Soldier of good fortune

Remember the old Spanish American War soldier statue that used to stand on the Administration Lawn? Well, for awhile it will be just that — a memory. The statue is in Lewiston for refurbishing by Bud Washburn (right). (Photo by Tim Frates)

Fading away

Old soldier removed for restoration

An old soldier stands alone in a grove of trees, scorned and humiliated for the better part of this century. He lacks a weapon to protect his charge; his hands were lost in battles past. But things are looking up. Help is on the way.

The soldier is a statue, perhaps the oldest semi-intact relic on the UI campus. It was erected to commemorate two UI students who died fighting in the Spanish American War.

But over the years, the students-turned-soldiers were forgotten. The plaques dedicated to their memory were stolen from the base of the figure and the statue itself became the object of pranks and vandalism.

More than a decade ago, someone — presumably a protester of the Vietnam War — smashed the statue's rifle with a sledge hammer, destroying both hands along with it. The soldier's campaign hat was also badly battered. Since then, the old soldier has stood neglected.

But he has not been forgotten. On Saturday the statue was taken away for repair in Lewiston.

Bud Washburn, who will restore the statue, recently rebuilt a dynamite-damaged statue of a Nez Perce warhorse at the Nez Perce County Courthouse in Lewiston.

Washburn, who says he is not handicapped, uses prostheses for limbs. "I've trained them to do what I tell them," he said.

"The only thing about artificial arms is that you can't feel with them. So my eyes compensate for that. I have no problem."

Washburn, who lost one hand in a hunting accident when he was 16 and the other in an automobile accident nearly 20 years ago, said his injuries have never kept him unemployed.

"Even during the Depression I always has a job. I have never been without work. I do an average job."

Now, the UI's old soldier has Washburn "stirred to high heaven," he said. "It will be the most gorgeous thing I've ever worked on."

When the statue was damaged, the UI tried to have it fixed or replaced, but found that the manufacturer had long since gone out of business. But the school did find that the statue was not made from a cast, as they originally believed, but rather is a unique, original piece of art.

Washburn plans to restore the original artist's work. "I try to go back to the period it was created, get a feel for the sculptor's work, and return it to the original condition."

Washburn is searching for old photos and records of the statue and said he would appreciate receiving these from anyone.

Interest in restoring the statue has been rising in recent years, according to Terry Armstrong, UI executive assistant to the president. Many people believe that allowing the statue to remain in its present condition is disrespectful and unpatriotic, Armstrong said.

"People felt that if it couldn't be restored it should be removed," he said.

Last spring, a final impetus set the university into action. The UI chapter of MEChA, a Chicano culture group whose members feel the statue reflects a part of their own heritage, proposed to UI President Richard Gibb that something finally be done about the statue. That was when Armstrong heard about Washburn's restoration of the old Nez Perce war horse.

"There had been many attempts to restore or replace it, but it just didn't seem possible until we heard about Bud Washburn," Armstrong said. "We invited him up to take a look at it, and he said he could fix it."

"I've already finished with the rifle. It's beautiful," Washburn said.

Washburn said the original cost of erecting the statue in 1900 was $500. That would be equivalent to about $170,000 today. Restoration would multiply the statue's value five times, making the finished project a relic worth $850,000.

Although Armstrong declined to cite the cost of the restoration, he did say that an insurance settlement is being negotiated to help pay for it.

"This is one of the greatest honors a person could receive," said the Lewiston resident, who recently moved into restoring statues. "When you work on a statue you really have a good feel about it," said Washburn who has restored artifacts in everything from bronze to porcelain to marble from over 100 nations.

"It feels like I have a host of people watching me," Washburn said. "It's going to be very charming. The students are going to be really pleased," he predicted.

The base of the statue remains on the administration lawn, and Washburn will come and work on that within three weeks or so, he said, making tentative plans to bring up his motor home so he can go inside and warm up when he gets too cold.

Currently, Washburn is shooting to have the statue cleaned up and fixed up and back in its proper place as the UI sentinel in time for Founder's Day, Jan. 28.

State Board

Budgets receive seal of approval

By Kathy Amidel

POCATELLO — The State Board of Education approved a higher education budget of over $115 million for next year on Friday.

The higher education request reflects an increase from last year's budget of over 14 percent. Last year the board sent a $105,721,900 request to the Idaho Legislature for funding for the state's colleges and universities.

The governor trimmed the higher education budget request to over $102 million, before presenting his recommendations to the Legislature last year. When the final budget came out of the Legislature, higher education received over $97 million.

The higher education recommendations were part of an overall budget request of $188,154,400 for education for the 1986 fiscal year, which marks an increase of over 12 percent above the total request last year. The request excludes funding for the State Department of Education and public school support.

The recommendations approved by the board will now be turned over to the governor for consideration in preparing his budget which he will present to the Legislature when it convenes in January, 1985.

Under the recommendations passed by the board, the UI will receive over $49 million — an increase of just over 15 percent above the university's last year budget.

In addition, the board approved the recommendation of an above the maintenance of current operations (MCO) budget of over $4 million for the UI.

The Finance Committee accepted the premise that the upcoming fiscal year will be a difficult one. And while preliminary budget forecasts indicate the state will likely experience a $50 million shortfall in providing MCO funding alone, the committee used the budget request to express the needs of the state's education system.

The UI's above MCO request focused on faculty salary equity. "Salary equity continues to be our number one priority," UI President Richard Gibb told the board. "Beyond that it is less easy, I think, to say what our priorities are."

Most of the university's requests fell in the area of enhancement and expansion into emphasis areas. The UI did not request funding above MCO for new programs.

"It's difficult to look at new programs until we have addressed the funding needs already in existence," Gibb said.

The board also approved a permanent building fund request of over $17 million at the monthly meeting on Friday. The request included $758,000 for handicapped access and life safety at the UI, and $200,000 for planning for additional library and academic space. A request for over $1.5 million for preventive maintenance projects at the UI did not make it.

ASUI senate to review Board of Ed report

Reports from senate members who attended the State Board of Education meeting will probably be the main topic at Wednesday night's ASUI senate session.

ASI delegate Senator Jane Freund and ASUI President Tom LeClaire will tell the senate what when on at the board's meeting in Pocatello last week.

The senate will vote on a few bills including a bill that would appoint former ASUI President Scott Green to a position on the Communications Board, according to Vice President John Edwards.

However, Edwards said that other important things will also be happening in Tuesday night's pre-session meeting. He said that the senate will discuss setting up some long term objectives including looking into state-wide mandatory health insurance and UI parking.

"We are going to be looking into issues that can help the students here, instead of working so much on state-wide goals," Edwards said.

Edwards said that getting on top of issues at the start is an important goal for the senate this semester.

Fac Council meets today

Faculty Council will decide on a class schedule for the UI's summer session at its meeting today in the Brink Hall Faculty Lounge at 3:30 p.m.

The university faculty will also have input.

The Council will take into consideration the number of in-class and out of class hours required to earn each academic credit.

In other business, Roy Fluhrer, chairman of the council, will report on the State Board of Education meeting, which he attended last week in Pocatello.

Student leader fund created

Dean of Students Bruce Pitman is currently creating an endowment that will provide funds for student leadership activities.

Known as "The Student Leadership Fund," the endowment will help pay for leadership activities, which include guest speakers, special trips and leadership training materials, Pitman said.

"This will be an excellent resource, especially for student organizations," Pitman said.

Pitman has been contacting student organizations hoping they will contribute and help establish the initial fund. Once it is established, fund-raising activities begin.

One fund raiser already planned is a 10-week aluminum can drive. Students will be asked to save their aluminum cans, and the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity has already volunteered to collect them, Pitman said.

Although no goal has been set, Pitman said that by Mid-October $10,000-$11,000 should be raised.

Dining with a convicted felon

Editor:

I was disappointed to read of G. Gordon Liddy's visit to the UI on Sept. 18, and even more so to see that he was accompanied to dinner by Terry Armstrong.

Here is a man who is a convicted felon, who blantly attempted to undermine one of the most fundamental concepts of a democratic society: free and open elections. Liddy has shown no remorse for his actions, and has even said he would do it again. Yet when he comes here he is treated like a celebrity and a hero.

What is the administration trying to tell us? Perhaps if we too adopt Liddy's warped views and rationalizations we can also receive the same praise from the administration.

Mud slinging degrades Hellar

Editor:

Democratic Congressional candidate Bill Hellar has a problem. He seems to think that votes are achieved through the criticism of one's opponent rather than letting the public know his alternative solutions to the problems that we are faced with today.

In the Sept. 13 Post Falls Tribune a headline read "Hellar Takes Shots at Craig." Bill Hellar said he wants to expose Larry Craig for what he is. Well, why don't you come out front and tell us what you are and what you would do as a congressman?

So far you have failed to come up with a definitive stand on wilderness. You have failed to make clear your taxation approach. You have criticized Larry Craig for his balance-the-budget stand, yet you yourself do not tell us how to remedy the budget deficit. Maybe you are trying to hide from Idahoans your solution that reflects that same old liberal complacency that raising taxes is the solution to all of our problems.

Let's face it, Bill Hellar. By criticizing someone else the way that you do it seems as if you're actually degrading yourself as both a candidate and an individual. Let's see a campaign of issues and ideas with less emphasis on mud slinging and reckless finger pointing.

Views on El Salvador

Editor:

The situation in El Salvador has typically been only cursorily investigated and reported by the press, so I would like to present what I have heard is really going on in Central America.

Recently the U.S. Congress has considered supplying new war boats and helicopters to aid the military of El Salvador against the revolutionary guerrillas in their country. This step would be a major escalation in armament for military in a war that has been primarily fought with low technology weapons.

For example, the guerrillas have avoided using anti-aircraft missiles, easily available on the blackmarket, even though the bombings mainly kill civilians, not guerrillas. Now 10 new Huey helicopters (at a cost of $70 million) have been delivered to El Salvador to ferry their soldiers to "hot spots" in the country.

How does the U.S. Congress justify these appropriations? Often the guerrillas are portrayed as Russian puppets, ruthless and ideological, and that must be stopped at any cost. The reports of the FPL (one of the revolutionary groups) forcing large numbers of young boys to join their ranks exemplifies this totalitarian attitude and brutality.

This is the news — pretty black and white isn't it? We are doing the correct thing saving El Salvador for the Communists. Maybe...but before you become too sure, let's take a look at the two possible underlying assumptions of U.S. aid.

First, a strong military presence in El Salvador will be the key to peace by destroying the resistance movement. Secondly, the guerrillas do not believe in personal liberties, witnessed by the forced impression of the young boys.

The second assumption is easily refuted. A fact only a few reporters have searched for is that these boys wanted to join the guerrilla's ranks, but they did not want their families hurt.

Think of it in this way: who could blame the family if the boy was forced to join. However, to have just disappeared would have marked the family as subversive, leading to persecution or torture. (Lest someone question my sources, this information comes from Dr. Charles Clements, ex-Air Force pilot who was a doctor in El Salvador for a year. He questioned priests who had counselled the "distraught" parents as part of the deception.)

The revolutionaries are soldiers; and they do kill, which I find lamentable in any context. I understand, however, why they seek redress for decades of impoverishment and the deaths of thousands for malnutrition and disease that a few extremely rich landlords have forced on El Salvador's peasants.

Risking their lives in war means nothing since their future in any other context is even more bleak. To their credit, the guerrillas have avoided killing civilians, whereas the daily bombings by the military often injure or kill only civilians. The death squads have also been firmly linked to the military. I don't find it hard to see which group is morally superior.

The first assumption, that better weapons will lead to peace, does nothing to ameliorate the poor living conditions of the peasants, so new guerrillas for the FSLN will always be available. One impaired the peace process by refusing the help redress the social injustices of no decent food, health care or living conditions.

Skaug misrepresents religion

Editor:

In his column of Sept. 21 Bruce Skaug misrepresents not only the structure of catholic churches, Roman and otherwise, but also the ethical teaching those churches have authorized.

If these misrepresentations are deliberate, Mr. Skaug serves his readership well, and good editors should realize that the controversies he engenders cannot be healthy. If he is demonstrating mere ignorance of catholic christianity, then may I suggest several ways he can correct himself.

He might speak, as he suggest Ms. Ferraro do, to a Roman Catholic priest and thereby find out that even Roman Catholicism considers the Church to be "the whole People of God" — laity, religious and clergy together — not merely a hierararchical institution embodied in the clergy alone and represented primarily by the views of one bishop in the diocese of Rome.

If he needs a second opinion he might check Richard McBrien's book Catholicism out of the UI library and, making a serious attempt to understand why Ms. Ferraro's views are not beyond the Church's pale, read what the second Vatican Council had to say about catholicity, sacramentality and collegiality; especially he might want to read about what RC says about conscience.

On a more basic catechetical level, Mr. Skaug could break out his Bible and examine what Jesus says about the neighbor and who that might be. I would not be surprised if he were to find out that even Democrats, homosexuals and other people who do not think as Mr. Skaug does are among those whom he is called to love as brother, even as he loves himself and Jesus' God loves him.

As the Mennonites might say, the idea of enemy tests definitively our love for the neighbor who is not necessarily the guy next door. At this point Mr. Skaug might realize that how he feels about Democrats and other "deviants" says perhaps more that he wants to concerning how he feels about himself.

And having realized these things, Mr. Skaug might further realize that talking with people as Jesus enjoins (Matthew 18:15) instead of about them as any gossip might, leads most powerfully toward reconciliation, redemption and participation in that kind of loving Jesus lived. It is hard: Ask those who work at the Arg how hard it is for me.

Satellite SUB prices too high

Editor:

I am curious: Why can a person go to the Student Health Center and pay only $2 for a treatment that would normally cost him $80 (Wednesday treatment of warts, corns, etc.) — certainly a service and a good bargain for a poor student. Then, that same student enters the "Satellite SUB" for something to eat — only to walk out again empty-handed because the prices are so high?

Come on — 65 cents for a container of yogurt that costs a mere 35 cents at Safeway (who you know is making their profit) and 40 cents for a small brownie, etc!

Maybe I haven't got all the facts as to why the prices are so high, but surely if the prices were lowered — more people (including me) would be able to eat there; thus they would sell more items at a lower cost to students, yet still be able to make a small profit.

I question what the profit margin is now with the prices the way there are. I also question — is the Satellite SUB only for the richer, elite of the student body of the University of Idaho? If anyone can fill me in, or get the prices lowered, I would appreciate it.

Prejudice not conservatism

Editor:

I suppose Bruce Skaug sees himself as a conservative spokesman. It's unfortunate he doesn't have the finesse that makes columnists like Buckley interesting.

I'm sorry to see the Argonaut become a format by which the uninformed may prove their narrow-mindedness.

Alcoholism is a disease; so is prejudice. Unfortunately the recovery rate for each is quite low.

Jim Stoicheff, Jr.

Columnist Skaug is all mixed up

Editor:

Bruce Skaug, in his column "Ferraro's Inconsistencies," has his own issues mixed up. His column is directed to nowhere.

First, he starts talking about Ferraro and wondering what kind of (wo)man she really is. While calling herself a Catholic, which by all means is the most important thing about her, she has contradicted herself and her religion countless times. Well, Bruce Skaug and all you fellow "Americans" who believe in consistency and honesty, I think you've got the issues backward.

Ferraro may be a Catholic, but she's a person first. She's a woman who is an individual, and obviously believes in fair treatment by the government to all who live in this great country. This includes homosexuals and lesbians who are, yes folks, human beings. This also includes women, who by their own free will, decide to have an abortion.

Yes, Ferraro is a Catholic, and this "religion" (conglomeration) outlaws homosexuals and abortion. (What ever happened to the separation of church and state?) But, first we must look at Ferraro as the whole WOMAN. It's you people who are afraid of being individuals, that scorn upon other people who truly are.

Abby Gold

Not Americans? its not logical

Editor:

Bruce Skaug, again you have managed to stir up some controversy. In your recent opinion on "Ferraro's inconsistencies" you have once again shown that your ideologies are less American and more totalitarian.

If you wish to be anti-abortion and anti-homosexuality that is great for you, and I commend you for it; you have opinions and you are willing to state them and stand behind them. However, to say that people who are pro-abortion and/or pro-homosexuality are not

Americans is simply illogical. It is sure that all people will seldom agree on any topic, abortion and homosexuality included.

I, myself, support Congresswoman Ferraro, as well as her stands on abortion and homosexuality. I am also sure that the gay community of America also supports her and her willingness to go against the norm and fight for gays and their rights. As far as abortion is concerned, I believe that this is an area best left alone.

There are men and women who have had to go through the experience of an unwanted pregnancy. There is a whole spectrum of emotions. It is hard enough to make the decision to have abortion. Why make it harder by outlawing them?

Legal or not, abortions will be had and homosexuality will be practiced. My beliefs, opinions or ideologies make me no less an American than an American who disagrees with me.

I love America and its ideals. I support former Vice President Mondale and Congresswoman Ferraro and hope they live up to their platform when elected.

Health insurance: Is mandatory necessary?

By Holly Rickett

When it comes to issues related to state education, UI students may think they have little say. But the presidents of Boise State University, Idaho State University and Lewis-Clark State College are carefully watching the reactions of UI students to one state education issue.

The presidents are concerned about a proposed mandatory health insurance plan now under study by the Idaho Board of Regents.

ASUI President Tom LeClaire, who recently returned from the Board of Regents' meeting in Pocatello, said that the other universities are watching UI students' reactions because the UI has taken the initiative in this matter by finding out what students think, even before the Board forms a specific proposal.

"Most of the other universities are looking to see how we feel about the issue especially LCSC, who is really watching us closely," said LeClaire.

The Board of Regents has proposed that one insurance company cover all four universities. If the proposal were approved, all students would have to buy health insurance.

Currently the four universities are covered separately by four different insurance companies. And each university makes its own rules about whether insurance will be mandatory, optional or voluntary.

Both the UI and LCSC have optional health insurance, and students can take it or leave it, depending on whether they think need it.

When UI students register, they are asked whether they want to buy insurance, just as they are asked whether they want to buy the school yearbook. If a student decides that he wants health insurance, then he can talk to insurance representatives that are at registration to answer questions. If a student decides that he doesn't want insurance, he merely checks it off and does not pay the insurance fee (currently $118).

At BSU and ISU, voluntary insurance is offered. This type is somewhat tricky as it is not what it seems. When BSU and ISU students register, the insurance fee is included along with the rest of the fees. However, the insurance fee can be reclaimed if students sign a waiver that signifies that they are already covered by some other type of health insurance.

The tricky part is that many of the students don't know they can get their money back, and many of them just don't want to take the time to fill out the necessary paperwork.

So most BSU and ISU students are paying for the health insurance offered by the university, whether or not they need it. LeClaire said that he sees very little difference between this type of insurance and mandatory insurance.

"For all purposes, voluntary insurance is mandatory insurance," LeClaire said. However LeClaire said that all four universities are against state-wide mandatory health insurance.

So far the UI is the only university that has asked for student response to the proposal. So BSU, ISU and LCSC are watching to see how UI students react.

So far, the reaction has been negative. LeClaire said that most of the ASUI senators have reported that students in their living groups strongly oppose the plan. LeClaire said that most students just don't want to pay that extra amount to get health insurance. He also said that many of the freshmen and sophomores are still covered by their parents health insurance and they don't believe that they should have to be insured twice.

Incidentally, LeClaire said that the UI has already signed a 3-year contract with an insurance company to provide optional health insurance.

LeClaire said that the ASUI is looking at this issue early so that when he testifies to the board on behalf of the UI, there will already be resolutions, correspondances, memos and other written works that show that UI students do not favor the mandatory insurance idea.

"This is just an early warning, but we want to be looking at these issues early so we can get a policy that the students have put their input into. This way we will be prepared to deal with the proposal when it comes out," LeClaire said.

One intended benefit of the Board's proposal is that premiums would be lower because all students would be buying the insurance. And LeClaire said that there

An Italian adventure

Art prof accused of embezzling, terrorism

David Geise

By Marcey Baker

When in Italy, do as the Italians do.

For David Geise, a UI art and architecture professor, this meant doing as Italian criminals do. On a trip to Rome this summer, Geise saw a side of Italian lifestyle that is usually reserved for a handful of the locals who are involved with the Italian Justice system.

Geise was arrested and accused of trying to embezzle the Italian Government and of being a suspected terrorist.

Geise's trip was his fourth time to visit Italy and his first encounter with the Italian Military Police, which is responsible for National Security in Italy.

Geise was in Italy to take photographs for travel brochures for the Idaho and Rome International Studies program, which allows UI art and architecture students to go on exchange to Italy.

But Geise's photography was not what got him into trouble. The confusion began when over a phone call. Geise was trying to place a call to the UI. Paul Blanton, Dean of Art and Architecture, had given him permission to use the University's calling card number to report periodically on his progress in Italy.

The problem was that the Italian phone system is different from the American system in that it is still run by the government.

"Standing six-and-a-half hours stark naked in a rather filthy and grimy room with people walking in and out is pretty intimidating. It makes you feel very vulnerable."

David Geise

Since AT&T decentralized its phone system it has caused other countries to lose money from all the bogus credit card calls being placed. Many loopholes still exist in the system, Geise said. And the Italian government has been cracking down on violators.

Geise's encounter with the phone system, and the Military Police, occurred when he went to a communication center, a building with rows of glass-enclosed phone booths and an operator terminal in the middle.

Geise believed he looked suspicious to the operator because his card wasn't in his name, and he had trouble remembering the sequence code. As he glanced out of his booth he noticed the place was being evacuated. Believing a robbery was taking place, he told the operator he had to leave, but she insisted he remain in the booth. She told Geise that they were trying to catch a thief two booths away and not to leave or it would raise suspicion.

Geise soon found his booth surrounded by the military police, armed with machine guns. Believing the police had made a mistake, Geise began to point to the guy in the next booth. But Geise was the suspected thief.

After questioning Geise, the police realized they had made a mistake. But then they accused Geise of being a suspected Greek terrorist whom they had been looking for. Geise said he did resemble the man. He had just visited Sardinia, an island off the coast of France, and had a dark tan, so he could easily pass for being Greek. Geise had trouble convincing them that he was not the Greek. "How do you prove who you are if you are not allowed to make a phone call?" he said.

"It is difficult to prove you are innocent because their system is

Two more Vandals hurt, courtesy of MSU

By Jeff Corey

The UI Vandal football team not only suffered a loss to the Montana State University Bobcats last Saturday 34-28, but it also fell prey to injury woes that have plagued the Vandals all season long.

The UI team lost the services of running back Andrew Smith and wide receiver Eric Yarber. Smith tore some ligaments in his knee, and Yarber suffered a dislocated collarbone.

"Certainly the key injuries hurt them," Montana State Head Coach Dave Arnold said after the contest. "Especially on defense. And also not having Linehan hurt them — I could see that."

The loss dropped the Vandals' overall record to 1-2 and marked the first time a Dennis Erickson-coached Idaho team has lost to the Bobcats. The UI is 0-1 in Big Sky Conference action.

"This has been the biggest win since I've been coach," Arnold said. "Coming on the road and beating a fine Idaho team shows a lot of character for our team. I hope they keep picking us ninth."

"I feel good about beating them," he said. "Dennis Erickson-coached teams are very well coached and very well prepared for every game."

"This is the only time of the year that Dennis (Erickson) and I are on opposite sides," Arnold said of the former MSU quarterback. "He's a Bobcat and I think the world of him and his program, but certainly the injury thing doesn't help him at all."

Some of the UI players who have missed at least parts of games due to injuries this season include end Frank Moreno, tackles John Andrews and Scott Katz, linebacker Tom Hennessey and cornerback Mike Johnston on defense. On offense, quarterback Scott Linehan, tailbacks Steve Jackson and Smith and wide receiver Yarber have all been hurt as well.

With the Vandal injuries happening early on in the game, the Idaho offense stalled in the second half and watched a 21-10 lead disappear into the air.

"They played well," said UI Head Football Coach Dennis Erickson. "I was really disappointed in how we played tonight. We just didn't execute well."

You're Shill the one

Vandal fullback Mike Shill (23) finds the going a bit rough as he grinds out a couple of yards while teammate Matt Watson (68) looks on. Shill, who transferred to the UI from Montana State, carried

As the Idaho "O" slipped, the Vandal "D" also started to show signs of strain.

When the momentum shifted to MSU in the second half, the Vandal defense found itself spending more time on the field and less time on the bench.

The injury situation also forced Erickson to use many freshmen, as starters became tired and hurt. At one point in the game, the Vandals had seven freshmen playing defense.

"Some of our guys got tired," Erickson said, "so we had to put the freshman in. They had better get used to it — they are going to have to play the rest of the year."

With the Vandal defense hurting, the MSU offense fired up under the direction of quarterback Kelly Bradley. The Bobcats' offense totaled up 462 yards on the night, with 349 yards coming through the air.

"You've got to give them credit offensively," Erickson said. "They blocked well and also blocked the blitz better than they ever had."

With UI starting QB Scott Linehan sitting the bench, Rick Sloan guided the Vandal offense.

Sloan ended up completing 19 passes out of 49 attempts for 225 yards and had three interceptions.

"He (Sloan) wasn't throwing the ball bad early but later on didn't quite throw it as good," Erickson said. "I decided to stick with him because he had seen their defense the whole time. He made a couple of good passes up the middle late in the game — but we couldn't get it in the end zone."

Sloan guided the Vandals to an early lead on a pass to Eric Yarber and was surprised about the opening series.

"It felt good," Sloan said. "I expected to come out nervous but I wasn't at all."

Even though his first start ended on a sour note, Sloan thought he could do a better job in the future.

"I have the ability to lead this team and play better. I had some incorrect reads and I missed some open men, but I'm sure I can work it out."

"You've got to give MSU credit," he said. "They were in my face all night long."

Erickson also felt the Bobcat "D" hurt the UI offense.

"They gave us good pressure, and we couldn't get away from the rush. They did a good job pass rushing us all night long."

UI running back Marlon Barrow led all UI rushers with 87 yards and one touchdown. Former MSU fullback, Mike Shill followed him with 47 yards.

UI Deep Threats — UI kicker Tim McMonigle added to his string of successful conversions with four more, bringing his total to 94 PAT's a row. ... Spike it rich

Vandals slay LCSC Warriors

By Frank Hill

It took a balanced scoring attack and a few good saves, but the UI volleyball team defeated the Lewis-Clark State College Warriors Monday night in Memorial Gym in three straight games.

The three-game win over LCSC raises the UI's overall record to 11-10. The scores of Monday night's match were 15-7, 15-7, 15-4 in favor of the Vandals.

"We played real well," said UI Head Volleyball Coach Pam Bradetich. "Lewis-Clark is a real scrappy team. They played real hard and they were a much better team than we gave them credit for."

The Vandals' opening game win was a total team effort as each member of the Vandals' starting line-up recorded at least one kill.

"It was another balanced attack," Bradetich said comparing Monday's match with several matches the Vandals won at the Brigham Young University Preview Invitational last weekend. "We played pretty well. We showed signs of brilliance, but we still had a few spurts of inconsistency."

In game two, the Vandals' started sluggishly and trailed LCSC 0-2 after five exchanges. But then the experience of two Vandal veterans came to the forefront as the Vandals rallied to bury the Warriors, 15-7.

UI vets Gibbons and Neely served 10 of the UI's 15 points as the Vandals coasted to the win.

Neely was particularly effective from the serving stripe.

"Kelley set and served real well," Bradetich said. "I was very pleased with her performance."

And pleased she should have been as it was Neely who carried the Vandals back from the brink of disaster with a string of seven unanswered points midway through the second game.

With the UI trailing 4-5, Neely rattled off a string of points — including one ace — to put the Vandals in front to stay, 11-5.

In the third and final game the Vandals again received a strong performance from their back-up setter, Joyce Sasaki.

Sasaki, a junior from Reedley, Calif., recorded eight setting assists and two serving aces as she blasted five consecutive serving points to give the Vandals a 10-3 lead late in the game.

On the evening, the Vandals' hitting attack showed a remarkable degree of balance.

Every Vandal who played recorded at least one kill and five players netted service aces.

Leading the Vandals in kills was Gibbons, with nine. Frazier and senior outside hitter Michele Laub each blasted eight kills and Peard added four more. Three other Vandals each tallied three kills.

Bradetich was also encouraged to see junior outside hitter Robin Jordan return to action following a week's layoff due to a sprained ankle.

Lodge wins second Tri-state/Arg contest

Dan Lodge of the SAE house came out the winner in the second week of the Tri-State/Argonaut "Pick the Winners Contest."

Lodge ended up getting 15 out of the 18 games correct and tied with two other people. Lodge won, however, because he picked Montana State's defeat over the Vandals in the tie-breaker games.

"I figured Idaho would have a tough time with all their injury problems and with a new QB starting," Lodge said.

Arg Sports Editor Jeff Corey fell flat on his face this week as he picked only 12 games correctly.

"Oh well, everybody has an off week," Corey said.

This week, Corey let ex-Sports Editor and present Arg Editor Frank Hill pick some of the games.

"I liked the Ball State-Northern Illinois game because the Ball boys played Wazzu so tough and Northern Illinois, who knows what they have?" Hill said.

Spikers finish seventh at BYU Invitational

The UI volleyball team evened its overall pre-season record at 10-10 last weekend as the Vandal spikers finished seventh at the Brigham Young University Preview Invitational in Provo, Utah.

The Vandals completed the three-day tourney with a 3-4 overall record.

The event, which included all eight Mountain West Athletic Conference teams, was won by the University of Oregon. Last year's MWAC champion Portland State University finished second, while the University of Utah took third.

The Vandals opened the tournament last Thursday with a loss to Utah, 15-12, 15-11 and a loss to Southwest Missouri State University, 15-11, 15-13. And at that point, it looked like the Vandals were going to be in for a long weekend.

"I thought after those two losses, we were going to be in for it," said UI Head Volleyball Coach Pam Bradetich. "Utah was a good team, but losing to Southwest Missouri (who finished 17th in the tourney) was just the best example of how we have to work on playing more consistent."

Leading the Vandals in kills against Southwest Missouri was senior hitter Jenny Frazier with nine. Junior Janine Peard and senior Julie Holsinger each netted five kills.

Starting junior setter Kelley Neely recorded 25 assists and three service aces.

Versus Utah, Holsinger led all comers in kills with nine while the trio of Peard, Frazier and senior Kelly Gibbons each added six more kills. Neely upped her assist total with 27 more.

Following the opening round losses, the UI rebounded on Friday and captured a pair of wins from the University of Washington, 15-4, 15-11 and fellow-MWAC member the University of Montana, 10-15, 15-10, 15-8.

Washington, who finished 10th in the tourney, was, "much improved over last year," Bradetich said. "I was pretty darn enthused with the way we played them."

Holsinger again led the Vandal hit parade recording eight kills. Frazier fired in seven more kills and netted a pair of stuff blocks. Peard also record two solo blocks.

"Versus Washington we finally started playing well as a team," Bradetich added. "We didn't let them get into their game."

Meanwhile against Montana, who placed 14th overall, the Vandals were outplayed in the opening game but the Grizzlies failed to hold the Vandals in check in the final two frames.

"Nellie Gant and Julie Holsinger played very good in the second and third games," Bradetich said. "For our team to be successful this year we have to have everybody contributing, and we did against Montana."

Versus the Grizzlies, Holsinger led the team in kills with 10, Gant had nine, Gibbons pocketed eight, Frazier added seven and Peard fired in six more.

The victory over Montana gave the Vandals a 2-2 record after the opening round of the tourney. And from this point on, the top two teams in each of the four divisions in the 20-team tournament advanced into the playoffs. And fortunately for the Vandals, the UI spikers finished second in their division — thus making them eligible for the playoffs.

"By making the championship round of the playoffs, the worst we could finish was eighth," Bradetich said. "And with a little bit of luck we could have finished among the top four teams."

In the opening round in the championship bracket, the Vandals drew Texas Tech University. Playing a best three-out-of-five game match, the UI fell to Tech, 6-15, 7-15, 15-5, 6-15.

"The match was much closer than the scores suggest," Bradetich said. "Don't get me wrong, they were a very good team, but I feel we could have beaten them if we had played just a little bit more consistently."

Versus Texas Tech, Gibbons led the spikers in kills with 16. Frazier finished second in kills with 10. Neely again was tops in assists with 42 setting bumps.

Following the loss to Texas Tech, the Vandals played the 17th ranked team in the nation, host BYU.

Returning to the best two-out-of-three-game format, the Vandals fell to the Cougars 15-8, 15-12.

"If we had played the type of game we normally do, we could have beaten them," Bradetich said. "Our problem was we tried to hit the ball too perfectly. We made too many attacking errors."

The top UI hitters versus the Cougs were sophomore Nellie Gant and Gibbons with six kills apiece. Neely chipped in 19 assists.

The Vandals' final match of the three-day tourney started late Saturday. And for the UI, the tournament ended on a happy note as the Vandals wound up the tourney with a three-game win over the University of Illinois. The scores of the match were 15-12, 5-15, 15-3.

"This was our best blocking game of the tournament," Bradetich said. "They were a much, much taller team, but we beat them."

And leading the Vandal victory was Gibbons who nailed down 11 kills. For her effort in the tournament, Gibbons was named to the second-team all-tournament team.

Frazier was second to Gibbons in kills with 10, and the Vandal senior led the team in stuff blocks with five. Neely, meanwhile, potted 35 assists.

The BYU tournament not only featured some of the best volleyball teams in the nation, but it included all eight MWAC schools. Only PSU finished higher in the standings than the Vandals.

The rankings of MWAC schools were as follows: PSU second, Idaho seventh, Boise State University ninth, Montana State University 12th, the University of Montana 14th, Weber State College 16th, Idaho State University 19th and Eastern Washington University 20th.

Law, rain end Arg win skein

The Argonaut co-rec softball team suffered its first loss of the season Sunday as the Yellow Journalists were prosecuted by the Law School, 17-12.

The Yellow Journalists now own a 1-1 league record following a forfeit victory over Gault Hall two weeks ago.

The Arg team was hampered in its victory efforts because the Yellow Journalists could field but seven players.

Prof publishing Indian book

A book of essays dealing with the American Indian, edited by a UI professor, will be published Sept. 28 by Indiana University Press.

Entitled Scholars and the Indian Experience: Critical Reviews of Recent Writing in the Social Sciences, the treatise was edited by William Swagerty, UI assistant professor of history.

The book is being published for the D'Arcy McNickle Center for History of the American Indian, located at the Newberry Library in Chicago. It constitutes the 30th volume of the library's bibliography series and is intended as a resource guide to reliable sources in particular fields of general American Indian literature.

According to Swagerty, the book — with its new format — represents a departure from previous volumes. Instead of containing a single essay surveying the entire previous literature on a single subject about the American Indian, the new work contains 10 essays, each written by a specialist and each reviewing the most recent literature in the field.

Swagerty wrote one of the 10 essays, Spanish-Indian Relations 1513-1821. The essays were solicited by Swagerty, who then reworked and edited the submissions.

His interest in the American West, and the American Indian in particular, dates from his childhood days. Growing up near Taos, N.M., Swagerty was exposed constantly to Indian culture and lore.

He gives credit to Harvey Carter, one of his instructors at Colorado College, for nurturing his interest in the American West. Swagerty says it was Carter who urged him to explore the subject, particularly the "mountain men" of the west and their dealings with American Indians.

"Things just sort of snowballed from there," Swagerty said, adding, "I suppose you could say I became hooked on the whole subject of the North American Indian and how they have interacted with Europeans, going all the way back to their first contacts with Spaniards more than four centuries ago."

Swagerty, who at age 32 has a large list of publications to his credit, says his research in recent years has convinced him that when Christopher Columbus landed in the New World, there were as many Indians in North America (50 to 100 million) as there were western Europeans.

"I strongly feel I'm correct in that estimate, although I'm sure there are other historians who feel the land could not possibly have supported anywhere near that number of Indians," Swagerty said.

Swagerty also said there were, and still are, more vibrant Indian cultures in the eastern United States.

"I really understood that after leading a field trip to New York and New England, visiting sites where Indians had or still do live. I think many of us, especially westerners, tend to think of Indians with a sort of John Wayne mentality. By that I mean we see Indians only as living on the wide open plains, waiting to pounce upon the next wagon train that happened along."

Finally, Swagerty said he has discovered many Indian cultures are alive and well today in urban areas.

According to the 1980 census, more Indians now live in cities than on reservations, with Los Angeles leading the way.

"I think the lasting impression you come away with is that it's really amazing how Indians have survived and rebounded. The posses what I call a persistent cultural system, which means that in spite of everything they've been subjected to over the centuries, most tribes have managed to keep their heritage alive."

"All things considered," Swagerty said, "that's no small feat."

Adventure

based on Inquisitor. It's not up to the state to prove you are innocent, it's your obligation to do so." He also said that under this system, suspected criminals are not treated as well as they are under the U.S. system. He was treated very rudely and abruptly.

"They intimidate the Hell out of you. Standing six-and-a-half hours stark naked in a rather filthy and grimy room with people walking in and out is pretty intimidating. It makes you feel very vulnerable," Giese said.

After pointing out significant differences between himself and the Greek, Giese was allowed to go. Even so, he wandered around Rome the next few days feeling paranoid that the police were still watching his every move.

But he believes he got off pretty lucky because the police filed no formal charges against him. If charges had been brought against him, Giese would have had problems traveling around Europe since the passport officials would have been informed.

A self-proclaimed Itiofile, a lover of Italian culture, Giese takes this episode lightly. He tends to concentrate more on his positive attitudes about Italy.

"You are confronted with centuries of people living in one spot. The layering of the city is astounding. Everything from ancient Roman ruins to high baroque cathedrals and medieval streets can be seen in Italy. A whole level of western civilization exists right there."

This attitude can be seen in his artwork. His artwork portrays his feelings about history and the way he thinks it should be, not the way it is written.

Giese said that his experience in Italy will not keep him from returning. But he will make a few changes. He said he will probably shave off his beard so he won't be confused with a terrorist. And he will try to help UI students avoid the Military Police by including tips about the Italian phone system in his travel brochures.

MOSCON: Fun for fans, speakers

By Mike Long

"Relaxing enjoyment" is the only way to describe the science fiction heaven at MOSCON VI last weekend when science fiction fans from around the world gathered to celebrate their favorite genre of literature at Moscow's Cavanaugh's Landing.

Regular sci-fi convention-goers as well as people who found themselves caught up in the life of their first science fiction convention marveled at the laid-back atmosphere that made the weekend special for all participants.

Lorna Toolis, one of the many Canadians at the conference, said Moscon is one of the nicest conventions she has attended. "And while I have missed others, I have never missed a Moscon since my first. This town is really special," she said.

Tom Waddel, another Canadian, said that Moscon is about average, but he also said, "I've never missed a Moscon."

He said he keeps coming back because of the books. "Books are my weakness. You can get books at a science fiction convention you can't find anywhere else."

Kathy Totten of Richland, Wash., was at her second Moscon and she called the affair "nice and very friendly."

Elinor Busby, wife of guest of honor F.M. Busby, said, "I've been to every Moscon, and they're always the same. I see all my friends here. I like Moscon because it's kind of smoother than other science fiction conventions and more relaxed."

Busby also said that Moscon has a "higher emphasis on art than at other conventions." She also said that the quality is high for the size of the convention.

Agreeing with Busby and calling it his favorite science fiction conference was speaker and author Algis Budrys who summed up the participants' feeling when he said, "Most others are set in much bigger places and everything is hard-lined and everyone is uptight."

"Here in Moscow, it's 'Live and Let Live' and it overflows into the convention. It's put on by people who care, and people respond to it and relax more."

"It's a fitting tribute to 'Doc' Smith and others from the Pacific Northwest who have contributed to the field of science fiction. If it wasn't, I wouldn't keep coming out from Chicago, Ill., every year," Budrys said.

Budrys hit on the heart of Moscon. It is a tribute to author E.E. "Doc" Smith and other writers who have contributed to the field of science fiction over a period of 20 years or more.

Every year Moscon is highlighted by three things, a masquerade competition and ball, the presenting of the Lensman awards to an author and artist and the appearance of the epitome of Moscon, Verna Smith Trestrail, the daughter of the con's "guiding spirit" E.E. "Doc" Smith.

The masquerade competition was Saturday at 8 p.m. Participants dressed up as their favorite science fiction or fantasy characters. After the judging, all danced the night away in Cavanaugh's ballroom.

The next morning, the participants honored the winners of this year's Lensman awards at a brunch. The awards are named after a series of books by the late Smith and are given to a writer and artist who have contributed significantly to their field over a period of years.

Picking up this year's awards from Trestrail, who presented them for the Palouse Empire Science Fiction Association, which sponsors the event, were writer Isaac Asimov and artist Frank Gaughan. Trestrail again returned to this year's Moscon after appearing there as the first guest of honor six years ago.

Why does she come back every year? "It's worth it and I can't imagine a Moscon and me not being there." Her comment brought much agreement from the audience she was addressing about Smith's life.

After her speech, Smith spent a few minutes in casual conversation with the audience while waiting for others to get out of a meeting that had taken longer than scheduled.

The casual air continued as she comfortably reminisced about her father and family and the heritage she grew up with. That heritage enabled her to refer to some of science fiction greats like Isaac Asimov and Robert Heinlein as "Ike" and "Bob".

Smith said that she felt like her father was at Moscon. "I know that sounds corny, but he just loved Idaho. Everything about it."

Smith was a UI graduate and last year was made a Distinguished Graduate.

"Eighteen other schools asked for his papers and finally the University of Idaho here in Moscow decided to honor him. I was so happy when they did," she said.

Mike Finkbinder, a member of the Palouse Empire Science Fiction Association, summed up by saying, "Moscon provides an opportunity for people of similar interests, but not necessarily similar ideas to congregate."

"It provides the opportunity for the exchange of ideas in all areas and not just science fiction," he said.

AIA sponsors series

By Paul AlLee

Feeling cramped in that college cubical they call a bedroom? A fall lecture series on modern architecture may offer you ideas for refurbishing those living spaces.

Students or faculty can learn about such architectural topics as art, graphic design and structural design for as little as one hour of their time a week, plus the cost of some simple graphics supplies.

Sponsored by the Associated Society Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture, The Design Series is a collection of six, one-hour lectures given Wednesday nights this fall at the UI.

"This Design Series will interest anyone concerned with the relationship between our environment and its modern architecture. The lectures are generic enough that just almost anyone can understand them," said Bill Turek, president of the local sponsoring organization.

Professor Dan Morabito's presentation titled "Landscape Architecture" drew a crowd of 45 last Wednesday as the series' first lecture.

To encourage greater attendance, Turek has distributed fliers throughout the UI and Washington State University. See DESIGN SERIES, page 17

Indian dancer coming to WSU

A free public performance of the Classic Indian dance Bharata Natyam by Mythili Kumar will be presented Oct. 3 in the R.R. Jones Theatre at WSU's Daggy Hall 7:30 p.m.

Bharata Natyam is the most well known classical dance style of the subcontinent. Origins of the dance go as far back as the second century B.C. Epic stories and classical lyrics are interpreted by performers dressed in colorful and stylized costumes.

Kumar has studied and taught in New Delhi and recently established a school in San Jose, Calif.

Festival cold but fun

By Carolyn Beasley

Hot foods, cold foods, homemade crafts, dancing, singing, screaming and yelling were featured at one time or another in the third annual International Food Fair and Folk Festival on Main Street last weekend.

Despite the cold, wet weather many students managed to make it to the festival.

The festivities started at 8 a.m. with the Farmer's Market, a weekly food sale in Friendship Square. Later, sheltered from the chilly weather by a canvas tent, musicians performed on a stage across from the square.

Surrounding the stage and filling all the rest of that leg of Main Street were booths where vendors sold food and crafts.

A booth that seemed to always have a line in front of it was a Chinese food stand. A plate of fried rice, sweet and sour pork and an egg roll could be bought for a little more than $4.

Some booths did very well, said festival manager Charlotte Buchanan. She said that some booths sold out as early as 2 p.m. while others remained open until the festival closed at 4:30 p.m.

"Each year the attendance at the fair gets a little better,"

Buchanan said. "It's really nice to see the college students come to the festivities. I thought the weather might keep people in, but it doesn't seem to have affected the numbers."

One popular attraction was the dancing. At one point, a crowd gathered at the corner of Fifth and Main streets, where a group of dancers clad in purple and lavender sack-like outfits performed. Although they looked a bit like plums, the dancers squirmed their way into everyone's hearts. The dancers belong to the Main Street Dance Company.

Another performance that appealed to the audience was a last-minute addition called Sweet Streets. This was a jazz band made up of UI students who sounded good enough to compete with professionals. The crowd was so pleased with the performance that it brought Sweet Streets back for an encore.

The only event canceled because of the damp weather was the art contest in front of the Prichard Gallery. Buchanan said there were only about five entries because no one else wanted to risk having their works damaged by the weather.

campuses announcing future lectures.

"By inviting students from WSU, we hope to break down the living barriers that the distance between the universities creates. Anyone is welcome to attend," Turek said.

"The sessions aren't just lectures, either. Many include interesting, well-developed slide shows that make it very clear what the speakers are talking about. They are very visually oriented," Turek said.

Tomorrow night, Professor Ken Carper will speak on "Technology and Design" at 7:30 p.m. in UCC 113.

Carper, a visiting professor from WSU, will use a dual slide show to emphasize the importance of efficiency to design.

"He's excellent — very good at explaining structure to students," Turek said.

"In the recent past, our group has not been very active. This year, I'm trying to change that," Turek said.

may be more support for the proposal if it includes a very low price for insurance.

"If they come out with a $50 or $60 plan, there may be support even from this campus," said LeClaire.

He also said that not all the universities are as vehemently opposed to the plan as the UI.

"At the other institutions, especially BSU and ISU, there are many older, married students, and a $90 health insurance plan for a year is a heck of a good deal. They don't make such a big deal of it as we do," LeClaire said.

LeClaire thinks that the board decision will be based largely on what the presidents of the four universities think about the issue. He said that he thinks UI President Gibb will probably go with the opinion expressed by UI students and the ASUI.

Continuing Ed classes still have openings

If there is a creative spirit in you that is longing for release, UI continuing education may still have a place for it to surface.

Several classes are being offered this fall still have a few openings for students.

Honors class: More meat, less cake

By Linda Winheim

Approximately 90 students are a part of the University of Idaho's honors program this year. The program is now entering its second year under the direction of Marvin Henberg.

Honors students earn 30 credits in the special honors classes. These credits are included into the 128 total credit hours needed for graduation.

Henberg said the honors program is designed for less lecture and more discussion and includes a more extensive syllabus and a smaller class load than traditional classes.

"I don't think students here have pushed themselves as much as they could have, so we give them a chance to," Henberg said.

Diane Leavy, a junior through special circumstances, commented on the program she is a part of, saying she enjoys the Honor's Center, a special study lounge the honors students have access to.

The students, Henberg said, are "looking for institutions that can give them something special." Henberg also noted that there are fewer traditional 18-year-old students and that competition for these better students is high. He said that this fact contributed to the final funding of the program.

Next year Henberg plans to expand the program to include junior-level classes to keep up with its third-year students. He will also add junior- and senior-level seminars, which are two-credit discussions.

He said he will be asking for proposals, and a committee of both students and faculty will choose the best proposals to suit the programs.

Resident halls: All under one roof

By Teresa Bongers

There is something new in the UI dormitory system: the Resident Hall Association.

According to Scott MacKinnon, RHA's first and newly-elected president, "the Resident Hall Association is not set up to take away the independence of the halls but to act as a central governing body."

One function of the organization will be to give halls the opportunity to share ideas on activities. With this in mind, the goal of the RHA is to add fun to the halls through unification. This should aid in promoting enthusiasm, MacKinnon said.

Hall presidents and vice presidents represent their individual living groups. This process of representation was chosen because it gives each hall member a choice in who sits on the board. The RHA members then will select the officers.

According to Jim Bauer of Student Advisory Services, the residence halls are a "sleeping giant." On campus, dorm students comprise one-quarter of the University of Idaho population. Bauer, along with the RHA members, wants to build a solid base for the organization.

The hall presidents will represent their halls not just as one person but as a board. They will hold meetings every other Tuesday.

Vice presidents will make up the Judicial Council. Matters that go unresolved within a particular hall's Judicial Council will be handled by the RHA board.

The vice presidents will also organize GDI Week and represent the residence halls on university committees.

It has been approximately five years since anyone has represented on-campus living groups on a university committee. The vice presidents will act as good will ambassadors for the residence halls, Bauer said.

Ideas being tossed around for GDI Week include, a hall vs. hall campus-wide scavenger hunt, Fun Run, Phone-A-Thon, Car Bash, spirit calls before the bon fire and a semester-long points collection through various activities with the winning hall receiving a cruise on Lake Coeur d'Alene.

The RHA is also trying to put together a dance and possibly a monthly news letter.

"We want to generate pride in the residence halls and make people want to come back next year," MacKinnon said.

IDAHO

LET THE GUARD HELP REPAY YOUR STUDENT LOAN!

The cost of tuition is up . . . Books are more expensive . . . Lab fees are higher. In general, it's becoming more difficult to get a college education without help. Well help is here in the form of the Student Loan Repayment Program! The Guard will pay $500 or 15% (whichever is greater) of an existing or new student loan annually! Up to $10,000!!!

Now add to that the money you'll make in the next six years from attending Guard Drills and Annual Training, and it could total as much as $25,000! Not bad for a part-time job. So if you or someone you know needs help with college bills, step inside and ask about the Student Loan Program!!!
