Board director may face reprimand

By Laura Hubbard

Charles McQuillen, executive director of the State Board of Education, may be facing a reprimand by the board when it meets next week.

McQuillen came under fire from state legislators last week after he exchanged words with Rep. Pete Black, D-Pocatello, in what some — including McQuillen himself — have called a breach of decorum on the director's part.

The private confrontation followed an informational meeting on the distribution funding formula for Idaho's three universities and Lewis-Clark State College. At the meeting, Black questioned McQuillen concerning a possible conflict of interest arising from McQuillen's position on the board and his concurrent role as a night instructor at Boise State University.

McQuillen hand-delivered an apology to Black the following day, but a Democratic caucus sent a letter to the Board of Education which probably recommends some type of disciplinary action to be taken against the director. The letter is sealed, and its contents will not be revealed until the board meeting.

Gov. John Evans said in a news conference over the weekend that he believes there is a conflict of interest in McQuillen's roles. According to Evans, state law requires state employees to get written approval from their superiors before taking any jobs on the side and to file them with the state auditor.

Auditor Joe R. Williams said that McQuillen had filed no such document with his office. However, action on his part-time job had previously been scheduled as an agenda item for the Board of Education's next meeting on Jan. 30-31 in Boise.

Black said he questioned McQuillen on his dual roles as a result of concerns expressed to him by his constituents. While Black said, "I suppose the people could question the integrity of legislators' working," he added that state politicians serve only on a part-time basis and need their jobs at home to support them throughout the year.

However, he said he does not think McQuillen needs the teaching job at BSU as a necessary means of support.

"He is making a pretty healthy salary as executive director," he said, and added that, "I don't care if Dr. McQuillen wants to paint oil paintings and sell them on the side; that's his own business."

Black said he thinks the whole issue has been blown out of proportion. Now that "cooler heads have prevailed," he said, legislators can get back to what he feels is important — the distribution of funds between universities.

"He (McQuillen) lost his composure, he apologized. Let's get back to what's real," he said.

Black and other southeastern Idaho legislators also expressed concern at that informational meeting that Idaho State University was not being funded properly under the current formula. He said the University of Idaho had received $1.8 million over maintenance costs, BSU had received $1.6 million over the maintenance budget and ISU had received only $39,400 over maintenance costs.

He said he would like to see the

Proposed fee raise faces opposition

By Jane Roskams

President Gibb opposes it. Many of the State legislators oppose it.

All the medical and veterinary students attached to the University of Idaho oppose it.

Then why is the State Board of Education currently considering a bill that will raise the fees for WAMI (Washington-Alaska-Montana-Idaho) medical students and WOI (Washington-Oregon-Idaho) veterinary students at the UI to $14,000 a year?

Guy Anderson, director of the WAMI program at the UI has one answer: "There is no logical reason why. All they want to do is save themselves some more money."

"I really don't think they realize what a big difference it would make to us," says LeeAnn DuMars, president of the pre-veterinary club at the UI, about the legislators who passed the bill.

What it would mean is that to afford veterinary and medical education in Idaho, students would have to pay more than twice what they are paying now.

Under normal student loan schemes, and average veterinary salaries for the state of Idaho, this means they would have to live on $5,000 a year for at least the first eight years of employment in order to pay back their loans.

And that's without taking into account further loans for living expenses while they are at school.

UI students on the WOI program are currently paying $6,600 a year for fees. WSU students on the same program are currently paying $3,300. If the new fees are implemented, the UI students will be paying $14,000 a year. The WSU students will continue to pay $3,300 for the same program.

If the bill is ratified by the board, the Idaho students have one option: They can go and live in Washington for a year, attain residence, and then go to Washington schools and pay Washington fees.

"That would be such a futile move," DuMars said. "WOI was only implemented to give Idaho students a chance of a veterinary education. The fee increase would be a self-defeating step."

Those same words were used by Anderson to describe his feelings about the new bill.

"It really is self-defeating," Anderson said. "The state is trying to save itself some money at the expense of our programs. In the long run, they're going to lose out by losing high-income taxpayers."

The ironic fact is that many of the legislators admit that at the time they passed the bill they didn't understand exactly what they were voting for.

To draw the problem to the legislators' attention, veterinary student Lee Bolt has written to all the State Board of Education members, and has sent out 52 letters to the legislators who originally passed the bill.

So far, he has had ten replies from the legislators. Four of them admitted that they had the bill presented to them in a different manner, and hadn't fully understood the implications of what they were voting for. Two suggested that he change his career, or go to a different state to study.

All the legislators who have replied admit that the bill has now been presented to them in a different manner than at first.

The WAMI and WOI students are now urging everybody who is concerned about their plight to write to the State Board of Education to protest.

They are also arranging to go down and give oral testimony at the meeting when the board is considering the proposal at the end of this month.

ASUI President Tom LeClaire has also said he will go down to Boise and speak on behalf of Idaho students who can't make the trip.

"Regardless of whether the ASUI chooses to support the move, I think we have a principle to stand by," LeClaire said. "I'm convinced that a lot of the legislators just didn't know what they were voting for when they passed it."

The WAMI and WOI students held a meeting last week to organize their protest. Present at this meeting were a number of faculty. One of these, Pre-veterinary Adviser Peter South, expressed his concern about the students who were already in the WAMI and WOI programs in other schools.

LeClaire has appealed for letters and statements from anybody who is concerned about the bill. He is planning to read the letters and statements he receives at the board meeting on Jan. 30, when the WAMI and WOI students will be testifying.

DuMars is planning to go to veterinary school in Pullman next year.

"I don't know what I'm going to do if they don't change their minds," she said. "Idaho is my home now, but if they force me out, I'll just have to leave."

LeClaire seeks funds to pay newly created positions

ASUI President Tom LeClaire, in an effort to increase his information gathering capacity, has created two presidential assistant positions to advise him on matters of financial and legislative policy. But whether they will be paid positions is up the Senate Finance Committee, which will discuss a bill to that effect today at 2:30 p.m.

LeClaire has submitted a bill that would budget $918 for the hiring of both a financial and legislative assistant to help him through the course of this semester. The bill goes to the Finance Committee where a recommendation on the matter should be made in the next couple weeks, LeClaire said.

Regardless of whether the committee recommends the positions be paid or not, LeClaire said he would

Forum to focus on Central America

A forum on administrative policy in Central America will be held Wednesday, Jan. 25 at 7 p.m. in the SUB Borah Theatre.

A panel discussion involving three experts on Central America will precede a question and answer session. The speakers will be Sam Routson, an administrative assistant to Sen. Steve Symms; John Kicza, an associate professor of history at Washington State University; and Dennis West, an associate professor of foreign language and literature at the UI.

Council discusses curriculum, salaries

The faculty council will further discuss expansion of the core curriculum today in Brink Hall faculty lounge at 3:30 p.m.

Last week a report from the general education committee prompted some council members to argue that the core should include a wider selection of courses.

Today the council will also discuss a proposed change in academic salary policy. The budget liaison committee approved a change that would allow faculty members and the university to negotiate salaries for the summer session.

University alumnus to give law talk

Todd Elliot, a University of Idaho graduate and first-year law student at Lewis and Clark Law School in Portland, will recount Friday his first year of law school for anyone interested in pursuing a law degree.

Elliot will be speaking in the Pend Oreille Room of the SUB from 3-5 p.m., and the public is invited free of charge.

Bowl team wins tourney, regionals next hurdle

English literature, chemical engineering and history have more in common than you might think. Although dissimilar in discipline, these three subjects are the major fields of study of the 1984 UI College Bowl team.

The team, consisting of Lewis Day (captain), Melynda Huskey, Paul Thomson and Keith Stutler, won last week's UI round-robin tournament with a 3-0 record. The next level of competition for the squad — which refers to itself as "Miss Congeniality" — is the regional competition in Tacoma, February 19.

In the last three years, the UI team has placed either first or second at every regional competition. Last year the team placed second, but was invited to the National Invitational Tournament, in Atlanta. Both Huskey and Day were members of that team. Should the UI team place first in the Tacoma competition — to be held at the University of Puget Sound — they would advance to the national playoffs.

"I'm awfully keen to go to national competition, as being on national television has always been one of my ambitions," Huskey said. The national finals will be televised by NBC-TV.

Often referred to as "the Varsity Sport of the Mind," College Bowl is a question-and-answer game. Quick recall and knowledge of little-known facts are a must for a College Bowl success. A wide spectrum of knowledge is also necessary, one reason why the UI team has such divergent specialties.

"We each have specialties — with a good deal of overlapping," Day said. "After disappointment in Salem (site of last year's regionals), we're ready to win."

ON CAMPUS

Opinion

ASUI hot potato still on burner

Misconceptions abound regarding one UI student's report suggesting that the ASUI should study the feasibility of operating Tamarack Ski Area. Some people on campus think that the senate has already moved in the direction of adopting the proposal, a financial commitment they do not believe to be a wise one.

The idea, brought to the forefront by UI marketing major Arne Elisha in a study he prepared for a business writing class, suggested merely that the ASUI examine the concept of reopening the ski area.

Although the report explored many possibilities for remodeling and financing the ski area, the paper was not intended to be viewed as anything more than one student's suggestion to the ASUI.

In light of the misconceptions, the ASUI is handling the issue in a fair and reasonable manner. While ASUI President Tom LeClaire could have taken it upon himself to appoint a presidential committee to look into this proposal, he has wisely asked for the senate's approval.

And now, the senate will decide if it is worthwhile to appoint a committee to study the proposal, not whether the ASUI should actually invest in the project.

As the senate studies whether or not to appoint a committee, students should keep a couple of key facts in mind.

First, the ASUI is not endorsing the concept of buying the ski resort, but rather deciding whether or not to even study the proposal.

Secondly, senators can't make a realistic decision without feedback from the students.

It is entirely possible that the ASUI could appoint a committee to study the project only to later reject it because it isn't feasible.

At any rate, the ASUI should at least open up a forum for ideas on the matter. And in return students should provide input, and remember that the ASUI is only conducting a preliminary study and not making a binding financial commitment.

Street changes praised

Every student and university employee driving to campus should be delighted with the latest news from city hall.

According to Gary Presol, city engineer, the congested intersection at the corner of Sixth and Deakin streets, near the SUB, will receive a facelift in the near future.

With 11,000 vehicles passing through this intersection daily, the UI and the City of Moscow should be applauded for this latest example of joint cooperation.

Prof, UI settle out of court

Homer Ferguson, former UI biology professor, has finally resolved his grievance with the UI administration.

The problem began back in 1979 when Ferguson strenuously objected to a competency review report which concluded that he was not only professionally incompetent but also in need of psychiatric care. There were procedural irregularities in addition to basic violations of Ferguson's rights. The AFT became involved and raised $12,000 from national and local sources for the first round of his defense.

In 1981 Federal Judge Ray McNichols dismissed Ferguson's suit primarily because he was still employed by the UI. McNichols emphasized, however, that he wanted to see Ferguson in court again if he were indeed fired. Incredibly enough, the administration obliged the good judge by terminating Ferguson during the financial exigency of 1982.

According to reduction-in-force procedures, positions — not persons — are to be terminated. By offering Ferguson's exact salary as its share in the first round of proposed cuts, the biological science department had obviously offered a person, not a position. When questioned by Ferguson's attorney at a State Board of Education meeting about why the proposed cut matched Ferguson's salary exactly, none of the principals involved wanted to answer this crucial question.

Ferguson was then ready to re-open his suit, and the AFT raised $4,500 for the second legal battle. When the UI administration learned of this new infusion of legal aid, it started out-of-court negotiations with Ferguson and his attorneys.

We are relieved that this ordeal is over, and all of Idaho's faculty will benefit from this long struggle. The State Board, primarily because of the Ferguson suit, has now changed its policy on competency reviews. The reviews will no longer be automatic, but will require a majority vote in a department before being triggered.

Finally, in answer to persistent rumors that Homer Ferguson really deserved to be fired, the AFT's position on this case has always been that we were involved not only because of the principles, but because of our belief that Ferguson was a competent teacher and researcher. He had over 40 articles and one book on mammalian physiology, so Idaho has lost one good biological scientist. We unequivocally reject the notion that an academic career should be judged like a personality contest.

In the process of changing the competency review procedures, the State Board also changed the basis of the reviews from competence to performance. Most faculty believed that this was a rather innocuous change, and some even thought it was a great improvement. Law professor Lee Eckhardt, who was deeply involved in the Ferguson case, persuaded many of us that this new language might pose a real threat to tenure and academic freedom.

Eckhardt explained that from a legal standpoint competence criteria are narrowly defined, while performance standards can be interpreted broadly, even to include items not directly related to professional competence (this is what we believe happened in the Ferguson case). Eckhardt, now on leave in Portland, Oregon, has informed us that faculty members who were hired before the language change could sue for breach of contract if they are reviewed under the new performance language.

Nick Gier is UI philosophy professor, and president of the Idaho Federation of Teachers.

Feminism not cause

Editor:
I dare to differ with Wayne L. Johnson about militant (?) feminism. He's wrong when he says we have seen a dramatic increase in spouse and child abuse, as well as sex crimes; the only thing we've seen an increase in is the reporting of such occurrences. Written history will attest to their occurrences throughout humans' existence. Mr. Johnson's attempt at blaming one or the other should perhaps be turned around. It is because women want freedom from abuse for themselves and their children that they have chosen to become economically independent and better educated.

If Mr. Johnson is sincerely interested in putting an end to such things as abuse and broken homes, I suggest he become more aware of feminists and their goals. He may be surprised.

A tree by another name

Editor:
Alicia Gallagher wasted space with her feminist nitpicking on how Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's name appears on a tree behind a gym (Jan. 17 Argonaut). Not only was it irrelevant nitpicking, but Alicia may have overlooked something. There is a possibility that someone close to Eleanor or the lady herself may have requested the name to be presented in that fashion. And fashion it was at the time, as it is not to many today.

If that is the most interesting thing you can find to write your column on, Alicia, then I think you belong in the kitchen. You've come a long way, baby?

Lack of PR weighty problem

Editor:
To Dennis Erickson and the Vandal Football Staff:

I am writing this letter concerning a conversation I had with coach Dan Cozzetto on Monday (Jan. 16).

I had gone to the weight room at 2:30 p.m. to get my workout in before 3:30 when the room is reserved for varsity athletes for two hours. About 2:45 the weight room started to fill up with football players and by 3 p.m. the room was so full that it was impossible to get anything done.

Naively I thought that by talking to someone in charge of the football team this congestion could be alleviated. Then when I found out that Mr. Cozzetto was in charge of weight training I felt relieved.

I had had Mr. Cozzetto as a guest lecturer in a class last year, where he appeared as an honest, reasonable, genuine person.

My relief quickly dissipated as Mr. Cozzetto's opening line to me was, "Step in here son, and let me straighten you out on the facts."

These facts seemed to be that we mortal students are lucky to have the athletic department let us use the weights at all, because they own them; that it's an honor for us to have the weights and the athletic department in the East End (which we mortal students financed); that Mr. Cozzetto wasn't going to do anything he didn't want to. Mr. Cozzetto had a chip on his shoulder big enough to heat my house for a week.

Is this the kind of person we want representing this university as a coach? I consider myself very easy going and I believe there is enough time in the day to accommodate everyone who needs to use the weight room, if we just work it out.

After Mr. Cozzetto's tirade I went back to the weight room to attempt to finish my workout. The room was still crowded beyond belief, but when 3:30 rolled around and everyone but university athletes were asked to leave, I couldn't help but notice that most of the football players left too. This doesn't seem like a very efficient division of time.

I am a student of coaching at this university, and one lesson I have learned in various classes is that public relations is an integral part of a coach's job.

Mr. Cozzetto is obviously lacking in this important area. I would like to suggest to him that he take advantage of our fine university and possibly enroll in PE 497, Sport and Athletic Problems, which covers this area quite well. It's never too late to learn, son.

Kaus to end 35-year career

After a 35-year career in education as an elementary teacher, principal and university administrator, Paul Kaus will retire March 1.

Kaus is director of Summer Sessions and coordinator of the College of Education off-campus program at the University of Idaho.

Kaus first came to UI in 1955 as an instructor in the College of Education. Previously, he has been a teacher and principal in the Lewiston School District.

Appointed field services administrator of the Division of Summer School in 1960, Kaus became involved in the off-campus continuing education programs. From 1960-66, he traveled extensively, organizing off-campus courses for education majors.

"During that time, the philosophy of the University was that the state is our campus," Kaus said. "There was scant, if any, attention paid to service boundaries among the institutions." But as the program expanded and students multiplied, it became necessary to cooperate with other institutions in the state, he said.

"The overlap between the University of Idaho and Idaho

Paul Kaus

State University was the primary cause for creation of the statewide Division of Continuing Education in the fall of 1966."

At that time, Kaus was named director of Summer Sessions at the UI and served as on-campus coordinator for the statewide unit, which was discontinued in 1974.

Kaus helped organize the Adult Education Center at Coeur d'Alene during the summer of 1961. Initially, it offered about 10-15 courses for resident credit. Now it operates on a year-round basis, offering graduate-level courses in the field of teacher education.

He was also instrumental in developing the undergraduate program at Idaho Falls in 1961. The graduate program had been started five years earlier and the existence of that program was used to expand the operation to the undergraduate level, Kaus said. Over 400 non-graduate students now enroll there each semester; initially, there were 40-50 students at the undergraduate level.

Summer session has also changed since Kaus became director. In 1966, "we had an enrollment of about 1,400 students and most of them were educators completing degrees," he said. Summer enrollments increased to nearly 2,600 students in 1977. Enrollment has declined slightly since then because of program cuts, and now 75 percent of the summer students are continuing students from spring semester. Educators are still an important part of the summer student body.

Kaus, a native of Idaho, was born and raised at Cottonwood. He earned a bachelor's degree at North Idaho College of Education in Lewiston in 1951. In 1954, he earned a master's degree from Washington State University and in 1966 completed his Doctor of Education degree at WSU.

Foundation adds five to board of directors

The University of Idaho Foundation expanded the membership of its board of directors from 10 to 15 at its recent annual meeting.

New members elected to three-year terms include Attorney Jack Hawley, Simplot President Dale Dunn and Certified Public Accountant Stan Jonnson, all Boise residents.

The other two new additions are Bruce Colwell, an employee of Diamond International and a resident of Coeur d'Alene, and Jim Kalbus, who resides in Nampa where he runs his office supply store.

The reason for expanding the membership of the board of directors, according to UI Foundation President James V. Hawkins, is to generate more input.

"Increasing the number of positions creates more interest among the members of the UI Foundation and brings in more people who bring in more good ideas," Hawkins said.

Of the 10 members only seven can be elected; the three remaining seats must be filled by the president of the UI, a member of the Board of Regents, and the alumni president.

The foundation, whose main objective is to provide additional funds for the university not appropriated through the state legislature, is an investment organization. It places gifts from contributors in stocks, bonds and bank certificates and donates the interest and dividends to the university.

Hawkins said that a recent report revealed that the foundation's fund was placed in the top one percent among 1,200 similar funds. He explained that this indicates that their returns were significantly higher than most others for the amount of capital invested.

"The main disposition of the UI Foundation is to direct these returns toward student scholarships," Hawkins said. "Almost all additional funds are used within the university."

Vandals break Broncos

By Jeff Corey

It seemed like old times in the ASUI Kibbie Dome Saturday night.

Former University of Idaho Head Basketball Coach, Don Monson, was in attendance; 5,600 screaming fans showed up to cheer the Vandals on; and the Vandal men's basketball team won the game.

The 61-57 win over the Boise State University Broncos broke a six-game Vandal losing streak, and extended the UI's five-year winning streak against the Broncos to eight games. The Broncos have not beaten the Vandals since the 1979-80 season.

In addition to capturing their first win of 1984, the Vandals also garnered their first Big Sky Conference win of the season: Idaho and Boise State now own identical 1-2 conference records. The win raised the Vandals overall record to 6-10 and dropped the Broncos to 10-6.

"They played very, very well," said Boise State head basketball Coach Bobby Dye of the Vandals. "I thought they played well and shot the ball very crisp."

"This was our best game in its entirety," agreed Idaho Coach, Bill Trumbo. "We played the whole 40 minutes."

Having the home court advantage proved to be an important factor in the Vandal victory. The UI crowd was ignited to fever pitch prior to the opening tip-off when Vandal Head Football Coach Dennis Erickson led the crowd in spelling out V-A-N-D-A-L-S.

"The home crowd was great tonight," said UI center Pete Prigge. "It helps a lot to know

Montana teams topple UI

Visits from two Montana state universities this weekend left the University of Idaho Vandal women's basketball team with two losses as their conference record evened out at 2-2 and their overall record slipped to 11-4.

On Saturday night, with a season-high 750 fans looking on, the Vandals battled the University of Montana. The lead see-sawed back and forth all game long. But with 1:02 remaining in the game, the Lady Grizzlies took the lead for good and nipped the Vandals 60-56.

"It was a confidence builder that we were that close to them, and had a shot at them down to the last second, because they've been beating teams by 20 and 30 points," commented UI Women's Head Basketball Coach, Pat Dobratz.

"They were a good team going in and it could have gone either way, they just had a little more experience than us and it kind of showed coming down towards the end," she added. "It builds confidence with our kids knowing that they're beatable and a lot of people in the league weren't so sure that they were."

The Vandals can indeed be beaten, but only at home. So far this season, the Vandals own a perfect 8-0 road record, but possess a 3-4 record in the ASUI Kibbie Dome.

Despite their loss to the Lady Grizzlies, the Vandals were paced by 6-foot-0 forward, Lesle McIntosh. The junior forward netted a game-high 15 points and pulled down 11 rebounds.

"It was an excellent game," McIntosh said. "We played very well and it was a really good team effort. We'll get 'em in Montana."

Next in the scoring parade was senior forward Dana Fish. Hitting on six of nine from the field, Fish scored 12 points and grabbed five rebounds.

"We were patient and played our own game," she said. "We just made a few mistakes at the wrong time."

"We were just as scrappy tonight as they were," remarked fast-moving UI guard Netra McGrew. "Tonight we went out and tried to do better than last night (against Montana State) and played 100 percent better. We're glad we played as we should have all along."

Friday night, prior to Saturday's defeat to the Grizzlies, the Vandals dropped a 76-52 decision to the Montana State University Bobcats.

"They jumped on us with a press and we just didn't get our offense going," Dobratz remarked. "We were nine out of 28 and only shot 37 percent during the first half."

"We're a good shooting the fans are still behind us."

Freshman forward Tom Stalick — who made his first start as a Vandal — echoed Prigge's comments, "The crowd was a big factor in our victory tonight — thanks a lot."

And if Idaho fans had a chance to reply, they would undoubtedly say, "Thank you, Prigge and Stalick." The two Idaho big men inflicted the majority of the damage on the Broncos, Prigge scoring a career-high 25 points while pulling down 15 rebounds.

"Prig was so self-confident," Trumbo said. "It was nothing special, he didn't jump out of his mind — he just played."

"When a guy rebounds as well as he (Prigge) does," Dye said, "he's bound to have a good game now and then."

"There was a lot of pushing and shoving," Prigge said. "But Tommy (Stalick) and I were just as physical underneath."

Stalick, who replaced forward Frank Garza in the starting lineup, played very well and ended up with eight points and nine rebounds. The efforts of Prigge and Stalick are even more impressive when one considers they combined to grab 24 of the Vandals' 30 rebounds.

"Tom's a tough kid, and has really been coming along," Trumbo said. "We had to have him in the game. BSU's inside men have good strength and quick jumping ability. Tommy is really our best big player athletically."

The game was of special importance to six Vandal players, as last season's UI Basketball Coach, Don Monson, was in attendance at the Dome. Six Vandal players — Prigge, Stan Arnold, Freeman Watkins, Pete Reitz, Zane Frazier, and Matt Haskins — remain from the Monson era.

Monson, who coached the Vandals to two NCAA tournament berths and one NIT invitation, watched most of the second half of the game.

"It's great to be back and it's fun to be watching the Vandals winning," he said.

Monson, who is now head basketball coach at the University of Oregon, was in town following the UO's game against Washington State in Pullman earlier on Saturday. The Ducks beat the Cougars 64-60.

In addition to his presence, the Vandals used one of Monson's old strategies to defeat the Broncos — the zone defense.

The Vandals, using a matching style zone the whole game, held the high-scoring BSU offense to just 28 second-half points.

"Playing zone was the best against Boise State, they run a lot of motion at you," Trumbo said. "Our reports said that they didn't shoot the ball well from the perimeter and that's what you need to control their inside game."

The strategy must have paid off as the Vandals shot 53 percent from the floor and held the Broncos to 47 percent on the evening.

UI Hoop Scoops — The last time the Vandals lost to BSU was in the 1979-80 season.

team and we got out of sync," she added. "Everyone was taking bad shots because everyone was pressing a little hard to try and fix the score. We never got in our offense and we got down by eighteen or so and you can't get that far down against a good team."

MSU may have had a good night from the floor, but the Vandals' Mary Raese had a pretty good night of her own.

Leading the Vandals with a team high 14 points, nine rebounds and four blocked shots, the 6-4 starting sophomore center made her presence known.

The Vandals' other "Twin Tower," 6-4 Mary Westerwelle, added, "nothing would work. We tried to set up various offenses and they didn't work because by the time everyone knew we had switched to a new one it was time to switch again."

Junior forward Kris Edmonds scored 12 points and agreed with her teammates that the Vandals didn't play up to their potential. "It's been the same story the last couple of games. We just didn't seem motivated. It seemed like we were just standing around."

Guard Robin Behrens was the lone Vandal to foul out against the Bobcats. "I was going for the ball because I thought she was going to dribble and she didn't. I wasn't going for the foul," explained the 5-6 sophomore guard. "You get away with a couple of things, but the fouls you get called for are always at a bad time. They were a physical team and so we got physical." Before she fouled out, however, Behrens scored a pair of freethrows for the UI. Normally a statistic such as this is insignificant, except in this game the Vandals were outscored from the freethrow line 26 to two.

The Vandals' next conference game is this Friday in the Dome at 7:30 p.m. against the Eagles of Eastern Washington University.

"We dug ourselves a hole with these two losses, we're two and two in conference now," Dobratz said. "We definitely have to beat EWU."

UI Hoop Scoops — Montana State made 26 of 38 freethrows against the Vandals. Idaho was 2 for 4 ... The Vandals swatted away nine shots while MSU tallied only three blocks ... The Vandals shot 50 percent from the field against Montana, while Montana shot 38 percent from the floor. Both teams averaged 75 percent from the freethrow line ... Against Montana, McGrew led the Vandals in steals with three and assists with seven.

board investigate itself and check the figures it has been getting from its experts, including McQuillen.

"I'm just wondering if the formula is working and if the board is getting all the figures," Black said. "Dr. McQuillen's figures just don't seem to be meeting our needs."

Black, who described himself as being pro-education, said that the board may find that its staff's figures are wrong or that ISU's information is wrong.

Most importantly, he said, the board should keep in mind that the issue is more than just the matter of a few Democrats attacking the opinion of an executive director with a Republican background.

"This isn't just a partisan issue," he said.

According to Black, coming up with the necessary education dollars will be tough for everyone.

"We're all trying to scavenge what few dollars we have," he said.

That hunt for higher education monies may be more difficult now because of the incident last week, according to McQuillen. The board will now have a less unified presence before the Legislature.

"We've lost a little ground," he said.

He added that he would talk to the board to check its confidence in him and that even though he had talked to individual board members it must act as a unit and reach a consensus on the issue.

But McQuillen wasn't throwing in the towel. "As Yogi Berra said, 'It's not over 'til it's over,'" he said.

McQuillen said that everything the board has presented so far has been very well-defended and that the incident between him and Black was unfortunate.

"When you get a question like, 'Do you think you're God?' you get in a situation where you're creating more heat than light," he said.

The director said that an imperative part of unifying higher education's presentation to the Legislature would be getting the presidents of Idaho universities together on the issues. Either they will support the board, he said, or they will "walk their own dogs."

He said the board has decided to fund students instead of institutions and that this has resulted in ISU's getting a declining portion of the funding pie, in respect to its student population.

"Nobody likes it (the formula) because it doesn't give enough to anyone."

People from the Pocatello area see ISU either on an affectionate basis because they attended school there or as an economic asset or both, he said.

Police bust UI students

Three University of Idaho students and two other Moscow residents were arrested Thursday and charged with the felony of manufacturing a controlled substance.

The UI students are Sean Eugene Martin, 21, Timothy Shaler Williams, 23, both of 917 A St. and Michael Swanson, 21, of Graham Hall.

The others are Curtis Bernd, 22, and Karen Jean Dumas, 21, both also of A Street.

The five were charged in Magistrate Court in Moscow on Friday with manufacturing a controlled substance. Williams was also charged with possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver. The five were then released from the Latah County Jail, Williams with a $500 bond and the others on their own recognizance.

A preliminary hearing on the charges has been set for Feb. 2. Moscow lawyer James Siebe will represent Williams. The others will be represented by court-appointed attorney Dean Wullenwaber of Moscow.

On Thursday police arrested the defendants at the A St. residence and confiscated a quarter pound of marijuana, 28 marijuana plants, $776 in cash and drug paraphernalia.

Senate

appoint people to them — within his power according to ASUI Rules and Regulations. He said he was optimistic about the bill passing, and that the senate "could see a need" for the positions.

It is not the first time an ASUI president has exercised this power, LeClaire said, but it is the first time money has been requested to pay presidential assistants. They would each earn $50 a month. The financial assistant would help and advise LeClaire on decisions regarding the the upcoming ASUI budget for Fiscal Year 1985, the deadline for which is March 30. The legislative assistant would act as presidential liaison to the such bodies as the Faculty Council and State Board of Education, and on matters of a legislative nature.

LeClaire said he has people in mind for the positions, but would probably wait to appoint them until after returning from a week-long junket to Boise. As a member of the Alumni Association's Board of Directors, LeClaire will attend a reception for Boise alumni on Wednesday, and will remain there for next week's Board of Education meeting.

He also said he wanted to gather some feedback on Doug Jones' performance as ASUI lobbyist to bring back to the senate. LeClaire said he has talked with Rep. James (Doc) Lucas, R-Moscow, about Jones. Lucas said Jones was "highly visible" and that he is working harder than any ASUI lobbyist in recent memory, LeClaire said.

In other business the Finance Committee is expected to make a decision whether or not to scrap the maiden off-campus student newsletter. The newsletter, proposed last semester by former senator Jeff Kunz and approved by last fall's senate, has yet to be implemented.

The Finance Committee has been directed to recommend whether to print the newsletter or redirect the $525 budgeted for it to general reserve. A recommendation could come out of committee at Wednesday's regular senate meeting.

LeClaire is also currently reviewing applicants to fill the position of ASUI senator vacated when John Edwards was elected vice president last semester. He said he would probably submit a bill with the nomination before leaving for Boise today. The senate must approve the nomination before it becomes official.
