

'Sexual Health Week' concludes with videoconference

BY CLAYTON HAILEY
EDITOR

Although the first 'Sexual Health Week' in Idaho culminates on Wednesday, the impact of issues are expected to linger on.

The issues and presentations varied throughout the two-week period, from lectures on relationships at the counseling center to an acquaintance rape discussion at the fraternity houses.

The Student Advisory Service

sponsored the educational program that blanketed the campus prior to Valentine's Day.

Although there was some criticism concerning the intentions of Student Advisory Services in sponsoring 'Sexual Health Week,' SAS reaffirms its position that the lectures, seminars, and presentations were not to promote sex but rather to educate students.

The objective of 'Sexual Health Week' is similar to 'Buckle-Up Week' and 'Alcohol Awareness Week' in that it attempts to make students aware of the impact decisions could have on their lives and the lives of others.

Students are given the opportunity to examine the many different aspects surrounding 'safer sex' through educational information so they will be prepared to form their own opinions and decisions.

SAS furthermore contends that 'Sexual Health Week' does not promote condoms or consider condoms as the only answer to 'safer sex.'

"There are a lot bigger issues at stake than condoms in the residence halls," said Dean of Student Services, Bruce Pitman.

Pitman said the issue of 'safer sex' is much too complex to concentrate on a very small part like condoms on campus.

The impact of 'Sexual Health Week' has already been felt by the Student Health Center.

"I have already had many students come in," said Dr. Robert Leonard, director of the Student Health Center. "I hope it will increase by word of mouth."

The Student Health center is pleased with the concept behind 'Sexual Health Week' because it brings some of the problems facing college campuses to light.

"There are considerably more (cases of sexually transmitted diseases) now than there was 20 years ago," Leonard said. "I presume there is more sexual contact now."

The AIDS Tele-conference Satellite Broadcast on Wednesday will conclude the week. The videoconference focuses on AIDS as the future campus crisis.

William Kibbie; UI benefactor killed in crash

BY ANGELA CURTIS
NEWS EDITOR

William Kibbie, a University of Idaho benefactor who donated $300,000 for the completion of the Kibbie Dome, was killed Thursday in an automobile accident.

He was traveling southbound around noon on U.S. Highway 89 near the Wyoming border when the accident occurred. Kibbie, 69, was not wearing a seat belt.

Plans to enclose the stadium ground to a halt when funds for building the dome fell short of a contractor's bid. Kibbie donated $300,000 in November, 1974, making the completion of the dome possible.

He graduated from Bellevue High School near Hailey and attended the university for a semester in 1936.

Kibbie founded the electrical contracting company, Jelco Co., in 1957. The company, now known as EMKO Corp., specializes in hydroelectric construction and is one of the largest industrial contractors in the nation, according to the Spokesman-Review.

Idaho State Police officials in Pocatello said Kibbie was traveling "at a high rate of speed" prior to the accident and was ejected from the automobile.

Farming and law discussed

BY CHARLIE RICE
STAFF

A symposium on farm legal issues was held Saturday. It was sponsored by the Women's Law Caucus and held at the University of Idaho College of Law courtroom.

The speakers and guests were welcomed by Dean Sheldon Vincenti, UI College of Law. The speakers were introduced by Mona Williams, Symposium coordinator.

The first speaker was Leora Day, director of Intergovernmental Affairs for the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture. She discussed the issues facing farmers and how farmers are affected by decisions made by the Department of Agriculture.

She was followed by Don Thompson, who is the Northwest area director for the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation

LYNN Hayes was one of many panelists answering questions from an audience of concerned farmers in a symposium on legal issues in farming held Saturday at the UI Law School. (ARGONAUT/Jill Pagano)

Service. Thompson discussed government payment limitation regulations and how they affect the farmer and the crops he is allowed to plant if he signs up for government crop subsidies or conservation reserve programs.

"Safe sex" may be a myth

BY JEFF STUCKER
STAFF WRITER

"Safe" sex does not exist outside a lifetime commitment, research indicates.

Sexually active Americans may catch 39 possible sexually transmitted diseases. Twenty STDs are not restricted by contraceptives, according to the Minnesota Health Department.

The dangers of extramarital and premarital sex have been compiled by Josh McDowell, a collegiate lecturer and author who has spoken at more than 600 universities in 62 countries.

McDowell cited these statistics at a conference in Portland:

- Today, 38,000 people will catch a sexually transmitted disease.

- More than 25 million Americans have herpes. There is no cure.

- This year, 4 million women in the USA will acquire chlamydia trachomatis, an STD with more adverse effects on women than men.

- 25 percent of the women with chlamydia will become sterile.

- 33 percent of children from chlamydia-infected mothers will be born with chlamydia.

- 12 percent of the babies will be born with a major birth defect, sometimes without the mother knowing she has

Josh McDowell

- More children have been born with birth defects caused by STDs in the last year than were affected by the entire 10-year epidemic of polio in the 1950s.

- Condoms are not effective in preventing gonorrhea or syphilis when there is foreplay or the condom is not used correctly.

STDs often are latent and can be passed on for years without carriers' knowledge, McDowell said.

"Every time you have sex, you've got to have one thing in the forefront of your mind: You're not only having sex with that person, but with every person he or she has had sex with and all of their partners for the last ten years," he said.

McDowell said he doesn't trust the recent push for condom use as "safe sex."

Even using condoms 100 percent of the time, 17-30 percent of AIDS carriers will pass the disease to their partners in a 24-month time.

"If you knew your partner had AIDS, would you...commit your life to a little thin sheath?" McDowell said. "No way!"

McDowell said that when birth control pills came out "the university, the health clinics, everything else (were) telling the women 'Go for it!' But they weren't smart enough to realize that they would usher in the greatest epidemic of sexually transmitted diseases in all the history of civilization."

"Now they say, 'Wear a condom and go for the gold.' In less than five years — in fact, we've already seen it — that the consequences would be catastrophic."

"They don't tell you this in the

Ham radio club goes international

BY LEN ANDERSON
STAFF WRITER

To celebrate the kickoff of the Centennial, various members of the University of Idaho Amateur Radio Club (W7UQ) "hammed" it up all last week.

The club completed their week-long competition by talking to a total of 100 worldwide hams, including 28 states and eight foreign countries. Among the countries contacted were Japan, East Germany, France, Hungary, the U.S.S.R., Canada, Norway and Uruguay.

During the rest of the 18 months of the Centennial Celebration, the club plans on working in more than 100 different countries. One of the members, Arden Hawn, encouraged other members during the last monthly meeting by challenging anyone to work as many countries as himself.

Harold McBirney organized the club in 1929. The only time it was not allowed to contact other stations around the world was during World War II in 1944-45. It is affiliated with Amateur Radio Relay League which is a national organization supporting amateur radio in the U.S.

Until this year the "ham shack" was located inside an old green trailer behind the UCC building. At the beginning of last semester, the club moved their equipment into a building adjacent to the power plant across the street from the Gauss Engineering Laboratories.

Having moved into the new facilities, the group is upgrading its equipment. Ham radio is purchasing a new radio with the assistance of the ASUI. The club currently operates with borrowed equipment.

Today there are more than 19 active club members, including students, staff and faculty who attend meetings the first Tuesday of every month at 4:30 p.m. in the SUB.

During the weekend of Jan. 23, various club members flipped on their radio switches to talk to UI alumni in their annual "Reunion on the Air." During the reunions, many alumni are contacted and given an opportunity to talk back to the university.

The task force will include people from the planning and zoning commission, the university, city staff, the city council, the Moscow Department of Parks and Recreation and the community.

The task force will search for funding and technical assistance to acquire the property and develop it into parks and a bike path. They will also study all possible use options, research zoning and land use issues.

Mayor Tom Scott and many others in the community have said this is a unique opportunity to improve the community.

Have some respect basketball fans!

It is the last two minutes of the game. An aggressive visiting team struggles to overcome the odds of beating the Vandals in the Kibbie Dome.

The score is tied at 60-60.

The fans are ecstatic, they go uncontrollably wild over a nailbiter packed with fouls, ejections, warnings and more fouls.

The last few seconds of the game are now upon us. No one has scored.

Then all of a sudden a huge piece of ice is cast to the middle of the court just in time for a player to slip on it.

The referee calls a technical foul on the home team for a disruptive audience and allows the opposing team two free throws.

The visitors squeak by with a two point lead; 62-60.

This scenario was exactly what I was expecting at the Idaho State University/UI face-off in the Kibbie Dome Saturday night.

I have never been so shocked at fans at a game since I left high school.

What happened to a little maturity?

Or did that disappear along with other great words like integrity, respect and intelligence?

It was bad enough that the game was plagued by questionable officiating which cost us a few points, our top shooter Kenny Luckett being ejected for unnecessary roughness, and head coach Tim Floyd receiving one of the two technical fouls that could send him to the showers without Vandal fans adding hurt onto injury.

If the 'questionable officiating' deemed it necessary to levy a technical foul against the team whose fans threw ice to the middle of the court Saturday night, it could have cost us the game.

Provided the Bengals made the free throw shots with a game that close any extra-curricular call on either side could swing the game.

And no one is saying that fans should sit quietly and watch the game either.

Saturday night, certain fans relished a certain class of profanity so much that every 16 seconds during the game they blurted out a handful to which every referee top their 'shit-list' at that moment.

During half-time when the flyers were distributed, certain fans felt it necessary to make F-14s test the wind resistance factor present in the Dome.

However, the worst occurred on Thursday in the match against Boise State University. While the players were visiting their respective benches, an overzealous fan targeted an unsuspecting referee with a penny.

The penny gently pelted the ref' hard enough to draw a stream of blood from his forehead.

God-knowing that rape, pillage, and plunder was crossing his mind as he calmly got a towel and dabbed up the blood.

Does behavior like this reflect the typical Vandal fan?

Both games, by the way, were broadcast live on television throughout the state of Idaho.

We can only hope that those delinquents in the stands were not real Vandal fans but rather impersonators sent by rivaling universities to initiate an 'audience induced technical foul.'

Thanks for representing us in such a positive fashion. It reflects well upon the entire university, students and faculty alike.

Thanks!

Homosexuals distort reality

It is hard to find conversation that is not concerning one of the top three current headline issues: Pat Robertson's "invisible army," violence in the Middle East, and the AIDS epidemic. An undercurrent to the AIDS issue is last week's court decision to once again allow homosexuals to enlist in the U.S. Armed Forces, a cause for celebration in every gay bathhouse in America.

I have watched the "gay-rights" movement and their quest for minority status with great concern for many years, because I see it as the spearhead of a destructive force. That force is both anti-family and inimical to procreation. It wants to change the government of the United States from "by the people, for the people" to "by the Congress for the special interest groups."

Last October, thousands of homosexuals participated in a march on Washington for lesbian and gay rights. In their official handbook called Out and Outraged, they listed key objectives:

- 1) Passage of the congressional Lesbian and Gay Rights Bill, which would give homosexuality the same legal status as religion and race under the Civil Rights Law;
- 2) An end to all discrimination against people with AIDS and massive increases in funds for AIDS research and patient care as well as value clarification education (an "if it feels good, do it" philosophy with amoral instruction);
- 3) The repeal of all laws that make sodomy between consenting adults a crime;
- 4) Reproductive freedoms—this encompasses both adoption and surrogacy but usually means the right to an abortion, which is somewhat ironic, because homosexuals can't impregnate each other anyway.

But the gay community is now consumed in a crisis of unprecedented proportions, and it seems totally incapable of confronting itself with the tragedy of the AIDS epidemic. The homosexuals continue to distort reality, refuse to make concessions, and blame everyone else for their problems. They want full benefits and privileges without accepting responsibility or consequences for their actions.

Thomas Lawford
Commentary

The gays are angry at Christians because the Bible says homosexuality is a sin and an abomination in God's sight, and Christians believe it. The homosexuals are mad at the U.S. Supreme Court for upholding Georgia's sodomy law which criminalizes any homosexual act whether consented upon or not. They are angry at the Reagan Administration for not doing enough to combat AIDS. As far as the homosexual population is concerned, it is everyone else who is wrong.

The gays and lesbians continue to deceitfully cloak their movement with civil rights lingo because they know people will accept a civil rights cause, but shun a power to the people movement. Equating a movement such as this with the black struggle to free itself from slavery is nonsense. They already have the elementary freedoms and rights. Rock Hudson and Liberace did not have to pick cotton, drink from fountains labeled just for them, ride at the back of the bus, or were not forced to eat at segregated counters. They were not deprived of their right to vote, nor tortured and murdered by Ku Klux Klan members.

Homosexuals do not want equal rights. They want to experience nationally the same privileged status they enjoy currently in New York City, thanks to Mayor Koch.

If nothing else, I had hoped the AIDS epidemic would eradicate the false notion that two consenting adults doing something in private has no effect on others. But no! Consenting adults are killing not only themselves, but are spreading unbearable anguish to millions of family members and friends. They are starting to bring about a collapse of the hospitals and health care system. Now the entire insurance industry is threatened because they can't refuse coverage to AIDS victims. Four percent of all AIDS carriers are hemophiliacs, victims of a contaminated blood bank system.

Yet the homosexuals continually portray themselves as victims of the Bible, the Supreme Court, and Ronald Reagan. Although I do not feel condemnation and concentration camps are the answer to the problems caused by homosexuality, efforts should be put forth to contain the resulting diseases, not protect them. This movement of self-delusion should by no means be given minority status because legitimizing homosexuality would put a kiss of certain death on the United States and the human race.

RHA president remember your constituents

Editor;
CON-STIT-U-EN-CY: n., pl.
All the people, esp. voters, served by a particular elected official, esp. a legislator.

Yes, this word describes a person who is put into power by the people to represent the people's best interests. Unfortunately, this definition does not necessarily apply in the Residence Hall Association (RHA). There has been a serious breakdown in the system. It started last semester with GDI Week. There was some controversy over the infamous "Beer Chug" which has been an annual event in the GDI games for years. Unfortunately the controversy was not with the Vice-Presidents, who agreed with an overwhelming majority to continue with tradition, but it was with the RHA President who arbitrarily decided it would no longer be included in GDI Week. He said that we could not have the "Beer Chug" because the Administration condemned the event, thus bypassing what the CONSTITUENCY desired.

Partially into second semester, and it seems that a similar breakdown is taking place. That same RHA President is now attending an R.A. class. Not saying that any of our R.A.s are bad, but they are paid by Student Advisory Services and it is in their best interest to do what SAS wants. Now the word CONSTITUENCY comes into play. It seems that the RHA President has forgotten the meaning of that word. The longer he is involved in both an R.A. class and in RHA, there will be a constant battle to determine who is actually more important—his CONSTITUENTS or SAS. This is a scary situation. I have heard him more than once utter a word or two in favor of the Administration's actions on subjects that should be carefully scrutinized, but are agreed to by the RHA President, because of the Administration's control over him.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I am not asking for radicals to try to impeach the poor confused RHA President, but as a personal warning to him. Remember who your CONSTITUENTS are. You were elected by us and you are here to try to make life in the dorms a little easier for us by not letting the Administration or Housing take away all our rights while we are busy studying for an Economics test. That is the reason you are given power. It is sad to see GDIs give away some of their independence by electing an RHA President, but it is the only way that we in the Residence Halls carry any weight with the current Administration. It is this reason alone that your services are required, Mr. RHA President.

Bruce W. Lowther

Thanks from Senator Major

Editor;

It's so easy to go through life and blame our problems and lack of solutions on others. Admittedly, I have on occasion fallen into that deadliest of traps.

With that said, I would like to take this opportunity to thank those who have gone out of their way to help me work through and complete both personal and senate projects.

First, to Don Surfus, assistant director of Operations at Family Housing. Don's limitless patience and kindness while working with me to see the winterizing project at Family Housing change from being a dream to a reality cannot go unrecognized. His genuine show of concern and dedication are unmatched in my book of great deeds!

To Judy Wallins, coordinator of Student Development Programs. Judy's encouragement and wisdom are a welcome addition to the many worthwhile services offered by the Learning Resource Center.

Last, but certainly not least, my undying gratitude must be extended to Dean Bert McCroskey of the College of Letters and Science. Dean McCroskey always has a positive thought to pass on to distraught students. His outlook on life and passion for his job make him a credit of grand proportions to the students, not to mention he is a shining example of what the administration should be about. At the risk of repeating myself, thank you again for everything.

Yes Kelly, LASA is just a commie front

Editor;

This letter is from a concerned citizen responding to the startling revelations in Tim Kelly's "West Targeted in Discussion" (Argonaut, Feb. 5).

Mr. Kelly's letter presents long awaited evidence proving that the Latin American Studies Association (LASA) is just another commie front organization. I suggest that the University of Idaho Young Republicans mail the news of this shocking discovery to every concerned U.S. Senator and Congressman. Perhaps there's still time to stop LASA at the U.S.-Mexico border—or before LASA strikes at the soft underbelly of South Idaho!

Mr. Kelly is right to be concerned about a secret Cuba-UI research connection. Word on campus has it that the UI's School of Agriculture and Castro's Cuba may sign a multi-million-peso contract that would allow UI researchers to study ways in which sugar cane can be converted to fuel to keep all those 1950s American cars running on the streets of Havana. Negotiations between the Cubans and UI administrators seem to have temporarily bogged down, however, as both sides have resorted to outright haggling over an acceptable peso-dollar exchange rate to write into the contract.

As for West himself, it's high time he was "targeted." For too long we've dismissed him as being merely "harmlessly eccentric"—a professor who in the classroom converses in a strange language with stuffed toy animals. In reality West is a dangerous menace who hasn't voted Republican for decades.

Dennis West

ITAD focuses on international

Awareness of international topics is the focus of the International Brown Bag Series.

Through the series, the university and the office of International Trade and Development are presenting lectures on campus to create an awareness toward the various programs, problems and discussions dealing with international topics.

The series, which is new this year, studies a number of international topics, according to Gleanne Wray, the program assistant for ITAD.

"It involves the faculty, students, and the community," Wray said.

The lectures, which take place during the lunch hour from 12:30 p.m.-1:20 p.m., encourage the audience to bring their lunches with them. Hence, the name International Brown Bag Series.

The topics for the monthly lectures, which deal with some international facet, vary in content and have included discussions on China's ability to meet requirements to get products to the U.S.; trade issues between Japan and the U.S.; faculty discussion on their overseas sabbatical leaves; women in development; and most recently, last Friday's lecture by Associate Dean of the University of Washington's Law School John Haley on why Japan has less crime.

The series, which is one facet of the entire international program, focuses on some element in the international community and brings it here to the campus, Zakrejsek said.

Zakrejsek also mentioned the

Vandals survive brawl against ISU 65-62

HEAD Coach Tim Floyd earns a technical foul in this discussion with a referee over Kenny Luckett's flagrant foul and ejection from the game early in the second half of Saturday's game. The Vandals went on to win even though they lost three starters to fouls. (ARGONAUT/Stephanie Worley)

BY ERIK SIMPSON
SPORTS EDITOR

Despite a basketball game plagued with fouls, referee's warnings, technical fouls, more fouls and a player ejection, the Vandals squeaked by the Idaho State Bengals 65-62 Saturday in the Dome.

Idaho began the contest shooting cold, not scoring their first basket until three minutes and twenty seconds had expired off the clock. About five minutes into the game, the Vandals, with only four points, were playing catch-up to the Bengals who had scored nine.

Just as it looked as if Idaho State might run away with the half, Idaho staged a series of mini-comebacks, one of which they shot five unanswered baskets and took the lead 22-16 with 7:06 remaining in the first 20 minutes.

Throughout the rest of the half, the teams exchanged baskets and fouls and Idaho built a comfortable lead to go into the locker room on top 32-26.

At the beginning of second half, the Vandals widened the margin to 11 points after about three minutes had gone by. When the Bengals had cut the margin to only seven, that's when the tables turned.

Idaho guard Kenny Luckett was involved in a skirmish with an Idaho State player and was consequently ejected from the game on a flagrant foul. As Idaho Head Coach Tim Floyd protested the referee's decision, he was hit with a technical foul, which resulted in Bengal center George Davis sinking the four freethrows awarded for the violations.

After the incident, the Bengals slowly but surely got back into the game, caught up and passed the Vandals 60-61 with only 2:16 remaining in the contest after James Fitch had fouled out and Raymond Brown had been awarded a technical for questioning the referee's decision on his fifth foul.

With only 10 seconds remaining in the bout, Marvin Washington stole an inbound pass and threw the ball to Lorenzo Nash who hit a five-foot jump shot to set the score tied at 62.

On the next ISU inbound, Nash came up with the steal and passed the ball to Washington, who missed a 15-foot jumper. As the Bengals came up with the rebound, a traveling violation was called and Idaho was awarded possession with four seconds remaining.

The ball was inbounded to Ricardo Boyd who put it up and in from 15 feet to give Idaho the 64-62 edge. As the Idaho players were celebrating their victory, the referees said that the ISU bench had called a time out with two seconds remaining.

The Bengals' bench was hit with a technical foul for calling time out when they had none remaining. Boyd hit one of the two freethrows and Idaho was awarded the ball at the half-court sideline.

As the ball was inbounded, the clock expired and the Vandals went away victorious 65-62.

Brown led the Vandals in the scoring department with 23, despite playing only 31 of 40 minutes.

The Vandals improved their record to 16-7 and 8-2 in the Big Sky Conference, while the Bengals fell to 10-10 and 4-6.

"I feel like our players played with discipline," said Floyd. "I think we've had only one T (technical foul) on a player since I've been here and I was disappointed with the two tonight."

The Vandals will have to take care of business on the road for the next four games before returning to the Kibbie Dome for a Montana and Montana State contest March 3 and 5.

This week Idaho will be in the southwest to take on Nevada-Reno Thursday night in Reno. The Wolf Pack lost to Montana State last Saturday in Bozeman, Mont.

Vandal tennis defeats MSU

BY ERIK SIMPSON
SPORTS EDITOR

The Idaho tennis team was victorious in their season opener against Montana State Saturday in the Dome. The Vandal men finished 5-4, while the women nearly came up with a clean sweep against their competition 8-1.

"I was really impressed with how everyone came together. They were all really hungry and wanted to play this year," said Head Coach Dave Scott speaking of his Vandal squad.

Scott said that his team hadn't played a real tough match since September. "It's always hard to play the first match—even at home."

Montana State had come off two good matches prior to Saturday's contests.

The Idaho women lost only one match, which was the number three freshman doubles team of Linda Voris and Karen Bladholm. The contest was decided in three sets 0-6, 7-6, 6-4.

Voris bounced back from her doubles' loss to win her number four singles match 6-3, 6-0 against MSU's Dawn Bulgin.

"Linda played like she knew what she was doing," Scott said. "She didn't play like a freshman."

Scott was very pleased with all of his women players. Other womens' singles winners include: Cathy Shanander, Patty Shanander, Linda Leroux, Jodey Farwell, and Shiek Moore. The number one doubles team of Patty and Cathy Shanander and the number two doubles team of Linda Leroux and Jodey Farwell defeated their competition.

The men also had a productive day. The number one doubles team of Efrem del Degan and Skosh Berwald defeated the MSU team of Todd Devries and Mike Schwarzkoff in two sets by a score of 6-3, 6-4.

"They're both real hungry and would like to win the conference," Scott said. "I can't see anything standing in their way."

Efrem del Degan also went on to defeat Devries in a close singles match 4-6, 6-2, 6-3, while Berwald won his singles match 6-3, 6-3.

Other Idaho mens' winners include: John Bladholm in a singles match and the number two doubles team of Darrin Lewis and John Bladholm, who won their match 3-6, 7-5, 6-3.

"I really appreciated the crowd and want to thank everyone for coming out," Scott said. "Everyone (the team) really noticed it."

Scott also said that Saturday's attendance was the largest he had seen since coaching at Idaho, and that indicates that there is some interest in Idaho tennis.

The women travel to Pocatello for the Idaho State Invitational which will take place Friday and Saturday. Idaho will play teams from Idaho State, Utah State, Montana State and Boise State at the tournament.

The men travel to Walla Walla, Wash. on Feb. 27 where they will take on Whitman College and the University of Oregon.

The Lady Vandals suffered a loss to Boise State Friday night but secured their second Mountain West Conference win against Idaho State Saturday.

The Boise State game was the Vandals' seventh straight loss, earning them a 4-16 overall record and a 1-8 conference mark.

Idaho made only 29 percent of their shots in the first half of the game, trailing Boise 35-17 and could come no closer than 10 points in the second half.

Idaho's Sheri Lehmer led the team with 12 points while the Vandals' leading scorer Christy Van Pelt scored nine, but went just 1-10 from the free-throw line.

Lori Elkins, Idaho's second-leading scorer with a 12 point average was held to just one shot from the field and went scoreless. During the Ladies' last game she scored 23 points.

Idaho finished the game shooting 42 percent from the field, but also suffered 25 turnovers.

Boise out-rebounded Idaho

43-23 and Idaho made only 8 of 23 free throws for a mere 35 percent from the line.

Improving their conference record to 2-8 is not the only Vandal boast from Saturday night's game—Idaho beat Idaho State for the second time this year in an overtime game ending 64-61.

Freshman guard Sherry Peterson hit a 3-pointer with two seconds left to send the game into overtime on Saturday night.

Peterson also hit a basket in the extra period to give the University of Idaho the lead for good as the Vandals broke their seven-game losing streak.

"It was pure luck we got it into overtime," Idaho Coach Laurie Turner said. "We got the 3-point shot off by a player who hasn't made one all year. I think Idaho State was a little deflated after that."

The Lady Vandals played Weber State on the road last night but will host a two-game weekend at home this weekend playing Montana Friday and Montana State Saturday.

Cross-training adds variety

ANALYSIS BY JOHN FRITZ

A new phenomenon has appeared unto the masses of fitness crazies and health experts in the 1980s. The buzzword of training programs today is cross-training, and its popularity has risen to amazing heights.

Cross-training is nothing new, rather, fitness instructors and experts in the various fields of athletics have known for years the benefits of combining different training programs to improve an athlete's specialty. The phenomenon has exploded in the form of combining sports into a single competition.

Foremost among the cross-training craziness is the triathlon. It brings together the individual sports of swimming, bicycling and running to a unique event which challenges the athlete to new heights of aerobic fitness. Triathlons are grueling tests of health that require extensive training in three totally different activities.

And therein lies the intrinsic benefit of cross-training. The variety and focus of muscular usage give an athlete relief from getting stale while attaining greater overall muscle strength and balance. For example, a runner develops excellent aerobic fitness, in addition to improving strength and tone in the hamstring, hip and calf muscles. However, a runner does virtually no work with the upper body and puts relatively little effort on the quadriceps muscle.

Running, combined with some weightlifting and cycling, becomes a total body workout. This example of cross-training allows the athlete a chance to develop upper body strength which helps pull a runner through the latter stages of a tough race. And cycling adds quadriceps priority exercise which will add balance and overall strength to the legs.

Besides the obvious benefits of total body fitness and balanced muscles, cross-training adds variety and freshness to a training program. Anyone who has run many miles consistently over a number of years has probably encountered some sense of staleness. And that applies to any fitness activity.

By blending a number of different sports into a schedule of training one can look forward to new and exciting challenges both of fitness and athletic ability. The variety means new tests of agility and coordination.

Cross-training also opens new doors to the social athlete. Instead of just going to road races, a weight room or swimming pool, now a person can enjoy meeting people at all kinds of events.

The number of sports and combinations thereof is limitless. While base running during wintertime, one can include some weightlifting, indoor stationary cycling on those bad weather days, or swim. In addition, one could cross-country ski to really improve cardiovascular fitness and strengthen quadriceps muscles.

Fitness programs generally are geared toward improving and maintaining health throughout a lifetime. Most activities are individual and concentrate on personal goals. So a good cross-training program may include some team sports or playful activities in concert with the individual activities.

During the year an athlete can combine some base activities such as weightlifting and running with sports that are seasonal for continued health enjoyment. For instance, bicycling is great during the good weather months, but once rain and snow attack, go indoors for racquetball, basketball or stationary cycling.

Deep into winter, cross-country skiing can be unbelievable fun and a tremendous fitness-builder. Also, playing tennis and swimming are great during the cold months.

When warm weather appears, everyone wants to break out and become very active all at once. The athlete who has been cross-training will be at a definite advantage because muscles used to a variety of fitness activities will be much better suited to the increased new workload. Injuries can be avoided.

Cross-training builds a body toward total fitness, a combination of aerobic and muscular strength and tone that enables an athlete optimum physical health.

Working out at a variety of sports enables the lifetime sports enthusiast the ability to have fun and stay excited with an exercise program. And continual use and development of the widest range of muscles groups enables an athlete to perform at the highest level of his or her specialty.

Cross-training in the past was meant to compliment a main sport with weightlifting or running. Today, it means enjoying a wide variety of fitness and fun activities in order to maintain and improve total body health.

The ultimate benefit lies in the ability for a cross-training athlete to stay excited for exercise and health throughout a lifetime. In essence, then, cross-training attempts to develop and maintain the body while keeping the mind from exercise burnout.

Spring season open on the coast Ruggers break 2-2

BY CLAYTON HALEY
EDITOR

After almost three months of off-season vacation the University of Idaho ruggers are back to protecting the reputation they set last fall.

The Idaho Rugby Club took the road for Valentine Weekend to compete in a spring season opener in Portland, Oregon.

The ruggers competed in a total of four matches Saturday in the double-elimination tournament sponsored by the Portland Jesters Rugby Club.

Although the tournament among collegiate rugby clubs throughout the Pacific Northwest was considered an exhibition, not official league play, the early season tournament is a priority.

It is designed to get teams back on their feet after the winter break from college play. The early season tournament is a priority for the players to get back into the game and to test their skills on a competitive field.

Idaho's first game was against the Jesters, a team from Portland, Ore. The game was a close one, with Idaho leading 10-0 in the first half, but the Jesters scored in the second half to tie the game at 10-10.

Nevertheless, the scores indicate Idaho's progress in regaining its status as a top team in the Northwest.

Idaho broke 2-2 for the season, with a 20-10 victory over the Jesters in the first game, and a 10-10 tie in the second game. The team's record in the tournament was 2-2.

In the final game of the tournament, Idaho defeated the Jesters 20-10, to finish with a 2-2 record.

The team's performance in the tournament was a testament to their skill and determination on the field.

Who allowed only UO and to win although these two met their fate in fall sea-lay on Idaho pitch.

November 14 was a gloomy day for UO and OSU as the coastal powerhouses were out 22-0 and 30-0 by hun-tah-o ruggers.

"It is a little indication of how we can do when we get forces together," said Hansen.

The shut-outs of UO and brought Idaho's stat box to 1. This also increased UI's record of representing the Pacific Northwest Rugby Union in Western Collegiate Finals in Berkeley California.

However, Idaho must first win the next two league matches before making reservations for the first weekend in April.

WWU will come calling March 6 as Idaho will present the entire team to the coastal competitors.

"We'll have a stronger side when they come here to play us," said Hansen. "We'll have all our guys available."

In the last league match for Idaho, Washington State University will visit the Idaho pitch March 13.

Idaho and its cross-border rivals are continuous partners for league scrimmage matches. Idaho last exercised its right to beat WSU Oct. 25 when Idaho set an early led that brought them a 10-7 victory over the Cougs.

Tracksters compete at Lincoln, BSU

BY ERIK SIMPSON
SPORTS EDITOR

Idaho long-jumper George Ogbeide and mile-runner James Tennant turned in outstanding performances last weekend at the prestigious Frank Sevigne Husker Invitational Track and Field Meet in Lincoln, Neb.

Ogbeide, a sophomore, won the long jump event with a mark of 24 feet 10 1/2 inches. His Friday night leap was well below his Big Sky record-breaking, NCAA qualifier jump of 25 feet 11 inches that he jumped in the Dome the week earlier.

He also ran the 55 meter race and finished sixth with a 6.35 mark. Teammate Dayo Onanubosi did not qualify for the 55 meter final because of his 6.34 preliminary time.

Onanubosi set an Idaho record in the 55 meters with a 6.25 time during the Vandals last home indoor meet.

Tennant set a Vandal record in the mile event and finished second in the Saturday race. He ran the mile in 4:5.81, breaking the previous school record of 4:10.5 set by Andy Harvey in 1982.

Sprinters Eric Haynes and Jeff

Collins competed in the Idaho Statesman Indoor in Boise last weekend.

Haynes finished sixth in the 55 meter final with a time of 6.42, while Collins didn't qualify for the same race.

Collins placed fifth in the long jump with a leap of 22 feet 8 inches.

On Friday the Vandal tracksters will host the 12th Annual Vandal Indoor in the Dome at 6:30 p.m. The meet is an invitational where about 100 of the best west coast athletes will compete.

The Vandals will host the University Inn Indoor, an all-comers meet, on Saturday in the Dome at 8 a.m.

Ghana culture to shake Palouse

Obo Addy represents past and future of African culture

Bryan Hall on the WSU campus will reverberate with the distinctive African pop sound of Obo Addy and Kukuru in a segment of The World According to Art series.

According to Marty Mullen, Program Adviser for the WSU Activities/Recreational Sports Department, the series attempts to construct their programs around a central cultural theme.

"This year we tried to center on a class being offered this year at WSU called World Civilization," said Mullen.

Mullen added that The World According to Art's goal was to take people through the worlds of many different cultures and people without leaving Pullman.

Addy is the son of a Wonche priest and medicine man from Accra, Ghana where music and dance are an important part of everyday life. He learned the traditional drumming of the Ga culture at an early age and plays the full range of African master drums, supporting drums, African xylophone and percussion instruments.

At age 18, he began playing American jazz and big band music in Accra's thriving nightclub scene. Although successful, he soon grew tired of reproducing the music of Frank Sinatra and Tom Jones when so much African music was going unheard in the cities. An upsurge of nationalism, created by Ghana achieving its independence from Great Britain, helped Addy pursue his musical goals. He dropped out of the Western music scene to work for the National Arts Council of Ghana where he met and played with many of the country's traditional master drummers. This council, according to Mullen, was organized by the liberated government of Ghana to explore the roots of their culture.

"It was a time of increased national pride in Ghana," said Mullen. "In a way, Addy was rediscovering his own culture." It was this exploration that made Addy's return to the basics of African music complete.

Addy symbolizes both the past and the future in terms of Ghana's culture, according to Mullen.

"Addy represents the influences of the original African culture and the modern influences which came about during the time of British colonization," said Mullen.

In 1978, after touring Europe, Australia, the Middle East and the United States with a Ghanaian group, Addy moved to Portland, Ore. In 1981, he formed Kukuru, a seven piece ensemble. Kukuru (which translates into English as "earthquake") represents the same synthesis of culture as Addy's music. African and American musicians perform on African hand drums and percussion instruments as well as saxophone, flute, trumpet and electric guitar. The result is what The Washington Post calls a blend of "American jazz-rock riffs with African polyrhythms."

Addy will also present an Art la Carete program on "The Music and Culture of Ghana" Thursday at noon in the Gridiron Room of the CUB.

Addy will perform Saturday 20 at 8 p.m. in Bryan Hall. The World According to Art series is sponsored by the Visual, Performing and Literary Arts Committee.

Ballet performance lost heart

REVIEW BY KIRK LAUGHLIN

The American Festival Ballet's A Show To Remember lived up to its title, but, I think, in a less than positive manner.

The show's closing curtain left one wondering what exactly was to be remembered.

One of the main things that will stick in people's minds is a negative point which had nothing to do with the dancing. It was the music, which was very obviously piped in. And apparently the A.F.B. spent their budget on the production itself rather than a decent sound system, signified by the frequent pops and imperfections in the music by Glasounov, Stravinsky, Pachelbel and Kabalevsky. The sound, while not a huge factor, managed to lay a veneer of cheapness on things.

And the first two programs included in A Show To Remember struggled against this factor. The first one was the classic Raymonda. The lead dancers Nadya Zybina and Luis Astorga were hypnotically lyrical (as they were throughout both programs they were in) but the rest of the dancers were occasionally mechanical, leaving the whole section seeming contrived.

The second program, entitled The Firebird was a half-step better, but that was all. It featured an oppressive villain who controlled the actions of the dancers around him. The Firebird, the Spirit of Love (Zybina) was wooed by an adventurous Seeker (Astorga) who strove to think and act for himself. The pair managed to free the people from the Oppressor.

The Firebird, though, was bombastically rendered, despite the effectiveness of the choreography by Marla Hansen and adventurous attempts to depict sorcery through back lighting.

It didn't help that the costumes looked like they'd been lifted from the wardrobe lockers of the old Star Trek series.

By comparison, the last two sections Canon in D and The Comedians were much more effective because the two respective choreographers (Zachary Ward and Samuel Kurkjian) handled their stories in lighter, less pretentious tones than Raymonda and The Firebird were presented in.

Canon in D, a fairly simple love situation like Raymonda, was as lyrical as the aforementioned but had none of its annoyingly clingy atmosphere.

The best part of A Show To Remember was the climactic comedy sequence The Comedians. From the sneering, snubbed leader of the peasants to their gloriously overwrought costumes, this sequence was purely delightful.

The story was more identifiable in The Comedians, sticking to simple love triangle/slapstick shenanigans, but it offered more than just a literal story. The Comedians offered undiluted entertainment, skillful but still fun.

The major weakness of A Show To Remember was its attempt to rush its audience through four different styles of ballet in two hours. Perhaps if more energy had been devoted to a single section, even Raymonda, the effect would have been more lasting. A Show To Remember offered up a lot of skill but somewhere along the way, the heart of the show dissolved in its attempt to be too many places at once.

THE Hartung Theatre stage offered a diverse mix of ballet styles when it hosted The American Festival Ballet's A Show To Remember. (ARGONAUT/Henry Moore)

Tampopo fixes up an unsatisfying mix

MARK LAUGHLIN

It's always nice to see that there are competent filmmakers going on in other countries. The recent Jean Florette proved that tragedy is alive, well and residing in France; Key Babu Riba exhibited a Yugoslavian attraction toward the "simplicity" of 1950s childhood that has been explored recently in Diner and Stand By Me; My Life As A Dog, also about childhood, shows that John Hughes is not the only

What the film shows of the relationship between Goro and Tampopo is well done but there is simply nothing to base your opinions of them on except the comedy they generate. When Goro attempts to open up about his failed marriage, the dialogue seems phony and strained because there is no precedent set in the film for anything but fast paced comedy. It seems like Itami didn't trust his material enough to stick to a straight story so he let his film wander off on sidetracks which recall the "lattice of coincidence" in Repo Man. But where Alex Cox is able to connect his loose strings with his plot, Tampopo relies on short skits to fill space in the main story.

Tampopo, while not an out and out failure, suffers from miscalculations which rapidly snowball.

man in the world concerned with the moral/emotional impact of adolescence. So where does Juzo Itami's Tampopo fit into this? This Japanese import proves that the influences of America are as noticeable (and as spoofable) as they are here in our own country. Like John Carpenter's Big Trouble In Little China, Tampopo mixes the myths of the East and the West into fast paced comedy.

The story of Tampopo deals with a young restaurant owner named Tampopo who uses the services of a cowboy-hat-wearing truck driver named Goro to help her build her noodles and soup to the pinnacle of success.

But minor characters keep pulling the story off its track, making for the biggest single weakness in Tampopo.

Every aspect of life centers around food in this film. High class businessmen are put in their place by their inability to read a French menu; a Japanese gangster and his girlfriend engage in food-related erotica; nightmares center on homicidal food-counter owners.

There are also many parodies of the American genre of westerns which concern the trucker who rides into town, fights off the bad guys and helps save the lady in distress. Except in this case, the distress is the lack of a good soup recipe.

All of its is amusing and sensuous (especially effective in the mix of parody and epic storytelling in the restaurant story) but once all the loose ends wind up hanging in your face at the end, it seems that Tampopo has failed to come to a satisfying point.

All of the tangential sequences are fun to watch but they don't have much of a dramatic center.

When Monty Python goes off on little side journeys, at least they either return to them or their films are funny enough to stand on their own. But Tampopo is also trying to sneak some sentiment under the door and it doesn't give its main characters enough time onscreen to make you care about them.

“Mom says the house just isn't the same without me, even though it's a lot cleaner.”

Just because your Mom is far away, doesn't mean you can't be close. You can still share the love and laughter on AT&T Long Distance Service.

It costs less than you think to hear that she likes the peace and quiet, but she misses you. So go ahead, give your Mom a call. You can clean your room later. Reach out and touch someone.
