Tutu speaks of trials of domestic workers

By Lewis Day
Editor

Pass laws which restrict the mobility of black workers in South Africa contribute to the straining of family relationships, and cause parents and children to become estranged from one another, according to Leah Tutu. Tutu, who spoke before a small crowd at the UI Women's Center yesterday, is in Moscow this week as part of a pre-Borah Symposium visit.

The pre-symposium talks by Tutu and Pierre Rossouw, general executive officer of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa, will culminate in a seminar Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., in the SUB Ballroom. University of Washington Associate Professor of History Aldonn Bell will moderate. As with the Borah Symposium next week, the pre-symposium activities are free and open to the public.

In her address Tutu — who is director of the Domestic Workers and Employers Project in Pretoria, South Africa, and wife of Nobel prize laureate Bishop Desmond Tutu — said the pass law regulations are yet another part of the restrictive apartheid system in effect in her country. She said the laws, coupled with wage and housing agreements between employers and the South African government, effectively keep domestic workers in less than satisfactory conditions.

The domestic workers project Tutu heads was initiated in 1972 to provide for improved conditions for household workers and domestics. She said the program has set up training sessions, offers recreational opportunities and gives domestic workers a place to meet on days off. Prior to the beginning up of the program many black domestic workers in South Africa had no place to go on their weekly day off. Because of apartheid — which mandates the rigid separation of races — many workers could not even venture into public parks. With the help of churches in South Africa and the rest of the world the domestic workers project organized centers in local churches which provided places for off-duty workers to meet and relax. According to Tutu the most beneficial part of the program has been the contact it has allowed between workers. Previously, Tutu said, workers were often isolated from each other, having little contact with people other than their employers.

"It started with five people or so at each center, but has grown so much," she said, "up to 200 domestic workers" at some centers.

The project also does consultation work, Tutu said, and this work has led to direct improvements in the lives of some workers. Suggested minimum salary guidelines have been established, and Tutu said that although employers are not required to abide by these guidelines, many have chosen to do so. "A lot of them (the workers) have had their work situation improved a little," she said.

Aside from Wednesday's confrontation between Rossouw and Tutu, the participants are scheduled too speak in several university classes. The liberation theology course, which meets Tuesday/Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in UCC 306, will hear Tutu today and Rossouw Thursday.

KUID airs Speaking Of talk show

Speaking Of... speaks of many things and let's people speak out too.

KUID-TV airs Speaking Of... a weekly half-hour live television program. The show is in its sixth week of production.

Past topics have included single parenting, the economic outlook for mining and logging, "Vegas-Style Gambling", and "Romance with a Sweetheart."

The format is discussion with a live audience and telephone call-ins.

Producer and host Ann Summerall, said, "This format is most advantageous to North Idaho and Eastern Washington residents, because they are the people we are doing the show for."

Summerall is also the North Idaho reporter for the state-wide news program, "Idaho Reports" and a newswriting instructor at the University of Idaho. Originally from Pennsylvania, her background is in TV performance and production. She has been working at KUID and UI for nine months now.

Summerall says she devotes 30 hours a week exclusively to working on Speaking Of...

"I enjoy the ability to either play devil's advocate or surrogate of the audience."

The audience sometimes needs encouragement to participate. "I usually have to pop that mic into their face and then they react."

During the production of the Speaking Of... pilots, panelists and audience members were surveyed. Overall comments were good but people felt more than a half-hour was needed to thoroughly discuss the topics.

"It's a disadvantage when you begin to get hot with an issue and the show is over," said Summerall.

She still worries about things going wrong during the taping of the live production.

"I think in the back of your mind you always have a fear that something technical will go wrong or you're going to draw a blank — but I've made my blubs; nothing that has got me fired yet though."

The two most recent Speaking Of... programs were: "Substance Abuse" and "The Farming Crisis in Idaho".

Both shows were produced on March 7 due to spring break.

The growing dependency on drugs and alcohol by youths and what is being done about the problem locally was discussed in the live taping of Substance Abuse.

John Miller, Drug Alcohol Counselor for the Moscow Human Services Inc., was a panelist. He said the most abused substance locally is alcohol.

Lucinda Ade, another panelist, said, "Taking drugs is now the social thing to do." She is the chairwoman of Community Partnership, a Coeur d'Alene

Woman journalist at WSU

The first American woman journalist to report first-hand the resistance battle of Afghan mountain tribesmen to free their homeland of Soviet control will be on the WSU campus March 19 and 20.

Hilda Bryant, an investigative reporter for KIRO-TV in Seattle, will present the lecture, "Scenes from a Secret War — The Fight for Afghanistan," Tuesday, March 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Todd 144.

The talk will include rare film footage shot inside Afghanistan during a five-week stay inside the Communist-controlled country during 1984.

Bryant and KIRO-TV photographer Rich Pauli were disguised as tribesmen in order to reach the resistance fighters in the Khyber Pass area. A few days later the journalists left Afghanistan after watching their host village being shelled by Communist artillery and realizing their presence spelled danger to the guerrilla fighters.

War zone reporting is not new to Bryant. This was her third trip since 1979 into the Pakistan/Afghanistan frontier region. She also visited the Vietnam combat zone in 1974, reporting from Saigon just months before South Vietnam fell to the Communists.

Her reporting career often has focused on problems of minorities and repressed groups. Prior to joining KIRO-TV in 1983 as a member of its Probe-7 special investigative team, she was a member of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer news staff for 15 years. While there she specialized in minority affairs reporting.

WSU finds new president

The dean of agriculture at Pennsylvania State University was formally appointed President of WSU today by the school's Board of Regents.

Samuel H. Smith, 45, was introduced to the university community at a public reception yesterday.

In a special public meeting, R. D. "Dan" Leary, Board President, disclosed salary terms of WSU's 8th President who takes over the office July 1 from retiring President Glenn Terrell.

Smith will receive $92,000 from state funds and a $6,000 annual deferred annuity from private funds, said Leary. He will also receive normal retirement and insurance benefits given other university faculty and staff members.

He will also hold an academic appointment as a full professor with tenure in the Department of Plant Pathology.

A native of Salinas, Calif., Smith earned his degrees from the University of California at Berkeley and was a member of the faculty there from 1964 to 1969 when he moved to Penn. State. He was chosen Dean of the College of Agriculture in 1981.

Correction

The Argonaut's March 18 story entitled Faculty council considers autonomy was incorrect. It was an Ad Hoc Faculty Council committee instead of the Faculty Council itself.

In that same story, it was noted that Martha Frederick has in the past abstained from voting on faculty constitution issues because it would have been ineffective. This was incorrect. Instead, it should have read inappropriate. The Argonaut stands corrected.

Senate to hear Freund address

ASUI President Jane Freund will present a State of the ASUI address at Wednesday night's senate session.

Freund said topics for the address include the budget for next year, the ASUI proposal for a $10 fee increase and possible fee increases by the Idaho Board of Education.

Bills on the ASUI Senate agenda include approving Freund's budget proposal and establishing the ASUI Communication Board as the publishing and broadcasting agent for ASUI communication departments. Resolutions in-

Opinion

"Sigh!" (of relief) Douglas Jones

They're out! The Idaho Legislative session of 1985 is over!

Now that the omniscient body has left Boise it is time to survey the damage.

It is important to keep in mind that this legislative session was different from previous sessions in many respects: first, the legislature was 21 politicians larger because of last year's reapportionment. Second, because of Reagan's coattail effect, the Republicans secured a veto-proof legislature against Democratic Governor John Evans' veto. In fact, in the house alone the Democrats were out numbered by the Republicans eight to one.

At first view the session's work appears to be one big contradiction.

Initially pegged as the most conservative legislature ever, it became the first such body since 1977 to not budget a surplus — in fact it did what, in Washington D.C., is commonly referred to as 'deficit spending.'

The Legislature's 1986 budget of 583.6 million is 2.4 million more than its budget office expects in revenues for the same year.

The Idaho Constitution prohibits a deficit budget. The difference is to be made up of what legislators call "Moon Money," five million dollars in surplus revenues predicted by State Treasurer Ruth Moon. However, neither the legislative budget office or the Governor's office for sees this money materializing.

If this seems strange — it's not. When the short fall becomes a reality, it will force Gov. John Evans (who has the gall to announce his intention of running against Replication god Senator Steve Symms) into calling for a "useless" special session or become the villain by cutting back the already ill-funded state agencies — namely higher education.

Despite the fact that the budget is the largest in the history of the state it is also the the most inadequate.

12,000 state employes wages were frozen despite the legislatures getting over a thousand dollar a year raise.

Both the general education and higher education budgets were funded below what the Governor, the State Board of Education and the (Republican) Superintendent of Public Instruction, Jerry Evans, said is needed to just maintain existing programs.

This is not to say that the Legislature did not do anything right this session. No, that would be too harsh.

Idaho remains the only state in the nation that does not have mandatory state licensing of day-care centers and homes.

Idaho still is in dire need of a complete overhaul of it's tax system in order to realize the amount of support needed for the state's programs.

Despite polls that show that most Idahoans want a lottery, the legislature again decided not to allow the people the chance to vote on the issue.

The legislature failed to pass a needed local tax option bill.

And they failed to adequately fund just about every department in the state's budget.

The most controversial issues of the session were of course the Right to Work bill that was passed, vetoed, and passed again into law.

We will have to wait to see whether or not the unions' claims that the bill is their death knell are true or whether or not the Idaho business leaders' claims that the bill will help bring employment and investment into the state.

It was the shortest session in years and we can be thankful for that... but not for long as they will be back in session in less than ten months.

Stay out of my sun!

Julie Sherman

Take a deep breath. What do you smell? I get a hint of warmth, of wet earth, a touch of growing, green things. Can it be that time of year again? After an endless teasing, spring hits us with a pretty mean bang. Boy, you can tell it's spring when suddenly all sorts of metamorphoses take place. Clothing layers get less bulky, though just as numerous. Greenery pokes through the gravel the snow plow had shoved over your front lawn, convertible tops go down, windows stay open with hands tapping out the hard rock rhythm playing on the radio. Yea, the guys are cruising — and so are the gals.

The best indicator of spring, the dead giveaway, is the appearance of all those colorful tericloth blossoms that sprout on lawns and roofs everywhere, each with a pale, achlorescent sunbather on top. Ah, 'tis the season! Pass the lotion and move over, you're in my sun.

I must admit, I'll be one of the first ones outside to enjoy those golden spring rays. Sunworshipper? You bet I am! I'm out on the roof as soon as the temperature is tolerable. After a pale winter, give me sun ... and while you're at it, rub a little lotion on my back, please.

I'm a sungoddess for a reason, though. Not only do I enjoy getting a deep mahogany tan (eat your hearts out), but I need the sun ... because I'm a reptile. I'm the type of person who has a hard time manufacturing my own body heat. Like the snake, you'll see me crawl out from under my winter rock and flop belly up in the sun until I'm toasted. Let me cook until my body reaches 98.6 degrees. Only then you may talk to me, and please step out of my sun if you do.

Of course I want a tan, too. I think a healthy, nut brown glow makes a person look great. Too much and you look like leather. Not cool. Poor skin. I wanted to work on a no-tanline tan, but I'm not so sure I know how to go about getting one of those. And I sincerely doubt that I could even make the attempt without there being disruptions to my rest and relaxation. So don't worry, I won't. I promise. Well, if I do, I won't tell anyone.

Sunbathing is enjoyable in the United States and especially fun here on campus. I'm so glad we're a free country. See, when you guys go past me as I bake in all my glory and the sight of my enjoyment repulses you, remember this: you've got that guaranteed constitutional right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness ... and so do I. See, you can turn your head, keep your mouth shut and keep walking by ... no rude comments, no harrassment, nothing to disturb my repose. We can get along just fine and believe me, I promise I'll do the same for you. It's all part of the sunbathers' etiquette. If you don't think someone has the bod to be out there sunbathing, don't look. Simple. Painless.

Then, of course, there's the other side of sunbathers' etiquette. If you like what you see, let it be known. No fooling. I love walking past the guys dorms. One look at those gorgeous bronzes and Yeow!! I'll let you know what I think. If I approve, you'll hear. I'm the weirdo with the high powered binoculars at the far end of the parking lot or in the window across from yours. Actually, I'm just kidding. I don't even have a pair of binoculars. I wouldn't use them if I had. I'm not a peeping Tom. Besides, I can see plenty without being sneaky.

Take a deep breath. You can smell the green things growing. You can taste a change in the air (no, it's not Potlatch) and look at all those funny flowers! It must be that time of year again. Come on spring! Let's roll our towels out, turn up the radio, pass the lotion ... and please stay out of my sun.

Who to represent?

Editor,
Thank you so much for giving my survey some publicity with your article "Tough choices" that appeared in the March 1 edition of the Argonaut. You brought attention to some important questions. I appreciate the opportunity to fill students in on the information you misconstrued or left out.

I began my infamous Budget Survey merely as a source of information; something to base my decisions on while representing student interests during the budgeting process. I realize that the survey was not scientific, it was developed by me and did not by a computer, but it served my purposes well. I asked students to rank general categories of budgeted areas from one to six, depending on their importance to the individual. The results were amazingly consistent-not bad for such an informal survey. Your article ignores the fact that this survey was on the budgeting of many ASUI departments besides KUOI-FM. It was not meant to be an opinion poll of KUOI solely, and student comments to that affect seem to indicate a lot of skepticism and dissent.

Perhaps, before writing your article "Tough Choices," you should have looked over one of these surveys closely. The opening paragraph states clearly that the survey was only meant to inform me as to how students were thinking. I then went on to state that "I would try to reflect these opinions as we write the 1985-86 budget." Nowhere do I even insinuate that these opinions would automatically become law. "Tough Choices" seems to suggest that if my survey "carries any weight," KUOI-FM is destined for virtual extinction. In fact, if KUOI is closed up, it will be from student pressure and not from any informal survey by Senator Dose. I have not suggested that KUOI be shut down; I have quoted student comments to that effect.

Degree offers freedom and diversity

By Kristi Nelson
Staff Writer

For underclassmen struggling with a major decision, or seniors with wide-spread interests, a unique University of Idaho program is a viable option.

The General Studies Program has two facets: a widely used advisory service and a major program leading to a degree in General Studies. Although approximately 600 students are enrolled in the program each semester, only about 20 graduate with the General Studies degree each year, according to program director Francis Seaman.

In the advisory program, which restricts participation to five semesters, a student is free to take courses from any department on campus, and must comply with only the university's English composition requirement. Normally freshman and sophomores who are undecided about their majors use the program to sample classes from many different fields.

According to Seaman, who has directed the program since its initiation in 1969, students in the advisory program are encouraged to choose a major as soon as possible.

"We worry about them if they haven't picked a major by the fourth semester," he said.

Seaman added that on the average, only one of the approximately twenty students who graduate with a general studies degree each year will have initiated his studies in the advisory program. The other nineteen have transferred to the degree program from other schools or UI colleges.

A General Studies degree, first offered in the early 1970s, is a valid university degree. It differs, however, from the Interdisciplinary Studies degree through the lack of specific curriculum and upper division credit requirements.

The graduate must have completed the usual 128 credits, but only English composition and 48 credits in classes numbered 300 and above must be included in those 128 credits, according to Seaman.

"A student could graduate having never taken a 400 level course," said one critic of the program.

Kurt Olsson, Chairman of the English Department, agreed.

"I believe that a student should have many more upper division credits. Some of those should be in 400 level classes."

Seaman said that approximately 40 to 50 students transfer to the advisory program each year, and that many students make the move because of poor grades in their previous colleges. If they fail to meet their college's minimum GPA requirement they may transfer to General Studies, but to transfer back to another college they must have a minimum GPA of 2.00.

"I think Dr. Seaman has tried to avoid abuses," said Weldon Tovey, associate dean of the College of Engineering, "but I think there are students who are using the program as a dumping ground — they don't know what they want they're not motivated."

Tovey added, "It's the student's problem, not the program's."

A student must complete the last 16 credits of the 128 required in the General Studies Program, allowing students to transfer late in their college career to the program. However, if they have more than 40 credits in any one field they must petition for entrance to the program.

James Hitch, a former computer science major who switched to General Studies his senior year, said an earlier graduation made possible by the switch influenced his decision to change majors. He is not concerned by the possible ramifications a General Studies degree could have on his job search.

"No degree is going to guarantee a position in the business world," said Hitch, who believes having any degree shows accomplishment.

Undergraduates who hold a General Studies degree can apply to graduate school. They may run into problems because they have only 40 credits in any one field, according to Roger

UI sweeps MWC tourney, earn NCAA berth

Mary Raese brings down the twine following the Vandal's championship victory over Montana. Argonaut Photo by Deb Gilbertson.

By Tom Liberman
Staff Writer

The Idaho women basketball team took their last victories of a 28-2 season in easily winning the Mountain West Conference last weekend and thus propelling themselves into the NCAA's.

The women easily swept the two games from Weber State and Montana, winning both games by over 20 points.

The Vandals earned the right to host the two day tourney by posting a 17-1 conference record. Their only loss of the season was at the hands of Eastern Washington University, who was seeded second in the tourney.

The Vandals opened their tournament effort on Friday night against Weber State whom the women had defeated twice before by more than 20 points.

The women did not take the Wildcats lightly, especially after looking at the scores from the Big Sky tournament in which several teams were almost upset. Head Coach Pat Dobratz said, "Anyone could get beaten."

The Vandals started off a little slow and only lead the Wildcats by four early in the contest. But then the Vandals got their fast break going and it was off to the races.

At halftime the Vandals led 47-28 with Paula Getty, Mary Westerwelle, and Robin Behrens all having 10 points for the team. The UI shot a blistering .625 percent from the floor in the first half.

The Vandals continued to pull away in the second half. Dobratz put in the second team with about five minutes left in the game, although she substituted freely throughout the half.

The final score of the game was UI 94 WSC 68, with the Vandals pulling away near the end. Dobratz said, "We wore them down. We had good balance and they can't stop five people."

Dobratz said the team was a little nervous at the outset. This was the first pressure game the Vandals had played since the EWU rematch several weeks ago, which the Vandals won by sixteen.

The second semi-final match-up on Friday evening was between EWU and Montana. Dobratz said she would rather play Montana in the final, adding "We have a hard time against EWU."

Her wish was granted as Montana upset EWU by a single point in the later game of the evening.

The Montana game started out badly for the UI as Mary Raese picked up two fouls in the first minute of the game and the Vandals trailed by three after five minutes. With the score tied at 13-13, Netra McGrew came into the game. She provided the spark the Vandals were looking for as they ran off ten straight points. Westerwelle put in a jump shot at the buzzer to give the women a 37-20 halftime lead.

The women extended their lead to 20 early in the second half. But Montana came back with three straight buckets to cut the lead to 14.

Dobratz called a timeout and the Vandals got things going their way again with an inbounds play for an easy hoop. Dobratz said, "We learned that play from a high school team; it's very difficult to stop."

The Vandal successfully worked the inbounds play once more as they extended their lead to 24 points with six minutes to play. The final score was 80-57.

With the victory, the the Vandal women earned an automatic birth into the NCAA Championships.

After the game several Vandals were honored as MWC All-Stars. Behrens and Kris Edmonds were honorable mentions and Westerwelle made the second team.

The lone Vandal to make the first team was star center Raese. Coach Dobratz was named the MWC Coach of the Year. In accepting the honor she said, "I've never had a coaching award; without the players it wouldn't be possible."

Dobratz felt the crowd support helped the Vandals in the games. Over 2000 faithful showed up for both games even though it was spring break for the UI.

Graduation; a year long event

Although the graduation ceremonies only last a little longer than an hour for seniors and the people watching, it's a year-long event as far as the Commencement Committee is concerned. According to Ed Chavez, Chairman of the Commencement Committee, all the plans have been running smoothly.

The Commencement Committee is responsible for putting all aspects of the ceremony together. People from the committee come from all different departments, Chavez said.

Commenting on how the commencement exercises are planned and carried out, Chavez said "It's a matter of coordination and getting things organized." Since organization is needed between so many different departments and colleges, this is no small task.

Chavez said that four or five years ago the ceremonies weren't well organized, and that the good organization now reflects in the ceremonies.

Although there are openings on the Commencement Committee for one junior and one senior, there haven't been any students involved for two or three years, Chavez said. Even when they were involved, they would only go to the first couple meetings and then never show up after that, he said.

"I wouldn't object to students sitting in on the meetings," said Chavez. He added that there probably won't be another meeting for the rest of the year because "everything is already in progress."

Chavez stressed the fact that they make a pointed effort to accommodate everyone.

"Anyone with a handicap should contact my office," he said, adding that special accommodations would be made for them. "A couple years ago, a student's parents were deaf, so we had three sign language translators translate the whole ceremony for them." They also furnish rooms where parents can take their crying babies and change or feed them.

Chavez said that Dr. Gibb is concerned in keeping the general ceremonies within a 55-minute time frame.

"We try to make it short enough so that it is not boring, but still retains the pomp and ceremony," he said.

Chavez encourages all students possible to see the general ceremony, and cautioned seniors to make sure they know where their college ceremony will be held because there has been two changes. The Law ceremony is moved from 4:00 p.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday, and the Art and Architecture ceremony will be 11:15 a.m. instead of 2 p.m.

Matt Tellin, Director of Admissions in the Registrars office, expects a little over 1600 degrees to be conferred. He said that right now there are 819 undergraduate applicants, 95 law applicants, and 245 graduate applicants. In 1983 there were 1673 degrees conferred, the largest ever at the UI.

Although there still has not been a commencement speaker chosen yet, Terry Armstrong said that they still have plenty of choices. He said that Jean Kirkpatrick called last week and said she wouldn't be able to participate due to prior commitments.

About 10 years ago a group of youths disillusioned with life in the cities gathered on Sado Island, located some 170 miles from Tokyo in the Japanese Sea. Their common interests in traditional performing arts led them to long and intensive period of study. Thus began KODO.

The results of this study are evident when KODO performs the festival drum routines and dances selected from the countless variety found throughout the countryside of Japan. The music that they play on a variety of instruments originates from two distinct sources: from classical kabuki plays and bunraku puppet dramas, and from the folk music and ritual contained in the many Japanese regional traditions. Together with the music of the shamisen, shakuhachi and fue, the oftentimes violent dancing, and the exciting sound of the big festival drums (the largest, the 700 pound drum made from a single tree trunk), the troupe creates a program that has appealed to people around the world.

Outdoor program starts spring

Experience Whitewater is the theme of a group of events sponsored by the U of I Outdoor Program during March and April. Assistant Director Mike Beiser indicates the range of indoor workshops and films and outdoor trips are designed to introduce, acquaint, and help individuals pursue exciting whitewater sports. Outdoor rental equipment specials are also being offered through the Outdoor Rental Center to help students plan inexpensive rafting outings of their own.

Kayak pool training sessions are continuing on March 27 and April 28. These are open to all persons free of charge. This is an opportunity to climb into a kayak, paddle around the warm university pool and perhaps learn how to roll it up after turning over. Those planning to take part in instructional kayak trips on the Salmon River during April should take advantage of these.

All the whitewater events are being kicked off by a Mini-Whitewater Film Festival on April 3 at 7:30 in the SUB. These films feature whitewater action on the Colorado River and in Idaho. Instructional kayaking begins on April 6 and 7 on the Salmon River. This trip is slated to provide basic instruction for first-time kayakers.

Spectators will have a chance to see two kayak rodeos, one indoors and one out. The first is in April 10 beginning at 7 p.m. in the university pool. Competition will be offered in running gates and other kayak gymnastics. All individuals of any skill level will be able to enter. The weekend of April 27-28 will be a rodeo on the St. Joe River in northern Idaho. Paddlers from around the Northwest will be competing in downriver competition and a 'Hot Dog' contest. Demonstrations and instructional events will also be offered.

On April 16 at 7:30 pm in the Borah Theatre of the SUB will be a slide program on 'Rivers of Idaho.' This program will feature river opportunities throughout the inland Northwest by raft, kayak, or canoe. Slides will be shown featuring the Salmon, Snake, St. Maries, St. Joe and other rivers. A free information pamphlet detailing many of these river experiences.

The Outdoor Program Center functions as a clearinghouse for individuals planning trips on local rivers. Cooperative outings are organized as interest demands and the program houses rivers guides and information on local river conditions. Groups who desire a custom river experience may contact the director to arrange for a one day or weekend raft trip this spring or for the fall semester. Transportation, equipment, lunch, and river guides are provided for these trips. A free slide program is available for showing to any organization or group who is interested in whitewater sports. More information on any of these events, rental specials, or instructional programs can be obtained by contacting the program staff at 885-6950. The rental center will take raft rental reservations at any time for spring, summer, or fall trips.

and I have offered it as a choice.

The ASUI is trying to support the same number of programs that it did last year, and with less money. The possible answers that I see right now are: increase ASUI funds (i.e. raise student fees), cut all the ASUI programs proportionally (weakening all of them by the same degree), or we can cut the least used programs (allowing the rest to run at peak strength). You seem to acknowledge this last solution as the best in your article.

Geologist discusses research

A geologist who has spent many years studying the Grand Canyon will present a public lecture on his research Tuesday, March 19, on the WSU campus.

Dr. Ken Hamblin, professor of geology at Brigham Young University, will discuss "Recent Volcanism in the Grand Canyon" during the 7:30 p.m. lecture set for Room 16 of the Physical Science Building.

The scientist's research in the Grand Canyon has been supported by four National Science Foundation grants. He has done field work in Africa and was a two-year member of the NASA planning committee for future geological explorations of the planets.

Hamblin is one of 36 speakers participating in the National Lecture Program for

Sigma Xi, science honor society. His visit to the WSU campus is being sponsored by the Sigma Xi chapters and the departments of Geology at WSU and the UI, and the Visiting Professor Committee of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

Campfire celebration nears

Balloons with friendship wishes attached will be launched by Camp Fire members and friends in Moscow and also world-wide to mark Camp Fire Friendship Day on March 23.

The public is invited to join in the festivities which begin at 11:30 a.m. Saturday in Friendship Square downtown. The launch will be at noon.

This year marks the 75th anniversary of Camp Fire.

The group was organized in 1910 at Lake Sebago, Maine by Dr. and Mrs. Luther Halsey Gulick, educators and others who recognized the need for an organization for girls that would provide opportunities for personal enrichment and growth that would lead to responsible and fulfilling adulthood.

The name Camp Fire symbolizes the home or place of comfort and cheer with friends and family gathered together. The camp fire itself is a symbol of the beauty and wonder shared with friends outdoors.

Before 1920, Camp Fire was introduced to this area. Since then its creative programs have benefited the lives of hundreds of youths and adults here. In recent years the name "girls" was dropped from the Camp Fire name and boys were invited to take advantage of the program.

The program focuses on the individual in providing opportunities for youth to realize their potential and to become responsible, caring citizens. Community service and outdoor experiences are integral parts of the program.

Resident camping is offered at Camp Neewahlu on Lake Coeur d'Alene for Camp Fire Youth as well as non-members. Members have the opportunity to earn campships to Camp Neewahlu by selling Camp Fire candy during the annual candy sale which runs through March 29 this year in this area.

Camp Neewahlu is also available for rent to families and organizations.

Moscow District Camp Fire would like to hear from Camp Fire alumni during this 75th anniversary year. Please call 882-7084 to get in touch. Call this number also for further information about Camp Fire.

program designed to educate about substance abuse and plan alternative activities for youth.

An audience member, Bervette Williams, principal of Moscow Senior High School, commented, "There hasn't been a lot of adults out there who have helped with the kid's stress."

Father Stan Tate, rector of Saint Marks's Episcopal Church and founder of the national substance abuse program, Youth Alternatives, said he found from a survey that kids use drugs because "they have nothing else to do."

Ade commented, "Parents don't realize their kids are smoking joints or drinking or they just don't want to see it." She added, "Parents need to know that other parents' kids have a drug problem."

UI upset bid falls short, finish 8-22

By Greg Kilmer
Sports Editor

It was only fitting that the biggest problem all season would be the major factor in ending the University of Idaho's frustrating season, as they fell to the Wolfpack of Nevada-Reno 83-80 at the Big Sky championships in Boise.

It was the dreaded turnover that cost the Vandals the upset victory and ended their season at 8-22.

The youthful Vandals fell victim to 18 turnovers while the pack finished with 10.

And it was four of the Vandal give-aways that quickly changed a nine point second half lead into a 61-61 tie in a span of two and a half minutes.

"The turnovers during that time were the result of their pressure and the mistakes we made," Idaho coach Bill Trumbo said at a post game news conference. "It brought them back to where they were in it."

After a see-saw first half, the Vandals enjoyed a 43-40 lead at intermission, led by point guard Teddy Noel's 13 points.

The second half started well for the Vandals as Noel tossed in two buckets around Frank Garza's three three-point bombs for the nine point spread.

Garza, playing his last game in a silver and gold uniform, led the Vandals with 25 points, including five three pointers.

But then Reno coach Sonny Allan unleashed his wolves into a full court press that rattled the young Idaho squad.

"We've got a pretty good press and they don't have very clever ball-handlers," Allan said. "We got the ball four or five times and it really turned it around. That was the key to the game."

"They came out with good purpose and intent during the second half," Trumbo said. "And they went after us inside where we were vulnerable."

The Wolfpack's leading inside man was Big Sky Newcomer of the Year, Dwayne Randall. Randall, the tourney MVP, continually nailed easy cripples underneath and led the Reno offensive attack with 25.

The 6-foot-7 Randall, a getting fouled specialist, went to the line eight times missing but once in drawing five fouls on defenders Steve Adams and Tom Stallick with four.

The Wolfpack went in front for good on a three point goal by Rob Harden, who finished with 21, but the Vandals kept it interesting.

Following a Noel jumper, the Vandals only trailed 80-77 but two three point efforts went astray and Reno forward Tony Sommers countered easily with an easy lay-in for a 82-77 lead with 17 ticks remaining.

Still the Vandals didn't die as Noel's three point prayer banked in to cut the margin to two with seven seconds left.

After Matt Haskins picked up his fifth foul on the inbounds pass, Reno forward Mike Parillo nailed one of two free throws for the final three point Reno lead.

Noel's last second desperation shot fell short and the Vandal's frustrating season was over.

Along with Garza's 25, only Noel's 21 and Kenny Luckett's 12 found double digits. Tom Stallick ripped down 13 boards followed by Garza with 11.

"I was very proud of the effort, you couldn't fault the kid's effort," Trumbo said.

"He had his kids ready," Allan said of Trumbo. "They gave us trouble both defensively and offensively."

The Reno victory was the first of three victories over Idaho schools as they marched through Boise State 79-67 and tournament surprise Idaho State to capture their second straight Big Sky Crown. It was the first time since the 1981-82, 82-83 Vandals pulled back to backers. Reno's season ended last Thursday as they fell to North Carolina State in the first round of the NCAA tournament in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Women fall to defending champs

By Mike Long
Staff Writer

At 28-2, the Vandal women are finished with their most successful season of basketball ever. Their second defeat came from the University of Southern California, 74-51, in the opening round of the NCAA play-offs.

"Everybody was disappointed by the loss," Asst. Coach Ginger Reid said. "It was disappointing to lose by that far." She was not unhappy with the overall picture however.

"We accomplished a lot of goals, a lot more than we expected," Reid said. "We feel we ended the season on a positive note." Some of those accomplishments included national rankings in three different polls.

For weeks, the Vandal women bobbed between 15th and 20th in the United Press International/Women's Court survey of coaches and jumped between 15th and 25th in USA Today/CNN. They also made a one week appearance in the Associated Press polling.

In addition, UI Head Coach Pat Dobratz, who is now recruiting for next season, was named Mountain West Conference Coach of the Year.

Another first was the taking of the MWC conference crown (see related story) by the Vandals in their third year as a Division I team. The Vandals were only defeated once by a conference foe, Eastern Washington. The women avenged themselves against the Eagles in their next meeting with 72 percent average from the floor.

Also sweet to Coach Dobratz was the defeat of the University of Montana Grizzlies on their home court, where they had a 46 game winning streak. Idaho finished the season undefeated on their own.

One of the most remarkable characteristics of this year's team was their nation-high shooting average of 54.2 percent. Unfortunately, it was sadly lacking against the Trojans of USC as the women had one of their worst nights of the season with an average of 36 percent.

The Vandals made a slow start not only as a team, but individually: 6-foot-4 center Mary Raese took nearly 16 minutes to make her first basket of the night.

Though Idaho was first on the board, that was their one and only lead over the Trojans. They quickly fell behind by 20 points, and were only able to break the barrier once temporarily in the second half. It took Idaho 14 minutes to score 10 points.

An inefficient start was only one of Idaho's troubles. They were also out-rebounded by USC 45-37. The Vandals also appeared to be intimidated by the two-time defending national champions.

Reid, however, said it wasn't so much the prestige that put the Vandal women off-balance. The real problem came in the beginning of the game when in the "first two or three minutes, we had turnovers that we shouldn't have."

Further surprising the Vandals was the USC blocking of a shot by Raese, "which you just don't see happening that often," Reid said. Also, 5-11 starting guard Paula Getty missed all six attempts of the evening, unlike her season record of 57 percent from the floor.

According to Reid, the visiting Vandal women were also unprepared with only a three days advance notice and a misleading game tape. The tape showed a soft man-to-man defense that turned hard when they took to the court of the Los Angeles Sports Arena.

Leading the Vandal scoring for the evening with 16 points was 6-1 starting forward, senior Kris Edmonds, followed by Raese's 15. Starting guard Robin Behrens finished the night with four points and two steals.

The Vandals were simply out-classed by such competition as Olympic gold medalist Cheryl Miller. Miller received the women's Naismith Trophy shortly before the start of court action, proclaiming her the best in the nation.

Miller put down 21 points against the Vandals, along with 16 rebounds, five assists, four blocked shots and five steals. She was followed by teammate Holly Ford who came away with 20 points.

Dobratz does see the game as good experience. With only one graduate from the Idaho team (Edmonds), the team has a chance for another appearance. Dobratz told her women at the beginning of the season to expect this to be their best year, because the next may not compare.

Only time will truly tell as the women come back with a little tougher schedule next year. The Vandals have plans to meet Western Kentucky, the University of Missouri and San Diego State in pre-season play.

The conference competition will also have the added incentive of defeating the defending conference champ. Until then, the Idaho women will concentrate on hitting the books as the coaches turn their attention to recruiting potential Vandals.

The Boys Greg Kilmer

The following is a true incident, the names have not been used to protect whatever innocence they might have.

I think I found the best way to plan for spring break; Don't, but remember your golf clubs. I went south with only two marks in my appointment book, the Big Sky tourney and a job interview. I left all the rest up to my old cronies.

Best part about spring break is going down and seeing these incredible guys. They're a very rare breed and I wouldn't trade them for box seats at the World Series, even if the Red Sox were in it. We all know the odds of that happening.

These guys are constantly up to something dealing with sports and leisure. If they're not doing it themselves, they're watching it on the tube. They are definite fanatics, they've always got three or four bets going on at one time.

For instance, we had our annual baseball team draft while I was in Boise. After a considerable amount of arguments and about as many beers, I got stuck with the Blue Jays and San Diego. I really wanted the Mets, Strawberry is great.

We got into great Trivia Pursuit games, did you know there are 336 dimples on a golf ball? Fascinating, eh? Anybody know what the Yankees were called before the Yankees?

These clowns are at their best on the golf course, we put in a lot of time there if you count the 19th green. We are all on about the same skill level which makes for good skin games. Heckling is mandatory in our league.

We all spent my birthday at the Big Sky wars, I had to do my duty as your Sports Editor so I did not partake in any pre-game activities, they did. It was no problem at all finding them in the huge Pavilion crowd, they're die-hard Vandie fans.

Being my birthday and all, I kind of thought Idaho might pull something off. They were coming in as unnoticed as Bailey on WKRP in Cincinnati and just maybe they might catch Reno on an off night. Fat chance, Sonny Allan's wolves fire more shots than in the entire Gauntlet movie.

I had to run down to Twin Falls for my interview and a couple of the boys tagged along. They knew I was going to be staying with another friend of mine, an assistant golf pro. They'll go anywhere if it means free green fees and golf carts with coolers.

After a real good interview, I found out a couple scary things about Twin. They have a drinking establishment with a lot of characteristics of my favorite pub here in Moscow, the Corner Club. It's the Clover Club, can you believe that name?

The other thing about the town Evil Knievel made famous is it is very close to Nevada and that means Jackpot, that oasis in the middle of the desert. We hadn't done it in quite a spell so off we went.

I was red hot, my first quarter into a one-armed bandit came out cherries. My pockets jingled when I walked to my first 21 dealer.

She was one tough looking broad, she had been around the block more than her share. I think it was the Old Gold sticking out the side of her mouth that won my heart.

I butted heads with this tough ol' momma and didn't do too shabby. I had a nice little roll stocked up when a terrible thing happened, they switched dealers on me.

Into my lifewalked a vision, this lady was a 10.5. She could pass for Snow White at Disneyland, she had me in the palm of her hand.

As beautiful as she was, her dealing was as nasty as Tina Turner. She took my entire winnings, she would have taken the shirt off my back, not that that would be all that bad.

We escaped and ran back to Boise, stopping once to hit golfballs into the canyon. I finally escaped those guys.

It's because of these clowns that the following week has been proclaimed spring break.

don't believe that their opinions are isolated at all; by taking the time out to respond to the survey, they have already demonstrated a higher than average interest in how things are run on this campus. And if you had been at the senate meeting to hear my report, you wouldn't have jumped to the conclusion that these were the only people to be included in this survey. I requested that all the Senators survey their groups, some have begun already. The copies of my survey results that were handed out last Wednesday were clearly titled "Initial Choices".

this was only the first stage of the survey.

The last paragraphs of "Tough Choices" were a bit obscure. You state that ascertaining student opinion is important, "but such a move at this point, for this semester is a bit late." When do you think we should get started? And your ideas of government organization intrigue me. Do you believe that I "labor under the misapprehension that they (Senators) have a particular constituency," and that "in reality, they are (I am) elected to serve all students." That sounds interesting, but senators wouldn't be very accountable under your system. I wonder what would happen to Congressman Craig if he were to start representing the wishes of the other 49 states and ignored Idaho's own needs? I agree that I am in the senate to help all of the student body, but my first responsibility is certainly to those students who count on me to represent their views. I have to answer to them.

That final statement of your's was a real shocker. You said that sometimes "that responsibility (a senator's) means ignoring the all too vocal wishes of a few." I question who is in

Diamond pleases appreciative audience

By Michelle Cantrill
Staff Writer

After moving slowly through traffic jams and pushing through crowds of people, it became apparent that Neil Diamond was a performer who has left his mark on a lot of fans. These fans came from all over Washington and Idaho to see Diamond's show Sunday night.

It was standing room only in the Beasley Performing Arts Center and the audience was ready for a show: a show I guarantee they'll remember. I have to admit that Diamond's performance left me more than impressed.

After a grand opening with atmospheric lasers and synthesizers, the coliseum burst wide open with music, both toe-tapping and heart-warming. The crowd responded to Diamond enthusiastically by singing and clapping along.

During the past 20 years or so, Diamond has produced a steady string of hits, hit albums and the music for two major motion picture soundtracks: The Jazz Singer and Jonathan Livingston Seagull. Diamond attempted to perform his songs in a chronological order, but with his vast collection of hits, it was somewhat impossible. In fact, he had so many hits in the 60s and 70s that I didn't think it was possible to fit all of them into one show.

Nevertheless, Diamond tried.

Starting with some of his 70's material like Play me and Love on the Rocks, Diamond continually pumped out on familiar tune after another. He then jumped into a nostalgic mood by performing some of his older material that dated back to the 60's, songs like: Sweet Caroline and Red, Red Wine. Of course, the crowd knew them all.

The only relatively unknown material was from Diamond's new album Primitive. Diamond performed the title cut and two others from the album. Primitive, the song, was accompanied by blue and green smoke and lasers to give somewhat of a dangerous and jungle-like atmosphere.

Perhaps, the highlight of the show was Diamond's version of Forever in Blue Jeans in which the whole crowd was on their feet clapping and singing. In response to the crowd's participation, Diamond did six reprises of the song.

Lasting a full three hours, Diamond's performance was similar to a Las Vegas stage show. With sparkling attire, tremendous light production and staged antics between Diamond and his band, the show seemed slicked-up and over-rehearsed. However, it was handled very professionally.

Diamond spent a good amount of time introducing his nine-member band. He let them each perform a small solo of their own. However, I found the

Kodo set to drum

In 1984, the group, which practices their art with rigorous discipline on an isolated island in the sea of Japan, appeared at the New Orleans World's fair as well as the Olympic Arts Festival in Los Angeles. Kodo had to add an additional week of shows to accommodate audience demands in Los Angeles.

Kodo practices a form of drumming on the taiko, the symbol of the Japanese community in ancient times. Villages communicated with each other by playing the taiko which also served to establish village boundaries.

Wednesday, March 20, the Japanese performing troupe called Kodo, will bring their unique style of folk music to the Palouse. The performance will begin at 8 p.m.

Tickets for Wednesday's show are still available at the information desk at the University of Idaho Student Union Building and at the Coliseum box office at Washington State University. The performance will be held at the WSU Coliseum Theater. Ticket prices range from $4 to $8.

staged conversation and well-rehearsed jokes among the band somewhat annoying. With such great music to play, I thought it unnecessary.

Nevertheless, it was unique to see a single performer spend so much time with band introductions.

Towards the end of the concert, Diamond did a medley from the Jonathan Livingston Seagull soundtrack. The medley was visually accompanied with a large video screen on which was the background of the sky. A laser seagull then flew about on the screen as Diamond performed Sanctus, Skybird and Be.

Diamond's show was a grand performance given by a grand performer. He knew how to make his audience laugh and he knew how to make them cry. He sang more than enough of his many tunes that I'm sure some of them brought back moments of nostalgia for all who was there. What Neil Diamond did in the 60's, he can do in the 80's and the girls are still screaming.

I find Diamond a hopeless romantic, his music hopelessly mushy and I think that's wonderful.

"As an advising center, we're open eight hours a day. A student who has an advisor only has certain office hours a week. We spend more time with the students."

John Alwine, a senior in the degree program, praised the advisory services.

"They know me by name. It's pretty personal. They tend to steer you to classes that will really help you out."

March 14.

The recent push by the Reagan administration to reduce government price supports for farmers was the topic of discussion.

The audience consisted of farmers from Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho. They had reactions to the government's plan to return to a "free-market" agricultural system.

Panelists were: Dr. Ken Duft, Professor of Agriculture Economics at Washington State University; Charlie Connolly, Assistant Vice President and Commercial Loan Officer for the Old National Bank in Pullman; and Gary Morris, a north Idaho farmer who helped to gather area farmers to meet with Congressional representatives.

Duft said, "The consumer and farmer, in the long run, would benefit by a free-market. But I'm not so foolish as to say it should be enforced abruptly."

Connolley agreed a free-market should be brought back. "But we can't just pull away that support overnight," he said. "It's going to be painful for the loaner, just like it will be for the grower."

Morris said, "We need a program that gives us a return on our investment." He added, "We can't have an orderly transition to a free-market. The government needs to control the supply."

The next broadcast of Speaking Of... will be on March 28. Its topic is "Suicide: The Last Recourse."

the "few" here, but even more surprising-I thought that the Argonaut was the champion of the "all too vocal wishes of a few."

This survey isn't pointing out any easy answers, it's just making the problems clearer - perhaps a change in programming is necessary, or maybe we don't need a radio station anymore. It's up to the students, but let's at least give students the benefit of the doubt and ask them what they're thinking, after all, it is their money.

each DJ selecting his or her own repertoire, from jazz to funk, from reggae to punk.

KUOI not only provides music, but also offers public service announcements, free of charge, to any group requesting that service. KUOI also tries to be community-oriented in such things as participation in Mardi-Gras, promoting concerts and providing album reviews.

If those 200 surveys would have been given to a wider range of students, i.e. off-campus, the results would have differed dramatically. We at KUOI are proud of our work and don't want to see it destroyed by a senator and a select few groups of people who probably never even tuned in to KUOI.

Long live 89.3.

More than music

Editor,

In regards to the article in Friday's Arg concerning the survey by Sen. David Dose, I would like to give to the students of the UI a different perspective on KUOI.

KUOI has been in existence since 1949 operating as a commercial-free radio and powered by volunteer DJs. Presently there are approximately 50 DJs donating their services (time) to provide Moscow with an alternative to the top-40 stations in the area. KUOI is free-form radio, with
