Students find school both friendly, hostile

By Megan Guido
Staff Writer

Everyone has felt they are in the minority at one time or another, but for some, being in the minority is a fact of life.

The University of Idaho has 265 self-identified minority students. According to Tijuana Cochauer, education development specialist at student advisory service, the categories of minorities at UI are: Asian, Native American, Black American, Spanish American and Basque.

Do they feel conscious of being a minority in Moscow?

Stephanie Macon is a Black American forestry major at UI. She is originally from Newark, New Jersey. "In Moscow, I'm not really conscious of being different. They just kind of ignore you."

Ted Carpenter, senior laboratory technician at UI, is a Hispanic student working toward his masters in environmental engineering. He took some graduate courses at Washington State University and was on the faculty there for several years.

"I can say that at WSU, when I first worked there, the alienation was so severe that it's almost unbelievable ... to this day, over at WSU, many offices are hostile or discriminatory," he said. "People in the offices at UI are much more friendly."

"Up here I don't feel any problems," said Native American Leah Slaney, who comes from Lewiston, where there were only three Indians in her high school graduating class. "I had an uncle in Clarkston who was beat up because he was with a white woman. My husband is white. In Moscow, my husband and I don't get looks like 'What's a white man doing with an Indian girl?'"

Michael Gonzales, a member of the Fiji fraternity, is a Spanish-American majoring in corporate finance. "I'm accepted in this little world, and when you get out in the street, no one cares."

"In northern Idaho, I would feel my color more with all that neo-nazism going around," said Macon.

Racial prejudice may not be as prevalent in Moscow as it is in other parts of the state or area, but it exists.

"On this campus, I've heard students say N-I-G-G-E-R, and of course I turn around and stare them in the eye," said Carpenter.

Kim Lien is a Vietnamese majoring in electrical engineering.

"When I lived in the dorm I felt a little racism. When we walked around the halls, girls would look at us like we were wierd." Jim Moy is an Asian graduate student in electrical engineering. "I receive an occasional drunken, 'Look at that Chink over there.' It could be offensive if I knew the person. But it's really no different from being called an asshole, if they really mean it."

"In Moscow, there's not very many of us. Sometimes it can be very lonely," Lien said. "I party with the Vietnamese community. I don't feel I belong with the Americans."

Gonzales commented, "I don't even know if blacks would have a hard time going through rush. It's hard to tell because very few go through." He said, "I didn't think about it when I went through rush."

"Racial prejudice is all over," said Macon. "But to be honest, I'm a little prejudiced myself."

Vicki Yrazabal is a Basque, an ethnic minority. She is advisor to the Student Advisory Relations Board and a law student at UI. "Ethnic minorities don't really face problems here. As a matter of fact, I think it's in to be ethnic, which is kind of insulting to me because being ethnic in our family was never out."

Carpenter said, "Moscow people, by and large, are not overtly bigoted. But when it comes down to the real issue, does UI serve Hispanic students? The answer is no."

We have approximately 60,000 Hispanics in the state of Idaho and virtually no one is going to college."

He adds, "The university says in its 10-year plan it wants to increase the number of ethnic minority students on this campus, but the action isn't there with the words."

Cochauer said, "We have been steadily increasing our minority enrollment. Other schools are decreasing."

Jim Moy did his undergraduate studies at University of Washington, where half of the Electrical Engineering department consisted of minorities, he said. "Coming here, there were fewer minorities in the program than there are now."

Stephanie Macon is switching her major from forestry to computer science. "In the College of Forestry they were really working with minorities, helping you get all the financial aid you need. I guess computer science isn't very good about that."

There are mixed feelings as to whether being a minority is advantageous.

"There's absolutely no advantage in terms of employment at UI," says Carpenter.

"It's not something I put up as a selling point," Moy commented. "It's almost scary to see the minorities who push because they have received prejudice and say 'We deserve this or that.'"

"I'm a double minority, Asian and female," said Lien. "If someone hired me, they would get some extra points. It doesn't really work that way with the boys," she said. "Minority boys have a hard time getting jobs."

Yrazabal found being ethnic and a woman to be an advantage in receiving financial aid. "I do know when I was applying for law school, there were universities that definitely wanted ethnic minorities as well as racial minorities."

"What I found when I got here was most scholarships for minorities were for athletes," said Macon. "We're not all athletes."

Leah Slaney, who works in Governor Dan Evan's office in Moscow part-time as a secretary, said, "A lot of people would consider me an apple Indian — red on the outside and white in the middle."

"It's important to hold on to your traditional ties," she said. "But you have to live in the white man's world."

"I think it's very important for people to have an affiliation," said Yrazabal.

Fire rousts sleepers, raises questions

Residents of the Moscow Hotel opened their eyes early Saturday morning to the presence of masked firemen making what first seemed as an early wake-up call. A second story apartment fire was the cause for alarm, but, according to reports, no alarm sounded.

The fire was reported at 7:36 a.m. Saturday morning by Eardly (Oliver) Cromwell, who was awakened by heat when flames started rising alongside his bed. The Moscow Fire Department arrived at the scene swiftly and in time to defeat the small fire with extinguishers rather than water, which according to one official, might have caused more unnecessary damage.

"There wasn't much smoke when I got up," said Cromwell, who had his arm and hand mildly burned. "It was the heat."

"I was asleep. Something woke me up. I looked around and there was fire at the edge of the bed. I picked up the pillow, threw it on the floor and ran downstairs to call the fire department." Cromwell apparently had no time to dress before making the sprint to alarm authorities.

"I knew something was going on for sure," said an elderly hotel resident, "when I saw this naked man running down the Hall heads retreat for planning

By Christine Larsen
Staff Writer

All twenty-two presidents of the University of Idaho Residence Halls got together in Elk River, Idaho, last weekend for the First Annual Residence Halls Retreat.

The retreat, which was sponsored by the Residence Halls Association, was aimed at getting all residence hall presidents together and teaching them how to improve in leadership skills, interaction with hall members and an overall perspective of their roles as hall leaders.

Attending the retreat as supervisors and lecturers were Executive Assistant to the President Terry Armstrong, Dean of Student Services Bruce Pitman, Coordinator of Residence Halls Programs Jim Bauer, and Educational Development Specialist Tia Cochnauer. Also helping with the program were the four Residence Halls Area Coordinators and RHA officers.

One of the major topics of the retreat was the idea of improving not only the morale of hall members, but the morale of all residence halls in general.

"Residence halls have a lot to offer," Jim Bauer said, "yet the kids don't take pride in where they live."

Bauer stressed the fact that because some dorm members no longer live in a family setting while attending school, they sometimes tend to lose pride in their surroundings. They feel that their dorm room is not a "home", and therefore nothing to take pride in.

Bauer said that it is important to try to raise the pride of the residence halls — not just during GDI Week, but all year around — so that they can once again be an active force at the University of Idaho.

Another topic discussed at the retreat was the importance of an effective government in all residence hall living groups. The hall presidents were taught tips on how to run efficient hall

Tree diseases subject of talk

By Alex Voxman

Winter itself does not usually pose problems for fruit trees unless it is a "very severe winter and it just gets too cold" according to Dr. Harry Fenwick, a UI professor of plant pathology. Extreme cold can cause open cracks and wounds in fruit trees which weaken the trees.

Fenwick, however, worries more about diseases that affect the trees in the spring, and fruit tree owners should probably be prepared for them.

Three distinct diseases, for example, can afflict apple trees. The first involves mildew forming on the tree which causes smaller leaves and off-colored fruit to grow. This can occur quite early in the spring and should be combated with a dormant spray. A disease that causes twig die-back and loss of light to the tree can also occur in the early spring. It can kill the apple tree if it goes unchecked, and in addition to the use of spray, the affected parts of the tree should be removed. Finally, Fenwick cites a fungus disease which causes scabs to form on the tree and severely damages the leaves. For this disease, he recommends spraying the tree at the green tip stage (when the buds begin to form green tips), the pre-pink stage (before the buds turn pink), the pink stage, and after the petals have fallen.

The University of Idaho College of Agriculture has a wide variety of publications for a "nominal" fee which describe more specifically the different types of diseases which affect fruit trees and the cures for them. People living outside the Moscow area might obtain such publications more easily from pesticide controllers, county extension offices or the state Extension Forester, according to Fenwick.

Successful research on treatments for plant diseases is presently being conducted through the University of Idaho. "We have got extremely wide programs all over the state dealing with cereal crops, potatoes, fruit trees, onions, beans, sugar beets and other vegetables," says Fenwick. Although plant diseases are seldom completely eradicated, the University's research programs have practically eliminated some of them.

Most of the research has been in the areas of seed treatments, pesticides, problematic organisms, and nutritional instruction programs. Many genetic studies are also being conducted which often result in seeds with increased resistance to some of the diseases. Much of the University of Idaho's research is done in cooperation with agricultural industries and other universities such as Washington State University and the University of Utah, all of which have a vested interest in eliminating the problematic diseases confronting plants and trees.

Though it is probably too early for fruit tree owners to begin to combat diseases which may affect their trees, it might be wise learn more about them and begin preparing for them. Spring is not really so far away.

Senate to hear veto plea

The ASUI Senate will have a chance to override President Jane Freund's veto of a bill providing for the finance manager's salary Wednesday night.

Freund vetoed the bill Friday after the senate refused to amend it last Wednesday. Freund wanted the bill amended so she would have $432 to hire two people and an assistant/trainee for the position. The bill provides $216 for hiring one finance manager.

ASUI Vice President Mike Trail said Freund may present a detailed plan explaining why the money is needed and how it would be used.

The senate may also consider a bill regarding the appointment of standing committees, Trail said. In the past, committee appointments have been made by the vice president. The bill proposes that the president pro tempore of the senate make the appointments.

The senate meets Tuesday at 7 p.m. for pre-session and Wednesday at 7 p.m. for the regular session.

College panel sees rates rise

By Brad Fallon
Intern

Interest rates are headed up. That was the general consensus at a recent economic forum entitled, "Interest Rates - Where are They Going? Up? Down? Sideways?" The forum was the first of a four part series sponsored by the UI Chair in Business Enterprise and the College of Business and Economics.

The four panelists spoke for ten minutes each and then fielded questions from the audience. These specialists included two bankers and two professors of economics.

Ralph Hawkins, regional vice president of First Security Bank, spoke first, noting the differences in activity between the prime rate and the 30 year mortgage rate. The prime rate started in 1984 at 11.5 percent, peaked at 13 percent by midyear, and then began a slow downward trend to its present 10.5 percent. The 30 year mortgage rate started 1984 at 13.1 percent, peaked in June at 15.2 percent and ended the year at 13 percent.

John Knudsen, UI Professor of Economics, commented on the large difference between the short and long term rate: "Lenders expect the rates to be higher in the future," he said. "They keep higher long term rates to protect themselves." Knudsen went on to explain why higher rates are feared. "People are afraid of the budget," he said. Whether the fear of the budget is valid is less important than the fact that the people in the market do fear it.

The University of Idaho's most co-operative educational counterpart is not Lewis-Clark State College or even Washington State University, according to a university official.

Roger P. Wallins, UI assistant dean of the graduate school and professor of English, says that the UI works most closely with the Moscow public schools. This results in the creation of favorable academic calendars and educational opportunities here.

"We have a really fine relationship between the university and the school district," said Wallins, who is also a member of the Moscow School Board.

"The Moscow school district tries to construct its calendar so that it matches closely with the university's," he said. "If the

"That's very possible," said Moscow Fire Chief Ralph McAllister, reacting to Bode's comment. "Smoke alarms are pretty sensitive, but sometimes not sensitive enough."

"As we entered one guy's room which was close to the fire location," said Bode, "there was no smoke at all in the place."

According to one fire official, attempts were made to set off a few fire alarms located in hallways but there was no response. Bode said that he has not checked all the fire alarms in all the hallways, but still has not found one broken yet.

McAllister had no comment at the time as to the specific condition of the fire alarms. "It depends on how it's set up," said McAllister, "but a lot of times it is the responsibility of the management to check alarms. The fire inspector checks alarms once a year." Until now however, neither Bode nor McAllister seem to be sure as to when the fire inspector last made his rounds.

"The fire department's response to the call was amazing," said Bode, "they did a hell of a job."

meetings, make important decisions concerning hall members, and how to improve hall involvement.

The main objective of the retreat was to get all the hall presidents together so that they could get to know each other and voice and exchange ideas on how to make the residence halls system run more efficiently. A lot of time was spent relaying personal experiences as a hall president and combining ideas for future action that will improve the system as a whole.

Everyone who attended the seminar felt that they benefited from the experience. Not only did the presidents learn how to become better leaders, but they felt they had also learned a great deal about the residence halls systems and ways to improve on it.

"That's the stuff that success is made of," Terry Armstrong said about leadership training. Like others, Armstrong felt that the only way to help the residence hall system expand and grow was to get everyone who is a part of the system to work together.

"Even though four of the five school board members work at the university, none of us thinks in terms of just 'what's best for the university,'" he said.

According to Wallins, both school systems gain from the mere presence of the other

Arms and the man

Douglas Jones

Although it is hard to find a person who does not have an opinion on the nuclear arms race and the upcoming talks in Geneva, it is hard to find many people who have bothered to understand this important issue.

In a somewhat typical, simplified view of a highly complicated issue, a friend amazed me when he said "It's real easy - What we do is tear our missiles apart and the Russians will do the same."

Although the media's focus in programs like The Day After and Threads has done wonders to highlight the emotional aspects of nuclear weapons, they have left the public in an almost perfect vacuum of ignorance as to the monumental problems that have to be overcome to remove these weapons from our world.

It is imperative that we cut through the vale of emotion and understand the nature of these important talks.

If the talks in Geneva are successful in attaining a reduction in nuclear arms, it will be a move towards world peace unparalleled in history. If they are not, it will most likely usher in a new and different era in the arms race.

In proposing the Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars Proposal), President Reagan has underlined his rejection of the philosophy of arms control that has been dominated in the East-West relations for the last quarter century.

For over two decades, it has been the standing premise that an attack by the Soviet Union against the United States or vice-versa would be met by an immediate response or by second-strike capability, and that neither nation has the capability to neutralize such an attack. This created the deterrence theory of "mutual assured destruction" (MAD) - a situation where both the Soviet Union and the United States may be viewed as "hostages" of each other. MAD also had two other attractive points: one is the hope that fear itself would not only discourage an attack but lead to the dismantling of the weapons themselves. The other is that it limited the arms race to offensive weapons only, which would mitigate the economic cost of defense.

President Reagan views the position of not being able to do anything once they have launched their missiles (save for deciding to destroy them in response) as being "immoral." Hence the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The idea behind the Star Wars proposal is to render nuclear weapons obsolete. The President, in a recent interview, stated "if they (the Soviet Union) really mean it about wanting to eliminate the threat of these weapons and if research can bring us the idea of a weapon that makes these others obsolete, then it's good for them and good for us.... I wish that they would go forward with the same things themselves, because if both of us knew that we could stop the other fellow's missiles, we wouldn't have to have them any more."

But while the United States is seeking to get the Soviet Union to agree to drastically cut their nuclear forces, the Soviets are returning to the table to stop deployment of the Strategic Defence Initiative and further testing of antisatellite weapons.

While Reagan sees the proposal as an end to the arms race, the Soviets see it as chiefly designed to protect our nuclear bases. This would make a first strike against the Soviet Union a more thinkable option in their eyes.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko summed up the Russian fears when he told his people, "One should say openly that these weapons are offensive and this plan...is a plan of aggression."

It has to be stated that the Strategic Defense Initiative is not even known to be technically feasible, and even if it is the price tag of the weapon system ($50 billion a year) makes it hard to sell to a deficit-minded Congress.

The questions of whether or not the Soviets will walk out on these talks if they do not get Reagan to back down on the proposal, and what Reagan will offer the Soviets to cut their nuclear forces, will only be answered in March at the talks.

So the stage is set. Although it is hard to forecast the results of the arms talks, whatever they might be, they will be historic.

Let us have our beer and drink it

After putting a week of work behind you, a fun and exiting party is by all means in the course of events. It's one of the best ways to take the edge off of all the ingenious things you've done, or at least all the screw-ups you made during the past week.

Sure, maybe some parties get a little out of hand. You might see a fight at one or maybe someone getting sick outside of another. You might even see a fire get started by accident. But the weekend party coming up always gets you a little psyched. It gives you that little incentive, that inkling of boldness to face those commitments and pressures head-on during the week. Well, watch out folks. The next time you throw a party: beware!

It seems as if Washington and Idaho lawmakers feel keg parties are cornering the market on those liquor license holders from which they receive tax revenue. The excuses are even better. The motive for making a profit seems to be confused with just having a good time, according to a Washington Liquor Control Board enforcement officer.

I'll bet these boys think they can bust a couple of corrupt future enterprizers before they fill our streets with slimy sinfulness. Then they'll slap on the 21 drinking age and there won't be any car accidents either.

You think that's easy for me to say? In November there was a big bust in Pullman. Three Washington State University students received fines and were ordered to do community work because they were caught charging people money to drink beer at their Kamiaken Street apartment. The judge ruled they were "allowing consumption of liquor in a public place." The "public place" spiel probably came around because they supposedly advertised their party with fliers.

In order to really enforce this hideous type of crime effectively, they're putting real professionals on these cases. They've hired undercover secret agents who enter parties looking like really-cool-guys and have unmistakable instincts which help them shake out joints in search of party profiteers. These guys are experienced enough to go so far as to read fliers distributed around campus to know where parties occur. These kinds of detective skills are bound to make life harder for students.

This is just another example of government creeping into our lives. The other night, after partying until sunrise, I dreamt Adam Smith and I were at the top of a huge mountain of empty kegs tossing them down upon on-rushing under-cover party cops.

Personally, I'm not a racketeer, but if I host a party and can make a buck or two, then I'm all for it. Haven't you ever gotten down on your hands and knees and cleaned up from the last night's party wondering whether the whole thing was worth it? A couple bucks makes you happy as well as all those who drank alcohol and had a fun time. If it just so happens that you make a little profit you shouldn't have your picture on a post office wall.

After the Kamiaken Street apartment bust, some official was quoted as saying that there had been "three or four complaints during the previous year" against hosts charging admission to parties.

Haven't you ever been to conventions or situations where you are charged admission with the understanding that the drinks are included in your ticket? You know what your doing. You're responsible for your own decision. Why should there be a law against making money off a party? If people find this unreasonable they can stay at home, eat popcorn and watch television.

Not me. I'll be partying. And I'm going to make up a thousand different phony party fliers with different addresses so these malokos don't clean Sin City up before I graduate.

Eb Gaines is a student of economics and the heart and soul of this newspaper's party unit.

What choices?

Editor,
 "Individuals had no choice, no autonomy, no free will. Millions of people were killed outright," Corlann Gee Bush says of Jews in Nazi Germany. Sadly, this is true. However, the same can be said for the millions of babies killed by abortion.

Ms. Bush, and many others, defend abortion as a "woman's individual, private choice," but the woman wouldn't even have this choice if she'd made different choices earlier concerning contraception, or whether she should be having sex to begin with. Ms. Bush laments the loss of women's lives through illegal abortions due to "dangerous back-alley practice," but says nothing about the loss of children's lives due to salt, suction, and knives. The only real difference between a fetus and a two year old child is — two years. What in the world gives a woman, or anyone, the right to decide that one person's life is better or more worthy than another's.

I, too, am appalled at the bombings of the abortion clinics, and strongly believe in "diversity, democracy and individual liberty." I also believe one should take responsibility for one's actions and be truthful with oneself. Life is a series of choices that we make, and we live with the consequences of our choices. Our society has become dangerously centered around, and dedicated to self, pleasure, and convenience — Where does justice fit in?

"People were tortured and murdered by their government," Ms. Bush warns, yet this is exactly what our government is doing. Ms. Bush and like thinkers would do well to look into the recently observed phenomenon of the "Silent Scream." Because these children have "no choice, no autonomy, no free will," and no chance of responding to her, I felt I must speak.

Kathy Zins

Death, not choice

Editor,
 I'm sorry, I can see no way pro-choice supporters can refer to themselves as anything but pro-death. Reading last Tuesday's Argonaut brought that out clearly to me.

 The pro-death group says that a woman has the right to control her own body. I agree, but she should use that self control to avoid conception — the root of the problem.

The pro-death group says they are standing up for the rights of the woman. Great! Let them support that little woman in the womb.

The pro-death group says they are against terrorism — what of the terror that child feels as her little lungs begin to burn with salt?

The pro-death group says "keep your morals and your laws off my body" — okay, but do my tax dollars have to pay for your lack of morals?

No, things are out of balance. We live in a "live for today, gratify yourself" society. Self control and chastity are a joke, but now for sure there is a price to pay. The child pays in not being granted the Gift of Life, and the aborted mother pays in physical, emotional and spiritual trauma. Guilt is not an emotion others can put on you if you are confident what you are doing is absolutely right. There are so many options before and after conception. Let us as a nation choose another besides abortion.

Jim Corbett

Innocent humans

Editor,
 This letter is only to people who consider themselves in favor of just and compassionate treatment of others. By definition, if you love unconditionally and that love is proved by your daily continual actions, then you are compassionate. Likewise, if you know what is right and uphold the laws and judgements which are right, then you are just.

When you examine the facts of what abortion is, you begin to run into a lot of evidence that points in one direction. Hearing the people who have first-hand experience ruins the testimonies of abortion sympathizers, most of whom are uninformed and unconvicted. Looking at the image of a living, moving, conscious, tiny person harbored in the ideal environment in which to grow, lays waste the idea that a fetus is just formless tissue or a part of a female's anatomy. No evidence suggests anything other than there is a separate, complete human being in there, and thus, the argument that a woman has the right to do as she pleases to her own body is irrelevant, because the baby has his own body.

The crux is that it is not just to take the life of unborn children. They are innocent human beings. No one who takes upon herself the burden to eliminate a certain person for convenience can withstand the eminent judgement to follow.

According to the Bible, in Luke 11:32, "The men of Nineveh will rise up in judgement with this generation and condemn it, for they repented at the preaching of Jonah...." The people who proclaim God's law as just will be justified. But what about the deceived mother, if her aborted child is found righteous before the Lord, and upon the showing of his or her wounds, the woman is judged for them along with a perverse and apathetic society?

Don't imagine there is any compassion or justice in you if you do not fervently oppose abortion for the sake of woman and child. If you are seeking the right way, then seek the true justice and compassion of the Lord for your life, and let the child live.

Pro-deathers

Editor,
 Sometimes I wonder how long pro-deathers consider their own reasoning and on what basis their reasoning is founded upon. Some say, "Oh, these poor babies will just be a product of child abuse, so I'll do my part and make sure that doesn't happen. I'll simply pull the plug on this poor helpless, destined to be unwanted child." Now by what reasoning can you justify the death of the unborn? I don't know about you but I'm extremely happy to be alive. It is a sickening but realistic thought that I could have been one of the babies killed and used for cosmetics.

Please Lewis Day, while God is loving and forgiving, he is also absolutely just. He will execute justice on this earth. If you don't believe it, read some of the end-time prophecy concerning the wrath of God against all unrighteousness. It is justice that defers gross crimes by declaring the death penalty to deserving criminals. Remember that God has created an eternal hell for those who reject his son, who as a result, "are unrighteous."

You seem to think that there is an inconsistency with believing in capital punishment and pro-life. Not so. Absolutely not so. If you based your beliefs upon biblical principles, then you won't be so confused. There is an infinite difference between justice and selfish, grotesque killings. I ask you how you can justify killing an innocent child while you 'seem' to reject the need for capital punishment?

How to be clean

Editor,

"For you (God) created my inmost being; You knit me together in my mother's womb." (Psalm 139:13). The point here is that God created us in the womb; we do not just "pop" into existence. We are alive at conception. God knits us together.

Abortion advocates in America might be heard to say, "It's okay to murder babies but we really ought to save the whales." An even more outrageous quote is found in the Jan. 22 issue of the Argonaut. In the article "Woman discusses past abortion experience", the woman interviewed said, "It was not a matter of convenience. It was just that I had nothing to give the child at that time — at either time. I had nothing." I disagree. She had the ability and the opportunity to give give both of her children life. She chose instead to give both of them death. God shaped those children in her womb. She said she that she did not believe that she condemned herself in God's eyes. She condemned herself when she had sex outside of wedlock. She sinned again when she had the abortions. The Bible is very explicit about murder and premarital sex. There is only one way for this woman to be freed from condemnation in God's eyes.

The Bible states that she must repent, turn from her crime, call on Jesus to be her lord and savior, and believe that he is the Son of God that rose from the dead. Then and only then will she be clean in God's eyes. In Christ's Love,

Ty Simanson

Picket for peace

We were standing in a circle in the soft darkness of the September night, a hundred of us, each one holding a plastic cup with a little flickering candle inside. It had been a long wait. First the white train had been due at 6:30 this morning. Then the arrival times changed repeatedly. Now it was approaching midnight.

We were standing on the asphalt paved area between West 22nd Street and the bottom of the 20 foot railroad embankment a half block from

A quarter way around the circle to my right, a young dark haired woman announced, "To inform you late comers, our committee met with the Spokane police and the Burlington Railroad people yesterday and informed them of our peaceable demonstration." She turned and gestured at the dark figure standing at the top of the embankment, "That's the supervisor for Burlington. The others up there are Spokane police. The rattle of gravel you are hearing is the six people from Winthrop, Washington climbing up to protest with civil disobedience. They will lie across the rails but will not resist arrest.

"The White Train has already left the Spokane Fairgrounds and will soon be here. Someone suggested a prayer. But we are so diverse. I suggested instead that we go around the circle and each tell the others why you are here. Let's begin with the young woman on my left. Why are you here?

The young woman spoke in loud, clear tones. "I'm a kindergarten teacher. The fear of nuclear war is disturbing the minds of my children. I can't bear it unless I do something to move us toward peace."

When it came the turn of the dignified wife of the man on my right, she had memorized her statement. "All war is wrong! But nuclear war will annihilate all life: our children, our grandchildren, all life on earth."

Her husband growled, "I'm here because she thinks it will do some good!" I said, "From the time I memorized the Ten Commandments at my mother's knee I have believed war is wrong. Then when I was nine years old, I saw the gassed

Vandals fall 80-67, drop to 6-13

By Greg Kilmer
Sports Editor

Whoever's responsible for writing the scripts for the University of Idaho basketball team should start trying a little bit of more imagination.

It is really starting to sound like a broken record: play a respectable first twenty minutes. Then, riding momentum from Matt Haskin's half-ending three point bomb, go into a coma after intermission and then have to try to rally from their own lapse and fall short. This is just what they did Saturday against the Wolfpack of Nevada-Reno, 80-67.

With the victory Reno stands at 11-7 overall and 4-2 in the Big Sky race, while the Vandals drop to 6-13 and 0 for everything in conference.

Idaho has now lost nine of their last ten contests.

Before the youthful Vandals could pinch themselves after the half-way break, the Wolfpack ran off 12 straight points to all but seal away the victory. It wasn't until four minutes had elapsed into the final half that Reno gave the Vandals their first counters on a goal tending call on Chris Carey's jumper.

Of the Wolfpack 12 point onslaught, the first six points came on two long howitzers by Reno long ball ace Rob Harden and three straight easy hoops. Vandal head coach Bill Trumbo finally silenced the uproar with his first second-half time-out.

This contest did offer a different twist, however. In a pre-game announcement Trumbo said that starting center Steve Ledesma had been "indefinitely suspended in the best interest of the team."

If Ledesma was missed, it was not evident in the first half as the Vandals stuck close to the offensive minded Wolfpack and actually lead two different times.

Ulf Spears, who has been nursing a foot injury, kept the Vandals close as he uncorked a 12 point first half to lead the Idaho offense.

But Reno scoring star Curtis High, who was returning from a suspension for allegedly beating his girlfriend, did a little of the same to the Vandals during the stretch into halftime.

High hit three straight jump shots and a couple free throws to stretch the Reno lead to 31-22 before Haskin's rainbow at the buzzer cut the deficit to six at half.

In the first stanza the Vandals shot 41 per cent, and were led by Spear's 12 and Frank Garza's seven.

After the initial outburst in the final half, the Wolfpack went on another little scoring stroll as they outscored the Vandals 19-6 to take a 50-31 lead. That lead increased to as many 25 before a late Idaho rush knocked it down to the final margin.

Reserves Steve Adams, 13 points, Mark Hoke, six, and Carey with seven led the surge that included four Vandal three point shots.

Spears led the Vandals, although only hitting for two in the second half, with 14, while Garza added a dozen plus eight rebounds.

The Vandals hit on 26 of 68 shots for a 38 shooting outing while the Wolfpack hit 30 of 61 for a 49 percentage.

Without team leading rebounder Ledesma, the Vandals were out rebounded 42-38 by the shorter Reno club.

Ledesma draws second suspension

By Greg Kilmer
Sports Editor

For the second time in his brief University of Idaho career, sophomore basketball center Steve Ledesma has been suspended from the team by Vandal head coach Bill Trumbo.

Trumbo stated that it was for the "best interest of the team," for indefinitely suspending his 6-foot-10 post man.

Trumbo said it was one of the toughest decisions he has had to make as a head coach. "It's really tough when you lose your top rebounder and scorer," Trumbo said.

Ledesma had led the Vandals in both of those categories. He was the Big Sky conference's third leading rebounder with about eight a game, and was the sixth leading scorer in conference hitting for around 16 a contest. He had the Vandal top performances in both categories with 33 points against Eastern Washington and by twice pulling down 15 rebounds against Southern Methodist and Northern Arizona.

"It just came to a point, where in concern for every member of our ballclub and for our team in total that Steve could no longer be an active member of the squad," Trumbo said in a pre-game statement Saturday night.

Ledesma returned with the team from Reno but will not practice with the team.

"Steve won't be associated with the team at all," Trumbo said. "He has to change; it's up to him."

"I've always been real close throughout my career with my players," Trumbo said. "And I feel that way about Steve too, but my main concern is for the entire team."

Ledesma could not be reached for comment, but did talk to the Lewiston Tribune from his hotel room Saturday night in Reno.

"Basically, he blamed me for causing dissension on the team," Ledesma said.

Ledesma pointed to an incident during the NAU loss in Flagstaff that resulted in the recent suspension.

"We were down by about 15 points with seven minutes left to play," the Gilroy, California native said. "And I've always

UI women 19th UPI

By Mike Long
Staff Writer

The UI women's basketball team grabbed a triumphant victory over the Vikings of Portland State on the Vikings home court 77-62 last Saturday.

Prior to Saturday's game, the Vandal women defeated Boise State University at Boise, 73-53, and also received further recognition nationally. Not only are they rated 19th by the UPI, but also 25th by the USA Today/CNN poll.

"It's exciting," Dobratz said, "I talked to some people at the Boise State game who have never been to one before" but only came to see a nationally ranked team play.

The ranking also provides an incentive for the opposition to play harder. "Their coach said it's the best game they've (Portland State) played all season," Dobratz said.

On the court, the Vandals burned past the Vikings, making 60 percent from the floor. This upped the Vandals record to 17-1 overall and 4-1 in the Mountain West Conference.

Meanwhile the Vikings could only come up with 37 percent from the floor and dropped to 7-9 overall and 2-4 in the MWC. The Vandals forced this on the Vikings by keeping them outside, so they had to shoot from there, according to Dobratz.

On the offensive side, the Vandals used the height of the "Twin Towers", 6-foot-4 Mary Raese and Mary Westerville, to build a 25 point lead in the second half. This allowed Dobratz to give her freshman some playing time.

The Vandals "dominated the floor every time," Dobratz said. The only source of trouble was with the Vikings guards. "Our guards struggled a little bit," she said.

However, she was pleased with the performance by starters Raese, Westerville and 6-foot-1 Kris Edmonds. "Mary and Mary really did well," Dobratz said. "Kris had one of her all-around (good) games for us."

Raese and Westerville came up with 20 and 19 points and seven and four rebounds, respectively, while Edmonds put in 13 points and came away with five rebounds.

According to Dobratz, the Vandal women will now spend the week cleaning up their fastbreak and improving on their early game play. These aspects of their game hurt them at first in Boise and cost them their sole shot of the season to the Eastern Washington Eagles of Cheney, Wash.

Dobratz was quick to remark at the beginning of her discussion of the weekend, that though the Eagles defeated both PSU and BSU, they did so by only five points each time.

The Eagles are currently holding on to first in the MWC with a 5-0 conference record and an overall record of 13-3. The Vandals will face them again at home on Feb. 15th, but first on the schedule are Weber State College and Idaho State University.

The women will take on WSC in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome at 5:15 p.m. this Friday, prior to the men's match-up with the Weber Wildcats. Then they will move to the UI Memorial Gym to face the Bobcats of ISU on Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

The Vandals are currently second in the MWC.

Sports Shorts

The University of Idaho rifle team traveled to Eastern Washington University last weekend and came away with team honors.

Leading the way for the Moscow marksmen was Steve Dailey with a scoring of 555. Dailey, who participated in the 1984 Olympic trials, took individual honors with his 555.

Other top scorers for the 15 member team were Brett Converse with 462, Ron Hinton 453, Gary Dose 435 and Leroy Schaffer with 430.

The team is currently ranked seventh in the nation with Dailey ranked eighth individually.

The rifle team advisor is D.H. Wicks, with Dailey serving as assistant coach and Dose as the team commander.

To help with the cost of travel, the team is raffling off a Winchester M70 Carbine 30-06 including a Burris 4X scope with a safari finish.

The drawing for the $425 prize is set for February 14.

The University of Idaho JV basketball team suffered a 78-68 setback to North Idaho College Saturday in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome.

Sven Meyer, a 6-foot-10 West German product, led the Cardinals with 25 points.

Kip Meyer led the Vandals with 14 points, followed by Frank Hodge with 12.

Ground Hog Day, Feb. 2, will see an unusual amount of traffic buzzing around the Palouse.

Hog Day Afternoon is a time-speed-distance or navigational auto rally designed for beginners.

Anyone with any car and a friend can participate. This non-speed event will be run on school bus routes at legal speed limits. But some drivers may still find it a challenge if snow is still on the ground. Most of the rally route takes participants south of Pullman and Moscow in the Genesee Flats area.

Registration begins at noon, Feb. 2, at Rathaus Pizza, 630 East Main, Pullman. There will be a brief driver's and navigator's meeting and the first car is scheduled out at 1 p.m. The rest of the rallying field will depart at one minute intervals.

Rallyers need only a car, equipped with either a driver or a navigator (preferably both), a clipboard, some pencils and a clock. Entry fee is six dollars per car.

Winners will receive a pizza when they finish at Rathaus, where the 24 hours of Daytona will be on big screen T.V.

Idaho prepares for Vandal Indoor

By Tom Liberman
Staff Writer

This weekend the University of Idaho track team hosted an all-comers meet at the Kibbie Dome. The meet was set up so that anyone who paid the entrance fee could enter in an event.

Washington State University brought a large group and dominated the meet as was expected. WSU has the strongest team in the area and won almost all of the events.

New NCAA rules prevented the usual format for the meet, which had high school and college athletes in separate divisions. However, different equipment in the hurdle and discus events caused those two to be separate.

Other than this the athletes participated on the same levels with the high school aged athletes being scored separately.

While WSU athletes dominated most of the meet, the UI people did a good job themselves. Middle distance runner Sam Koduah turned in a great performance in the 400 meters.

His time of 47.16 seconds qualified him for the NCAA Indoor Championships in March in Syracuse by the margin of .01 seconds. Also doing very well for the UI were the sprinters.

Coach Mike Keller said he was "very impressed with the sprinter's performance." They took first, second, third and fifth in the 55 meter dash.

Everton Wanliss set a school indoor record in the 55 meter event. Wanliss, coming off a red-shirt year, broke the Idaho record with a first heat time of 6.34, topping the old mark of 6.38 set by John Osuwu in 1982.

The Vandals who finished two and three were Dave Smith and Koduah with times of 6.43 and 6.53 respectively.

Also doing very well for the Vandals was Tim Taylor, who took second place in the college discus while competing indoors for the first time in his life. Taylor heaved the metal plate 157-feet-11 inches in his first time inside.

Mark Vukasin, a freshman redshirt, participating unattached, took third place in the event with a toss of 156-9. Dan O'Brien, another Vandal freshman redshirt, also showed well at the meet.

Another stellar Vandal performer was Tom Bohannon, who won the 3,000 meter race as he led from the start to the finish. Bohannon took the 3,000 with a 8:31.1.

Setting record high jumps at the meet were three different athletes. Brent Harken and Brett Lowery of WSU and Greg Jones of Eastern Washington University all jumped 7'4". All broke the old Dome mark of 7-3.

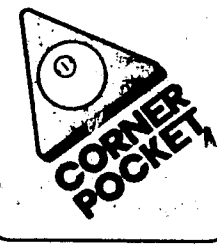

Ex-Vandal John Trott, now competing for Moscow, USA, took the 800 meters in a time of 1:50.2 holding off WSU's Sotirious Moutsaanas and Idaho's Mark Forester, 1:53.3.

For the women, WSU and Boise State University dominated most of the events.

What a Day!

You know the type of day: the kind where you should've stayed in bed.

I don't know, maybe I've got the same physical weakness as Samson, "lose the locks, lose the luck."

It must be too many years and too many departed hairs on my once full head that has created my latest drought.

I can't pick a ballgame for the life of me.

I stunk it up all football season. I picked Iowa State to get blown out every Saturday this fall (I still despise Jim Criner), and they have the year of their corn-filled lives.

I also went with whatever Western Athletic Conference "powerhouse" was tangling with Brigham Young. What a joke! WAC should stand for What A Charade. I admit I'm prejudiced but, number one, I beg to differ.

I won't even go into my "sure bet, can't lose" analysis of the Super Bowl. I'm still trying to get my size 10's out of my mouth over that one.

And I was so hot last year! How many people do you know that picked the Miami miracle over Nebraska in the Orange Bowl? Okay, McCoy, you did too.

Which brings me to my original subject (sorry for rambling): Saturday. I really thought it was going to be different. I was even squawking at Friday's happy hour about the St. John-Georgetown match-up.

My gut feeling was growling "St. Johns, St. Johns," but my dear sister is a die-hard Hoya fan. Plus John Thompson has so many blue-chip greyhounds on his bench to come in and play maypole around Patrick Ewing.

It really was a classic ballgame, though. You wrong handers should be proud of your left handed brethren. Chris Mullin is Chris Mullin but Walter Berry, oh, is really Walter Berry.

Greg Kilmer

Saturday afternoon didn't get much prettier as I split on the ESPN marathon coverage. I went 2 for 4, the 2 being the simple cinches. Even lucky Irishman Digger Phelps couldn't pull off an upset for me. I really thought he had Lefty's and Maryland's number.

But it takes more than these feeble mistakes to put a damper on my faith in the Vandals, regardless of how many different ways they've shown me how to lose. They've given me too many incredibly prosperous times in Boise to give up on them.

It was with this confidence that I blew off a couple chapters of unread Econ. and a mountain of dirty clothes and decided to head down to my favorite watering hole, the Corner Club, to listen to the game so well described on page seven.

Nothing like Bob Curtis and a nice cold pounder to keep me entertained. Pretty exciting guy, eh girls?

Winter Wilderness Workshop- The Outdoor program is now taking registration for this workshop on backcountry travel techniques in winter.

I've always had pretty good luck at the 'Club (with basketball, that is), and I really thought I smelled a Vandal upset.

Unfortunately, the only fragrance that blessed my nose was coming from the chew bucket under my bar stool after hearing of Ledesma's encore disapper-ing act and the Vandals sleep walking performance in the second half.

I'm the eternal optimist though. I know I'm going to start picking ballgames like they were played yesterday: I just signed up in the back of Penthouse for the "sure bet, can't win" Grow Hair Now program.

been an optimist; I always think there's a way we can come back and win."

"I said to the guys, 'come on, we can make one last push', but I guess they didn't like it too much," Ledesma said.

"I think some of the guys are just used to losing, I guess," he said. "And, I guess I got caught up in it all and called one of the players a name." Ledesma said that he later apologized to the player.

It wasn't until after the game that Trumbo called a meeting in his hotel room.

"He (Trumbo) said that some of the guys couldn't cope with me and I was causing dissension on the team and that's why we were losing," Ledesma said. Ledesma added that Trumbo's statement, "knocked me off my rocker."

The first controversy concerning Trumbo and Ledesma concerned the center's occasional spells of uncontrolled play. This brought about the first walkout on the team in December.

Ledesma said then that he felt that the UI coaches were keeping his talents in a "cage" when justifying his first departure, but agreed to try to change them in order to return.

"The conditions that allowed his return to the squad were based on his commitment for changed outlook in both on and off the court behavior," Trumbo said. "These changes I expected were slow in coming and put a tremendous burden on other team members."

When asked about a possible Ledesma return, Trumbo said, "Until Steve makes some meaningful changes, there will still be problems. It's not up to me — he has to make those changes by himself."

Ledesma also added Saturday night that Trumbo "is a tough man to play for."

"I feel as if he feels I haven't tried," Ledesma said. "I'm a human being; I make mistakes. I do things wrong. We all do. But I've tried with all my heart to do whatever he's asked me to do."

Ledesma did say that Trumbo had worked with him. "I can't fault him for that. He has worked with me."

Ledesma averaged 25 points and 13 rebounds at Gilroy Junior College as a freshman before sitting out his sophomore year because of academic credit problems.

Dance a hit

By Shawn McIntosh
Staff Writer

To those of us who took heed of the Think Dance! posters advertising the American Festival Ballet's performance last weekend, we witnessed five excellent ballets that not only made the audience think dance, but it made us feel it as well.

The first piece was entitled "Amazing Grace" and was choreographed by one of the company's dancers, Marla Hansen. Hansen was joined by her husband in this piece, and their smooth yet laboured movements fit perfectly with the dim lighting and romantic music. These factors created a tense, exciting atmosphere, and a very well done piece.

Hansen also choreographed the second piece, which was entitled "Ptarmigan". The piece opens up with the sound of birds at dawn in a glade, which was enhanced by the jerky, bird-like movements of the dancers. The strong dancing that the four apprentices did was a tribute to the directing that Marius Zirra gave them.

The first part of the program finished with a piece entitled "A Midsummer Night's Eve", which was performed by Monica Mudgett and Duncan Vere Schute. Although the piece had daring lifts which added excitement, the music and classical costumes seemed somewhat out of place, making the piece mediocre.

One of the better pieces, "Affaire de Coeur", which translates to "An Affair of the Heart", was a darkly powerful piece that showed the conflict between platonic love and sexual lust. Symbolizing the sexual aspect were a group of dancers dressed in nightmarish purple and black costumes with masks. The platonic aspect was characterized by Mudgett and Vere Schute, both dressed in white. After constant conflicts with the sexual group, the two platonic lovers finally wear garish masks, the symbol of their impurity. This piece was darkly sensuous and was powerfully dramatic, leaving the audience melancholy.

"Rhapsody in Blue" was just as powerful as "Affair de Coeur", except from the opposite side of the emotional spectrum. This light-hearted piece had excellent costumes and choreography that humorously portrayed all different kinds of people searching for their perfect mate. All the dancers performed very well in this piece, executing exciting lifts while still drawing several laughs from the audience because of their antics. This was an excellent piece to finish the evening, due to its cheery, optimistic effect on the audience which let them leave with a smile.

The company's performance showed that Idaho has developed professional dancers worthy of national recognition, and the American Festival Ballet is a cornerstone in that foundation.

Scot has class

By Stephen Lyons
Staff Writer

He was wearing silver earrings, black pointed boots and a leather jacket that he never took off. With his ruddy complexion and tight blue jeans, he could have passed for a miner from the streets of Belfast.

Instead, a packed house at the Moscow Community Center on Friday night welcomed Scottish fiddler John Cunningham, who performed an intimate two hour instrumental solo performance of hornpipes, reels, airs and waltzes, mixed with a wonderful assortment of wry Scottish humor.

Cunningham, formerly of the band Silly Wizard, was equally at ease whether he was playing the slow traditional airs or the faster dance reels.

Rolling up the sleeves of his worn leather jacket to play the beautifully haunting air, Sad is My Fate, Cunningham surprised the audience with his sensitive single string work and the dexterity with which he made the transition to his creative doublestops.

On the faster Brittain dances and the bluegrass-like version of Dr. Strange's Mysterious Hornpipe, Cunningham used short bow strokes to double and triple the tempo. In the medley, Mist Covered Mountains of Home, Cunningham went from his sensitive fiddle work to the upbeat dance tunes without missing a note.

Cunningham's most interesting pieces were his own offbeat compositions, including The Bagel Real, in which he tries to unite traditional Jewish and Scottish music. In another original tune, Trevor Hunter's Expanding Backroom, Cunningham gave the delighted folk fans a look into the musical

Mask contest set

By Paul Allee
Staff Writer

The 1985 Moscow Mardi Gras is getting a face lift.

At least that's what Mardi Gras mask competition organizer Jill Dacey hopes.

Dacey, a UI assistant professor of home economics and assistant professor with the College of Art and Architecture, hopes that the new mask competition will increase community involvement in the Mardi Gras celebration and help raise money to support the university's downtown art galleries.

"This is the first year that we've ever had a mask competition here," she said. "I'm really excited about this project because just about anyone in the community who wants to get involved in it, can get involved."

According to Dacey, competition rules require that the color of the masks may be white, black or both. The masks may be made of any material, but must be small enough to be wearable or hand-held.

"They don't have to be elaborate," she said. "They can be made of paper mache' or about anything."

"And we don't want just masks made by highly professional craftsmen. We want all of the people of the community to get involved," Dacey added.

Complete rules for the competition may be obtained from the College of Art and Architecture, the Prichard Gallery, the University Gallery, or at One More Time in downtown Moscow. All masks must be entered at One More Time by Feb. 22.

Winners of the mask competition will be announced at the Moscow Community Center shortly after the 10 a.m. Feb. 23 Mardi Gras parade. They will receive hand-made trophies produced by Moscow resident Kathy Owe, Dacey said.

All participants may also attempt to sell their masks after the competition.

Half of the money from masks which are sold will be used to help support the downtown university galleries, Dacey said. The rest of the money will be given to the artists that made the masks.

Other Mardi Gras events planned include several special breakfasts, a parade of white, hand-carried floats and costumed revellers, and the annual Beaux Arts Ball.

The Beaux Arts Ball will be held at Rathskellers from 7:30 p.m., Feb. 23, to about 2 a.m. About 1,500 tickets will be sold at a cost of $10 in advance, or $12 at the door.

world of a traveling fiddle teacher from the Shetland Islands, who holds all night jam sessions in his tiny one room home.

Besides the excellent arrangements and humorous stories, Cunningham also showed his kindness in an incident after the concert.

Sitting on the floor directly in front of Cunningham was a young 10-year-old girl who was obviously very inspired by the Scot's fiddle playing. At the end of Cunningham's encore she shyly came up to him and asked him to teach her to play the fiddle. For the next 15 minutes, while the crowd was filing out, the young girl awkwardly held Cunningham's fiddle while he patiently gave her some lessons in his soothing native brogue.

The two were still walking together across the large Community Center floor as the last of the folding chairs were put away.

For the Moscow audience and the young future fiddle player, it was a memorable concert by a class performer.

A SERVICE OF STUDENT ADVISORY SERVICES

Adams woos WSU

By Michelle Cantrill
Staff Writer

"Kids Wanna Rock" seemed to capture it all Friday night at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum. It was refreshing to see that not all teenagers have abandoned good ole' rock and roll for faceless new wave and Michael Jackson.

Bryan Adams set Pullman on fire from the first moment and the crowd didn't stop dancing, cheering, clapping, singing and screaming throughout the entire concert. Adams was in Pullman to put on a show his audience would remember, and he did.

Though Adams opened with a relatively unknown song from his new album "Reckless", the concert itself was a blasting rendition of all his top 40 hits and misses. And the crowd knew every one of them by heart.

I was amazed and pleasantly surprised at the quantity and quality of music that Adams has produced in the last three years.

Adams is a true rocker and his music is strictly top rock and roll. There are no heavy metal or techno-pop sounds for Adams. His music consists of simple acoustic guitar-based tunes.

"Cuts like a knife": remember that one? The crowd did. Adams's first hit single from three years back was a powerful and clear Friday night that I wondered to myself, "Is this live or is this Memorex?"

Adams's new material wasn't nearly as strong as the music from his first album "Cuts like a Knife". Songs like "Summer of '69" with its Springsteen-like lyrics and "Run to You", his current hit single, didn't hold a candle to the radio hits like "This Time", "Take me Back" and "Straight from the Heart".

A little musical diversity would help Adams. Perhaps some new guitar lines and lyrics or some dabbling with keyboards would push Adams farther into the Pop elite. Right now he's on top. But it's far too easy to slip into the blah of rock as well as depressing to consistently remain at number 25 on the pop charts.

The music was a tad repetitious, but enjoyable. Therefore, it wasn't Adams himself who produced the low point of the concert, but rather his guitarist, Keith Scott. Scott performed a rambling and often discordant guitar solo while the band escaped backstage momentarily. The riffs were piercing and needed some accompaniment. The solo itself was so unoriginal that I expected Scott to break into the opening riff of "Smoke on the Water" at any moment.

"You guys are totally wild," Adams screamed at the crowd. That, in essence, was the single most impressive element of the Bryan Adams concert. I truly did not expect such a response from the audience. Their energy, combined with Adams's, created a wonderful atmosphere.

Adams has cleaned up his mouth and his looks since I saw him. The raucous Canadian rocker has exchanged his leather for the All-American look of faded 501's and a white Hanes T-shirt. Bruce is God, they say.

Nevertheless, Adams is a genuine rocker and a true performer. I take my hat off to you, Mr. Adams for your ability to create tremendous rapport with your audience and for reminding me of what it's like to be at a "rock" concert again.

Oh, and one other thing Bryan. I thought your fluorescent pink lights were really cool.

Reid's guitar program growing

By Ed Ulman
Staff Writer

With a program that began ten years ago, the UI School of Music's Guitar program has come a long way. Under the direction of Professor James Reid for the last seven years the program has seen the addition of several guitar courses, a minors program and undergraduate and graduate degrees in guitar performance.

Reid came to the UI in 1978. "One of my goals was to make a comprehensive program," Reid said. "It (the program) now has a lot of potential for attracting students."

Twenty-five students are presently studying guitar with Reid or are taking an in-class guitar course. Three students are majoring in guitar performance and five students are minoring given the opportunity last semester with the initiation of a minors program at the UI. "It has grown in the sense, that it's offerings are more varied than before and it is serving more students since I'm able to teach non-majors," Reid said.

"I think perhaps some students believe we only want to serve music students. That is completely false. Students are welcome to study despite their background," Reid said.

Coming up in February the Guitar Ensemble which Reid directs and also performs in will be playing at the Music Educators National Conference to be held in Spokane in the middle of the month. The ensemble also includes students Mary Roberts and Lane Sumner.

Reid will also be presenting a recital tonight in the School of Music's recital hall. The Guitar Recital will begin at 8 p.m. and will also include George Simmons on recorder, James Schoepflin on clarinet and Angelita Floyd on flute. Admission is free.

Ted Carpenter is a member of the local chapter of M.E.Ch.A. (Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan), a national Hispanic student organization. "Last year we were listed in the Blue Key and there were four or five misspellings in our name. Now that's a lack of sensitivity."

"A lot of people don't know about our group," said Slaney. "I wish our club could get more interest and recognition by those who rule."

Carpenter said of his group, "We do a little moving and shaking in trying to have courses offered here that are cultural hispanic classes."

"We tried to come up with a Vietnamese organization," said Kim Lien. "But I don't think the school wanted that, so we formed an informal group."

"What I hope to do is build a really strong M.E.Ch.A. that has a lot of students," said Carpenter. "Then the university might listen, not only listen but move."

Macon said, "I would like to see all the minorities get together, not so much to act like brothers on campus, but to do something."

Macon said, "I'm a person who blends in with anybody. It doesn't matter what their race is."

"I'm not one of those people who goes out and says, 'Hey, I'm Hispanic,'" said Gonzales. "It's just part of me."

"For people who are open to minorities," said Moy, "we're just like anyone else."

Letter, from page 6.

and shellshocked veterans stumble home in 1918, it burned into me deeper. It's wrong. And nuclear war comes nearer and nearer."

The young man on my left said simply, "I want this boy to survive!"

Then came a flurry of voices at the top of the embankment. Blurred figures came down to load into a squad car. Doors slammed and they blinked off toward the police station.

Then a headlight stabbed the darkness as the approaching locomotive swung left onto the overpass and rumbled in a quarter circle toward us. Its strong beam moved slowly across the 12 foot banner that two young women were holding atop a van and the words blazed out crimson, "YOU ARE UNDER ARREST FOR PLANNING CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY!"

Behind the locomotive the first white car — extra high with machine gun slots staring blackly down at us played a dozen little spotlights back and forth across our upturned faces. The rest of the train of gondola height cars ground slowly past with its half year production of 600 warheads destined for the Trident Submarine Base at Bangor, Wash. Each warhead has a destructive yield of 100 kilotons, seven and a half times the 13 kiloton bomb that destroyed 90 percent of the 76,000 buildings of Hiroshima, killed 75,000 people, injured and horribly burned more than 100,000 and destroyed 42 of the city's hospitals. Each Trident missile carries eight independently targeted warheads and costs 6.934 millions or slightly less than seven million dollars.

Experts inform us that the Soviets and the U.S. already have over 50,000 missiles pointed at one another — enough to blow up the planet many times over so these passing warheads represent additional senseless spending that is weakening the fabric of our democratic system.

Example: At Harrison, Idaho we are making the painful decision to vote a possible three million dollar bond debt against our already overtaxed land and homes in order to build a new high and junior high school. The money wasted on just one Trident missile could have built two such schools!

Our county recently voted a bond issue of five and a half dollars for a badly needed new jail at Coeur d'Alene to take care of rising crime. The new jail will not cost as much as one of these missiles.

The last car of the train was high like the first one and it's machine gun slots looked back at us on leaving with the little spotlights probing our upturned faces and mocked our little cups and candles and our concern for human life. They mocked us too, because although polls show that 86 percent of our people believe in a nuclear freeze, this train has just hauled through the center of our Queen City Spokane enough nuclear warheads to obliterate 600 of the largest cities of the world.

within the community. "When you have an institution like the University of Idaho right next door, it's bound to have a significant effect on the community's attitudes concerning education. The result," he said, "is that you get this general atmosphere within the entire community that strongly favors education."

Wallins says that one benefit of the schools' co-operation is the training opportunities student teachers have in Moscow.

"We (the Moscow public schools) have UI student teachers working at all of the schools within Moscow, which helps them learn what teaching is all about," he said.

"There is also a good opportunity for the teachers here to further their education through summer graduate programs at the UI," he said.

"It also turns out that there are an extraordinarily high number of highly qualified faculty spouses here," he said.

Mary H. Voxman, a UI professor of mathematics and member of the Moscow School Board, agrees that both institutions benefit from each other.

"The university and the school district belong to a family of educators," she said. "Although their relationship to each other is often indirect, it is a strong bond."

Voxman said that the UI offers Moscow's high school students a chance to appreciate the arts.

"A number of arts exhibitions, theater performances, and other cultural activities such as the Borah Symposium probably wouldn't be available to the high school students here if there weren't a major state university here," she said.

Because the high school has an open campus policy, many high school students are able to take courses here, she said.

There are also many speakers invited into Moscow classrooms from the university, she said.

Voxman, a University of Iowa graduate, is originally from Bolivia. Prior to her UI job, she taught fourth, fifth and sixth grade at Moscow's McDonald Elementary School.

Wallins, an Ohio State University graduate, has lived in Moscow since 1960 and has two daughters in the Moscow public schools.

he explained. The business expansion is in the third year. Businesses are expecting worse, including "higher interest rates from both fiscal and monetary policy."

A drop in the exchange rate is also expected which means fewer inexpensive imports and higher interest rates. Knudsen noted that, "Both interest rates and exchange rates are too high. Businesses are borrowing short. They expect to refund later at a lower rate. If this doesn't happen, businesses will be in trouble." The key word in the economic forecast, Knudsen pointed out, is moderate. "The expansion will probably continue in 1985. I think we'll continue at a moderate rate of inflation with little reason for the Fed to tighten." The budget is one of the most important factors in the future. "The Fed will be keeping an eye on Congress to see what happens with the budget, but monetary policy will be favorable for lower interest rates this year," Knudsen forecasted.

According to Don Turner, the manager of the First Bank of Troy, "If something drastic isn't done (with the deficit), we'll see higher interest rates by year's end."

Clark Hawkins, professor of Finance at the UI, was less concerned than the other panelists with how government is financed. He discounted Senator Goldwater's recent claim that if we don't have a tax increase the U.S. government will go bankrupt. Hawkins pointed out that, "The government can't go bankrupt. They own the printing press."

On Wednesday, March 27, the subject will be, "What's Ahead for the U.S. Economy?", and on Thursday, April 25, the subject will be, "The Best Investments for 1985 and Beyond." All of these evening programs begin at 5:30 with a social hour and dinner at 6:30. At 7:30 the programs begin, lasting for an hour.
