

Elm Street lighting now a high priority

BY DAWN BOBBY

The university's dimly lit Elm Street has been added to the University of Idaho's lighting plan, according to ASUI President Brian Long.

Sens. Molly Weyen and Brad Cuddy joined Long last week to convince university officials and Physical Plant personnel to add the street, whose lights are currently the responsibility of the City of Moscow, to the university's lighting plan.

The inclusion of Elm Street steps up the construction process by at least three years, according to Long, who with the aid of Weyen and Cuddy, convinced administrators that Elm Street was a higher priority than had been previously determined.

"I'm really excited," Long said, "because on the original 10-year lighting plan, (Elm Street) wasn't scheduled to be done until 1990 or 1994. Elm Street was the very last priority."

Long said jurisdictional problems, which left a university street under city lighting control, may have been to blame for its previous status.

Earlier this month, Physical Plant Director Ken Hall said that a scientific campus analysis just didn't put Elm Street high on the list. If a need was determined, however, he said the university would be willing to work out whatever jurisdiction problems there were with Washington Water Power.

"There's no plan for taking it over," Hall said when contacted Thursday. "We will be working with WWP over the next few weeks to develop that."

In meetings last week, plans were reviewed to see what changes could be made, and Long said President Richard Gibb requested a budget check to see if Elm Street could be included.

"Apparently, there are funds to do it," Long said, "so they're going to go ahead."

Carve away the Halloween blahs

ANALYSIS BY LAREINE UDELL

Although students will be busy Saturday shuffling from house to house in search of Halloween spirits, they might not want to overlook the special activities planned by campus living groups.

Tau Kappa Epsilon will host their 12th Annual Haunted House Saturday from 8-11 p.m. The cost is $1, with all proceeds benefiting the Moscow Chapter of the March of Dimes Foundation.

The men of Tau Kappa Epsilon are working overtime to transfer about three-fourths of their fraternity into a haunted house. Their little sisters will be on hand to take prospective 'scarees' on a tour of the rooms decorated to the likeness of students' worst fears, if they dare.

Bookstore plans

Seven on-campus sites proposed

BY PAUL ALLEE
ARGONAUT © 1987

Four months after President Richard Gibb withdrew his proposal to move the campus bookstore downtown, University of Idaho officials are releasing this morning a preliminary study proposing that seven on-campus sites be considered for a new bookstore.

And according to Terry Armstrong, executive assistant to the president, bookstore planners aren't ruling out the possibility of leaving the store on-campus.

"We want as much student input as we can get on this issue," Armstrong said Thursday. "We're distributing information to Brian (Long, ASUI President), the Senate, Residence Hall Advisers and Greek presidents."

Listing 12 separate proposals, the 14-page document includes a special ratings page where students will be able to grade each proposal in 11 different categories.

Armstrong said he will request that Long and other student leaders gather opinions about the proposals. He will ask student government officials to file a written response to the study within two weeks.

According to UI Business Manager Don Amos, the top three proposals for new on-campus sites are:

- the corner of Deakin Avenue and College Street, next to the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity,
- the corner of Railroad and College Streets, where the old

Latah Electric building and a house are located, and

- the old Theta Chi fraternity building and park, directly behind the SUB.

All three of these proposed locations are within three blocks of the current bookstore.

That may make prospects for a bookstore move a more likely, Long said.

"I'm not really up in arms about the move," he said.

"The message that I got from students last time was that they wanted the bookstore on or adjoining campus," Long said. "I don't really see how these proposals could be all that controversial, since they are so close."

Long said that in addition to gathering student surveys, he would consider putting the bookstore move on the Nov. 18 student election ballot.

"I'd also like to see some sort of student forum on this issue," he said.

The timing of the proposals is more favorable than last year, when administration officials were criticized for raising the bookstore move issue late in the spring, he said.

"I don't have any hard feelings about what happened," Long said.

"I'm just glad to see the (bookstore move) issue surfacing while students are on campus this time."

Centennial kick-off: Celebration projects and activities announced

BY JILL BECK

After almost four years in the planning, University of Idaho officials announced scheduled activities and projects for the upcoming Centennial celebration.

President Richard Gibb and Roy Fluhrer, Centennial coordinator, revealed plans for the Centennial at a news conference Oct. 26.

"We have been planning for the Centennial for almost four years," Gibb said.

"Obviously this will be the most significant birthday that the university has ever enjoyed."

Some projects for the centennial have already begun, including the planting of 100 oak trees in the new arboretum. To date, 40 of the oaks have been planted.

Thirteen varieties of oaks have been selected, each species planted in dedication of the university's 13 presidents.

Also in the planning is the planting of groves of trees in each of the 44 counties in Idaho. The groves will be planted in the summer of 1988.

"This has never been done, as far as we know, anywhere in the country," said Fluhrer. "The alumni grove project will literally take the University of Idaho to every corner of the state."

The Centennial is scheduled to last 17 months, beginning Jan. 25, 1988 and ending with commencement in May 1989.

A campaign has been launched to earn $43 million dollars for the Centennial.

"Of the $43 million that we plan to raise in the campaign, $28 million are designated for scholarships, for development for things other than brick and mortar," Gibb said.

The other $15 million will go for building, among other things, a proposed convocation building.

Also planned are several student-sponsored activities, such as a time capsule which will be opened at the bicentennial in 2089 and a "Buy a Brick" project, in which bricks for a newly-developed Centennial Plaza will be sold. Profits from the "Buy a Brick" campaign will go into general student scholarships and to the Student Leadership Fund.

The winner of the first Founder's Day Award was also announced at Monday's news conference.

Dr. Terrel Bell has been selected to receive the award at the annual Founder's Day celebration in January. Bell, a UI graduate and former United States Secretary of Education under the Reagan Administration, was selected for his outstanding work in the field of education.

"We think he certainly is an outstanding recipient," Gibb said.

Senate hopes to up student retention with proposed bill

BY DAWN BOBBY

Dismayed by low student retention levels, the ASUI Senate passed two resolutions Wednesday night supporting the start of new programs to "help keep discouraged students in school."

The two resolutions, authored by Sens. Mike Gotch and Lynn Major, supported accelerated classes and an "accounts receivable" program to help out those students who for one reason or another still haven't received their financial aid.

"This isn't an excuse to drop out of school," Gotch said, "but it will at least give somebody a second chance."

The accelerated classes would begin after midterms, and meet twice as often. According to Gotch, this could be an option for a struggling student wavering between majors to save his GPA.

"Maybe engineering isn't what I thought it was," Gotch said, speaking hypothetically. "Now I'm sort of stuck taking engineering classes for the rest of the semester, and not doing well because I'm not interested."

"And even if I am doing well, what if the engineering classes don't apply to my new major?"

Some of Gotch's specific choices for these classes would be Sociology 110, Psychology 100, History 101 and Philosophy 101.

"One of the things I'm concerned about," Gotch said, "is that I want these to be additional sections, not replaced sections."

Sen. Major is concerned with those students who have no choice: if they can't pay for their education, they can't be educated.

"Many students do what is required of them to apply for their financial aid," Major said. "They go through the registration process, they get to the financial aid table, thinking that all is well and good, and then they're told that their money isn't there."

Major said that then those students enter a kind of "limbo", since they can't be officially registered until they pay their fees. They accumulate even more problems trying to pay for their housing, meals and books.

"(We're) hoping the administration will institute an 'accounts receivable' program to benefit those students who do have verifiable financial aid coming for that academic school year."

"It will tie into their ID number on the computer, and then they will be regarded as paid in full and officially registered until their financial aid does come in."

Newsbreak

ASUI blood drive begins

The ASUI blood drive is scheduled for Nov. 3-4 from noon to 4 p.m. and Nov. 5 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the second floor of the SUB.

If you wish to participate, sign up at the SUB information desk. Participants are urged to eat a good breakfast before giving blood.

Science fellowships offered

The NSF provides fellowships to graduating senior and new graduate students in the science and engineering disciplines. Awards may be used at any appropriate U.S. or foreign university.

The deadline for Phase I of the application is Nov. 13. Information and application material is available from Nancy Weller, Research Office, 111 Morrill Hall.

Focus on Apartheid scheduled

The African Students' Association will present a two-hour program, "Focus on Apartheid" 7-9 p.m., Oct. 30 in the SUB Borah Theater.

The program will feature topical discussions on current political developments in South Africa as well as divestment and economic sanctions placed upon South Africa.

There will be two documentary films on the subject shown, "The Discarded People" and "Apartheid, 20th Century Slavery". Admission is free and everyone is welcome to attend.

Tina tour hits Palouse

Tickets for the Dec. 15 performance of rock superstar Tina Turner at Washington State University went on sale 8 a.m. Oct. 25 at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum.

Opening the 8 p.m. concert will be the rock group Level 42. Tickets will be $17.50 and will also be on sale at all G & B ticket outlets.

Dusk until Dawn movies offered

The University of Idaho's Residence Hall Association and TOI movie theaters are sponsoring "dusk until dawn" Halloween movies late Friday night at the University Four Theaters in Moscow.

The four movies will start at midnight and end early Saturday morning. "The Howling," "The Shining," "The Fly" and "Alien" will be shown sequentially in each of the four theaters, and audience members can choose which movies to attend and when.

UI Residence hall presidents have tickets to sell and admission is $5 for all four movies. Tickets will be at the theater as long as they're available.

Proposed bill takes a stand against racism

BY DAWN BOBBY

The Associated Students of the University of Idaho as a collective body may join the Northwest Coalition Against Malicious Harassment, if Sen. Robert Watson's as-yet-unwritten bill is passed.

Watson recently authored a resolution condemning "hatred, bigotry, racism or any of the Neo-Nazi ideologies on the University of Idaho campus" that passed by unanimous consent in last week's Senate meeting.

He said he had hoped to personally present that resolution at the Coalition's convention last weekend, but was unable to. Instead, he read it over the phone to Coalition founder Father Bill Wassmuth.

"He thought this was a very positive move for the University of Idaho," Watson said. "Wassmuth says that universities are especially vulnerable to Neo-Nazi organizations."

According to Watson, the main purpose of the Coalition, which boasts 120 organizations and 200 representatives at its last convention, is to "eliminate prejudice based on ignorance." Watson said he hopes his resolution will go to toward the same kind of education.

He also said he does not expect any opposition to his resolution or upcoming bill.

"I feel that this resolution reflects the feelings of the vast majority of students on this campus. I find it difficult to believe that anyone would violently disagree with it and what it states."

Teaching in China: Cultural differences

BY JULIE HARTWELL

The International Trade and Development Office held their first brown bag seminar last Tuesday, featuring Amos Yoder, professor of political science at the University of Idaho, Janet Yoder of the Conferences and Enrichment Programs, and Professor Roderick Sprague of the Anthropology Department as guest speakers on teaching in China.

Amos Yoder spent last year on a Fulbright Grant teaching at the Foreign Affairs College in Beijing, China. It is a college for training diplomats, the only one of its kind in China. Many of the students' educations were interrupted by the Cultural Revolution. These students are between the ages of 25 and 45.

Yoder taught Chinese diplomats about International Relations and American Foreign Policy, as well as doing some collaborative research. He said his experience was a positive and a pleasant one.

His wife, Janet Yoder, was very involved with her students. She said they felt very strongly about America. She said that they want our cultures to be able to co-exist, to have mutual respect, and that they are proud of their nation, its strong political system, and its sense of peaceful existence.

Mrs. Yoder said that the Chinese are impressed with the strong, outgoing philosophies of America.

She had her students write a statement, something they would want to say to Americans. They felt, in general, that the two peoples are equally intelligent, industrious and kind and simply need to communicate.

The Yoders feel that the Chinese realize that they need Western assistance and joint ventures, that they want Western technology and science without acquiring Western values.

Professor Roderick Sprague spent last year at the Institute of Mongolian History at Inner Mongolia University. President Richard Gibb and the President of Inner Mongolia University signed a cultural exchange agreement in 1985 to promote academic, cultural and personnel exchanges between the two institutions. Dr. Sprague's year at Inner Mongolia University was facilitated through this agreement.

Dr. Sprague taught Archaeological Methods, as well as a course on American Indians, which was of great interest to all students. He said the classroom situation is strict and authoritarian. The students, to him, seemed unmotivated and lazy.

Sprague said unlike our system, the Chinese know their major before they start their undergraduate studies. They take a test to get in, then spend four years with the same students, in the same room, studying the same subject.

He said that the students know they can graduate with as little as a 60 percent average, and they know they'll have a job when they're finished, so they seem unmotivated and uninterested.

Dr. Sprague taught through an interpreter, unlike the Yoders who were dealing with students with a competent understanding of English. Sprague said he felt very restricted in his teaching.

The Mongolian peoples, according to Sprague, are very proud, much like the American Indian.

Keep student press rights

The most frightening thing happening this fall isn't going to be a prank by some creepy, ghoulish trick-or-treater. And it won't be movies by the "chainsaw murderer" you might see Saturday at Targhee Hall's haunted house.

The scariest thing lurking about the countryside is a group of high school administrators, who, under the guise of altruism, are trying to convince the Supreme Court to limit student press rights.

At issue is the 1983 St. Louis court case, Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, under which three students sued their high school principal, Robert Reynolds, for censoring student newspaper articles. The articles focused on teenage pregnancy and the effects of divorce on children.

A lower court ruled for Reynolds, but the decision was overturned in the students' favor on appeal. Last June, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that Reynolds infringed on the students' rights and said the newspaper was a public forum protected under the Constitution.

The Hazelwood School Board has appealed the decision to the Supreme Court, and lawyers were on hand earlier this month to debate the issue.

In reality, though, there really shouldn't be any issue to debate.

A 1969 Supreme court ruling held that students don't shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate."

But recently, several school districts in the Northwest have found a way to circumvent that 18-year-old ruling. In a number of high schools, for-credit journalism programs have been abolished, in favor of making the student newspaper an "after-school activity" — an activity some administrators say is not protected by constitutional safeguards.

Bull pucky.

Anyone with even a peabrain knows that students don't shed their constitutional right to freedom of speech or expression when the 4 p.m. bell rings.

Or do they?

At last weekend's meeting of the Idaho Journalism Adviser's Association workshop in Sun Valley, advisers who had watched opening arguments to the Supreme Court voiced concern.

Several court justices asked questions that suggested that they believed that the majority of high school students are drug pushers and sex fiends.

They may have a point, but as far as the Hazelwood case is concerned, they were off their judicial rockers.

After all, it is truly frightening to think that anyone in America would be denied the right to speak freely.

"THIS IS ONLY A TEMPORARY HALT IN AMERICA'S GREAT MARCH OF PROSPERITY"

"THERE'S NOTHING WRONG WITH THE ECONOMY..DON'T PANIC."

Lies, damn lies and politics

Create a presidential race where there is no clear favorite, mix in a dose of journalists who don't mind invading people's privacy, add a crowd of image-conscious candidates and drop in just a dash of over-exaggeration and creative forgetting, and you've got the 1988 presidential race.

It all started with Gary Hart and his rendezvous with Donna Rice. If I were Hart, I'd be a bit miffed at the way the press acted. It's essentially nobody's business what he does with his private life, as long as it doesn't affect his public performance. Besides, you've got to admire a candidate that can still get it from model/actress types, even if they do look like Rice.

After he withdrew from the race, it was found out that he regularly flew to Los Angeles for weekends, where he stayed with Warren Beatty. Well, it wasn't just Beatty — they did have a dozen or so tolex starlets around the pool to keep them entertained.

I can just see how those weekends must have been:

"So Mr. Hart, (giggle, giggle), how do you like California?"

"Oh fine, fine."

"Hee hee, (giggle, giggle), where's your wife; couldn't she come too?"

"Well, uhh, no. She uhhh, wasn't feeling well."

It's probably just as well that he dropped out of the race. That way, he can spend more time in Beverly Hills while he tries to figure out how he'll pay back his outstanding campaign debts from the 1984 race.

The next candidate to fall prey to journalistic investigation was Joseph Biden. His case is different than Hart's though, because Biden had no one to blame but himself. When he first announced that he was running for president, he was hailed as someone who would bring new life into the Democratic party.

Shawn McIntosh

This might have been so if it he hadn't told reporters that he graduated in the top half of his law school class, when in fact he was second from the bottom.

I'm not one to judge someone's intelligence on their academic performance because I don't believe there is a strong correlation between the two. But when a candidate decides to lie about something as irrelevant as law school grades, how tempted would he be to lie about something more serious?

The next candidate to fall prey to the lying syndrome was Pat

Robertson, who decided to raise his IQ scores by 20 points. This was overshadowed by his wife having a baby only 10 weeks after they were married. Unless his wife has the gestation period of a small rodent or underwent "turbo-gestation" (as C.S. Farrar so ably put it), they must have engaged in some premarital sexual activities. A definite no-no in Robertson's book.

Hypocrisy isn't a good characteristic for anyone, let alone a presidential candidate and especially not in a religious leader. What's new, right?

The latest victim of the need for a "good image" is Albert Gore, a Democratic presidential candidate. His campaign brochure has a picture of him in Vietnam carrying an M-16 rifle, even though he never actually saw any combat. He wasn't even in the infantry — he was a reporter in an engineering brigade.

No candidate is spared from the muckraking, except perhaps George Bush, and that's only because he hasn't really said anything.

If the American public wouldn't expect their politicians to be semi-divine, and if the politicians wouldn't treat the public like mindless cattle (and the press wouldn't propagate these beliefs), then maybe all these problems wouldn't exist.

Let's work on a department swap

Editor:
Comments are in order concerning Paul ALee's recent articles, "Dead end" and "Help that department."

Dean Saul's concern over Boise State University's proposed College of Technology appears to be nothing more than a thinly-veiled (and well-founded) fear that "real" engineering will find its way into the BSU curriculum through the back door. It's no secret that BSU has been trying to get approval and state funding for an engineering program for several years now. Currently they offer enough courses in civil and mechanical engineering to allow students to complete all but three semesters of an engineering program, and yes the courses are accredited. A degree program at BSU could spell disaster at UI.

But consider the proponent's rationale. Practically all of Idaho's technology-based industry is in Boise. The work force within this industry is currently raising hell because they can't continue their education while living in Boise. Both Micron and Hewlett Packard are strewn with employees lacking only three or four semesters of an engineering degree. Most of them also have homes and families that they can't just up and leave. Micron President Joe Parkinson announced recently that his company will probably look elsewhere for future expansion because of this very fact.

Those willing and able to head north find an excellent engineering school but an administration and financial aid structure that is, at best, unwelcoming toward older students. We (you should have figured it out by now) like the University of Idaho, but we would rather be in Boise.

Paul, you and I are victims of the state's long-standing policy that engineering belongs at UI and communications belongs at BSU (and that funding should be provided for neither at either). The engineering department here is well-equipped, only because Hewlett Packard donated practically everything we have. You might be surprised to know that the communications department at BSU has better computing facilities than their engineering department does.

Do you think we could conjure up a trade?

Doug Harrison

UI for students, not for alumni

Editor:

As I sit in Econ 151 listening to the lecture, a question comes to me. What is money worth? A lot of money is spent on the University of Idaho campus, but is this money being spent for the good of the students? This a good economic and ethical question in my eyes.

The University of Idaho is approaching its 100th birthday, and with this prestigious event comes an increase in the amount of money the university is willing and able to spend to "beautify" the campus. It seems that they are so excited about the influx of money that they have failed to look where the money is being spent or where it should be spent. Some examples of this are the planned additions to Hartung Hill and the reparation and beautification of the entrances to the UI. It is true that these additions will add to the first impression of the campus, but is it really helping those of us who already live here? The administration is trying to cover the real problems with a thick layer of make-up so that they will be less obvious.

The basic problems are those such as the cracked and broken roads, lawns that are nearing death, the lag time in student aid, which is still the greatest in the state. Finally, the most important problem is the fact that the book store is still being moved further from the people it serves.

The centennial money that is now available should be used wisely. Input from the ASUI should notify the half-blind administration of the fact that this university is for the students and not the alumni. In return, the administration should be willing to listen to this input and try to cooperate (Heaven forbid!). UI students may be young, but they are aware of the obvious problems.

P.S. Did anyone really know that there was a major news conference Monday, for people who had questions about the intended uses for the centennial money? I doubt it.

Bruce Lowther

Congratulations on Homecoming

Editor:

Congratulations to the University of Idaho students for a great job with Vandal Octoberfest, Homecoming 1987. The campus and community looked their best as we welcomed one of the largest homecoming crowds in recent years. It takes a lot of organization and work to put on such an enthusiastic show, and the university is strengthened by such an effort.

Keith Nyberg, homecoming chairman, and his committee are to be commended for an excellent job. The schedule was filled with a variety of fun activities and the students were out in full force at the bonfire, Vandal Vegas Night, the parade and game and all other events. Congrats and thank you go to committee chairmen Dean Pierose, Steve Peila, Mary Arvin, Kathy Kenyon, Terry Sharples, Paul Freund and Aaron Boston. Congratulations also go to homecoming queen Kelli Kast and her attendants, Tami Thompson and Kathy Kenyon. It was evident a lot of planning and involvement went into each event to ensure its success.

I know alumni, parents and friends of the university left campus proud or their association with the University of Idaho. The students are responsible for making that happen.

ALee addresses superficial needs

Editor:

It is encouraging that the communications department is being scrutinized by the Allied Daily Newspapers as well as by the Argonaut. Outside opinion and evaluation is helpful to any program, whether in academics or in business or the professions.

However, one would hope that the evaluation would be in more depth than your editorial of Oct. 27.

It is certainly nice to know how to operate word processors and have them at your disposal in class and it is marvelous to have "real world" experience as you suggest.

But it would be even more valuable for graduating students to understand the world that they will be soon asked to report to the readers of the various newspapers and magazines and listeners of the TV and radio stations.

Reporting is an interpretive art. Any event must be interpreted by the reporter to make it more concise and understandable to the reader or listener. Unfortunately, in today's complex world, the young reporter often doesn't understand the event covered well enough to be able to properly cover it with full understanding.

To remedy this situation, what is needed rather than word processors and more training in writing headlines and leads, is understanding of what the world is about and why it came to be how it is.

Additional courses in history, government, science, political science, English and literature and a requirement for a degree in communications would serve the graduates and the public much more than additional courses in the mechanics of reporting. I hope sincerely that one of the evaluations along the way will address these needs in addition to the superficial ones you mentioned in your editorial.

No solutions for condom issue

Editor:

Hats off to Bruce Skaug for continually demonstrating his skill at oversimplifying, misquoting and misinforming.

If Mr. Skaug would present the real facts about the issues he discusses, and refrain from blatantly misrepresenting and misquoting his sources, then I'm sure most people would find his conservative analysis somewhat more palatable. That's not to say he should change his beliefs, just adopt some sort of integrity in his journalistic endeavors.

For instance, Mr. Skaug's Oct. 20 commentary ("WSU students need cold showers") offered no rational solutions or alternatives to the controversial condom machines proposed for installation at WSU. In fact, the article failed to do little more than parrot the vindictive and hateful preachings of Doug Wilson and take some cheap shots at WSU students. It is indeed sad that Christianity suffers such a bad reputation because of the hatred of a few irresponsible individuals.

Apparently, Mr. Skaug interprets "safe sex" and Surgeon General Koop's position to mean that the use of condoms is absolute protection from the AIDS virus. The Surgeon General has NEVER implied that use of a condom absolutely protects a person from contracting AIDS. The message was that use of a condom reduces the likelihood of contracting the disease - not alleviate it altogether. I think the term "safe sex" is a misnomer of sorts, perhaps it should be "somewhat safer sex."

I'm sure it's clear to most that Mr. Skaug and some of those who demonstrate similar extremist beliefs, derive their perception of morality (a completely ambiguous word) from the Bible. This becomes particularly interesting when we discover that some of the most reprehensible acts in history were undertaken in the name of God.

For example, check out the Old Testament, the fourth book of Moses - Numbers, chapter 31. The entire chapter is loaded with goodies but in particular, verses 17 and 18 (depending on what translation you have) read like this: "Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him. But all the women children, that have not known a man be lying with him, keep alive for yourselves."

There are more examples of these types of atrocities in the Bible, but the subject matter and length of this letter are getting tedious. Suffice it to say that the stories of Lot and his daughters, of Abraham and Sarah in Egypt, of the betrothal of Knah and of Jacob and Esau paint a somewhat contrasting picture of Christian morality than of Mr. Skaug or any of his contemporaries.

One last thing, Bruce - after learning of some of your high jinks at Jerome High School and here at UI, I submit that your "morality" is definitely not above reproach. Perhaps you shouldn't be so quick to forget your own mistakes when condemning other people for theirs.

Todd Harper

Fear those who abuse their power

Editor:

I must commend Bruce Skaug on a well written commentary (Oct. 27). You established your reading audience, the enemies of communism, quickly. Explaining the dangers of communism (especially in Nicaragua), appeared to be your theme. It seems a shame that such a good writer (and I assume you are also very knowledgeable) instills unneeded fear in the ears of his readers.

I have never read Marx, and I am only slightly familiar with the works of Lenin, but I do not think communism stands for: death, fear, or religious non-freedom. I thought communism was a way for a country to work as a unit with one goal (a team): to raise the standard of living for all its citizens. After a "reasonable" standard of living is reached, individual members of the "team" can start trying to improve their own standards of living, i.e. capitalism. Wasn't this the basic idea of the Marxist-Leninist communist government of which you wrote? Again, I have never read Marx and I am only slightly familiar with the works of Lenin.

I am a firm believer in the U.S. Constitution and I'm sure you are also a firm believer. I especially like the Bill of Rights. So why are so many blacks, Hispanics, Orientals, etc... treated like (crap) in the United States? Bruce, if you were a black, a Hispanic, an Oriental, etc... being discriminated against, would you tear apart the Bill of Rights with your words? Of course not. So, why don't you use your writing skills to instill in your readers the fear of leaders that abuse the powers they are given? Communist leaders aren't the only ones to abuse power. Maybe you'll find that Reagan (Republican) has been abusing his power too.

Mr. Skaug, could you please give me a clearer view on communism in your next commentary? Maybe you can find a place where communism does work. I don't know. Check it out. And if you'd still rather be dead than red, I'm sure more than a few of your loyal readers would be glad to pitch in some money for a rifle and plane ticket (one way) to Nicaragua, just for you. No wait. Maybe you'd better start in China, there are already 27,000 men fighting for your cause in Nicaragua (oops! 26,999).

survey, plans to build a new bookstore or expand the current one stem from the facility's space limitations.

Built in 1963 to serve approximately 4,500 students, the bookstore offers 6,860 square feet of retail space. Administration officials say that since student populations have nearly doubled, 11,200 square feet of retail space would better serve student needs.

Cost estimates of the three top proposals range from $1.6 million to $1.8 million.

Other proposed bookstore sites are:

- West Sixth Street, beside the campus green house on Guy Wicks field,
- Third and Line Streets,
- Deakin Avenue and Narrow Street,
- Line Street and University Avenue,
- downtown at 408 South Main

PROPOSED on-campus sites for a new bookstore include: 1. College and Deakin Avenues, 2. College Avenue and Railroad Street and 3. Behind the SUB at the old Theta Chi building and park.

- Street, the old J.C. Penney building,
- 415 West Sixth Street, Murdoch's bar and restaurant, and

Kronos Quartet clocks in with timely music

Expect the unexpected in concert from top unclassical 'classical' group

BY BRYAN CLARK

If Sunday is generally regarded as a day of worship, then David Harrington and his fellow musicians of the Kronos Quartet will hold their own form of mass this weekend in spandex and spiked hair and drawing from the works of minimalist Terry Riley to psychedelic Jimi Hendrix.

The members of the quartet, which will be appearing at 8 p.m. in the University Auditorium, are devoted to their music religiously.

"It's our full-time job to locate, internalize and bring new music to people," first violinist Harrington said in an Argonaut interview. "It just takes just one stimulating musical piece to change your entire life and we want to try and provide it."

Their devotion doesn't come easy though. Harrington, John Sherba, second violin; Hank Dutt, viola; and Joan Jeanrenaud, cellist, spend 200 days a year on the road promoting new music and all of their free time in their home of San Francisco poring over the endless compositions that arrive at their offices. Harrington estimates 250-300 unsolicited new works come to them every year.

In addition to looking at the efforts of other composers, the quartet also commissions the writing of music through the earnings of the Kronos organization and grants the group garners.

"When we look at new compositions that come in, we want something that will challenge us," Harrington said. "People will call up and say that a piece is 'just our style.' That makes me wonder right off the bat. The whole idea behind playing new music is constantly branching out and widening our musical range."

Despite the work that comes with such a lofty goal, Harrington says the ability to realize it makes up for the long hours.

"Sharing new music with audiences and composers is the biggest up in what we do," Harrington said. "On the down side, of course, are the 130 concerts a year and the five o'clock planes, but it's all worth it."

Harrington said the adaptation of the new compositions to the Kronos situation is their main task.

"The process of internalizing the music is the main part of the performer's craft," he said. "We go through the more interesting works and try to adapt them to our own way of doing things in this process."

The quartet will bring that process into the open during a workshop on Monday, where students at the Lionel Hampton School of Music will have the opportunity to see the mechanics of Kronos internalizing a new composition by Cecil Taylor.

"Right now we're in the middle of this new work by Cecil Taylor, which we want to get ready for our next series of shows," Harrington said. "It will give the students a look at how performers work a piece to their own style. Of course, we'll be fielding questions, etc. at the workshop also."

New music is the hallmark of the group, which only plays works by contemporary composers, ranging from Jimi Hendrix to Thelonius Monk.

"There's a lot of different music that makes up our 'style,'" Harrington said. "Nothing is 'classical' in my opinion. We don't recognize any fences, any names when talking about music. What we're looking for are great musical experiences, regardless of what category some may place them under."

If mixing psychedelia and jazz seems a bit offbeat, it's because the Kronos Quartet is a bit offbeat. Off the beaten track of mainstream thinking, that is.

SUNDAY night will find the Kronos Quartet in the University Auditorium for what David Harrington (top) calls a "musical experience." Joining Harrington onstage will be (clockwise from top) Hank Dutt, John Sherba and Joan Jeanrenaud. (Michele Clement)

Prichard show offers diverse visuals

BY KIRK LAUGHLIN

Frontiers of Abstraction, the current show at the Prichard Art Gallery, offers up a diverse mix of visual style aimed at evoking emotional responses with their other-reality representations.

Marilyn Baum strikes a theme that recurs in the show of the future that echoes the past with her barbaric, artifact-like Primal Cross.

Simplistic serenity dominates Jerald Brainin's oil Western Washington #11 with its gray-blue interlocking squares. There seems to be a peacefulness in Brainin's almost-blankness.

The mix of high-tech and hieroglyphics in Bill and Maureen Ellis' Vessels also creates an interesting blend of the ancient and the modern, warm simplicity contrasted with coldness of scientific discovery.

James Hockenhull's computer-generated images also depict half-seen scenes of a de-humanized world.

William Ingham's Fire and Ice, in its flurry of multi-colored shards, creates the pin-prick discomfort that its title suggests.

The oil Choice I/Choice II of Betty Gano is an encompassing piece of heavy-handed morality: a murky skull versus a shimmering tunnel of peace. Its baroque-ness is a bit overpowering but it's so colorfully rendered that its sweep is vividly felt.

The past, or at least the primitive, raises its head again in the melting, metallic look of N'ima Leveton's Shield for E.M.

Also somber in its dark colors is Step Two Gray. Painter Tom Lieber creates a depressing panorama of a red-brown earth.

More reassuring are Nancy Macko's soft focus acrylics of everyday objects.

Robert Murray's mixed media sculpture Luck — Don't Kill also uses common items, but they tower up, absurd and somehow threatening.

Bob Nugent's Amazon Study #7 compares simple, natural patterns, while Lorna Obermayr's homemade paper wall sculpture Errant Gray also depicts a simplistic, bulbous, mountainous surface.

Al Payne's acrylic Fireface is a crackling, burning whirlwind of color — hot to the eyes as its title suggests. John Roloff's clay sculpture Night Ships, in comparison, is a cold, decrepit vessel encrusted with either age or ice.

After N&B, an acrylic by Cornelia Schulz, is a spatter of blue-greens, dribbling out unidentifiable motion and activity.

The wood construction Deerway of Renee Stephens are wiry, vein covered strings, too colorful to be completely naturalistic, while the stoneware Plates of Peter Vouklos also render a stylized natural world with aged plates marked by a pattern of flaws.

Frontiers of Abstraction will run until Dec. 6.

ABSTRACT representations are examined in the Prichard Art Gallery's show, Frontiers of Abstraction, running through Dec. 6. (ARGONAUT/Brian Duffy)

Broadway classic plays Pullman

THE New York City company of Broadway's longest-running musical, "A Chorus Line," will perform in the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum Nov. 5.

Broadway's longest running and most honored musical, "A Chorus Line," will be performed by a New York touring company on Thursday, Nov. 5 at 8 p.m. at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum in Pullman. The performance is being sponsored by the American Festival Ballet as part of its 1987-88 season series.

"A Chorus Line" opened at Broadway's Schubert Theater in July 1975, where it has been playing since. The production won the

New York Drama Critics' Award, the Antoinette Perry "Tony Award" and the Pulitzer Prize for Drama.

"A Chorus Line" is so popular and long-lived because it is more than a Broadway musical," said American Festival Ballet Palouse Manager, Joann Muneta.

While Bennett's death is being mourned as a major loss for Broadway and musical theater everywhere, his major work, "A Chorus Line," is a living monument to his talents.

Tickets for "A Chorus Line" are $20, $16 and $8 and available at the Coliseum box office in Pullman and Cavanaugh's in Moscow.

Brigadoon' opens

Nine University of Idaho students and a number of alumni have parts in the Moscow Community Theater production of Brigadoon, which opens a three-day run Friday.

Brigadoon will be presented Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Moscow High School auditorium.

Sally Ann Cox, a junior in theater arts from Troy, cast as Jean MacLaren, whose wedding to Charles Alrymple is one of the central events of the story of Brigadoon, an enchanted village in Scotland. Cox was first seen on stage at the Hartung Theater as Agnes in the UI production of Agnes of God.

Mike Davis, who is working on a secondary teaching certificate, plays Jeff Douglas, one of the lost American hunters who find their way to the village. Davis has a degree in theater arts from Kearney State College in Nebraska and last appeared in the Moscow Community Theater production of Guys and Dolls.

Andrea Chavez, a 1986 UI graduate, plays Meg Locke, who quickly develops a romantic interest in Douglas. She has appeared in numerous university and community theater productions.

Tickets are $6 for adults and $5 for children under 12 and senior citizens. They are available at all downtown branches of Moscow banks and at the door.

THE Moscow Community Theater will present "Brigadoon" this weekend. UI alumna Andrea Chavez and UI student Mike Davis star in the musical. (ARGONAUT/Chris Wendt)

Vandals trick-or-treat Weber

BY CLAYTON HAILEY

Entering the ninth week of the 1987 Big Sky Conference 25th Silver Anniversary football season, only one team has tackled the league schedule and come away clean.

The 1987 Weber State College Wildcats are not the same lame team from a season ago when they shared the conference cellar with Montana State and Idaho State, ending the season with a 3-8 overall.

This year, the Wildcats have made it known throughout the conference that they are planning on swiping the 25th Anniversary Big Sky championship. Last Saturday, Weber made another step in the right direction as they spoiled the Montana Grizzly homecoming 29-26.

In one of the four Big Sky games on Halloween, the Vandals will put on their costumes for a Wildcat showdown that will determine who "the bully on the block" will be.

Idaho, converging on the 22nd Vandal-Wildcat meeting, will give Weber an opportunity to divvy of the series stat box evenly. In the fourth longest conference series, Idaho keeps Weber down by just one in a 11-10-1 overall. UI repressed Weber in the last two meetings, holding a plus-two streak advantage.

Coach Keith Gilbertson, who has predicted tough matches in the last three home turf triumphs, said he sees Weber as another big game.

"Montana was a huge game, obviously Nevada-Reno was a huge game and this was a huge game," Vandal Head Coach Keith Gilbertson said following last Saturday's game. "It's getting to be tough. Next week is Weber and it's just going to be another huge game."

Gilbertson has every right to see Weber as a huge game. It will be a big game for both teams. There is a lot riding on this game besides a spooky air of Halloween.

"I'd be surprised if we're not emotionally ready to play and on edge a little bit. Obviously, it's a big game with all the things at stake in the conference standings. We were not anywhere near a emotional and ready to play against Eastern Washington as we need to be this week."

The Vandals will definitely have to be emotional and ready to play Saturday, because if the top-dog in the league isn't enough, the Vandals will have to contend with the fact that the Wildcats have beaten up their last four opponents by a clean average of 16 points in the Wildcat stadium.

Furthermore, Idaho is down with a few more injuries, as the toll reaches four for the season going into the game.

The latest loss was leading receiver Craig Robinson to knee ligament damage. Robinson was 36 for 352 with one TD.

However, Idaho is a veteran when it comes to injuries. Throughout the entire '87 season, Idaho has been plagued with injuries. Idaho has pulled through each tough game except the "Poky Show-down."

Netters attempt to spook MSU, UM

BY JULIE HOHBACH

The Lady Spikers are spending Halloween at home this weekend, hoping to spook Montana and Montana State into defeat.

The spikers play Montana Friday night and Montana State on Saturday.

These will be the final two home Mountain West Conference matches of the season for Idaho, in addition to a non-conference match with rivals Washington State in November.

After losing to Weber State on Monday night, Idaho is currently 5-18 overall and 1-10 in Mountain West Conference play.

Against Weber State Idaho scored 9-15, 8-15, 12-15.

"We had a very rough road trip last weekend, we played the worst matches of the whole year," Head Coach Pam Bradetich said.

Coming off the road, the spikers have practiced hard and plan to take the matches one at a time.

"We consider these games as a chance to improve," Bradetich said. "We recognize that we will be playing together in the spring so we have to keep trying hard."

"We want to play the game at a much higher level," Bradetich said.

The matches against Montana should be very competitive because they are ranked second in conference.

Idaho's only conference win was against Montana State on Oct. 3 at Montana.

Bradetich said the team line-up has changed throughout the year and it may still be adjusted for the upcoming games.

"Susan Deskinis is a player we depend on to stay on the floor at all times," Bradetich said.

Dawn Colston had a tough weekend but her setting has improved so she should make a good show for Montana.

"Montana State is struggling as of late," Bradetich said. "This will be a key match for both teams. The winner can use it as a springboard into the final weeks of the season."

Montana is one of five teams battling for one of three remaining playoff spots. But Idaho has already been eliminated from a shot at the playoff, so the goal for the team in the remaining six matches of the season is to work on skills.

"We know we're not going to make it to the playoffs so we are strictly playing to improve as a team," Bradetich said.

The double header weekend will begin with Montana tonight at 7:30 p.m. and Montana State tomorrow night at the same time. Both matches can be seen in the Memorial Gym and will be two of the three opportunities left to see the 1987 Vandal netters in action.

Fall running on the Palouse

By JOHN FRITZ

Autumn weather has returned to the Palouse and with it comes the beautiful Indian summer. Climate is perfect right now for the running enthusiast, the walker, bicyclist or anyone else who loves outdoor activities. But particularly for the runner, fall is heaven.

Temperatures are cooling down and the scenery is absolutely gorgeous. With the onslaught of cool, running offers a stress-reducing escape from the rigors of living through classes and the long sessions spent studying. Out on an afternoon run, a body can relax in peace with the warm and bright sun.

For most serious runners, fall signals the end of hard training and racing that occurs during spring and summer. Fall grants these runners a chance to slow down, relax and just enjoy cruising along the open roads. It is also a good time to let injuries heal, allow the body to rebuild and recoup these mental powers and attitude. Running through the fall can help establish a strong fitness base for winter sports such as basketball, skiing, racquetball, etc. Running can be an effective method to shed excess pounds from jumping aboard your body.

While Moscow may not be the most scenic or optimum running area in the West, there are some interesting offerings to pursue here. Rolling hills give runners variety and challenging terrain to improve fitness. The air is generally clean and crisp. And the back roads from the city can be both an adventure and grand escape from the pressures of daily life. Some nice courses to try are the following:

*The old Pullman highway that takes off from the west end of the outdoor track and proceeds up the hill. A hilly and challenging gravel road that affords a beautiful view of the surrounding farmland.

*From the university, run behind University Four Theaters, past the aromatic sheep pens. Come out at KRPL road, turn either right or left and wind back to the school.

*Run from Eggen Youth Center near the junior high anywhere east and you will find a number of country gravel roads to explore. These roads lead through farmlands and can be fun and beautiful.

*Moscow Mountain. Try running up and around the mountain area on various trails and logging roads. This is very challenging and beautiful, but watch out for the hunters. Take your time and walk when necessary.

The secret to enjoying your running this time of year is allowing yourself a sensual and relaxing experience. Be aware of all the sights and smells around you as the autumn season explodes. Be aware of your body and current level of fitness. Allow your body to determine how far and how often to run.

If you are just starting out on a running program, begin by running one quarter mile and walking one quarter mile. Build the running part up gradually while slowly reducing the amount of walking distance. Go slow and listen to your body signals. Don't rush this very important phase of building your fitness base. Patience and awareness will keep you healthy, excited and progressing toward your goals.

Fall is an excellent time for outdoor fitness activities, and runners can reap major rewards from their efforts. Combining a variety of courses, distances and paces can protect you from getting stale. Be creative. Take off and just go wherever.

As you develop fitness and your body becomes strong and defined, energy stores will improve and running will be easier and more comfortable. Now that the indian summer is upon us, take advantage of prime running days to get fit, reduce excess baggage, and enjoy the abilities and wonders of your human machine.

Soccer club wraps up season

By ERIK SIMPSON

The University of Idaho Soccer Club, currently 2-7-2, wraps up the season with a double-header against Oregon State University Saturday on Guy Wicks Field at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

OSU team president David Erbillig said that after the fall season is over, all six teams of the Northwest Intercollegiate Soccer League are invited to a league cup weekend, Oregon regardless of their records. The cup is scheduled for Oct. 7-8.

Erbillig said that his team record is 7-7 overall and 4-2 in league competition. Although his team has lost some starters due to injuries and has a long drive for the weekend's games, he predicts a win against the Idaho club.

The end of the fall season doesn't necessarily mean that the soccer club won't continue kicking around the playing field, however. Kirschenmann said that the team will play other clubs for the winter months.

Vandals trick-or-treat Weber

BY CLAYTON HAILEY

Entering the ninth week of the 1987 Big Sky Conference 25th Silver Anniversary football season, only one team has tackled the league schedule and come away clean.

The 1987 Weber State College Wildcats are not the same lame team from a season ago when they shared the conference cellar with Montana State and Idaho State, ending the season with a 3-8 overall.

This year, the Wildcats have made it known throughout the conference that they are planning on swiping the 25th Anniversary Big Sky championship. Last Saturday, Weber made another step in the right direction as they spoiled the Montana Grizzly homecoming 29-26.

In one of the four Big Sky games on Halloween, the Vandals will put on their costumes for a Wildcat showdown that will determine who "the bully on the block" will be.

Idaho, converging on the 22nd Vandal-Wildcat meeting, will give Weber an opportunity to divy of the series stat box evenly. In the fourth longest conference series, Idaho keeps Weber down by just one in a 11-10-1 overall. UI repressed Weber in the last two meetings, holding a plus-two streak advantage.

Coach Keith Gilbertson, who has predicted tough matches in the last three home turf triumphs, said he sees Weber as another big game.

"Montana was a huge game, obviously Nevada-Reno was a huge game and this was a huge game," Vandal Head Coach Keith Gilbertson said following last Saturday's game. "It's getting to be tough. Next week is Weber and it's just going to be another huge game."

Gilbertson has every right to see Weber as a huge game. It will be a big game for both teams. There is a lot riding on this game besides a spooky air of Halloween.

"I'd be surprised if we're not emotionally ready to play and on edge a little bit. Obviously, it's a big game with all the things at stake in the conference standings. We were not anywhere near a emotional and ready to play against Eastern Washington as we need to be this week."

The Vandals will definitely have to be emotional and ready to play Saturday, because if the top-dog in the league isn't enough, the Vandals will have to contend with the fact that the Wildcats have beaten up their last four opponents by a clean average of 16 points in the Wildcat stadium.

Furthermore, Idaho is down with a few more injuries, as the toll reaches four for the season going into the game.

The latest loss was leading receiver Craig Robinson to knee ligament damage. Robinson was 36 for 352 with one TD.

However, Idaho is a veteran when it comes to injuries. Throughout the entire '87 season, Idaho has been plagued with injuries. Idaho has pulled through each tough game except the "Poky Show-down."

Against Weber State Idaho scored 9-15, 8-15, 12-15.
