Human rights group opposes Aryan beliefs

By Kristi Nelson
Staff Writer

The Aryan Nations may have found a home in Northern Idaho, but the environment has not been completely hospitable to the white supremacists group.

Local, state, and national groups have voiced their opposition to the Aryan's policies and presence in the Coeur d'Alene area.

According to Richard Butler, head of the Church of Jesus Christ Cristian, church leaders chose the area because of the low minority population, but Liz Sullivan, an Idaho Human Rights Commissioner, thinks that the group underestimated community response.

"I think the reason they moved up here is because Northern Idaho is beautiful place to live, and also I imagine that they thought the law enforcement was going to be nominal," said Sullivan. "I think they were surprised that Idaho responded in such a way.

In 1982 and 1983 the nine member Idaho Human Rights Commission lobbied successfully to have a bill passed by the 1983 Idaho Legislature which made malicious harrasment a felony. The bill was initiated in response to incidents in the Coeur d'Alene area which allegedly involved Aryan Nations members.

In one instance a Jewish restaurant owner was threatened, and in another a one-time member of Butler's church was convicted on a harrasment charge after verbally threatening the two racially mixed children of a Coeur d'Alene local resident.

After these incidents, local law enforcement officials decided they needed a law that would make the crime a felony, thus giving them extradition rights, and also serving as a deterrent.

According to Kootenai County Undersheriff Larry Broadbent, the law has been effective, since no one has yet been charged under the law.

"One of the things that alarmed us the most was that they recuit in prisons from throughout the country," said Sullivan, a Moscow resident, "and this was also a reason law enforcement asked us to get that malicious harrasment bill signed."

Although Butler has accused law enforcement officials of conspiring against his congregation, Broadbent disagrees.

"Everybody is treated equally under the law, whether they're a white supremacist or the average citizen," said Broadbent, who was appointed to the Human Rights Commission this summer.

"I believe the appointment has enhanced law enforcement," said Broadbent. "If there were a direct conflict, by my personally knowing a defendant, than I can abstain from the (Human Rights Commission) action."

The Idaho Human Rights Commission, formed in 1959, is composed of nine members, each appointed by the governor for a three year term.

The commission is a quasi-judicial body that mainly is concerned with discrimination in areas where laws are difficult to enforce—public accommodations, educational settings, real estate, work environments, and similar areas.

"What we're concerned about with these people is that it's our responsibility to see that every person in the state of Idaho has the right to live without harras-ment because of their race," said Sullivan. "From what I hear these people are not concerned about the rights of others."

On the local level, the Kootenai County Task Force on Human Rights was formed about four years ago in response to the Aryan Nations presence in the area. According to Reverend Bill Wassmuth, chairman of the task force, the group of local citizens has five goals:

1. To promote positive human relations
2. To aid and support victims of racial or religious harrasment
3. To promote legislation helpful to their cause
4. To keep documents and records on incidents of harrasment in the area
5. To promote an accurate reflection of community attitudes

Father Wassmuth, who said he is a member of the task force as an interested community member, and not as a church official, said that the task force implements their goals in various ways.

They aided the woman whose children were threatened, and keep an ear out for other victims.

"The most important thing was that she knew she had support in the community," said Wassmuth.

The task force is composed of six committees, one of which is concerned with making children aware of ethnic differences in a postive way.

"We want to promote international, interracial celebrations," explained Wassmuth, citing Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, which is now a national holiday, as an example.

The Anti-Defamamtion League of B'nai B'rith, a national Jewish group which opposes racial and religious discrimination, also tries to educate children in schools nation wide.

"I think every ethnic minority has a reason to fear them."

"We provide public information, information to the media, work in the schools, and when necessary support legislation," said Marvin Stern, an ADL lawyer, in a telephone interview from the ADL office in Seattle.

Because the Aryans consider Jews inferior, and have made threats toward the group in general, the ADL monitors the groups activities and has a strong interest in the Aryans.

Stern said that yesterday in Seattle 23 members of The Order, a militant group which splintered off from the Aryans, were indicted on charges varying from murder to the bombing of a Jewish synagogue in Boise last spring.

"They have targeted groups—they're a threat to society in general," said Stern.

"They have the type of weapons, the type of paramilitary training, that is a threat to everyone, not just Jews."

Sullivan agrees.

"I think every ethnic minority has reason to fear them," she said.

Butler has spoken of race war in which the Aryans would emerge victorious, but Stern doubts that the group would initiate any such conflict because, according to ADL reports, support for white supremacy groups in the United States is falling, and the numbers of active members is too small.

"I don't see how they can," said Stern. "It's not going to happen."

Broadbent voiced similar views.

"They keep setting back the 'war' date," he said. "I don't give them any credence."

Broadbent said he did not know if the numbers of Jesus Christ Christian members is decreasing as speculated, and he said there is no indication that their group is planning on leaving the area.

Still, many area residents would be happy to see the group relocate and take the publicity surrounding the group with them.

"We were criticized, press wise, for giving them publicity," said Sullivan. "We really had to make a very thoughtful decision about what the risks were to be open about what was happening up there. We realized that while we were trying not to alarm the state and not give them undue publicity, they were increasing, and they were having national media attention."

Most of the publicity, especially the national coverage, has focused on the attitudes of the Aryan Nations members, and not on the local residents.

Wassmuth was upset over a recent article in Time magazine because it did not include the

Parking issue under pressure

By Roger Gabourey
Staff Writer

The campus parking problem will be among the items on the Faculty Council agenda in their meeting at 3:30 today in the Brink Hall lounge.

The council will try to resolve the issue so it can be presented at the general faculty meeting April 25. All items discussed by the Faculty Council this year will be presented at the general faculty meeting.

Resolution of the parking problem was postponed for two weeks in the council's April 2 meeting in order to get a proposal from the ASUI Senate.

Today's council meeting will be the last chance for the council to pass issues they want presented to the general faculty.

In an attempt to get through all important issues, Faculty Council Chairman Roy S. Fluhrer called special sessions of the council last Thursday and Friday. The council passed, with amendments, changes in the financial exigency policy and staff reduction procedures proposed by the ad-hoc committee to review American Association of University Professors (AAUP) censure.

The ad-hoc committee was charged by the council last year to review University of Idaho, regents and AAUP policies and to recommend actions that the

Natural resource week here

This year's Natural Resources week celebration got off to a great start over the weekend with the Second Annual FWR Alumni Association kicking off the activities on Saturday, April 13. The open site day at the Logger Sports Site was also successful as many faculty members brought their families out to try such events as crosscut sawing, birling, and the axe throw. That evening the second annual FWR Student-Faculty-Alumni Banquet was held. But the events aren't through.

Monday's activities center around urban (or community) forestry with Gary Merrill, an urban forester from Murray City Utah, giving two talks. One is "Urban Forestry as a Career" and is in the FWR at 12:30 p.m. The other is at the Moscow Community Center at 7:30 p.m. and is titled "Moscow's Trees: Today and Tomorrow."

Tuesday the mystery of the boat on the east patio of the Forestry Building will be unleashed. At 12:30 p.m. it will be dedicated. That evening at 7 p.m. freem movies will be shown in room 10 in the Forestry building.

A campfire program in the Shattuck Aboretum will be the highlight of Wednesday. It will discuss Lewis and Clark's travels through the Northwest. Also on Wednesday at 11:30 a.m. Bev Driver will be giving a talk titled "The Use of Social Science Research for Defining the Products of Natural Resource Management." This is part of the college's 75th anniversary celebration and will be in FWR 10.

John Baden, Executive Director of the Political Economy Research Center in Bozeman Montana, will be a speaker on Thursday. His topic will be titled "Toward an ideological synthesis in public land policy: the new resource economics." This will be at 12:30 p.m. in UCC 112.

The day for games will be Fri-

Argonaut receives advertising award

"People were really happy for us. They were supportive in that a school from Idaho would even be a member of the corporation. I think it made a lot of big schools, who traditionally think that circulation is directly related to quality and professionalism, take smaller papers a little more seriously."

The competition was judged by David S. Parker, who is currently Retail Advertising Manager at the Oakland Tribune. Helping the Argonaut earn its award were sales increases of 40% over the last year, an upgraded media kit, more intensive training, the advertising manager not having to sell ads, improved collections.

At the 13th Annual College Newspaper Business and Advertising Managers, Inc. (CNBAM) convention in San Francisco, the Argonaut received the Newspaper Trendsetter Honorable Mention Award for improvement in many areas of advertising and business.

Argonaut Advertising

Manager Suzanne Gore and Sales Director Jennifer Levanger met with a group of 165 students and professionals representing 90 college newspapers around the country. The group competed for awards and traded newspaper advertising information and ideas at the San Franciscan Hotel for five days April 10-14.

After receiving the award at the closing ceremonies awards banquet, Gore said students should be honored the Argonaut stood on the same level as daily papers other papers committed to much larger circulations and with professionals working on their staffs.

"I went into shock," said Gore, "when they announced the award. To my knowledge, a first year member of CNBAM has never received such an award as this."

No excuse

Today's meeting of the Faculty Council promises to be, at the very least, an interesting one. The council is set to discuss options for campus parking. By all accounts, the group will vote to accept the recommendations of its ad hoc parking committee. The recommendations advocate the elimination of core parking for students, an end to "intentional egalitarianism."

If the council votes to proceed with this option it will be making a serious mistake, one which could seriously damage student/faculty relations.

The whole issue of parking in the campus' core has little to do with parking — the real issue is the frustration, anger and despair which is a continual part of the fiscal lives of UI faculty members. Striking out at students is a sign of that frustration; frustration, however, is no excuse for tearing apart a working — and workable — relationship. The ad hoc committee completely disregarded the earlier report of the official parking committee, opting instead for confrontation rather than cooperation.

Students regret conditions in the university, but we cannot be held hostage to the state's inability to come to terms with its obligations to the faculty and students of this university.

Because consensus and fairness should be a part of this decision, it is all the more surprising that members of the council and general faculty are so predisposed to shut students out. Statements within the ad hoc committee's report which implied — in none too subtle language — that students are deserving of second-class status. That kind of language has been popping up more and more often lately, and must be seen as a release from the frustrations UI faculty face.

The below-par salaries and benefits paid to educators at the UI are frustrating, and few students would deny the need for increases in salaries. What students cannot stomach, however, is the constant demand that they pick up the tab, in both dollars and loss of services. Students are being asked, in essence, to supply a faculty fringe benefit through these proposed changes. Students resent the ad hoc committee's attempt to make them pay for the state's inability to adequately support university employees.

The whole parking issue has only one loser — the average UI student. The faculty, regardless of the outcome, will have vented its collective spleen on students; the board and legislature will emerge blameless as students and employees devour one another.

A fight between the two parties which give the university its life will not solve any problems; the meanness reflected in the ad hoc committee's report shows up, however, the level of frustration and anger the faculty feel, and something must be done to assuage that anger.

But not at the expense of the students of this university.

Long Canyon

Randy Balice

Long Canyon is a roadless area in Boundary County that has attracted national attention during the recent debate on wilderness. In combination with the Selkirks Crest, 46,000 acres of glaciated landscape are under consideration in the wilderness issue.

The vegetation in Long Canyon is predominantly old-growth forest that provides habitat for many wildlife species, as well as peaceful scenery for the hiker. This same old-growth timber, although only 3% of the total for Boundary County, is coveted by the local forest products industry. They see it as critical to their long-term survival needs.

According to this interest group, logging in Long Canyon would provide increased habitat for big game, including caribou, and outdoor enthusiasts would enjoy scenic vistas which are presently obscured by forests. They also claim that logging would also reduce the potential for devastating fires.

Thus, to say that the decision concerning the best management plan for Long Canyon is complex would be an understatement.

What is missing from this discussion are basic definitions of "what wilderness is," "how it should be managed" and "the relationships between wilderness and adjacent lands and populations centers."

Sen. McClure has claimed to be a "purist" concerning wilderness. According to this philosophy, lands with abandoned wagon roads, barely perceptible today, would be eliminated from consideration as wilderness.

Others find no conflict between certain management practices and wilderness conditions. Although mining of existing claims and grazing are presently allowed in wilderness, some suggest that other management activities might include trail maintenance and underburns to reduce the fire hazard. These examples provide a hint of the chasm separating opposing viewpoints.

The economic downswing of the late 1970's found Idaho ill-prepared. Previous decades of steady economic growth had fostered a smugness and complacency among those, at all levels, who depended on extractive industries for their livelihood. Rather than evaluating all possible long-term trends in our economic analyses, we have concerned ourselves with our next ORV or condo purchase. Rather than considering the overall ability of the land to support increased population levels, we merely verified that our present income would support more children.

But the days of limitless, developmental growth are over. Now that we are witnessing a major shift from an industrial-based economy to an information/service society, Idahoans are finding themselves squarely in the middle of the hole they have dug.

Regretably, we have not learned from the lessons of the past. For instance, we have not grown to realize that our economic infrastructure is largely dependent on the economic-political fortunes, or misfortunes, elsewhere in the world. Many Idahoans attempt to use an isolationist perspective when considering economic and social conditions. Thus, instead of constructing new long-term, regional plans which incorporate updated information and understanding, we point fingers and repeat outmoded, discredited adages. Instead of adopting new personal strategies which combine old values with contemporary goals in a logical, consistent and uncompromising manner, we become evangelistic and cling to simplistic mores in the hopes that someone else will make the correct decisions for us.

The result has been a series of conflicts in a variety of public issues, including the wilderness debate. Until we develop a coherent, internally consistent self image and a responsible regional attitude, these problems will not disappear.

Until major steps are taken, important public decisions will be based on outdated information or assumptions or, in the case of wilderness, will not be made at all. For our roadless lands, this means that pristine areas will not be set aside, valuable timber will not be available to the local mills, wildlife habitat will suffer and fire hazards will increase.

For Long Canyon and other places, the time has yet to come when we can guarantee that they will enter the 21st century in a condition for which we can be proud. Until that time, Long Canyon can only wait in silence.

A summer surprise

Lorene Oates

Several times during the summers while I was growing up in Caldwell, a couple of friends and I would ride our bikes past the school playground, yelling and teasing the kids in summer school. Yes, I knew all about summer school. It was strict and rigorous and only for those who failed during the school year. I knew those kids never had an ounce of fun. And I even heard from the local clubhouse talk that they had shorter recesses. I was too smart for summer school. I was good all year. Besides, I wanted my summers for doing important things like going to Girl Scout Camp, taking vacations, and later bugging my mother because I was bored.

What a relief it was for everyone when I finally returned to school in the fall and all my old pals were again my partners in tetherball. The excitement of the days consisted of comparing sack lunches and trading twinkies. Life was good. It seemed easier when I was ten.

What happened when I realized last February I should spend the summer in Moscow in school? First I cried. No way I exclaimed! I don't go to summer school. It just isn't me. Moscow is dead in the summer!!! I heard the rumors. Why, they even close down Mort's Club. Be real! As I looked out the window onto the snow covered Ad lawn I sunk into despair.

Many days and discussions later reasoning appeared. During a deep "what are you going to do with your life" discussion at the Garden Lounge, a friend told me she had found an answer. She said she was concerned and wanted to help. Lisa boldly pulled a summer bulletin from her pack. She said she was going. With that somber speech Lisa quaffed her ale, laughed loudly and hurried out before I could protest. Reluctantly I began to browse through the bulletin.

As I consulted the bulletin I realized I could knock off 10 credits in eight weeks, including finally getting into the English 104 class I had been locked out of for the past two semesters. Why there was even time to still take the trip to the coast with my friends.

Admittedly I wasn't excited about attending summer school, but as I looked deeper into the programs I started seeing the benefits. I made my plan. I would stay in Moscow and go to school. Can you imagine my relief when I realized I could knock off Social Psych in four weeks? Incredible, I exclaimed, as I remembered how my roommate had struggled for 18 weeks last semester.

By taking 10 credits in summer school I could finish school in December. And while my friends are slopping through snow to class, I'll be cruising to the bank with a paycheck. This year, the early registration process is so easy I can mail it in during the commercial break of All My Kids.

The more I read, the better it sounded. This would move me one step closer to graduation and seeking the elusive "real job" my father so often speaks of.

My decision to give up my summer plans for summer school wasn't easy at first. In fact, I was rather reluctant. But I mentioned it to a few friends and soon learned a lot of us were staying here. Maybe I won't be destined to a lonely summer highlighted by reading the home town newspaper in the library. We decided it was about time we "native Idahoans" finally take that raft trip we always have talked about. Of course then we planned the barbecues.

Matt told me he is a wizard with the hibachi. Lisa makes a mean potato salad, and Debra even admitted she could pick out a good watermelon. Hmmm, I could already smell the burgers on the grill and hear the sound of the keg being tapped.

Later I kicked back at Gambino's and reflected about my decision over a fishbowl. It was then that I admitted that life really isn't as much fun as it appears in beer commercials. So I will stay in 'scow, and live the good life this summer. And next year I'll step into school a step ahead because this summer, Summer Session is my summer choice.

Berg defends ASUI

Editor,

Every year, students spend a lot of money of fees. In return, we are supposed to get a quality education and the benefits of an ASUI membership. As members of the ASUI, we would like to see our money put in good use, and Senator Berg is seeing that it is. We would like to thank Chris for making the students' money isn't being abused. So Mr. Lyons, mellow out, huh? Chris was just making sure that the ASUI van was being used for a legitimate purpose. Oh yeah, and if your excursion to Lewiston was so incredibly official, why did you pack up the whole family? You're not Jed Clampett you know. Finally, please let us know when you do an article on the "Boyer Symposium," we'd love to go along.

So, what's up?

Editor,

So, what's going on with the arms control front in the U.S. lately? Well, let's see-we just "controlled" the MX missile: the House and Senate voted to appropriate and deploy 21 more missiles at a cost of $1.5 billion (21 more missiles than the 21 already in production). Of course, we "needed" the MX. Yes, it has been sold by the administration as a "bargaining chip". But, it is perplexing that the MX has never been put on the table, and the administration shows no intentions to ever abandon MX production or deployment. In fact, Reagan wants to build 48 more missiles for fiscal 1986 at a cost of $4 billion.

And, what about Reagan's space weapons program? The 1986 budget includes $262.7 million for ASAT's antisatellite

UI takes 3 of 4 in round robin tourney

By Greg Kilmer
Sports Editor

The University of Idaho baseball club took full advantage of sunny skies this weekend as they grabbed three of four ballgames from visiting Montana and Boise State at Guy Wick's Field.

Of the four games, Sunday's first game was the most exciting, and included a game-ending defensive gem.

With Idaho clinging to a one run lead in the final stanza, BSU had runners on first and second with two dead. The Bronco hitter lined a single up the middle which Vandal center fielder Tom Watkins fielded cleanly. Watson delivered a strike to the cut-off man, second baseman Joe Lobb, who turned and delivered his own to nail the Boise runner at the plate to preserve the 8-7 win.

Gary Farwell led the Idaho offensive effort with two hits. He was followed by Russ Wright, Mark Carbon and Watkins, all with one each.

Vandal pitcher Tom Sipinen picked up his second win of the weekend in relief for the Idaho club.

Sipinen collected his first in a 14-2 romp over Montana in Saturday's late game. The righthander struck out one Grizzly batter while yielding only five hits.

The Vandal bats pounded out 10 hits in total. The highlights were round-trippers by Steve Higgins and Watkins.

Pitching was also the highlight of the opener as Vandal starter Dave Pinney went seven strong innings for the win. Pinney struck out six Grizz while allowing five hits.

Catcher Russ Wright had the game winning hit in the third inning of the 3-2 Idaho win. Bill Brock, Chris Huck, Farwell and Lobb also contributed singles.

The club was denied the sweep of the four-game tourney, mostly due to a six-run Grizz first inning and some nifty pitching from UM pitcher Harvey Schultz. The Grizz side-armor held the Vandals to only one run in the 9-1 Montana victory.

"We played well all weekend," Idaho coach Paul Mather said. "We hit the ball well and our defense was pretty solid."

"Our pitching was good throughout," Mather said. "In the last game, Luke Aldrich came in and threw six strong innings for us."

The club travels to Missoula for a four game, three team round-robin tourney. Idaho will face Idaho State and Missoula for two games each in the two game tourney.

Ooops!

Some person, not to be described, told me that THE fight was gonna be on HBO last night. And you know how you believe what you want to hear.

I was jacked. This was really going to be a classic, the Marvelous One versus the Hitman. This year's version of the "Fight of the Century."

Downtown Detroit vs. Brockton, Mass - it just had to be a war.

My first thought was, "Who do I know that has HBO?" It took me a while, but then I remembered a very, very dear friend who forks out the extra $10 every month.

Well, I was extra nice to him for a couple days, so that was set. Now down to my homework.

Growing up in a southern Idaho town where the closest thing to boxing is Saturday night behind the DeRail Tavern, I had to check into some things. People ask sports editors questions about this stuff, so you gotta be ready.

First of all, both have butted heads with Roberto Duran recently. Sure, ol' "hands of stone" is on the other side of the hill, but he's no Tony Banta.

Marvelous wasn't, and Tommy made him "mind of stone." Advantage, Mr. Hearns.

Hagler has never been down, even through those brawls with that crazy Italian, Vito Autefurmo.

Sugar sat Hearns on his keister and had him in trouble when they stopped it.

One apiece. 5-foot-9 1/2, 160 pound Hagler is 60-2-2. The 6-foot-1, 160 pound Hearns is 40-1.

One notch for Tommy for height and reach.

Hagler has a menacing bald head and sports a just as menacing Van Dyke. Hearns is from MoTown's Kronk Gym and dons his own bad-ass Van Dyke. Draw - Tommy still one up.

Hagler refrains from sex for a month before fights; Hearns, for a month and a half. Two weeks can make one a little nastier.

One more notch for Tommy. Playboy's Lawrence Linderman said in May's issue that

Greg Kilmer

Hearns regards his right hand "the way King Arthur regarded Excalibur."

Game, set, match - Mr. Hearns. Hagler goes down in the seventh.

Now I was ready. Got me a 5 cent, foot-long Havana and looked for my first pigeons to pluck.

My hunt didn't last long: one of those damn pigeons informed me that it wasn't going to be on HBO. You had to drive up to the Sheraton in Spokane and fork out big bucks to sit with the 50 year old sugar daddies and their 20 year old blond "nieces."

Regardless what our beloved senate says, on an Argonaut salary I've got as much as chance to do that as the Mariners have for the pennant.

Oh well, all is not lost. I could still get some monetary gain out of this (excuse me) blockbuster.

But once again it rained on my parade. I couldn't find any Marvelous money out there.

Served every regular sucker that I carouse with fancied the Hitman. Musta done their homework, too.

Guess my hometown isn't the only one with a DeRail.

Sullivan emphasizes human potential

By Mike Grasseschi
Staff Writer

Lack of sight doesn't necessarily mean loss of vision. Tom Sullivan is living proof of this. This became very obvious to me as I attended both a press conference held for Tom and his talk given on Friday night at seven o'clock in the Student Union Building Ballroom. But first let us take a look back on Tom's life.

Tom was born prematurely, and placed in an incubator where he was exposed to a little too much oxygen. As a result of this error, a film formed over the lenses of his eyes and left him blind.

When going through school, it seemed as if Tom was good at everything that he did, but he had no friends. Athletics at the time was out of the question. But one day when Tom was only a youngster, he was called "Blindy" by a classmate.

"This," he said, "was what made me competitively angry." Indeed it did make him competitive, for he involved himself in golfing, skydiving, marathon running, wrestling; in fact, as a wrestler, Tom captured a national amateur wrestling title and in 1968 he tried out for the U.S. Olympic team of wrestlers. Tom has attempted 37 sky dives.

"I must have been drinking at the time" he says. "I quit because on my last jump I almost killed myself when I landed in a tree, breaking several of my ribs and a lot of other bones." His dog, Dinah, a golden retriever who was also in attendance at the press conference, was with him on that dive. Tom said that his first book, called 'If you could see what I Hear' would likely have a successor written by Dinah entitled "I saw what the Son-of-a-bitch Heard!" So he definitely is not without a sense of humor, a fact which became more evident as I listened to him talk.

In college Tom began singing to pay for his masters degree in child psychology at Harvard. He was on the Harvard crewing team and rowed in the famous Henely Regatta in 1967. Since his singing days, Tom has produced several albums in which he sings and plays the piano, but they are under small or defunct record labels. Yet on part of his life that really changed Tom happened in California when he went there to "be a star."

One day, as he was taking a swim with his young daughter, he received a telephone call from inside the house. It turned out to be a record producer who was interested in Tom, and he got so excited that he forgot about his daughter. When he finally did remember, he ran outside. All was quiet, nothing at all. Even as he called her name, he suddenly was able to discern the sound of air bubbles rising to the surface, and was thus able to dive in and save her, though not without some resuscitation methods used. It was then, Tom said, that "I realized that I had been a lousy father, a lousy parent."

"This brought Tom around to the subject of fathers."

"I haven't seen mine for ten years now, nor heard from him. Fathers, for some macho reason, are afraid to talk to their children. They just talk at them." Silence filled the SUB Ballroom as doubtless some fathers were wondering if this might mean them.

"I started this concept of going to campuses a few years ago when I went to a campus somewhere and asked the kids what they wanted. It seemed that nearly all of them merely wanted a job, especially in fields such as accounting or computer science, which are considered 'safe' fields. It seemed as if though none of them were in the liberal arts as their major, though we never had majors in the 1960s. In fact," Tom joked, "I was undeclared on graduation day!"

"Labels," said Tom, "are very limited. The fact that I am blind does not mean that I am not a father, an author, a golfer, a humanitarian-I want 'blind' to be at the bottom of that list." And because of this labeling, there is much prejudice.

"There is as much prejudice from the disabled against the able as there is the other way around, and I attribute that to the labeling system," said Sullivan. The only way that Tom was able to combat that prejudice was by listening to the words of Martin Luther King, a big force in his life as a blind man without hope.

But one wonders what Tom would be doing if he were not technically blind.

"I would have been a ball player, not an artist. I don't think that I would have the drive that I have now." What really gave him his drive was simply being lonely as a child, for "if you are lonely and angry as a child, you will compete, and I was angry. So to be equal to everyone else I had to do more than they did. But I think that I was fortunate compared to other disabled because I was musical and athletic."

So the message that Tom brought to us was getting clearer and clearer. We are all individuals with unique skills and traits, and once we find them we can use them to our advantage. By doing this we become even more individualized, and we enjoy life immensely. We must throw off all labels and forge ahead, not letting what other people do and what they are dictate what we do and what we are. When looking for a job, you don't necessarily have to play it safe. Take a risk, do what you want to do.

"No one is perfect," said Tom, "not you, not I." Nor should we expect perfection from ourselves; merely seeking the best of ourselves makes us individuals in our own right. Finally, Tom ended his often funny, moving, entertaining, and profound talk with a song he wrote himself, "Beauty is in the Eye of the Beholder."

weapons designed to knock-out Soviet satellites in orbit. A moratorium on testing ASAT's was established last year by Congress in hopes of arms control. That moratorium ends soon and testing is likely to begin again. Kind of a strange thing to be doing while negotiating for arms control with the Soviets.

Then there is Star Wars. Sounds like a great idea? Reagan's 1983 proposal for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) or Star Wars was to build a space-based defense system against nuclear missiles. The fiscal 1986 budget includes $3.7 billion for research alone. A lot of people think that this is money spent on systems that have no hope of ever working. Carl Sagan (the astronomer who has been informing us about Nuclear Winter) has said that he's not too worried about the Soviets getting ahead in this area because the same laws of physics apply to both countries. If the money spent did give us the objective, we would be deploying a space-based ballistic missile. Unfortunately this deployment would violate our most vital standing arms control agreement with the Soviets, the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. Somehow, I just can't understand the concept-break treaties to make treaties?

The administration proposes to spend approximately $1 trillion on the military budget and another $1 trillion on Star Wars over the next five years. This is an awful lot of "defense" spending. We must be very worried about the Soviets...the ones we can't trust. But as we build more and more weapons, offensive and defensive, so do the Soviets.

And we trust them more and more each day. We trust them never to use these weapons.

Am a reg reviewed

Editor,

The University of Idaho Pro-Life Students will be showing the film "Death in the Nursery" on Wednesday, April 17 at 7:30 p.m. in the SUB Borah Theater. This film is a CBS TV Special produced in May 1983 and follows reporter Carlton Sherwood as he investigates the issues involved in the Indiana Baby Doe Case. The case and others like it prompted the federal government to issue regulations making it illegal not to provide treatment and nutrition for handicapped newborns. There is opposition to these regulations by the AMA and it is likely that the controversy of infanticide will not go away. We encourage everyone to view this film and become more informed on the subject.

a new invoice system, a citation for a UI Bookstore add entitled, "The Best of the Rockies" and for the fact the Argonaut achieved two different projected incomes in the same year. The extra income paid for the trip to the convention.

In light of recent salary controversies among Argonaut staffers, Gore questioned school newspapers of all sizes on pay scales—especially those run by non-professional staff.

According to Gore, the Advertising Manager for New York University's Washington Square News currently makes $100 a page for every page in the paper. She also said the newspaper is dependant upon student fees but governed by a student board of trustees.

The University of Hawaii newspaper pays a 20 percent commission to all staff sales people while the Argonaut is limited to a commission of ten percent as specified by the ASUI Budget.

"It's important to note that most schools are separate from their student governments and, in cases where they don't take student fees, regulate their own budget. I'm proud the Argonaut has increased sales to the point where student fees have not increased while the size of the paper has."

Gore, a senior majoring in Communications-Advertising, was also named as Associate Editor of Ad Linage—CNBAM's newsletter that is distributed six times a year to over 400 different schools.

"With my editing experience," said Gore, "I'm anxious in getting back into writing and getting into keeping in communication with other schools. Levanger, a junior majoring in Advertising, will replace Gore at her current job as CNBAM's regional representative in Region One, which includes Oregon, Washington and Idaho."

 opinions of locals who disagree with the group's beliefs. He said the magazine notified him that they would not publish his letter to the editor because of space restrictions.

Wassmuth and Sullivan believe that Butler's church, which had its tax exemption as an official church revoked over a year ago, should not be considered a religious organization.

"How can a group that preaches hate and vengeance be considered a church?" said Wassmuth. "They have the right to say they are a church; the rest of society has the right to decide whether or not to treat them as a church."

Sullivan said that there is little comparison between the group and organized churches of any faith.

Wassmuth hopes that concerned citizens and groups such as the Kootenai County Task Force can encourage racial interaction and create a climate in the area so inhospitable to group that they will leave.

"There is no place for the Aryan Nations in an area where there are no vestiges of prejudice," he said.

The Aryans Nations have benefited Idahoans in one way, said Wassmuth.

"We will be a less prejudiced community," he said, "if we response to it in the proper way."

UI faculty, administration and regents might take so that the censure might be lifted.

After council and committee members debated for the five total hours of special session time, the council passed the committee's recommendations and powered the committee to make technical adjustments in the document in order to avoid contradictions.

The committee's recommendations, as presented to the council, identified ways to alter the existing policy and procedure to conform with generally recognized standards, including:

--that a year's notice be given to tenured faculty members who are to be laid off due to financial exigency;

--that "financial exigency" be defined as a crisis that threatens the viability of the institution as a whole;

--that the role of the faculty in the declaration of financial exigency and the implementation of procedures be more clearly defined and substantive;

--that a faculty member who is laid off may appeal, contesting the validity of the declaration of a state of financial exigency, the validity of criteria used to identify positions to be eliminated and the validity of the application of the criteria to the particular faculty member.

Smokey the Bear should also be making an appearance. These activities are all scheduled between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Saturday, April 20 wraps up the week with the 6th annual Moscow Mountain Mud Run and the annual Natural Resources Week Barbeque (we're up to about 61 years on that now). These will both be occurring at Big Meadow Creek Recreation Area outside of Troy, Idaho. The run starts at 10 a.m. and the Barbeque at 1 p.m.
