

Depression:

Sometimes we all need help

By Sarah Kerruish
Of the Argonaut

Students often come to college unprepared for the reality of being a student. By now most students will have realized that university life is not just one big party. Even the most well balanced people have difficulty in adjusting to their new environment.

The mid-term blues are a familiar phenomena to the more experienced student. A host of factors like low mid-term grades, financial problems, and the deteriorating weather, contribute to making it an often depressing time of the year. The excitement of a new term has disappeared amongst the piles of mundane work.

Most students will admit, if pressed, to having suffered depression at some time in their university career. There is a prevalent feeling in society that to admit to having problems is a weakness. While not advocating that depressed students become the party bores and tell everyone how miserable they feel and how awful life is, psychologists say that the first step in solving a problem is to talk about it.

Sindy (not her real name) is a freshman. (All names in this article have been changed at the request of the students.) Sindy has found her first few weeks at the university an overwhelming experience. "I know lots of people but I still feel very homesick and insecure," she said. "I think I may have made a mistake coming here," she said. Asked if she had considered going to a student counselling service, Sindy said that she hadn't. She said that her Mom is her counsellor.

Friends and relatives are the obvious people to talk to. Most real friends will be only too glad to help. They may need a shoulder to cry on someday. But sometimes an objective third person is required to help.

"We try to help students to remove obstacles that hinder their school progress or their personal happiness."
Jim Morris of Student Counselling Center

Jane suffered a massive depression and could not isolate the problem. "I was lethargic and miserable," she said. "My grades were poor but it wasn't that I'm not smart because I got A grades at school. There were times when I would just stand at the window and cry helplessly," she said. Friends were of no help to Jane so she finally turned to the campus Student Counselling Center for help. "They taught me how to handle stress and to confront my main problem which was unhappiness with my major," she said. "I changed my major and then everything else fell into place," she said.

There are several places to go and get help if you have a problem which you can't deal with yourself. Jim Morris from the Student Counselling Center said that they deal with all sorts of problems, personal and vocational. "We try to help students to remove obstacles that hinder their school progress or their personal happiness," he said.

Doug said that he went to the center when his divorce went through. "I was reluctant to seek help," he said, "but I'm so glad I did because the counselling sessions helped restore my battered confidence."

Another facility on campus for counselling is the UI Psychology clinic. The clinic provides individual, couple and family therapy. A psychologist there said that they can't wave a magic wand and the problem will go away but that admitting the problem and talking about it is a valuable first step.

"We get a lot of positive feedback from the people we counsel," the psychologist said. She listed a series of general depression symptoms which includes loss of interest in pleasure, lethargy, unusual changes in eating habits, feelings of worthlessness and inadequacy, frequent thoughts of death or suicide and a general feeling of being down.

Experiencing one or some of these feelings does not mean necessarily that you need help but they might be indications that there is a problem in your life which needs confronting.

If your problem reaches crisis point at a time when the regular counsellors are not available call Nightline, a crisis hot line. Alternatively if the problem is very serious the Mental Health Center is open 24 hours a day. Sadly some students can't cope and they attempt suicide. If you feel that desperate then please go and talk to somebody immediately.

Some of the counselling services available in and around Moscow are listed below. The services are free and they will always be glad to help you.

Some chairmen may get pay

By Megan Guido
Of the Argonaut

The real action took place not in the Senate meeting but in the Finance meeting Monday night when six ASUI board chairmen came to ask the senate to pass the bills establishing salaries for three board chair positions that are currently unpaid.

Out of eight board chair positions, the PCC (Political Concerns Committee) Chair and the Recreational Facilities Board Chair do not receive pay by the ASUI for their work. The Golf Course Board Chair receives free golf for his work but no pay. Four board chairs receive $75 a month.

The Election Board Chair receives pay on a per election basis.

The bills establishing salaries for the unpaid positions have been held in Finance for two weeks. The reason the bills were tabled, according to Finance Chair Scott Speelman, was to research which of the currently unpaid positions demand more time and work, and pay them accordingly.

But President Jane Freund said at the meeting, "I don't think anybody in the ASUI is in the position to judge anybody on what they are or are not doing."

"There are senators who put in their $75 worth and more and those who don't put in their $75," she added. "I think it's important to make sure your record is clean yourself, before you judge anybody else."

Some senators said the Golf Course Board Chair should receive no more reimbursement than the free golf. Senator Cheri Sabala said, "I feel free golf is sufficient for the job he's going to be doing."

Jan Laes, Recreational Facilities Board Chair, said he spends four or five hours a week in the office and his board oversees many operations including the Kibble Dome, Outdoor Rentals and the Outdoor Program.

After almost two hours of discussion, a compromise was reached. The senate proposed paying the PCC, Recreational Facilities Board and Golf Board Chairs $75 a month for this semester but the senate will determine work policies for future board chairs, such as hours spent working and legal liability.

Senator Holli Crawford said, "You have to pay people to get a job done."

Senator David Dose said, "I agree they ought to be paid, but I don't like this attitude that they are just three more people who should be paid." He called the ASUI Rules and Regulations a "farce" and said very few job descriptions are available. "That's why I propose there be a lot of research into hours you spend, legal liability, and pay scales. Maybe some of you will come out on top of the senators (salary-wise) but it would be for the best."

Drew Yoder, Election Board Chair, said, "If we (board chairs) give you the policies of what we do, you should decide on what to pay us, but not until you see the policies."

The bills were resubmitted with the new proposal to the senate for consideration. They will be brought up for a vote at next week's Senate meeting.

At this week's senate meeting, Dean Boston was appointed Faculty Council Representative after Rance Pugmire resigned the position.

A report from Kevin Odenborg, chair of the Student Union Board, was given. He said the board is working on utilizing more area in the SUB for studying space. He added the board will be asking for student input from students through surveys as to how improve the SUB.

Revenues are down in the game room and the copier and computer center, according to Odenborg.

Freund told Odenborg students she has talked with are "not happy" about the removal

Sex contracts: matter of evolution

By Erin Fanning
Of the Argonaut

Natural forces work against long term relationships, Helen Fischer said Wednesday afternoon during a press conference.

Fischer, an anthropologist and author of the best-selling book The Sex Contract: The Evolution of Human Behavior, said that because of evolutionary reasons including the moving from four legs to two that patterns of bonding were formed for humans.

"The move from four legs to two created a smaller birth canal in females and by genetic chance some females began to have smaller babies," she said. Because of the smaller size the offspring became more dependent on the mother.

The woman thusly became more dependent on her partner creating the beginnings of bonding, she said.

Evolution can also be seen as the cause for divorce, she said.

Divorce rates had the same pattern across 59 countries she studied, Fischer said.

Most couples who divorce

"I want to explain to people why they behave. I want to bring anthropology to the public."
Helen Fischer

stay together at an average of 4 years and have one child, she said. They stay together long enough to maintain a bond and at least long enough to have a child, Fischer said.

"This suggests an ancient divorce strategy," she said. "It is probably an evolutionary phenomena."

Adultery can also be explained through evolution, she said.

For the man it is a case of survival of the fittest, Fischer said. The biological desire to spread genes across society is the reason men may have adulterous affairs, she said.

Since women can only have a certain number of children, their motivation for adultery does not involve reproduction of the species, she said.

"If one bond is defunct then they can have another one waiting," she said.

Fischer said to have a long-term bond "you have to work on it and work on it hard."

"I want to explain to people why they behave," she said. "I want to bring anthropology to the public."

She spoke Wednesday night at an Issues and Forums lecture on her book The Sex Contract.

Speaking out

Debaters invade UI

By Roger Jones
Of the Argonaut

Later this afternoon, approximately 240 high school students will begin to arrive at the UI campus. They are all debate students and will be competing in the annual UI Invitational Debate tournament.

The tournament will be strongly pulling competitors from the Spokane, Boise and north Idaho areas. All of Idaho will be represented except the north east end of the state, Tom Jenness, director of the tournament, said.

The students will be competing in two man Oregon style cross-examination debates. The first round will begin at 5:30 tonight. Rounds will continue tonight, continuing through Saturday.

During this tournament the UI Invitational Traveling Sweepstakes trophy will be up for grabs. Jenness said that this year the main competitors for this award will probably be Weiser, Grangeville, and Capital.

"It's a real good competition situation," Jenness said about the tournament. "A good feature is that it is early." Jenness continued explaining that an early tournament in the debate season would allow the schools to more quickly evaluate their competition standings.

Bomb threat mania takes Moscow

By Shawn McIntosh
Of the Argonaut

There were two bomb threats last week and one this week in Moscow, one at the UI Music Building last Friday, another at Moscow High School earlier in the week and another at Moscow Junior High School on Monday.

The Music Building received a call Friday at 9:57 a.m. stating that there was a bomb in the building and that it was going to go off that morning.

Sgt. Dan Weber said that there was a test scheduled that morning at 10:30 in the building and that there was a "high likelihood" that was the real motive of the bomb threat, since the Music Building is usually uncontroversial.

Unless an actual explosive device is found, nobody can evacuate the building except Greg Steinke, administrator of the building and director of the Department of Music. Sgt. Dan Weber of the campus police division praised Steinke's decisiveness and quick acting in getting everyone immediately out of the building.

After a thorough search by the police, no bomb was found and students were let back in the building at 1:30 p.m.

Weber thought that the bomb threat idea might have come from an earlier threat at Moscow High School. Students were evacuated to Moscow Community Center and the Moscow Police searched the school for an explosive device, with no success.

School officials decided to call off school for the day but are going to try to make up the lost school time on a weekend, said School Superintendent Alethia Fasolino. The superintendent added that the threat seemed more like a prank, but they would make every effort to find out who did it and prosecute them.

The police arrested and charged a 14-year-old Moscow boy with the bomb threat called in at 11:35 a.m. Monday at the Moscow Junior High School.

The boy has been charged with the felony offense of falsely reporting explosives — a charge with a maximum sentence of five years in the state penitentiary.

Police reports

Police reported that sometime between Oct. 21 and Oct. 22, someone smashed in the glass and frame of the U-Hut, located at University and Line St.

Over the weekend a vending machine at Wallace Complex was broken into and its contents were stolen, police reported.

Between Oct. 14 and Oct. 18, someone entered Rev. Jim Worsley's apartment at St. Augustine's Church and took between $100 and $150 cash.

Grapevine working

A new service that offers a listing of campus events such as football games and their times and SUB events is now being offered through the SUB.

The Grapevine can now be called to get the recorded listings. The number is 885-6160 and is in operation 24 hours a day.

Grapevine is a project of Advertising Club member Beth Lyon.

A U of I WAMI instructor has won an outstanding teaching award from the University of Washington School of Medicine.

Thomas A. McKean teaches courses in cellular physiology and the nervous system.

In other business, Freund stressed the senate was "not at fault" for the failure to make the deadline to contribute money to put together a survey asking students what kind of entertainment they would like to see.

"At no time were we told of the October 1 deadline," she said.

EDITORIAL

What does it taste like, really?

The Idaho Argonaut infrequently has reason to thank the Idaho Legislature, but fairness requires toasting nice happenings. Like a glass of "Vandal Gold" Idaho grey riesling wine, the boys (and girls) of Boise are providing a warm glow, and we wish to share it with our readers.

Over three-quarters of the Legislature — 95 of 126 persons — is Republican. Of course these officials voted for Ronald Reagan in 1984. They reflect their constituency, of which 72 percent also voted for Reagan. By all measures, our Legislature is conservative, professing a belief in as much local control as possible.

Reagan is also a conservative. He has spent most of his political life condemning government, especially the imposition of federal policies on the states. However, now that he is the head of the national government, he is using his power and influence to coerce the states into either changing certain laws, or lose federal highway dollars.

What does he want the states to do? Raise the legal drinking age to 21.

Our legislative leaders are facing two distasteful (for them) alternatives: to acquiesce to the Feds, or somehow pay for the roads themselves. The latter would require either raising taxes or cutting other state programs. Each has about the same chance as the proverbial snowball.

Traditionally, when Idaho politicians compromise their principles, expediency prevails. Usually, this means those to be sacrificed have the least amount of power and influence. This includes many of you, dear readers.

This might be an example of turkeys coming home to roost. Depending on the study, the 19 and 20 year-olds usually don't bother to exercise their franchise, but when they do, they vote for Republicans.

Not only will our Legislature probably swallow Ronald Reagan's federal force-feeding, they will make loyal noises that they are enjoying it. But that's okay, since it will help them remember the saying, "If you are going to feed at the public trough, you shouldn't complain about the swill."

Arg letter page no longer funny

Oh, how I long for the good ol' days when you could pick up an Argonaut and die laughing at some of the letters on the inside pages.

It seems, though, that those days are gone, as I have yet to get a kick out of any letter published this semester, save one.

In that one instance, a buddy of mine, Nathan Riggers, ripped some guy named Swami for a letter this Swami wrote dealing with a cartoon about some guy named Bhagwan. Keep up the good work, Nate.

But other than that gem, the letters section has been pretty dry, guys. Where are you when we need you, Bruce Skaug?

I suppose some of the blame has to be placed on the ASUI Senate and the people who deal directly with the ASUI Senate. They're usually good for a few laughs each semester. But apparently, it's not a playpen this year, or if it is, someone has stuck pacifiers in their mouths to keep them quiet.

I did read earlier in the semester, though, that the Senate rushed through its agenda one night so the members wouldn't miss the UI Homecoming bonfire. I wonder how many actually went. Oh, well.

It feels like it's time that we students start voicing our opinions in the form of letters to the Argonaut. Get involved, stir up some controversy. The Argonaut is no doubt hurting to fill that space anyway.

But just one thing. Please don't swamp the rest of us with quotes from the Bible. Don't get me wrong — I'm as Christian as the next guy, but if I want to see what's in the Good Book, I'll do it on my own. I'm in college now, and I can read all by myself, thank you.

REVIEW

Getting Out is powerful

By Douglas Jones and Sarah Korrulsh
Of the Argonaut

One of the many strengths of the current UI Theater Arts Department is the arsenal of talent among both students and directors.

Getting Out is testimony to this talent.

As written by Marsha Norman, and as directed by UI's Forrest Sears, Getting Out is a powerfully intense play.

As performed by the cast, the play peels away our obscuring shells of unawareness, forcing us to face the harsh reality of incest, rape, child molestation and prison environment.

From the play's beginning the audience is assaulted repeatedly with the terrible misfortune of a wild and maladjusted girl. The emotionally disturbed Arlie waves her hands through the air and tells us with childlike glee about the time she massacred her neighbor's pet frogs.

Then Arlene enters. She is subdued, betraying some of the same nervous habits of Arlie (her past self), but is determined to go straight.

Through the skillful juxtaposition of incidents in Arlene's life, past and present, a horrifying history of abuse is revealed. Arlene's father raped her, her mother was a prostitute, her child was taken from her prison guards and less than a dozen prisoners molested her.

Never does the action sink into sentimentality. The scenes are brutal, harrowing and realistic.

Kimberly Lenz (Arlene) and Chris Drobish (Arlie) give powerful performances worthy of dozens of roses. Lenz, who should get a shot at the American College Theatre Festival because of this performance, did an outstanding job of portraying a very complex character through difficult dramatic levels.

She draws us in and impells us to share the bewilderment, apprehension and desperation of a person just out of prison.

Drobish, too, holds us in an ambivalent spell both as a troubled girl and a bitter, confused young woman in prison.

Never does the action sink into sentimentality. The scenes are brutal, harrowing and realistic.

Bennie (Alvin Warnberg) is a link between Arlene and Arlie. He is a prison guard who drives Arlene to her new home outside prison. Bennie's role is ambiguous. He is very kind to Arlie in prison and yet attempts to rape Arlene.

Arlene's relationship with her mother (Tracey Nuxoll) is tortuous. There is almost an understanding between them.

but the mother remains imperious, or just ignores Arlene's obvious need for her.

Arlene's attempts to go straight are undermined by the arrival of an old pimp-boy-friend, Carl (Robert Morgan) who tries to lure her back to prostitution.

Another dimension of Arlene is revealed by her encounters with Ruby (Mindi Lyons). The traumatic moment when Arlene breaks down and allows herself to be comforted by Ruby is a glimmer of hope in the play.

The interchanges between Arlene and Arlie are skillfully executed. Action during flash back is surrealistically done without hand props.

This production is an intense, powerful drama, examining modern-day realism. It contains hard language and sexually explicit scenes.

Getting Out will play tonight and Saturday at 8 p.m. with a matinee on Sunday at 2 p.m.

American Festival Ballet plans to host fund-raiser

By Nella Letizia
Of the Argonaut

American Festival Ballet's major fund-raiser of the semester will be held tomorrow in Moscow.

Idaho's only professional ballet company will hold a Champagne Benefit at the Elks Temple at 7:30 p.m. according to Joann Muneta, American Festival Ballet's executive director in Moscow. Guests come by invitation and donations are encouraged.

Champagne is provided by the company and hors d'oeuvres will be supplied by volunteers, Muneta said. In addition, there will be a five-piece performance by the American Festival Ballet professional company and junior company.

The first piece is a selection from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to be performed by the junior company, Muneta said. The remaining pieces, "Don Quixote Pas de Deux," "Work Song," "Summertime" and "Catch a Tour" will be performed by the professional company.

The company expects to receive $4,000 from the benefit, plus an additional $1,000 from donations mailed in, Muneta said. "Our goal is to raise $5,000."

People who want invitations can call 882-7554 or 882-3648, Muneta said. "We usually get around 200 people," she said.

Tickets are on sale for $5 at the SUB Information desk, the Hotel Moscow, the UI College of Art and Architecture and One More Time.

Prizes for the costume competition include $50 and $25 cash prizes and a $25 certificate for One More Time, according to organizer Charlotte Buchanan of One More Time.

Decorations for the event are being done by UI Professor David Giese's art class.

There will be dancing in one part of the hotel and horror flicks in another part, said Buchanan.

This is the third year the event has been held.

UI vs. ISU

"There's no question, it's the biggest game of the year. Right now, they're number one and we could make it a four-way tie with a win. It's an in-state rivalry and a chance to get back the conference lead."— ISU head coach Jim Koetter.

"This is a particularly key game for us. ISU is an excellent football team on both sides of the football. In order for us to win the championship, we have to go down there and play well."— Idaho head coach Dennis Erickson.

Ruggers go 1-2 in Boise

By Tom Liberman
Of the Argonaut

The UI rugby club traveled to southern Idaho to play in the Boise Rugby Tournament last weekend.

Idaho opened the tournament against the University of Utah squad on a rock hard pitch with small hills and a cement pole vault runway nearby.

The matches had been scheduled for a pair of football fields but were moved to a nearby pitch to accommodate some youngsters' football games.

Idaho looked sluggish in the match as Utah ran up and down the field almost at will, scoring 36 points in the game.

The Utes won the majority of the rucks and thus controlled the ball for the majority of the game.

"They had the best hooker I've ever played against," said Idaho hooker Mike Healy.

A hooker plays the most important role in controlling the ball after it is thrown into the scrum by the scrum half.

The only bright spot of the match occurred when eight man Matt Hansen popped kicked the ball over the opposition, ran down his own ball and handed off to Bill Stockton, who took the ball the rest of the way for the score.

The second match of the day came against the Boise

Motherload team. Idaho controlled the ball much of the game and scored two tries in the first half.

Fullback Steve Wohlschlagel made a brilliant run down the right side of the field, breaking two tackles in his 60-yard jaunt.

Soon after that, outside center Brett Kleffner sprinted inside as he ran through two tackles on his way to another Idaho score.

The team had the ball on Boise's side of the field the rest of the game, but they were not to score any more and the final was 10-0 for Idaho.

The third game of the day came against the Snake River Snakes, who are considered one

UI falls to Cougs, MWAC honors Neely

By Kathy McCannies
Of the Argonaut

Idaho's ten match domination over the Washington State volleyball team came to a surprising halt Tuesday evening when the 7-15 Cougars stopped the 15-10 Vandals in WSU's Bohler's Gym.

"We blocked fairly well," commented Vandal head coach Pam Bradetich. "But our team attacking was ineffective." The Vandal's hitting percentage was a dismal .057.

The scores for the UI-WSU match were 15-8, 6-15, 15-8, 10-15, 10-15.

"We played well in the first game," said Bradetich. "But we let down in the second." The fate of defeat was sealed in the fifth and deciding game, when "we made mistakes in the end," lamented Bradetich.

The Vandals have two matches at home this weekend that are imperative to their standings in the Mountain West Athletic Conference. MWAC leader University of Montana (5-0 in league) and seventh place Montana State (1-4) will invade Memorial Gym October 25 and 26 in hopes of defeating the lady Vandals.

Vandal setter Kelley Neely named this year's first MWAC player of the week for her performance in last week's matches against Boise State and Portland State. The Idaho senior posted a .591 hitting average, 77 assists, 25 digs and four service aces on the two matches.

UI vs. UI

A volleyball game will solve the problem of who is the better athlete when the University of Idaho tennis and swim teams square off against each other Saturday, October 26.

The challenge will follow the UI volleyball match against Montana State in Memorial Gym.

The Idaho squad played sharper, and although the Snakes had the ball in Idaho territory for most of the game, they only got one touch.

There were some great tackles made by Kleffner and Rich Moore to stop the Snake River backs from scoring.

The Idaho forwards played inspired rugby as they won the majority of the rucks from the more experienced team.

The forwards played in all three games without any substitutions because Idaho is short of packies. Stockton played well in the pack even though he is usually a forward.

Although the Idaho men went 1-2 for the day, it was a good outing because of the experience gained by many of the new players and the improvement of play overall.
