

Students to cash in on VISA profits

BY DAWN BOBBY

Less than a week after Alumni Center officials announced the mailing of about 60,000 University of Idaho Visa card applications, they are already considering plans to utilize the funds earned to benefit students and university alumni.

According to Mary Kay McFadden, associate alumni relations director, the university will receive seven percent of the profits on the credit accounts, but will not receive any interest made from the cards.

Idaho First National Bank officials and the Vandal Boosters joined the Alumni Center to offer the special bankcards. The annual customer fee is $25.

The revenue generated from that return will be divided into three endowments: 25 percent for the Vandal Boosters Athletic Scholarship, 40 percent for the Alumni Scholarship, and 35 percent for new projects.

Among the ideas for new projects is a plan for alumni "summer camps."

"It's a long way into the future," said McFadden, "but it will be a kind of continuing education project. The alumni will stay for a week, learning self- and career-development skills."

The project began two years ago, when out-of-state banks approached the Alumni Center with the idea. The office hesitated, however, to send their alumni's money away from Idaho.

"It benefits the university, but not the state," said McFadden. "We preferred to work with an in-state institution."

The university then decided to join forces with Northwest Nazarene College, the College of Idaho and Boise State University to approach in-state banks. Eventually, they found a partner in the Moore Financial Group, of which Idaho First National Bank is a part.

"It was hard to find an institution to accommodate an account as large as ours," said McFadden. "They've done an excellent job in handling it."

Although the applications were mailed to alumni, faculty, staff, boosters, and friends of the university, students also can apply.

"This is a great idea for seniors," said McFadden.

Latah County Fair It's not just for kids

JEFF STUCKER COMMENT

Lights flashed, bells rang, rock music blared, people laughed and screamed, stuffed animals found new owners, sheep bleated, and pigs oinked.

Where in the Palace? At the Latah County Fair, of course. From rabbits looking like Terrier dogs to carnival riders beaming with delighted faces or green with motion sickness, it was all at the fair.

My roommate, his girlfriend and I dropped our homework to attend the festivities across from the Moscow Mall. Petting sheep and staring at weird rabbits beats "psych" class anytime. And it only got better.

We warmed up on the Tilt-A-Whirl, the famous spinning-in-a-teacup ride. Next was the Sizzler, another great spinning ride. Only one problem — the person in the outside gets squished.

"Hey, man, you're showing my hipbone into the side of the seat!"

The answer: "Heh, heh, tough."

The operator gave us a free ride — one of the benefits of having a cute girl in your group.

After that we checked out the games. For a dollar, you can shoot two baskets and win a stuffed banana.

"Do you want this or something else?" my roommate asked her.

"Something else," she answered.

So he forked over another dollar and won a blue stuffed bear with a deformed nose. "Two bucks for a bear, not bad."

It took a lot of persuading to get my roommate to go on the Sky Diver — like a fast ferris wheel with seats that spin along its circumference. (If you're not a geometry major don't bother figuring out that last sentence.) I thought it was great. He didn't. His guts hated him for going and he hated my guts for talking him into it.

What a great way to end the evening. When I got home, though, it seemed like I forgot something.

Rats. I didn't buy any cotton candy.

'Central' Americans Family aids Nicaraguans

BY ALAN SOLAN

On April 28, 1987, Benjamin Linder, a 27-year-old mechanical engineer from Portland, became the first U.S. citizen to be killed by Nicaraguan Contras.

The University of Washington graduate had lived in Nicaragua for three and a half years, and had already completed the construction of a small hydro-electric plant in the town of El Cua. Linder and six Nicaraguan co-workers were taking water flow measurements to plan the design of another plant when they were ambushed near the town of San Jose de Bocay in northern Nicaragua.

Linder and two Nicaraguan workers were killed in the attack. According to autopsy reports, Linder had been hit by shrapnel in the legs and then shot in the head at point-blank range.

Linder's father, David and sister, Miriam spoke Sunday night at the Campus Christian Center on the University of Idaho campus. The two, along with David's wife, Elizabeth, were in Moscow as part of a three-day speaking tour of eastern Washington and northern Idaho.

The tour was organized by the Coalition for Central America and coordinated by Central American peace groups in the region.

Pullman resident Jeff Ellis coordinated the Linders' visits.

"The tour's goal is to shed light on Ben Linder's life as a volunteer in Nicaragua, his assassination by Contras, and the significance of his death for U.S. foreign policy in Central America," Ellis said.

Besides explaining about Ben Linder's work in Nicaragua and heightening U.S. awareness of the Contras activities, the tour promotes the Benjamin Linder Memorial Fund, he said.

Fundraisers have a $200,000 goal, which will be used to help complete the hydro-electric project Linder was working on at the time of his death.

Ben Linder's father said about $100,000 had already been raised, and that he was confident the project would be completed.

According to the Linders, Ben's first project was a very small hydro-electric plant near El Cua — the first such plant completed in Nicaragua since 1979. On May 1, 1986 lights went on in El Cua for the first time in history. Now the town's medical clinic has a sure source of light and refrigeration and classes can be taught at night.

Linder worked in the zone between El Cua where he lived, and San Jose de Bocay, a remote mountainous area of northern Nicaragua with a population of about 33,000. The area is comprised mostly of poor farmers.

According to the Linders, Contra attacks have intensified the people's poverty and forced thousands to flee their lands. The Cua-Bocay Development Project was designed to meet the immediate needs of the displaced families, while improving the living standard of the entire population.

"THE tour's goal is to shed light on Ben Linder's life as a volunteer in Nicaragua, his assassination by Contras, and the significance of his death..." JEFF ELLIS

The Linders said a key part of the project is hydro-electric power. By harnessing the natural power of the zones streams and waterfalls, the project will provide an energy source to process rice, coffee, corn and lumber. The region will be able to feed itself and provide productive employment at the same time.

The local population will gain control over their own development and be freed from dependence on scarce and costly imported technology, the Linders said.

According to the Linders, "Contra spokesmen have stated publicly that they killed Ben knowing he and his co-workers were building a hydro-electric plant."

Elliot Abrams of the U.S. State Department said it appears the Contras considered Linder and his co-workers "a legitimate target."

The Linders said the Contras thought they could stop the progress Ben was working for by murdering him and his co-workers.

Peace Corps recruit at UI

Representatives from the Peace Corps will be on the University of Idaho campus Wednesday and Thursday hoping to sign volunteers for two-year assignments in 62 developing countries.

The Peace Corps has announced that it will be sending 3,700 new volunteers overseas in Fiscal Year 1988 — an increase of 1,000 volunteers from 1987.

The increase signals a dramatic rise in overseas volunteer opportunities, as the agency heads towards the 10,000-volunteer mark mandated by Congress.

Recruiting Team Leader Teresa Lewis pointed out that from 1981 through 1986, the Peace Corps showed steady gains in the numbers of volunteers placed overseas, with nearly 6,000 serving in 1986.

That figure dropped to 5,200 in 1987 due to budget cuts at the hands of the Gramm-Rudman Act, but the agency now expects its 1988 budget of $142 million to allow for the placement of 1,000 additional volunteers in 1988, with total volunteer strength surpassing the 6,000 mark.

With the budget increase comes additional opportunities for graduates in all disciplines, including: agriculture, mathematics, the physical and life sciences, forestry and fisheries, industrial arts and vocational training, health and nutrition, business, education and special education, and liberal arts.

Peace Corps officials point out that 80 percent of all Peace Corps assignments are designated as "skill specific" jobs requiring particular academic or work-experience credentials, while 20 percent are "generalist" positions employing liberal arts graduates.

"The public perception of the Peace Corps volunteers has changed during the last two decades," Lewis said. "In the early years of Peace Corps, volunteers were seen primarily as goodwill ambassadors. Now they're respected development workers, more professional and pragmatic, with solid skills that are very much in demand by the countries where the Peace Corps serves."

"The Peace Corps needs volunteers of every kind," said Lewis. "Young and old, men and women, of all races and religions. Peace Corps volunteers present a very different face of America than is available through 'Dynasty,' 'Dallas' or 'Miami Vice.' The Peace Corps shows an America of compassion and concern to the people of the third world."

Representatives will be on campus Sept. 23-24, signing up volunteers. They will have an information booth in the SUB and Library Entrance from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and will be conducting a series of films and seminars during their two-day drive.

Media Fair slated

The University of Idaho's second bi-annual technology media fair, suitably entitled "Palouse La Tech," is slated for Wednesday in the SUB Ballroom.

The first media fair, in 1985, drew 500 visitors. This year's extravaganza will feature microcomputer systems, video projection equipment, and computer graphics systems, and is expected to attract more people than in 1985, especially those who attended the first fair in 1985.

The fair will run from 11 a.m.—4 p.m. on Wednesday.

Victims' rights heralded

There will be a lecture on "Victims' Rights" by Craig Mosman, Latah County Prosecuting Attorney, Wednesday in the University of Idaho's law school.

Sponsored by the League of Women Voters, the lecture is aimed at making a concerted effort to inform the public about victims' rights.

The lecture begins at 7:30 p.m. and is open to the public. For more information contact Shirley Caldwell, 882-4191.

Affirmative Action scholarships

Two University of Idaho students recently received scholarships from the Idaho Association for Affirmative Action (IAAA). Carmen Perez and Tony Pham were each awarded a $500 academic scholarship.

A total of four scholarships, totaling $2,000, were awarded to Idaho residents attending Idaho universities. Also awarded were Dora Gallegos, a Boise State University student, and Bethesda Lee, currently attending Idaho State University.

Perez is a Chemical Engineering major and is considering a minor in business. She has maintained a 4.0 GPA for three years in addition to being active in many campus activities.

Pham, from Boise, is also a Chemical Engineering major and a minor in Mathematics. Pham has a 3.91 GPA and was awarded the University of Idaho Outstanding Senior Award and the University of Idaho Alumni Award for Academic Excellence.

48 hours of softball for charity

BY JULIE HARTWELL

Friday at noon marked the beginning of 48 consecutive hours of softball in Ghormley Park. The reason? The 3rd Annual Beta Theta Pi/Sigma Nu Softball Marathon. These men of iron gave up their usual weekend activities to help raise money for Stepping Stones, a non-profit community organization working to aid the physically impaired.

The money was raised by pledges for every hour of play, and also generous donations from local businesses. The final figure was approximately $1500.

According to Beta Vice President and Philanthropies Chairman Mike Marler, this is one of the biggest Greek money raising events on campus.

Sigma Nu Darren Curtis said, "It doesn't matter whether we win or lose, we're just a bunch of guys getting together for a good cause."

Before the game everything was sufficiently prepared. There were tents, couches, stereos, and endless supplies of food and drink. At noon, President Gibb and Terry Armstrong threw the opening pitches. The marathon game had begun, the weather was beautiful and spirits were high.

One hour into the game, Beta president Brett Kleffner had "just begun to understand the concept of pain."

In the 7th inning, Beta Chris Boyd said, "I have a hard time accepting that it's not ending in two more innings."

The score was Beta 10, Sigma Nu 5.

AN amazed J. Dushane, a confused Mike Maro, and a sleeping Dave Thielges all took part in the third annual Beta Theta Pi-Sigma Nu softball marathon this weekend. (ARGONAUT/B. Duffy).

Sigma Nu Dave Thielges said "We're ready for the big comeback!"

Eric Miller, General Manager for the Sigma Nu team, said, "We are very optimistic, we're saving the best for later. We're trying to wear them down by making them run as much as possible now."

Their strategy worked.

When the 16th inning rolled around, the Sigma Nu team did indeed pull ahead, managing to remain a consistent 70 points ahead for the rest of the game.

As the shadows grew longer, the players lost energy, and the spectators wandered through on their way home at 1 a.m., general comments were: "We're tired." "Fatigue? Who's fatigued?"

But they made it through the night. While most students were home asleep, the softball game went on.

By Sunday morning at 10 a.m., some players said "46 hours down," some said "two to go." Whatever way they looked at it, it meant they had practically achieved their goal.

Sigma Nu Eric Fotinatos actually felt it was too short: "We should do it for 72 hours!"

Beta president Kleffner proclaimed: "Now you see the raw potential we've possessed."

The Administration Building bells rang at noon on Sunday, the end of the 48-hour haul, finding the game in its 218th inning, and the final score Sigma Nu 455, Beta Theta Pi 335. An amazing display of delirious endurance by each and every player - Congratulations!

Christian conference scheduled

BY JEFF STUCKER

Do you wish you could just take time out to think about: relationships with others, God, and yourself? Campus Crusade for Christ's Fall Conference is an opportunity for University of Idaho and Washington State University students to build friendships, get to know God better, and just have fun.

The weekend of October 2-4 "could be the most significant event of the year for many Christians," said CCC staff member Matt Grey.

The main speaker of the conference will be Scott Gilchrist on the subject of "Life in the Spirit" — how God relates with people. Gilchrist received a Master's of Divinity from Western Conservative Baptist Seminary in Portland, spent four years on CCC staff at Univ. of Utah, and has been pastor of Southwest Bible Church in Portland for eight years.

Gilchrist is concerned about people, Ralph Cooley, CCC staff leader at UI, said.

"He understands students, how to relate to them. Conferencegoers can expect to come away with a deeper understanding of how the Holy Spirit works in their lives," Cooley said.

The best part for many is building friendships that don't naturally occur in the average student's life.

Robert Weisel, who attended last year, said, "We had time that we could spend one-on-one with each other. That was great."

Brian Merz said, "You get to know people on a deeper level. There is something about getting away from it all and spending time doing little other than making friends."

Added to the numbers of potential friendships are students from across the borderline.

Merz said he enjoyed "a chance to meet and get to know Christians from WSU. They're a lot of fun."

"The fellowship times are the high point," Robert Weisel said. "One time, three of us asked, 'Why don't we pray with our eyes opened?' So we tried it. It looked like we were praying to each other. We laughed for 15 minutes straight. I don't know. I guess we were in a jovial mood."

Weisel said, "It's only three days long. I wish it were a week."

The weekend also includes seminars, such as last year's "men-only rap time" on love, sex and dating.

Greg Wilson said he loved "just being out in the woods and into nature and seeing God there."

"Seeing God" is one of the main elements of the conference. In fact, helping others to see God clearly is the main element of CCC.

"Campus Crusade for Christ is an interdenominational Christian movement of students and laymen who have united to help change the world in this generation through introducing others to the message of Jesus Christ," says the CCC flyer about the conference.

Ralph Cooley said, "The strength of any movement is in the relationships that are built."

Students interested in CCC are invited Thursday nights at 9 p.m. to Prime Time, an hour of skits, comedy, singing, and fellowship.

This year's Fall Conference at Camp Sanders begins Friday evening, October 2. Registration is 6-7 p.m. and the first meeting is at 7:30 p.m. The conference ends at noon Sunday October 3. The $30 registration includes lodging, meals, snacks and transportation. CCC asks for a $10 deposit by September 29. For more information or to register for the conference, come to Prime Time, or call Ralph Cooley, 882-5716.

United we stand

It isn't very typical for student newspapers to get involved in $55,000 community fundraising efforts.

But then again, there aren't a lot of philanthropies like the Moscow chapter of the United Way. In fact, the group's impressive contributions to the Moscow community have convinced Argonaut editors to make the United Way our sole fall 1987 Community Support Project.

During the next several weeks, we'll be working with Mannan Sheikh, the Moscow United Way chapter president, as well as student volunteers from the Public Relations Students Society of America.

Why? Because we've got an important message to get across: the United Way needs your support!

While those of us who work at the paper are new to community service fundraising, the United Way has been working to support Moscow service groups for years.

Last year, the Moscow chapter of the United Way helped raise nearly $50,000 for the benefit of 14 local agencies and organizations.

They aided everyone from the Boy Scouts to the Campfire Girls, and single-parent youngsters to Moscow's senior citizens.

Among those recommended for funding this year include: Alternatives to Violence; the Boy Scouts; Camp Fire, Inc.; Developmental Preschool; Friends Unlimited; the Retired Senior Volunteer Program; Inland Empire Girl Scout Council, Inc.; Hospice of the Palouse; The Line; Palouse Industries; Pregnancy Counseling Center; the Salvation Army; American Red Cross; and Volunteers in Moscow.

If you are a student, the Argonaut challenges you to donate $5, $10 or even more to help the United Way help these vital community organizations. Faculty and staff members can take time now to donate even more — and by filling out a payroll deduction form, you can let the university's Controller's Office do all the work for you.

The beautiful thing about the United Way is that it directly helps you, your neighbors and friends. But United Way members can't do it on their own.

So take a stand, together. Help the United Way. Because the United Way is working to help make Moscow a better place to live.

Freedom: Give God equal time

Bruce Skaug
Commentary

University is defined in the dictionary as an institution of higher learning. As a place of higher learning, it is a place where all ideas should be open for discussion and critical analysis. I hope everyone agrees that in order to learn truth, all ideas must be considered. The "open mind" idea is preached by liberal educators as most important to learning. And I wholeheartedly agree.

However, an open mind to some means an empty mind, or at least a mind that cannot consider the status quo to be wrong. One concept promulgated by modern education is that free-thinkers are those who do not acknowledge Christianity as anything more than a myth and its followers as stupid. There is now, in this once Christian nation, a hostility toward the faithful.

The U.S. Constitution dictates that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The liberal establishment interpret and enforce this as "The government shall keep all symbols, acts or assemblies that recognize God out of public property."

George Will points out that under the First Amendment today, pornographers run rampant and school children are forbidden to partake in a nativity scene. In Montgomery County, Md., the teachers were instructed to not refer to Christmas in any way, but rather say "winter holiday." They were also forbidden to use any larger than normal stars in decoration or mention Christ.

A Florida girl who passed out Bibles as part of her speech presentation was expelled after being warned that such an act violated the separation of church and state. The Bibles were collected from the students by the principal. After legal action was taken, the girl was allowed to pass out the Bibles. Some courts have held that students cannot have Christian clubs before or after school in the building because some students might think it was state-sponsored.

Attorney Samuel Ericsson, says the following sign should be on the public school doors: "Attention students: your bill of rights forbids all voluntary religious speech among students in a group of two or more anywhere on campus during the school day. However, the use of a deity's name as an expletive in a group is legal."

Surely, such an attitude toward religion would not extend to the university level. It does. There are some Christian and religious faculty, but the predominate theme is one of either "Christianity does not exist" or "Christianity is the subject of ridicule." The result is distortion of history, morality and thinking. It has a chilling effect on freedom of speech and assembly.

As an undergraduate at the University of Idaho, I took a course in contemporary literature. I expected Hemingway, but got pornography. The theme of all the books assigned in the class was perverted sex.

During a typical class discussion about the virtues of lesbianism, I raised my hand and asked, "does anyone besides myself think homosexuality is perversion?" Six hands out of thirty went up. (It should be noted that several men in the class wore earrings.) The discussion turned to morality and then religion. The open-minded professor interrupted and said we could not continue the discussion because of the separation of church and state.

I was stunned. We could talk about homosexuality, lesbianism, child molestations and other perversions in gross detail — but we were forbidden to talk about religion. Gee, I hope I didn't poison anyone's mind with some sort of morality.

If you call a Mexican a "peppergut," you are a bigot. So what are you if you call a Christian a "Bible-thumper" or "holly-roller?" The open mind cannot exist without being open to all ideas. Public education is closed. Some are calling it "the dark ages."

The "enlightenment" will occur when radical educators resurrect truths like, moral absolutes and the most high God.

OPINION

POWs disgusted with Vandals

Editor:
The 17th of September was a great day for the University of Idaho. At 11:30 a.m. on the Administration Lawn, the annual POW/MIA ceremony was held. The brass ensemble played inspirational music as the units of Army, Air Force and Navy ROTC cadets in immaculate uniforms and polished brass formed up on the greensward. The thousands of faculty and students who had taken time from their lunch hours to show their respect for the men still held captive in Southeast Asia and their concern for their release were reverently silent as the pastor of the local Baptist Church, a decorated veteran of the Army Special Forces, prayed that God would watch over those men who went to serve their country and now wait—maimed, starved, tortured and alone—for their country to remember. He said a special prayer for their families; parents wives, sons and daughters who keep the faith and hope for the return of their loved ones.

The guest speaker, himself a POW in World War II, commented that this year's observance was specially dedicated to showing the families of those men still missing in Southeast Asia that the American public cares, and supports them in their efforts to move the U.S. government to action. I am sure that the outpouring of support and caring that the students and faculty of the University of Idaho exhibited by their presence at the ceremony were a comfort to the local MIA family—mother wife and now-grown daughter—who were the honored guests at the POW/MIA ceremony. Nice going Vandals. You showed a lot of class. I hope you had a nice lunch.

Go away pesky Bible thumpers

Editor:
Ahh, fall is here and so is Bruce. When I think of all of the pesky Bible thumpers running around I am reminded of a dripping faucet that won't stop, or a festering sore that won't heal. Yes, there are a few irritating things and people that we have to put up with during our short lives. But I'm sick and tired of this holier-than-thou-ultra-conservative bull. The courage of a conservative, ha. What is a "basically evil" human to do with all these self-righteous thumpers trying to change our lifestyles and our government to suit their twisted views of self worth and morality?

I have tried to ignore the thumpers in hopes that they would go away. However, ignoring a thumper doesn't work. They continue to dance around you, flapping their Bibles and screaming "fornication" as they shake their fingers and turn red in the face. Then they collect their holy tribute, buy a Rolex, and start up a T.V. station.

Maybe if we told these thumpers that we're tired of listening to them, they'd go away. Maybe to Utah or Alabama — you know, one of those places where they could form factions and fight each other. Maybe Utah could become America's Lebanon with all of the religious factions fighting and killing each other to gain supreme religious dominance and to impose "their" beliefs on the people who are left alive. They could then change their corner of the world and take it back to a much simpler time when people feared God's wrath, and the local preacher had total control over "his" peasants. They could restructure their educational system and their legal system to follow the new moral code. Education would be much cheaper because the only book necessary would be the Bible. They wouldn't need libraries to store the offensive scribbblings of Orwell, Huxley, Shakespeare, Voltaire (they'd keep Machiavelli), and Salinger or books dealing with math, biology, or chemistry. They wouldn't want to teach their children that there are other callings in life than thumping.

Yup, in this new society everyone would be happy just to have a Bible, a gun, and an atheist to shoot at.

The only point that I'm trying to make is that I'm tired of the Bruces thumping around shaking their fingers and trying to change a system of laws and government that I am happy with. Yes, democracy has some flaws, but at least it isn't a religious dictatorial form of government headed by a gun-toting Bruce hunting for pro-abortionists, academics, and people who enjoy Shakespeare and PBS television.

Don't believe what you read

Editor:
I can't tell you how much I enjoy Bruce Skaug's little commentaries you print in the Argonaut because, all truth told, I detest them. I'm weary of the one-sided stories. Most of all I hate the way Bruce's opinions are presented as facts.

Bruce, if you must persist in writing commentaries for the Argonaut, why must you perpetuate misinformation, hate and discontent? I believe you have a right to your opinion, even if it is conservative-fundamentalist, but you can't continue to present your opinions as if they are facts.

I would like to know where you get the information to write these articles. I wish you would quote your sources, Bruce, so I can study the publications you use to write your commentaries.

For example, in Sept. 11 issue of the Argonaut you seem to have solved the mystery of dyslexia, something even doctors and psychologists have yet to do. You state clearly that teachers cause these learning disorders, and this is not true. Why don't you check with Special Services on campus to find out what dyslexia is and how long it has existed?

I also question your statement in the Sept. 16 issue, wherein you state that if given a choice, voters in Idaho would abolish abortion. Did you take an informal poll among your friends, or perhaps you had time to survey every registered voter in Idaho except me? I refuse to believe that is a fact simply because you present it as such.

And Bruce, don't ever assume that my reactions to your "statistics" are anything like your own, (Arg. Sept. 1) because I don't label people I don't know as "perverts and dope fiends."

Everyone's heard the old statement "Don't believe everything you read." Well Bruce, I don't believe anything you write.

De-program those cult victims

Editor:
Having read the letters entitled "AIDS is the judgment of God," by T.A. Dahl, and "AIDS cure found in Jesus Christ," by Christian D. Brown, published in the Argonaut of Sept. 11, I feel myself compelled to respond. Both authors appear to be just as panic-stricken and irrational as was Bruce Skaug in his commentary in the Argonaut of Sept. 1. Both are obviously victims of cult indoctrination, and both are obviously homophobic to the extreme.

The only evidence offered by either in support of their assertions, are various quotations from the Bible, the Koran, the Torah, and the Book of Mormon are all texts written by men. They are all texts of major cults, which were written by men, in the hopes of influencing the minds, and thereby the behavior of the people of their respective societies. There is no evidence that these texts are the word of God. Indeed, there is no evidence that God exists. The men who wrote these texts claimed revelations from God. How so? Did they hear the voice of God? Anyone who hears voices or otherwise hallucinates needs psychiatric help. It is a pity that there were no psychiatrists then.

Both authors either state or imply the AIDS is God's punishment of homosexuals for their behavior. Throughout the ages, ignorant and superstitious people have called plagues, famines or natural catastrophes "the will of God." To say that AIDS is God's punishment of homosexuals is ridiculous. By the same logic, I could assert that Hitler and the holocaust were God's punishment of the Jews for their refusal to accept Christ as their savior. The tirades of the religious fanatics which we are witnessing seem to be much the same as the witch hunts of the Dark Ages, Middle Ages and Renaissance. Natural disasters, crop failures and illnesses were often blamed on witches. A scapegoat who was somehow different from the norm was located and put to torture, hung or burned, all in the name of a God who was invented by ignorant people to explain things they could not understand.

It appears to me that Dahl, Brown, and Skaug have somehow managed to misinterpret the available information on AIDS. Let us examine for a moment the theories of some scientists concerning the origin of AIDS.

Two of the theories I have most recently read concerning the viruses associated with AIDS (there are now at least two viruses associated with AIDS and related syndromes), were found in a recent issue of Der Spiegel, a German publication which is accessible in the browsing room of the UI library (although most readers will require a translator to read it). The two theories are paraphrased as follows:

1. These viruses are relatively recent mutations of pre-existing viruses which were hitherto harmless, but have through their mutations become inimical to the human immune system. This theory is considered by scientists to be the most threatening to the human race, because it implies that these viruses may mutate faster than vaccines can be found, making a cure virtually impossible.

2. The original virus was present in a particular breed of African ape (perhaps monkey is the appropriate term, I am uncertain of the distinction), and this virus was transferred to humans by means of people being bitten by these primates (nowhere in any scientific literature have I seen any mention of humans engaging in sex with monkeys, as asserted by Mr. Brown. In any case, in order to achieve the necessary transfer of bodily fluid, the human would almost certainly have to be on the receiving end of the transaction, which seems to me to be most improbable). The virus could then have been spread by immigration, since many people are carriers who never actually develop AIDS or related syndromes. This theory also holds that this original virus may since have mutated, resulting in the second virus associated with AIDS-related syndromes.

It should be obvious, given this background information, that AIDS is not a disease caused by homosexuals (although some of them are at risk of contracting it), nor is it God's punishment for them. If it is God's punishment of the majority of African cases occur among heterosexuals?

Since there is no proof that God exists, it is foolish to talk about "God's natural order." It is the abuse of our sexuality (i.e. promiscuity), rather than the orientation of it, which poses the danger.

I do not expect Misters Dahl, Brown or Skaug to believe or accept any of what I have stated in this letter. They are obviously victims of cult indoctrination, and at this point in time, do not appear to be capable of rational or logical thought. People in their predicament cannot be convinced, they can only be deprogrammed.

Un-conventional imaginations

MosCon attracts largest crowd ever for it's ninth anniversary

BY KIRK LAUGHLIN

Imaginations were in full force at Moscow's science fiction convention, MosCon IX.

A casual observer might not know the original cast of Dr. Who or what year the comic book The Uncanny X-Men appeared, but coming with a head stuffed with information is not the point of a convention like this, having fun is. And that's exactly what the patrons in Cavanaugh's did this weekend.

Moscon IX was designed for fun, offering a wide variety of activities. For instance, where else could one find out about a library completely devoted to science fiction and fantasy?

The Spaced-Out Library, a branch of the Toronto Public Library, started with a donation of 5,000 volumes from science-fiction author Judith Merrill, according to the presentation given by Lorna Toolis, the facility's head librarian.

The library now boasts more than 23,000 volumes, 8,000 paperbacks, and 14,000 "fanzine" titles.

"We also get questions about science-fiction from other branches," said Toolis. "Usually, they're about what book's next in a series. One time, though, I got a call from a very distraught lady who had a young boy at her branch who wanted a real copy of The Necronomicon."

Another interesting presentation was that of scientist guest of honor Julie Lutz, a professor of Astronomy and Director of the planetarium at Washington State University.

Her presentation about the formation of stars, although bogged down by some obligatory technical jargon, was highlighted by stunning slides taken by observatories in Kitt Peak, Arizona and Cerro Tololo, Chile.

The art show, a MosCon staple according to Convention Chairman Mike Finkbiner, also attracted a steady crowd. The works, which included paintings, photo prints, and 3-D slides depicted scenes of the fantastic and otherworldly. A blight appeared on the proceedings, however, when a work was vandalized. An unknown vandal punched a hole in one of the prints, Finkbiner said, obviously upset by the incident.

"MosCon will reimburse the artist," he said. "It hurts me personally to have something like this happen."

MosCon's Artist Guest of Honor Steve Gallacci also gave a diverting presentation of his work, which ranges from military models done for the Air Force to prints inspired by Star Wars.

Running each day of MosCon was a science and science fiction trivia quiz. Questions were of this nature:

"Who was the only woman to direct a Twilight Zone episode?"

"What was the dog's name in A Boy And His Dog?"

"In how many episodes of Star Trek does Spock smile?"

The winning team was led by science-fiction columnist Steve Fahenstark who, after years of trivia playing, said, "It's all one endless question."

One of the more audience-participation oriented programs was "Take Me To Your Leader." A panel made up science-fiction

DAVE Bigelow was one of 500 science-fiction fans to make the trek to MosCon IX, held in Cavanaugh's Motor Inn this weekend. He is dressed for the main social gathering of the event, the masquerade ball (ARGONAUT/Brian Duffy).

Art A la Carte

Art a la Carte, WSU's noontime art series, gets off to a "rollicking" start on Thursday, Sept. 24. The first of six fall programs features the Mother Lode Musical Theatre Troupe of Marin County, California. The troupe is the only American theater company creating original programs based on authentic mid-19th century musical and dramatic materials.

Art a la Carte is sponsored by the Museum of Art, Compton Union and the Office of Activities/Recreational Sports. The program is at noon on Thursday in the Gridiron Room of the CUB.

Other programs on the Art A la Carte schedule for the fall include:

- Oct. 1 Palouse Visual Artists Project
- Oct. 8 The Social Life of Small Urban Places
- Oct. 15 Calligraphy, East and West
- Oct. 22 And Was Jerusalem Buildd There - In Engalnd's Dark Satanic Mills

Harmonic Homecoming

The Spokane Symphony's 42nd season opens September 25 with four singers who began their careers in Spokane and have since gone on to international success.

Guests artists Thomas Hampson, Karen Beardsley, Linda Caple, and Doug Johnson, in return performances with the Spokane Symphony, will be singing arias and ensembles from operas and musicals.

Conducted by Bruce Ferden, the Opening Night Gala will begin at 8 p.m. in the Spokane Opera House.

Planned Parenthood man to speak

Faye Wattleton, President of Planned Parenthood Federation of America (PPFA) will speak in the WSU Compton Union Building Auditorium Thursday, September 24, 1987 at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Wattleton, the first woman, the first black, and the youngest person to head the nation's oldest voluntary family planning organization, is being brought to Pullman by the Association for Women Students.

Wattleton has led the organization since 1978 in its nationwide advocacy program to protect the fight of all Americans to make independent decisions about child-bearing. In the last several years, the Federation has worked with coalitions of concerned groups to:

- (1) successfully maintain the country's national family planning program, Title X of the Public Health Service Act in the federal budget;
- (2) retain confidentiality as an essential component of family planning services for young people;
- (3) preserve the right of all women to safe, legal abortion; and
- (4) establish programs in developing countries to help bring population problems under control and enhance the quality of life for women and their families.

Breaking down the routine Weight lifting

BY JOHN BEE

You've been lifting hard for quite some time now on your three-day-a-week program, but are you getting the results that you want?

Maybe it is time to increase the intensity of your workouts, as well as the frequency. To really build muscle, you need to work out at a high intensity level — meaning, more frequently than three times a week.

Your muscles grow by being stressed, breaking down muscle fibers every time you work out. When muscle fibers heal, they heal bigger and stronger.

You should split your routine up. Work out every day, but exercise specific muscle groups one day, then different muscle groups the next day. This way you will never strain a given muscle group two days in a row; giving the muscles time to adapt and grow bigger. The muscles will heal, on the average, in 48 hours.

The minimum amount necessary to produce muscle growth would be working the same muscles at least twice a week. Here are some tips on working out, and an example of a typical high intensity workout.

1. Never rest between sets more than 15-30 seconds. Working consistently will force muscles to work at full capacity.

2. Be sure to breathe correctly while you lift. Exhale when you lift, and inhale when you relax. Don't hold your breath!

3. Work out with a partner whenever possible - it will keep the motivation in the workout higher.

DELTA Chi Robert Morasch enjoys doing sets of "preachers" in the Kibbie Dome weight room during a Monday afternoon public session. (ARGONAUT/Tim Dahlquist)

4. Don't work out on a full stomach. Drink an energy drink after workouts.

5. Don't sacrifice proper technique for more weight. It's not how much you lift, it's how you lift it.

Female Factor: Girls and Sports

JOHN BEE ANALYZES

Studies show that the success or failure of female college athletes often reflects the type of training and support they initially received in high school.

During the 1970-71 school year, 294,051 girls participated in interscholastic high school sports. The figure for 1982-83 was 1,779,972.

These figures, startling as they are, do not tell the full story of the revolution that has taken place during the last 15 years in women's sports participation. In 1970-71, only 7 percent of the young people involved in interscholastic high school sports were girls; in 1982-83 that figure was 33 percent.

From the moment this revolution began in the early '70s, experts have speculated about its effect on female athletes. Some predicted that their adjustment would be a difficult one. This hypothesis was based on the conflict that might arise when girls were expected to be very competitive in everyday life. To a small extent these speculations have proven true.

In the '70s, when the movement to broaden female sports participation began, girls who got involved at a later age initially had difficult adjustments. Many didn't know how to respond to competition. At the time, they were more laissez-faire than make because they didn't know how to be aggressive and when to stop. By being overly competitive and trying too hard, some would injure themselves, as well as other players. But increasingly, females have become involved with sports at an earlier age, and this makes their adjustment easier.

On the whole, however, the revolution in female sports participation has been an overwhelmingly positive one. Most researchers have found that the sports experience and exposure to competition are very healthy for young women.

Encouraging them to take part in sports they enjoy enriches their lives, both on and off the playing field.

One very positive aspect of women entering the sports scene is that it is a major achievement setting, highly valued by society and involving a lot of social skill. Sports broadens their opportunities to learn and practice achievement skills, whereas, in the past, many have been limited to classroom performance.

According to the Women's Sports Foundation in San Francisco, young women receive eight times the amount of step-by-step instruction as their male counterparts. This means that women often find a struggle if they are to share a place on a co-ed team. If girls are treated with the same expectations that we automatically have of boys and if they are given the same degree of instruction, their performance can be comparable to, or surpass, that of boys until about 12 years of age.

More than physical barriers, girls face psychological barriers because they have to overcome stereotypes of parents or coaches. Subtle messages can make a girl feel that her presence on a playing field is more tolerated than welcomed or that she should play but not too hard or seriously.

Positive role models can be an important factor in a young woman's involvement with sports, and in this regard, perhaps one of the greatest untapped resources in

Good nutrition helps GPAs

CHRISTINE PAKKALA ANALYSIS

Karla ate seafood quiche and salad lunch, followed by a large serving of french fries. She finished her meal with an ice cream bar. While walking to her class, she complained that she felt sleepy, uncomfortably full and lethargic. Later, Karla said she had a difficulty paying attention in class and that she felt unmotivated.

Karla, like other students who left the four basic food groups at home, suffers from a lack of proper nutrition, and her school-work suffers because of it.

Missing from her lunch was a serving of fruit. An apple or orange would have given her the quick energy to get through the class, but would have been more slowly metabolized than the ice cream bar to make the energy last.

Another nutritional problem that students face which may affect their academic performance is skipping meals.

Gary says he would rather sleep in the morning than make himself breakfast. Consequently, he is weak from hunger during the class before his lunch break. If a student doesn't have time to sit down and eat eggs, toast and orange juice, then a possible solution is to throw an apple into his or her backpack and munch on it during class.

During the freshman year, students often gain 15-20 pounds. At the end of that year, the word "diet" is on their minds. Fad diets are attractive because they promise immediate and dramatic weight loss.

But they usually promote poor eating habits, excluding some essential foods and concentrating on one food group.

The American College Health Association says, "The most successful weight reduction programs combine nutritionally-balanced eating habits without drugs, supplements or unusual practices, with regular exercise."

People often over-eat because of poor eating habits.

The National Dairy Council compiled this list of pitfalls: eating when watching TV or reading, eating when bored, alone or feeling sorry for oneself, eating because other people are eating, eating too quickly and not giving the body a chance to feel full and eating everything on the plate even when full.

Avoid relying too much on fast-food restaurants, if you are concerned about high-calorie foods. A Big Mac at McDonald's has 563 calories and a regular soft drink has 144 calories, according to the ADC.

Spikers take CWU, drop UP

BY JULIE HOHBACH

The Lady Vandals finished their pre-season this weekend by beating Central Washington and losing to University of Portland.

According to Pam Bradetich, head coach of the Vandals, the games were very competitive, and Idaho performed very well.

Idaho beat Central Washington in four matches, scoring 5-15, 15-7, 15-13, and 15-13.

Susan Deskins, a returner on the team, made the most kills, digs and blocks.

Bradetich also said that the freshmen on the team are looking good and improving with each game.

The Lady Vandals just ended their pre-season with the last games played. Bradetich said they are ending it on a positive note.

"Our two hour match against Portland was hard fought. We had a lot of good rallies with good defense on both sides," Bradetich said.

Idaho lost against Portland in five games with scores of: 15-12, 14-16, 6-15, 15-12, and 11-15 in the final match.

Deskins led the team with 14 kills, 3 aces, 20 digs and 3 blocks.

Bradetich said the game could have gone either way because the team competed hard and had a really strong defense the whole time.

Women's CC place 2nd

The women's cross country team placed second, leaving six teams in the dust last weekend at the Whitman Invitational meet in Walla Walla, Wash.

Idaho's number one runner, Paula Parcell, came in sixth place with a time of 18:20 on the 5,000 meter course.

"We showed a real strong team effort at the meet, all eight women placed in the top 30 out of 75 finishers," Head Coach Scott Lorek said.

Freshman Kari Krebsbach came in seventh, only five seconds after Parsell.

Missy Madsen, Ronda Groshing, and Louise Mainvil placed 11th, 13th and 14th respectively.

"It was a great invitational for us because we kept the gap between our first and fifth runners at 29 seconds. For us to be successful we need to continue to have a gap be that small."

The Lady Vandals do not have a designated runner to go out and dominate a meet, so they must rely on the team work of all the women.

"It was great to see the team running together like they did; this will be the key to our success this year," Lorek said.

"In the past, our number one and two runners have always been close, but this year Parsell is a bit faster and the courses are better."

All eight Lady Vandals finished within 30 seconds of each other, showing how competitive they are as a team.

"The meets coming up get tougher, beginning with the Idaho Invitational this weekend," Lorek said.

This weekend is the only chance to see the Lady Vandals in action. The Idaho Invitational at the UI Golf Course is the only home meet for the women.

Vandals do Portland

ERIK SIMPSON

The Vandals' defense held the Vikings' offensive attacks in the second half to give the University of Idaho a 17-10 non-conference victory over Portland State University Saturday.

"I'm glad our defense pulled it off for us," said Vandal head coach Keith Gilbertson, whose team had only 282 yards of total offense compared to Portland State's 335.

Idaho was ranked ninth in the nation for total offense at an average of 477.5 yards per game, but short of their average against the sixth-ranked Division II Vikings.

The Vandals' first score came on a three-yard run by Todd Hoiness that put Idaho ahead at 7-0. On the Vikings' next possession, UI senior running safety Ernest Sanders intercepted a Portland State pass and ran the ball down to the Viking 30-yard line, which set up Brian Friesz's 22-yard field goal to tie the score 10-0 in the second quarter.

Portland State could not come within more than a 45-yard Mike Jackson field goal until quarterback Chris Crawford found Matt Fisher for a seven-yard touchdown pass with 53 seconds remaining in the game.

The Vandal defensive line could not be broken by Portland State's offense. The Vikings' had an opportunity to score in the third quarter from the Idaho six-yard line on a fourth-and-one play, but Ernest Sanders dumped the Portland State quarterback.

Sanders stopped another Viking attempt by tackling Portland State's Jimmie Johnson on a fourth-and-one from the Vandal four-yard line.

Sanders finished the game with two sacks, six tackles, one interception and one deflected pass.

"That's the kind of game Ernest is capable of playing," Gilbertson said.

Sanders and his defense showed no mercy against the PSU quarterback with a total of eight sacks in the game. The Vandals' final touchdown was made by John Jake's dive for a John Friesz pass after a second-half PSU field goal. Jake finished the game with four catches for 79 yards, while Friesz, averaging 343 yards a game passing, threw for 165 yards to complete 16 of his 29 attempts with two interceptions.

Now at 2-1 for the season, the Vandals begin Big Sky Conference play next Saturday as Idaho travels to Northern Arizona University.

IDAHO Defensive End Kord Smith attempts to rip the head off of Chris Crawford, a Portland State quarterback, in one of the eight sacks the Vandals made in their 17-10 victory over the Vikings. Smith, by the way, was not called for face-masking. (ARGONAUT/Stephanie Worley)

In sports is mothers as coaches. Only does a female coach provide a supportive model, but she is likely to be one whose approach is compatible with the athlete's

Women have been identified as much more interested in coordinating the rules of the game to one another's feelings. As a group, researchers claim that women generally prefer that everyone remains happily involved in a game, rather than spending a lot of time negotiating new rules, or arguing out how to sanction someone who breaks a rule (which is a major part of the excitement for men).

Studies indicated that mothers tend to stress camaraderie, while fathers stress competition, and mothers respond more positively after the outcome of a game. Mothers are extremely sensitive to the needs of youngsters involved in sports. The highest percent of the mothers of participants disliked emphasis on winning, the pressure and the competitiveness. A primary concern was providing equal opportunities to children in an environment where fun was the foremost goal.

In general, female coaches have been identified as more acutely attuned to nonverbal cues like facial expressions, body posture, and tone of voice, especially when these cues imply a negative feeling. Women's capacity for empathy allows them to be more democratic in the field, whereas men are more autocratic.

FEATURES

Film re-evaluates humanity

BY KIRK LAUGHLIN

It's easy to see why Eliseo Subiela's Man Facing Southeast won the International Film Critics Award. This hypnotic film is not easy to puzzle out or forget.

It concerns a man named Rantes who shows up one day in an insane asylum, claiming he is from another planet. The idea is laughed off by Dr. Denis, proving Rantes' claim that the easiest way to protect his mission is to tell the truth.

Although convinced that Rantes is deep in the grip of paranoia and delusion, Dr. Denis reluctantly listens and, worse yet, agrees with what Rantes is saying. People don't treat one another well here on Earth. There are victims in the world that need compassion.

Like parts of Midnight Express and One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, Man Facing Southeast draws comparisons between captors and inmates, often showing that the places should be reversed.

Rantes is so immersed in the thought that at least we are able to sympathize with him.

Also rather simplistic is the narration of Dr. Denis. Perhaps the English subtitles are less subtle than the original Argentinian dialogue but, at any rate, it is annoying at times. For instance, in one scene Rantes is visibly angered by the injustices man commits, rather than the cold, rational feelings he has shown earlier. In the next scene, we get Dr. Denis explaining that rage has surfaced in Rantes, that this response is different from before.

I'm not trying to harp on small problems (and it is just that) but given the mosaic of interesting and subtle emotions in the film, the clumsiness with which some are handled is rather stunning.

Better to concentrate on the fine performances, the finely realized oppressive atmosphere, and the oddly affecting emotions that Man Facing Southeast arouses.

Program offers fitness

BY CHRISTINA LATTA

Is physical fitness important? It is to Dr. Dennis Dolny and approximately 175 people who have participated in the UI "Wellness" program.

"Wellness is a program that tries to foster the types of activities and lifestyles that will help to reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease," said Dolny.

The program is usually only open to the University of Idaho employees, staff, and graduate students. This is because undergraduates have ample opportunity to enroll in fitness classes, while older people may not have their days free for a class or may feel intimidated in a class of younger people.

The people who join "Wellness" for the testing and exercise classes must pay $125 a year. Others join strictly for the testing to judge their fitness and these people pay $100 for two testing sessions a year. A few of the tests available are the stress test, a lung function test, an electro-cardial test, and a newly offered blood cholesterol test. Dolny also hopes to have ways to test triglycerides, (a type of fat), and blood glucose soon. The tests are conducted by Dolny and his "Wellness" staff, along with local physicians, Dr. Dennis Peterson and Dr. Duane Lerhert.

The exercise opportunities that are offered are swimming, aerobic dance, walking, and jogging.

Approximately 40 new people will be joining "Wellness" this fall. These people will range from very fit people to people who struggle with fitness. They will be tested and have a diet that is recommended by the American Dietetic Association and the American Heart Association. The diet will stress low fat and salt intakes.

The last finale

Pianist Leon Bates, one of the leading performers on the classical American music scene today, will be the featured soloist as the Washington Idaho Symphony opens its season.

Monday is the first performance of the last for Conductor James Schoepflin as he ends his eleven-year affiliation with the symphony to move back into performance as a clarinetist.

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in the UI Administration Building Auditorium. Tuesday evening the symphony will appear at Lewiston High School.

On the Screen

FACING SOUTHEAST
MICRO MOVIE HOUSE

There is also a strong undercurrent of man being a slave to his past. Dr. Denis is distraught over his divorce, unable to be happy, but in the usual, human, illogical manner he is insensitive to his children when he is with them.

When Rantes is left to his own, complex "psychosis" he is perfectly at ease, perfectly happy. But when treated with drugs to "cure" him, he rapidly deteriorates, unable to stand being merely human.

The bold style of direction is part of the theme of Man Facing Southeast in that it constantly asks the audience to re-evaluate the situation on the screen, just as Rantes asks Dr. Denis to re-evaluate human existence.

Although, at times, the script is uncomfortably preachy, the sincere and vulnerable performances soften what could be a crippling blow to the film. Even though it's not a terribly original idea that man is cruel to man (an idea that is underlined again and again, sometimes at too great of lengths) writers and artists conjectured what steps an alien would take to make himself (itself?) known to the general public.

MosCon also boasts the presentation of the annual Lensman Award. The award is bestowed upon works of science fiction and fantasy for their contribution to the field, in honor of the late science-fiction author E.E. "Doc" Smith, a University of Idaho graduate. Smith is also the inspiration for MosCon and also serves as the patron saint of the proceedings.

This year's Lensman Award for fiction went to author Andrea Norton. The Lensman for art went to the New York-based team of Leo and Diane Dillon.

Despite the brief brush with vandalism, Finkbinder maintained that the convention's ninth incarnation was a success, and is looking forward to the special tenth anniversary edition. Already slated for that event is Anne McCaffery as the author guest of honor.

“HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS.”

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. Then, under the New GI Bill, I'm getting another $5,000 for tuition and books.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back — up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000 — or more — for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.
