not only dependability, durability and dedication, but also, and perhaps more importantly, enthusiasm. I would like to introduce and endorse a candidate which I feel possesses these same qualities. Brian Merz would bring to the Senate the enthusiasm the position demands. Brian's abilities would be a positive aspect to the Senate and the ASUI. I urge you to consider Brian Merz for senator in the upcoming election.

On the recent invasion of Grenada:

Who can fail to notice the rapid sequence of world events? To be realistic, from the Soviet point of view, former KGB and now Party Chief Andropov is the world's greatest mover and shaker, since the demise of der Fuhrer and the withering away of Franklin Roosevelt.

Immediately following the Second World War, under Truman, and Supreme Allied Commander Ike, we (the USA) doggedly carried out the territorial and inhuman promises, of President-for-life FDR (all hail!), to "Uncle Joe" Stalin. Churchill acquiesced. These promises included forced repatriation of White-Russian and East European armies and POWs held by the Nazis. Thousands became slave laborers. Their greatest were hanged, shot or committed suicide enroute. Few readers of the Argonaut will have heard about this "Operation Keelhaul" (Wall Street Journal, 9-6-83, p.

U.S. News and World Report (7-11-83) contains an eye-opening map of about 40 recent world conflicts. Only return Argentina to the Atlantic Ocean, and it is possible to add to the map the flames of conflict in Chile, Sri Lanka and

For a decade, Spartacus has held infallible the Little Red Scriptures, which tell us the East Wind is prevailing over the West Wind; that it is inevitable; that power grows out of the barrel of a gun; that the Party controls the Gun; that a revolution is not a dinner party; and that the U.S. and their reactionary (Free-World) running dogs are paper tigers. Well, perhaps I've found a flaw.

The recent U.S. aggression against a Caribbean Soviet island fortress was a resounding success. The powerful U.S. Navy, at the "request" of our Caribbean-American lackeys, recently overran the Marxist People's Republic of Grenada, for the obvious purpose of colonizing. No doubt, that makes the U.S. a wooden tiger. Where next will the Armada turn? Nicaragua? Cuba?

We have demonstrated, by delaying and cancelling shipment of F-15s and F-16s, that the U.S. requires no assistance from the Taiwanese Republic of China. We literally shouted at the Soviets over the Korean jetliner incident, and they did not retaliate with nukes! Last year, we befriended the Arab World (and OPEC), preserving PLO celeb Arafat, by calling off the mad-dog Israelis. Furthermore, we tactfully refused the despised Jews' offer of military intelligence prior to. and hospitalization after, the heroic suicide bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut. Several prior administrations have turned away from the anti-Soviet populations, demonstrating our willingness to go it alone. We neither want to play, nor believe in, dominoes.

No sir, we don't need allies. Now we are wooden tigers, ready to colonize the least-defensible geographic outposts, while we finance and build Soviet munitions factories. Our construction firms and banks can't wait for a green light on the Soviet natural gas pipeline. The multinationals worry, lest Japan and France have "our" contracts. Next June-July we host the Olympic Games. In Los Angeles, our courts have ruled in favor of the "American" Civil Liberties Union, that the L.A. In recognition of his academic achievement and professional goals, Conor J. Buescher has been given a $500 scholarship by the Eagle Rock Chapter of the American Society for Metals of Idaho Falls.

This is the first of what is expected to be an annual scholarship award by the organization and is made to a junior or senior metallurgy student at the University of Idaho.

Buescher is a third-year métallurgical engineering student from Spokane. He was selected for the award by the department of Metallurgical and Mining Engineering faculty of the UI College of Mines and Earth Resources.

The Life Science Building is inadequate in its support of scientific functions and is unable to contribute to safety issues. This situation has led the University of Idaho to undertake a $10 million, seven-year project, according to Nels Reese. director of facility planning.

The project includes the construction of a new wing and the remodeling of some of the existing building space, he said. Due to a lack of funds, the entire remodeling will not be done over the seven-year period but will be phased in gradually after the initial construction, Reese said.

The preliminary drawing stages of the new addition have been completed and the building is essentially designed, he said. The construction plans have been progressing on schedule and it is hoped that the building process will begin this spring, Reese said.

"It will be a race against time to get the building enclosed by next winter," he said. "However, if all goes as planned, the new wing should open by January 1986."

The original building plan was a five-floor wing, but a three-floor addition was decided upon as a less expensive approach. The planned addition will add 56,000 square feet to the existing building, a slight increase in ground space than was initially decided upon.

"The three-floor addition will be cheaper than the five-floor plan because the vertical development has been decreased." Reese said.

"Although it has been difficult to regroup the project, there is so little building money available that we have learned to build only essentials."

The building will bring the biological science department up to date. Reese said. As problems become more complex and solutions more difficult, continued achievements will depend in part on facilities that promote the probability of success, he said.

"Technology is advancing rapidly and things are occuring in teaching and research that weren't happening 20 years ago," Reese said. "This project is long overdue.'

The major reason for the addition and remodeling is to develop safe, modern and updated facilities, he said.

The new addition will be used mostly by advanced and graduate students for research. he said. However, the entire building will benefit from the installation of fume hoods and the reconstruction of many safety facilities, he said.

Noxious fumes are a problem in the existing building and the current fume hoods are not capable of alleviating the problem, Reese said.

Other safety deficiencies include a lack of sophisticated temperature control, waste and plumbing problems, and life safety concerns, Reese said.

The renovations will also centralize the laboratory animal care facilities, Reese said. Animals should be located close to investigators' laboratories to prevent contamination of research data and to prevent illness or death of animals, he said. The new addition will allow all laboratory animals to be kept in the basement for proper care and cleaning purposes, Reese said.

The remodeling of the existing wing will include bringing twelve teaching labs to one level, he said. The old building will also contain science labs, offices and classrooms, he said.

Although a less expensive approach to the Life Science Building was reviewed and considered by the university, it was rejected, Reese said.

A less costly approach would be to retain the existing building and remodel it to the greatest extent possible, he said. However, this option fails to deal with the scope of the problem and is like "trying to put new wine in an old bottle," Reese said.

WE NO LONGER ACCEPT CANADIAN CURRENCY

Local banks, merchants getting bearish on Canadian currency

By Maribeth Tormey of the Argonaut

Canadian coins are beginning to resemble wooden nickels in and around the Moscow area.

As of Nov. 1, banks began discounting Canadian coins received from businesses by 25 percent. Currently, most banks discount Canadian coins received from individual customers by 25 percent, or six cents on every Canadian quarter.

Melinda Weber, the manager of First Security Bank, explained that rolls of coins brought in by businesses will be mechanically checked for Canadian money. Coins rolled by the bank will be checked so that Canadian coins will not be passed to customers, she said.

The First Bank of Troy has been very lenient with its customers concerning Canadian coins, said Betty Swanson, manager of the bank. "Basically, all banks agreed that we should no longer accept Canadian coins," she said. "However, if with Canadian coins in it, there's really nothing we can do."

Swanson believes that if the rule is strictly enforced, people will begin to get rid of their Canadian coins and not accept them at all.

The policy at the University of Idaho is to discount Canadian coins by 20 percent, according to Gerry Reynolds, controller of the UI. He explained that eventually operations at the university will stop accepting Canadian coins altogether. "If the banks stop accepting them," Reynolds said, "we will no longer be able to accept them."

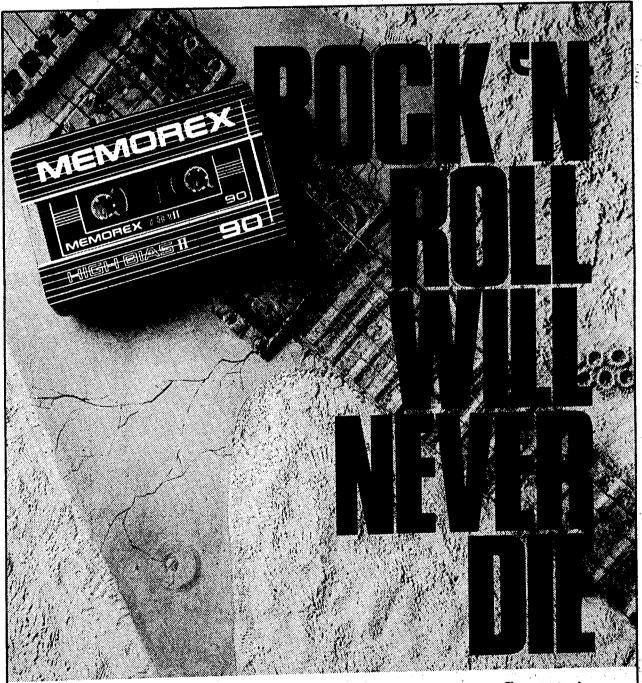

Although Reynolds said that the university as a whole is accepting Canadian coins at a discount, various parts of UI do not accept these coins. Al Deskiewicz, manager of food operations at the SUB. said that the SUB cafeteria has not been accepting Canadian coins for about five months. "We got a memo from the controller's office that said to stop taking a business comes in with a roll of coins Canadian coins, so we haven't for quite a while," Deskiewicz said.

He said that the cafeteria will not give out Canadian coins to customers because it would be an unfair policy to give out coins but not accept them. 'Customers are very conscientious," he said, "they don't want discounted coins either."

Businesses around the Moscow area have begun to tighten their policies concerning Canadian coins. Penny Rice, the head cashier at Tri-State, said that as of Nov. 1, the store longer accepts the coins because of the banks' ruling. "We don't get many Canadian coins as it is maybe 20 percent," she said. "I don't think it will be much of a problem."

Gerry Carter, owner of Carter's Drug Store, said that although he is currently accepting Canadian coins, this policy is subject to change. "If it seems as though people are trying to pass off these coins to retail stores, we'll probably set a policy to no longer accept them," he said.

MFD's new 100-foot fire truck arrives

By Bill Bradshaw of the Argonaut

After a trip of 2,170 miles that took six and a half days, the Volunteer Fire Moscow Department has its new ladder truck. Its arrival culminates several months of searching for a truck to buy and negotiating with the University of Idaho for help in buying it.

The gray, 1977 American LaFrance truck arrived in Moscow Nov. 1, after being driven here from Herrin, III. by volunteer firemen Ernie Horney and Frank Swenson. The two firemen had flown to Herrin last week to pick up the truck from its former owners and to receive training on it, which included driving it and operating its 100-foot aerial ladder.

Horney said of the truck, "It drives good, but rides like a tank."

Swenson said they drove much of the way at around 60 mph, but it didn't do too well going up long grades. "We went up the Continental Divide at about 28 miles per hour," he

He added that driving the truck took some getting used to. "That first day we learned a lot, with 40 feet of equipment behind you, you don't go whipping in and out of traffic," he said, but once they got the feel of it, "It's just like driving your old pick-up."

They agreed the trip was fairly uneventful, but Horney said they "impressed all the fire chiefs in every town. A couple of truck stops we stopped at thought they were on fire when they saw us pull up."

Swenson said the only

Last week, firemen took the truck to their training area to get some practice on operating it. MVFD's 85-foot ladder truck Sometime this week they also plan to see how it works on the Ul's Theophilus Tower.

The 11-story tower was the main reason for the purchase of the truck, as Fire Chief Ralph McAllister warned UI officials in a letter last summer that the

However, the new truck only reaches to the windowsill of the 10th floor, but McAllister considers that acceptable.

Many hours are spent in the University of Idaho Weight Room for UI senior Steve Biggs. Biggs will compete in the Inland Empire Body Building Championships Saturday at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum in Pullman.

UI bodybuilder ready for show

By Dena Rosenberry of the Argonaut

Steve Biggs, 21, a UI senior and bodybuilder competing in Saturday's Inland Empire Body Building Championships in Pullman, believes people have a misconception about bodybuilders.

"It's not like people think," Biggs says. "You have to pose and look in a mirror to see what's developing. You have to know what you want to work on. Bodybuilders aren't just standing there to look at themselves, there's a reason for it. It's part of the training and it's distracting to have people staring at you or talking about you.'

Bodybuilders, according to Biggs, are not all narcissistic. "To an extent of course, you have to be," he admits. Because you have to like yourself and you have to be able to look at yourself a lot."

During the past six weeks Biggs has been looking at himself a lot.

He is handsome, with short blond hair and blue eyes, but this hasn't been the focus of his concentration. Saturday's competition has meant months of hard work and Biggs has been watching himself to see that it pays off, hopefully, with a win.

For this competition, Biggs, who came in second in the Washington State Competition last fall, is not concerning himself with his weight as he had previously.

"I went by weight before, but I'm not going to this time," he said. "I get close to where I want to be in weight and I slack off on my diet and gain."

Normally about 221 pounds before cutting for competition, Biggs says he doesn't know what he weighs right now. "I'm going by percentage of body fat this time and not worrying about my weight at all," he said. "I've only been on a scale once."

Instead of stepping on a scale, Biggs plans to check his body fat percentage in an immersion tank before the competition. "I'd like to get down to four or four-anda-half percent body fat," he said, "but I don't know if I can do that."

In the off-season, Biggs says he eats as much as possible but since the end of October, he has been on a strict diet.

"I tried four different cut-up diets and finally found one that seems to work for me," he said. "I'm eating a balance of 60 percent carbohydrates and 40 percent proteins for a total of 1250-1500 calories." According to calculations made Biggs hasn't switched all his in his nutrition class, Biggs is emphasis from other judging working hard enough to use 4000-4700 calories a day.

With less than a week before the competition, this is a tense time for many bodybuilders and can be particularly stressful on students who must prepare for classes. Biggs says many bodybuilders keep themselves fully covered during the workouts preceding a competition so their competitors won't know what they look like.

"Before the judging, while everyone's waiting to go on stage, no one will undress," said Biggs. "Everyone keeps their clothes on until the last minute. But the camaraderie is high on competition days," he says. "Everyone lifts together for about a half-hour, to pump up their muscles, and we all help each other warm up.'

Preparation for a competition takes as much time out of the gym as in. One of the major judging areas is posing and coordinating body moves with music, which takes a lot of time, as any choreograpper knows.

"You choose your music and then pick out four to eight poses that look nice for you," said Biggs. "You listen to the music and pick spots that will accent the poses vou've chosen."

Along with posing, judges say they decide competitions by comparing size, symmetry, degree of cuts, vascularity and skin tone.

"Actually, they're by-and-large leaning toward cuts," said Biggs. "It doesn't matter that someone may not have symmetry or decent poses, in many competitions he can win if he's real cut up."

Even with this knowledge. areas. "I try to go all-around and do well in each area," he said. "But it's a real disadvantage to heavier people, to those who don't cut well and to those who lose weight slowly."

Biggs doesn't concern himself too much with winning. "My attitude is to go and be competitive, not just to win," he said. "You just go and do the best you can, because that's all you can

Biggs switches routines every six to eight weeks. "I switch to give my program some variety," he said.

He trains with his brother, Ron, who he describes as a good training partner. Mark Jackson has also been working out with the pair.

"But even with good training partners it's hard to keep going,"

Vandals win in Walkup, victory snaps NAU jinx

By Don Rondeau of the Argonaut

Playing football in Flagstaff. Ariz., the home of Northern Arizona, has been called the "Black hole of the Big Sky" because of its distant location from other Big Sky Conference schools.

Nothing, however, was obscure about the Vandals last Saturday in Flagstaff as they walloped the Lumberjacks 40-10 in a very important BSC

"We didn't play great, but we played well enough to win. The key to the victory was our defense turning the ball over to our offense," said Dennis Erickson, Idaho head football coach.

With the win, Idaho improved its conference record to 3-2 and 7-2 overall. More importantly, it moved the Vandals into a threeway tie with Idaho State and Boise State for second place in the conference. Nevada-Reno remains first with a 4-1 record. NAU fell to 2-4 in the league and 4-5 overall.

The Vandals' secret to victory was simply their ability to capitalize on six NAU turnovers (five interceptions and one fumble) while turning the ball over only once on a questionable fumble by tight end Kurt Vestman on an apparent late hit.

Vestman suffered a mild concussion on the play and was assisted to the sidelines. He did return to action in the third auarter.

Vestman's replacement, sophomore Scott Auker played well. He snared two passes for 34 yards.

Another key factor was the Vandals' staunch defense. They yielded only 12 yards rushing for the entire game, including negative two yards in the first half.

Middle linebacker Ed Rifalto lead the defensive entourage with 13 tackles. Tom Hennessey and Todd Fryover had eight tackles apiece.

"The kids played well. We went strictly with the zone. We stretched, but didn't give up the big play," said John Smith, Idaho defensive coordinator. "We played with eight backs. They (NAU) weren't ready for that."

The eight back alignment was installed by Smith and Carl Ferrill, defensive secondary coach, becasue of NAU's potent passing attack.

The Idaho defensive secondary cast of Mark Tidd, Mike Johnston, Boyce Bailey, Steve Simpson and John Cayton, caused havoc all night for Lumberjack quarterback Mike Mendoza.

Third quarter interceptions by Johnston and Simpson resulted touchdowns.. Vandal Simpson's interception late in the quarter, which tailback Andrew Smith eventually converted as he rumbled in from the two-yard line, put the game out of reach at 35-10.

Aside from the five costly turnovers. Mendoza showed signs of prominence by hitting 29 of 47 passes for 324 yards. "He had to throw to eight of our backs. We caused some pressure on him on reading the weekend with a win against Idaho State and a loss to Weber State. The split now gives the Vandals a season record of 21-15 and a conference mark of 4-8.

On Friday night, the Vandals defeated the ISU Bengals in five games. After dropping the opening game 11-15. Idaho rallied in games two and three and won 15-7, 15-7. The Vandal spikers lost game four 9-15 and prevailed in the fifth and final game 15-10.

This win marked the first time all season that the UI spikers defeated a conference opponent in five games.

On Saturday night, the Vandals battled the Weber State Wildcat women and came up short losing in four games 12-15, 15-5, 15-9, 15-13. After winning the first game, the sixth place Vandals looked like they were on

The University of Idaho their way to an upset win against women's volleyball team ended the fifth place 'Cats. But WSC its home Mountain West Athletic came from behind and won Conference season last games two and three. In game four, however, the Vandals jumped out to a 11-4 lead but lost 15-13.

"Anytime we're up 11-4, we should win," said Amanda Gammage, UI head volleyball coach

Although the Vandals lost to the 'Cats, Gammage indicated that the UI spikers played better last Saturday night than they did against WSC at Ogden earlier in the year.

"We defended a lot better tonight than we did at Weber,"

Gammage said. Weber State twice put together long scoring strings in two of the four games against the Vandals. In game three, Weber scored eight unanswered points as they jumped from a 5-6 to a 5-14 point lead. And in game four, with the Vandals up swim teams placed first and second by taking first in seven out of the twelve events at the Idaho Relays last Saturday at the University of Idaho Swim Center.

Women win, men second at Idaho Swim Relays

The Vandal women easily walked away with top honors by defeating rival Montana, 258 to 176. Other team scores were: Washington State 148, Central Washington 132, and Whitman

In the process of their easy victory, the women established three national qualifying standards. The marks came in the 400 meter relay (4:09.77), 800 meter freestyle relay (8:06.71), and the 200 meter freestyle relay (1:41.0). The 200 meter time also established a new school record.

Team members in the 400 meter relay were Sarah

The Idaho women and men's Osborne, Tracy Thomas, Bonnie Flickinger and Tonya Nofziger. The 800 meter relay team consisted of Gina Korsgaard, Amy Laska, Jennifer Norton and Charene Mitchell. The 200 meter team was made up of Kate Kemp, Thomas, Nofziger and Marlene Clements.

"I thought we were going to have a lot of trouble. I thought the only way we could beat Montana was by our depth," said Idaho Swim Coach, Frank Burlison. "It was an exciting meet and an excellent effort by the Idaho people."

Other Idaho teams copping firsts were: the 500 meter freestyle relay, Kemp, Nofziger, Korsgaard and Mitchell, 4.51.49; 1,500 meter freestyle relay, Korsgaard, Laska, and Vandal diver Jeanette Young also recorded a first when she scored 190.25 points on her six dives in the diving relay.

The young Vandal men's team placed second behind powerful Central Washington. Central scored 306 points to the Vandals 222 points. Whitman finished third with 150 points.

The Idaho men's teams taking first were: the 400 meter relay, Kent Mitchell, Todd Stafek, Richard Root and Chris Mathias, 3.39.64; 800 meter relay, Chris Petry, Geoff Allen, Rob Birdwell and Theo Schmeeckle, 7.24.84; 200 meter relay, John David, Rodney Walter, Mitchell and Mathias, 1.30.41; 500 meter relay, Birdwell, David, Mathias, and Schmeeckle, 4.21.82: 300 meter backstroke. Root. Walter and Mitchell, 2.47.92; 300 meter breastroke, Kris Simpson, Scot Walters and Stafek, 3.14.27; and the 400 meter relay, Davis, Walter, Mitchell and Mathias. 3.18.23.

The remaining relays were won by Central.

Biggs said. "It takes a lot to get in the gym everyday, even when you're sick or you don't feel like lifting."

Biggs

The difference between a mediocre workout and a great workout is mental, according to Biggs. "Sometimes it takes four or five sets to get into it," he said. "I start my workouts with abdominals to help me get into

On top of his knowledge about physiology, Biggs concerns himself with nutrition. In addition to taking a nutrition class, he reads articles and books concerning nutritional issues and talks to other athletes to keep up on new developments.

"I read and try to find out all I can," he said. "I sift through everything and find out what works for me. My mom worked in the health department for 10 years, so she helps.'

When not in the weight room, Biggs enjoys racquetball, biking and skiing, something he has done since he was 10-years old.

"Right now I'm also running stairs in the Dome to help cut-up my legs," said Biggs. "That's not something as enjoyable as say racquetball, though."

Growing up in Salmon, Biggs wasn't larger than his peers. "I wrestled in high school and started my freshman year at 105-pounds," said Biggs. "I started lifting to build size and ended up my senior year weighing 187-pounds."

He also played some football and planned to continue once he came to the UI, but changed his mind after looking over the program and talking to then Head Coach Jerry Davitch.

"I kept working out, though," Biggs said, "I wanted to see how big I could get."

The willpower necessary for bodybuilding affects other aspects of Biggs's life. He attends classes in the mornings and must schedule time to study, lift, tan and work each day.

He works at the Corner Pocket about 32 hours a week, but says having things to do keeps him out of trouble.

"Having little time also makes you study more because there's no time to procrastinate," Biggs said. "I've learned to use my time well."

Although he would like to continue to compete. Biggs is not considering turning professional. "I like to compete," he said, "but I do this for personal satisfaction. I personally want to be huge. I'd like to weigh 260-pounds in the off-season.'

Biggs enjoys bodybuilding because of the individual emphasis. "You're not responsible for other people and they're not responsible for you," Biggs said. "You can't hide behind someone if you're not as good."

Another aspect that attracts Biggs is the competitive spirit. "In other sports there are people with records that have stood for years and people who have never lost a race or match. You can't do that in bodybuilding. You can win one week and compete against the same people a few weeks later and come in last."

Bodybuilding is also a swiftly growing sport. "There are many newcomers," Biggs said. "They push everyone to keep going and get better."

The benefits of bodybuilding have not only helped those competing but have aided individuals outside the sport. "The sport has helped others, because it has encouraged them to be health conscious and look good," he

Next fall, Biggs will be in chiropractic college in Portland, Ore., where he will continue to study for the next four years. Following graduation, Biggs would like to locate and set up practice. "Ideally, I'd like to open an office and run a gym in conjunction with it."

coverage," Erickson said.

Although the game turned out well for the Vandals, midway through the first quarter it seemed like it was going to be another Northern Arizona upset as the Lumberjacks ran off to a 10-0 lead.

In the previous weekend, the 'Jacks had upset favored Nevada-Reno 41-38, in NAU's Walkup Skydome. Why not another upset?

The Vandals got an early alimpse of NAU wide receiver sensation Pete Mandley. He grabbed a Mendoza pass on Idaho's 15 and juked his way into the endzone making the score 10-0 in favor of NAU. Mandley finished with 12 catches for 130 yards.

However, that TD would be his only score. On another occasion, he dropped a pass in the endzone - which pretty much exemplified Northern Arizona's frustrated offensive showing throughout the contest. He also was shut down on kickoff and punt returns.

"A guy like Mandley you're never going to stop. I think we kept him from the game breaker. The kids contained him rather than completely stopping him," said Smith.

Idaho running back Kerry Hickey began to bring NAU back to earth when he took a Ken Hobart handoff and sprinted around the corner for a 55 vard TD play. Hickey received a needed block from wide receiver Ron Whittenburg which enabled him to spring free. Hickey finished the game with 73 yards on only six carries.

That made the score 10-7 and it was all Idaho after that.

The Vandals scored 33 unanswered points, putting any worries aside that the 7,000-foot altitude would cause Idaho to run out of gas due to fatique.

In another great performance, Hobart kept the Lumberjacks' defense scratching their heads. The "Kamiah Kid" accounted for three touchdowns. He tossed two second-quarter TD aerials to flanker Brian Allen and ran for another on a 44-yard keeper in the third quarter.

Hobart has now passed for 29 touchdowns; five more than last season. He finished the game hitting 20 of 36 for 269 yards, zero interceptions and 328 vards of total offense. He leads Division 1-AA in total offense averaging 351.2 yards per game. For his career, Hobart now totals 10,464 yards.

Erickson has pretty much abandoned the gameplan which former Vandal Head Coach Jerry Davitch used for Hobart which called for Hobart to run with the ball like he did in the veer offense.

But when the situation calls for Hobart to take off downfield with the pigskin under his wing, he is an added threat because of his fine running ability and speed (4.5 in the 40 vard dash). It was he who rushed for 829 yards in his freshman year to lead the squad in that department.

For Allen, who is Hobart's favorite target when the play calls for a touchdown pass, his two TD passes were his eighth and ninth of the season. He finished the evening with five catches for 107 yards.

The Vandals now face tough Nevada-Reno on Saturday in the ASUI Kibbie Dome. All indications point toward a capacity crowd of 16,400, the amount at the Idaho-Montana clash three weeks ago. Reno is coming off a 34-24 victory over Pacific, the Vandals' opponent two weeks

The Vandals, whose role in the MWAC has been reduced to that of a spoiler, were again without the services of their most successful spiker Jenny Frazier. Frazier, who sprained her ankle against Boise State two weeks ago, is out for the remainder of the year.

Harriers second, in MWAC meet

Despite having the top two finishers, the Idaho women's cross country team failed to repeat as Mountain West Athletic Conference champions as Montana dethroned the Vandals. 37 to 44, in Missoula last Saturday.

In the 5,000 meter course on the Montana golf course, Patsy Sharples and teammate Sherrie Crang placed 1-2 in the seven team competition. Sharples won her second consecutive conference championship with a time of 17.41. Crang's time was

The key to the lady Grizzlies' victory was their ability to run closer in a pack. They had the third, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth finishers.

Another factor in Idaho's inability to repeat as champions was the absence of Pam Paudler and Karen Voss. Paudler sustained a reoccuring hip injury from last season and Voss missed nearly a month of running due to sickness. Both harriers have been red-shirted.

"We were behind from very early on. The first three-fourths of a mile we were behind Montana," said Roger Norris, Idaho women's coach.

Other Vandal finishers were: Lisa Kindelan, 6th, 18.10; Janet Beaudry, 16th, 18.49; Lisa Tylor, 19th, 18.57; and Cindy Crow, 34th, 19.39, Named to the all-conference team from Idaho were Sharples, Crang and Kindelan.

The Vandals will get another shot at Montana this Saturday at the NCAA District VII championships in Ogden, Utah.

Other team finishes were: Weber State, third, 75 points; Idaho State, fourth, 84 points; Montana State, fifth, 112 points; Eastern Washington, sixth, 178 points; and Boise State, seventh, 182 points.

Rodeo plans underway

Although the UI Rodeo Club has not received formal approval from the administration, they are making plans for their Idaho Western Classic Rodeo on the basis of what Terry Armstrong feels is a "gentleperson's agreement."

Armstrong, executive assistant to the university president, stated that it was understood after last year's rodeo that the administration would approve a 1984 rodeo.

When the planning was being done for last spring's rodeo, Armstrong said, "there was a tacit agreement that they'd do it again this year." He said Monday that Gerald Willet, the club's faculty advisor, had asked him asked him if he'd be available for a planning session.

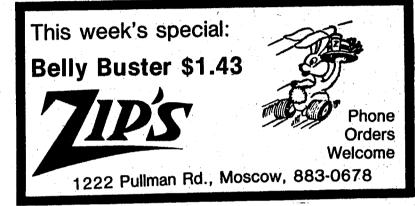

Last year the club borrowed approximately $44,000 from the university to help cover the total cost of $65,254.

Willet, feels certain that the club will break even this year, mostly because of plywood, dirt and other supplies that are already stockpiled for the club to use. The availability of these materials last year could have cut their losses in half.

More than 15,000 people attended the rodeo last spring an estimated 3000 people attended the show without buying tickets. Willet expects to have double that attendance this year because of favorable responses.

This year's rodeo will be held during Parent's Weekend, April 13-15. · sity of Idaho operates," Barnes said, adding that the university then will always be able to justify its programs.

The University of Idaho awards 49 percent of all the bachelor's of arts degrees and 45 percent of all the bachelor's of sciences degrees in the state, which is equalled only by the combined effort of the other three universities. It is a land grant university which has always had its emphasis in the academics.

"We are the flagship institution and the only comprehensive university in the state of Idaho," he stressed. He pitches this as one of the differences making the university unique in the state, especially for Idaho high school students.

On the average, Barnes only has between 40-45 minutes to make his pitch to a group of frequently uninterested students. Because of this, his main goals are to emphasize the university as being the only residential campus and comprehensive university in the state.

He also has to combat some unfounded negative images that prospective students have formed about the UI. In southeastern Idaho especially, he has to downplay the "party school" image of the university.

He counters this bad image by promoting the positive activities available on campus, such as religion and intramural sports. Moscow is a relatively small and close-knit university community. and students are more visible than on a metropolitan campus. he said.

"When I'm in southern Idaho I sometimes get the question from a parent, 'What are you going to do about all that drinking, smoking and carrying on that goes on up there?' I tell the parent the university counts on the fact the parent had given the student good family and religious standards the university can deal with," Barnes said. "We are not going to tear down anything in a year that a parent has taken 18 years to put together."

Personally, he said he tries to set an example for students to see. "I don't change my lifestyle, but anything you do is above the plank when you're on the road," Barnes said.

He conducts three statewide tours — in the fall, spring and summer - and has a road philosophy of rising early and getting the traveling done.

Barnes makes the roughly 300-mile trek between Boise and Moscow a minimum of 40 times a year.

"I've got that road memorized. My best time is four hours and 47 minutes. I'm proud of that," he said. "Matt Telin (UI registrar) did most of the driving that trip, and his assistant swore she would never ride with us again." Once he arrives at his destination, Barnes claims he can turn a motel room into home in five minutes ... with the help of a self cooker and friends from other universities he has met traveling the high school circuit.

This year is the third year Barnes has had Mary Kay McFadden to carry some of the travel responsibilities as assistant director.

Tediousness is also another constant companion. "You're working hard," he said, "and a lot of the times you're driving weekends, driving late at night, and you're getting up at six o'clock because you have to be at a school at 7:30 and it's 50 miles away.

'We've had situations where we have been at Arco and we had to be at Terreton which is about 70 or 80 miles away in 60 minutes. You're driving like a bat out of hell down the road trying not to hit any antelope."

But through it all. Barnes said he wouldn't change anything. "I enjoy it," he said, "and people think I'm crazy.

"Every part of the state, anytime of the year, offers something different. When you have to relate to hundreds of people all day long, you are ready to do something different," he said. "You need to have other releases." So his baggage occasionally contains items such as cross country skis, a basketball, a fishing pole, running shoes and sometimes a bicycle.

"I'm always gung ho," said Barnes, "but if you're doing the job right, then you're more than a used car salesman.'

His studies with his doctoral program keep him in tune with university academics. When he returns to Moscow, he visits and speaks with different groups on campus.

Barnes has developed an "outin-the-state" orientation program rather than a campus orientation program, because a lot of freshmen students can't arrive on the UI campus early. A lot of students show up to school unprepared, and didn't know who to contact if they had problems.

'We've had kids who would show up and leave within a week," Barnes said, "and we still do have some, but not near what we used to."

After nine years as the UI's main pitchman. Barnes' philosophy is simple: "I've learned that over the years you can't take yourself too seriously. If I make myself the butt of the joke, I up a long list of people, none of .it works better."

Blood drive generates donations

By Jane Roskams of the Argonaut

Everyday, everywhere, people need blood. The people who provide that blood are professional people, parents, teachers and students. The people who make sure that blood goes to the right place belong to the American Red Cross.

Red Cross volunteers visited the University of Idaho this week for the first of three blood drives this school year. The visit was coordinated by the Programs Department of the ASUI.

Brenda Mallett, a UI student and one of the people responsible for the blood drive, was pleased with the response by local donors. The only trouble they had was with people making appointments and then not showing up.

'It's really annoying because we've been turning willing donors away because there haven't been appointments left for them," she said. "Then, people haven't turned up, and we've wasted time that could have been used for other people. One living group in particular signed which turned up.

In spite of the no-shows the drive attracted approximately 110 donors each of the three days here. Each of these donors gave one pint of blood, and then recovered for a while with a beverage and cookies. The cost of the drinks was covered by a grant from the ASUI, and the cookies were supplied by various living groups.

The blood was transported to Boise at the end of each day and processed by the Red Cross central organization. After being analyzed, the blood will then be given to one patient, as whole blood, or it may be separated into components — red cells, platelets, plasma — to be used to help several patients with special needs.

The service is staffed entirely by volunteers. The drive has five staff nurses who travel with the "Blood Wagon." The other volunteers are Moscow residents organized by Linda Adams, a Moscow resident.

There are also a number of student volunteers who participate in the drive under the auspices of the Collegiate Knights, Spurs, Valkyries and Alpha Phi Omega.

The next blood drive will be Jan. 17-19, and the third, April 11-13. There will be a sign-up book available at the SUB Information desk one week prior to those dates for anyone wishing to make an appointment to donate.

If anybody wishes to be a volunteer, please contact Brenda Mallett at the Programs Department next to the ASUI offices in the SUB or at 885-6167.
