

McClure slated to attend Monday Centennial events

No party for Simplot, Habib

By PAUL ALLÉE
News Editor

Sen. James McClure is scheduled to attend the university's 100th birthday party next Monday, Washington, D.C. aids confirmed last night.

Of three honorary members of the UI Centennial fundraising campaign, McClure is the only one expected to celebrate the event in Moscow.

"His plans are to be there. That is on the schedule," said

H.D. Palmer, McClure's press secretary.

McClure is expected to fly from Washington, D.C. to Idaho this weekend.

Winthrop G. Dale, a 1950 UI graduate and son of former UI President Harrison Dale, is also scheduled to attend.

Missing the university's 100th birthday celebration will be honorary Centennial fundraisers

McCLURE

Phillip Habib and J.R. Simplot.

All three men shared the spotlight in September, 1987, when plans for the university's $43 million "Second Century of Distinction" were announced here.

Monday's Centennial activities begin at 2:30 p.m., and the program will include music, birthday cake and remarks recorded by university officials when Idaho celebrated its 50th birthday in 1939.

The recordings — by then-President Dale and student leaders from 50 years ago — are thought to be included in a time capsule which will be opened during Kibbie Dome Ceremonies.

"We've located the machines to play back the messages," said Hal Godwin, UI centennial coordinator.

The party will also include music by the Vandalizers Pep Band from the University of Idaho's Lionel Hampton School of Music.

Unlike last year's Centennial kick-off, classes will not be dismissed for Monday's activities.

Official ceremonies are scheduled to begin at 2:45 p.m., with brief remarks by university and community officials.

In addition to opening the Semicentennial Time Capsule, a new capsule to be sealed with university memorabilia during this spring's commencement exercises will also be on display.

Plans call for items in the 50-year old time capsule to be put on display in the Kibbie Dome for the remainder of the ceremonies.

A special birthday cake will be cut by retiring UI President Richard Gibb and the crowd will sing "Happy Birthday."

SSCA: Bush effigy prank won't be last

By LEN ANDERSON
Staff Writer

A spokesman for the university student organization which beheaded an effigy of President George Bush Friday says he plans to hold future demonstrations.

Cass Davis, member of Students for Support of Central America, said that because of Bush's dealings in the Iran-Contra affair, the university will hear from the group again.

"I hopefully plan to get people aroused," Davis said. "It's getting dangerous."

Sue Marangelli, president of Campus Democrats, said her group will continue to back up SSCA as long as the members of Campus Democrats agree.

"Campus Democrats support many of the beliefs of the Students in Support of Central America," Marangelli said.

This weekend, SSCA staged a 40-minute demonstration, "Black Friday," which began in Moscow's Friendship Square. It took place about eight hours after Bush was inaugurated.

A mock trial started the demonstration, where students asked the mannequin questions. Hearing no answer, the students threw snowballs, and eventually beheaded the paper bag head of the mannequin.

Questions asked of the effigy included:

- "Will you continue the assault on student education funding?"
- "What knowledge do you have of the Iran-Contra affair?"
- "Why did you choose Dan Quayle as Vice-President and John Tower as Secretary of Defense?"

During the demonstration, Roy Knecht of Potlatch protested against the group, saying they were unpatriotic and dishonored the office of President.

Davis said that Knecht guarded the dummy from being pelted by snowballs. Davis then took the dummy and held it up, saying "It's my mannequin, it's my toy, I built it."

Athletic director wants mandatory fall testing

Mandatory drug testing of university athletes could begin here as soon as next fall, says UI Athletic Director Gary Hunter.

"It has always been my desire to get a drug education and hopefully a drug testing approved at U of I," Hunter said in an interview late last week. "I hope to have testing by fall, but that might be ambitious."

The tests would be conducted in a manner respectful of students' privacy, Hunter said. But some athletes expressed their doubts. Previously, Idaho athletes have been subjected to the tests only when involved in NCAA tournaments.

The last time that happened, in post-season play during the 1988 Christmas vacation, two Vandal starters were suspended from play because their tests proved positive for performance-enhancing steroids.

The tests under consideration by the university's general committee would not only test student athletes for use of steroids, but also for what Hunter calls "street drugs." That is, cocaine, marijuana and amphetamines.

Athletes would volunteer to take the tests to be eligible for scholarships and financial aid, Hunter said. He said some legal and financial questions would have to be answered before the anti-drug program goes into effect.

One question remaining is how the testing and education program will be paid for, Hunter said.

"It is expensive," Hunter said. "I will have to find a way to finance it."

Hunter estimated the cost of the program at about $20,000.

Testing would account for about $16,000, with the rest used for speakers' fees, films and other educational expenses, he said. With Hunter's plan, students will hear speakers from the athletic, medical and legal communities warning of the consequences of drug use.

Accurate tests for street drugs cost from $15-$20, while detecting steroids costs about $100 a test. Hunter said he would pay for the tests in next year's athletic budget or ask for more Vandal booster money.

To keep the testing fair, athletes in all sports will be tested.

Hunter, a former lawyer, said that to protect the rights of the athletes the tests will have a clearly defined purpose, and athletes will be informed of test dates and of what is being tested for. Careful protocol will be followed to ensure against false positive tests, he said.

Even with the accuracy measures, some athletes won't like taking the tests, Vandal football player Chris Slater said. A dislike of drug testing is not necessarily from a fear of being caught, he said.

"The way they make you do (the urine tests) is humiliating," Slater said. "It isn't cool at all."

Education about the dangers of drug use would be more constructive than testing, he said.

Coaches and staff would also be requested to take the tests, Hunter said.

"I would not ask students to do anything I would not expect of myself or coaches," he said.

Being subject to testing didn't bother head football coach John L. Smith.

"The better we understand the tests, the more beneficial they will be," Smith said.

Education about the dangers of drugs should be stressed, he said.

"(Drug abuse) has become so widespread we have to do something to contain it," he said. "If we can put testing in effect — and do it right — then it is the way to go."

The university avoided drug testing in the past because of questions of legality, expense and a belief that the problem wasn't severe, said Assistant Athletic Director Kathy Clark. A change in philosophy of athletic directors and the failed tests during the NCAA tournament are responsible for the policy switch, she said.

Falling tree limbs can kill, campus arborist warns

By MATT HELMICK
Staff Writer

If Rod Tinnemore had his way, there would be a few less trees on the University of Idaho campus.

Tinnemore is the UI arborist, and it is his job to maintain the trees, shrubs and vines on campus. He also documents the hazardous conditions of trees around campus.

This documentation has resulted in a list of a half-dozen or so trees recommended for removal. These recommendations, however, aren't always acted upon.

For example, a large limb from a willow tree next to the Agricultural Science Building broke because of decay and the weight of snowfall.

"The decay of the tree was documented over a year ago on a hazards list," Tinnemore said.

Tinnemore said the force of such a falling limb could kill a person or incur great damage on a vehicle. Despite the danger and the recommendation, it appears some administrators were uninformed of the danger.

Carol Grupp, director of the Office of Human Resources and Risk Management, said she was unaware of the willow tree's decaying limb.

Concern over hazards such as the willow tree inspired Tinnemore to study negligence law in a directed study at the UI College of Law.

"I'm studying negligence law and getting a case file of tree-related court cases so we can use it as a basis for our policy decisions here," Tinnemore said.

"But no one enjoys being killed by trees or having their cars destroyed."

— Rod Tinnemore
UI arborist

Tinnemore said policy decisions regarding trees in the past have not always been based on professional knowledge or public safety but have been emotional appeals for conservation.

"It used to be that anyone could say or do anything regarding trees because there was no one with the professional backing of the faculty or the expertise themselves to say 'No, that's not correct. This is what needs to be done,'" Tinnemore said. "And so if work was needed to be done, it was done when it was politically correct whether or not it was in keeping with public safety or horticulturally correct."

Tinnemore said despite the changes there is controversy between those who have the duty to apply the practical aspects of tree maintenance and those whose emphasis is on conservation.

"Those who love trees feel a need to keep a tree just because it is a tree," Tinnemore said. "No one enjoys taking down trees around campus, including us. But no one enjoys being killed by trees or having their cars destroyed. What I do is work with forest pathologists to do a condition report on the tree to find out whether or not it is safe and proceed with whatever it is that is necessary to make it safe. Sometimes it means removal, sometimes it means removing dead branches."

Tinnemore said the condition of trees at various spots is precarious and needs to be examined closely.

"Some trees on the Administration Lawn are overmature," Tinnemore said. "This means that trees there are going to be sparse there unless we plant new trees."

Senators propose redistribution of fine arts activity fee

By JULIE YOUNG
Staff Writer

Students may never get to decide whether to continue paying a fine arts activity fee which was touted as a temporary charge.

And if a group of ASUI senators gets its way, funds generated from the $1-per-semester Fine Arts Endowment Fee will be diverted to finance student government programs.

Two years ago, students voted to voluntarily raise their fees to provide monies for the Fine Arts Endowment Fund. An overwhelming majority voted to pay a $1-per-semester levy through spring 1988.

Now some senators say the fee is here to stay. According to Senate Finance Chairman Mike Gotch, the State Board of Education has given the university permission to charge the fee.

Last fall, 7,069 full-time students enrolled at the university. Gotch maintains that if students don't vote for the $1 redistribution, the $14,138 could be allocated to the general university fund.

Last semester, Sen. Steve Smart co-sponsored a bill asking that an advisory referendum be placed on spring student election ballots. The referendum asks whether students are willing to divert the fine arts monies to into the ASUI general reserves fund and ASUI Activities Board fund.

However, wording of the bill does not clarify whether a "no" vote would indicate disapproval of the proposed redistribution of funds or disapproval of the fee's continuation altogether.

"This is not a fee increase," Gotch said. "It is a redistribution of that $1."

The ASUI general fund is a discretionary fund used by senators to pay unexpected student government expenses. The Activities Board fund provides money for student organizations like the juggling club, the rugby team, the Palouse Creek Journal, the English Society and the Idaho Student Intercollegiate Legislature.

"Students pay for these activities mostly out of their own pockets," said Sen. Mike Mick, who served as Activities Board chairman last year.

Knecht said he thought the demonstration was ridiculous. He said that the government was set up to change through the political process and not through demonstrations.

"If you disagree with the president, you say 'I disagree, sir,'" Knecht said. "You don't say 'I disagree, scumbag.' I did what I did not because I support George Bush, but because I'm American."

Marangelli said she disagrees with Knecht's views.

"By not accepting the opportunity to change, we've been dishonorable to the nation, because progress occurs through change," she said.

Said Knecht, "I can't believe that they represent the Democratic party on campus. It sounded like a far-left radical group."

Davis said the idea for the demonstration came to him about one week earlier while in bed. He proposed the demonstration at the first SSCA meeting and it met with approval.

"I can't believe they represent the Democratic party on campus."

— Roy Knecht

Campus Democrats held an "Anti-Inaugural Ball" later that evening at John's Alley, where they earned $104.

"The Students in Support of Central America organized it (the demonstration) because there is a lot of apathy on campus," Marangelli said. "There is potential for students to get involved and this was just an outlet for them."

Knecht said he does not plan to protest against future demonstrations. He said he did not protest during the "Anti-Inaugural Ball" because of its private setting.

Sherry Peterson, a Vandal women's basketball player, said the change was for the better.

"It is a good policy," she said. "It keeps everybody clean. Coaches won't have to wonder if everyone will be eligible to play in championships."

"Athletics is no place for drugs," she said.

Still, more and more drugs are being associated with sports, Hunter said. Student athletes are starting steroid use as early as junior high school, he said.

Having a testing program will help recruiting because parents are concerned about their sons and daughters using drugs, Hunter said.

"Of course, you don't do it to help recruiting," he said. "But parents very much like (anti-drug programs.)"

Let students out of that tutoring deep freeze

It's that time of the year again. Time for Tutoring and Academic Assistance Director Judy Wallins to brave the cold wind and falling snow and trudge down to the SUB with tutoring statistics in one hand and an emergency funding request in the other.

It is also time for the ASUI Senate to start squabbling over the purpose of tutoring, the ASUI's appropriate role in the program, and just how much money it can spare from the General Reserve.

Well, tomorrow night Wallins will brave the elements and present the ASUI Senate with an additional funding request to finish out the academic year. The request calls for $2,500 in additional student tutor salaries.

Since its "re-opening" five years ago, the TAAC has grown by leaps and bounds. In 1985 the ASUI subsidized the tutoring program to the tune of about $3,000. Four years later the program is receiving $13,000. The reason for the increased funding? According to Wallins, the more visible operation has attracted more students. Approximately 800 to 1,000 students utilized the tutoring services last year.

Yet last year during budgeting time, the Senate didn't increase tutoring's subsidy from the year before. It shouldn't come as any surprise that Wallins needs more money to fund the operation.

So it's time to get out the fiscal bandage and apply a quick fix to the ailing tutoring program by giving Wallins the $2,500.

But continuing to underbudget tutoring during the spring and then granting additional requests during following year just creates pressure for Wallins, the tutoring program and the ASUI.

Instead, the senate should appropriate funds in expectation of growing tutoring demand. Perhaps a study of historical data could help gauge the expected need for the following year.

Or the senate could investigate TAAC's Supplemental Instruction programs. Currently set up for just four classes, this program teams a single tutor with 30-40 students enrolled in a class. By learning study skills especially designed for the class, participants tend to do overwhelmingly better than with regular tutoring. And one tutor teaching 40 students is more cost-effective than paying 40 tutors for each of those students.

Or perhaps, the senate could call for an ASUI-dedicated student fee for tutoring. The $1 Fine Arts Endowment Fee which students imposed on themselves two years ago is up. The senate is planning to ask students to reallocate the dedicated fee to ASUI Activities Board and the ASUI general budget.

But maybe the $1 Fine Arts Endowment Fee should become the $1 Tutoring Fee.

It's time to put away the bandages and look out for this program in the long run.

If not, students wanting tutoring may join Wallins out in the cold.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stucker snowed under scrutiny

Editor:

As a longtime reader of your newspaper, I would like to congratulate you on your bold approach. I salute your personal courage and journalistic integrity.

With such determinations to high integrity come some very obligatory responsibilities to the subjects of your public scrutiny, namely only to tell the truth, and to tell all of a story, in order that the readers can judge for themselves the actuality of a situation.

This leads directly to my main point, the editorial of the Jan. 17 Argonaut by Jeff Stucker entitled "Come to the UI, break a bone."

Apparently this young man has been uninformed of the activity of devoted personnel all around him whose living depends on the safety of the entire university community, people who were working 12-hour shifts, hand shoveling, plowing, grading, sanding and doing everything possible with the available resources and energy to provide as much safety as hard effort and exhausted finances would allow.

Quite frankly, I believe a very strongly worded letter of apology to the working women and men of the university, to the administration, to the Physical Plant, to the custodians and to everyone who knows the reality of this situation is in order.

—George G. Driskell

Egoism of conservative society headed for downfall

"You ought to go to a boys' school sometime," I said. "It's full of phonies, and all you do is study so that you can learn to be smart enough to be able to buy a goddam Cadillac someday...and everybody sticks together in these goddam cliques. The guys that play on the basketball team stick together, the guys that play bridge stick together. Even the guys that belong to the goddam Book-of-the-Month Club stick together. If you try to have a little intelligence —"

"Now listen," old Sally said. "Lots of boys get more out of school than that."

"I agree! I agree they do, some of them! But that's all I get out of it. See? That's my point. That's exactly my goddam point," I said. "I don't hardly get anything out of anything. I'm in bad shape. I'm in lousy shape."

— Holden Caulfield in J.D. Salinger's The Catcher in the Rye

Many college students today feel as Holden Caulfield does — alienated and headed for a breakdown. The problem of alienation is reaching epidemic proportions and is more tangible and widespread than we might at first imagine.

In a recent Lewiston Morning Tribune article, James D. Morris, director of UI Student Counseling Services said the caseload for counseling services has climbed at the university and the demand is higher than ever before.

"It seems to me the stress on college students has increased the past several years," Morris said.

The problem is not endemic to the UI. Findings by an annual survey of incoming college freshmen by the American Council on Education and the Higher Education Research Institute reveal that students are smoking more, reporting high stress, suffering from depression and emotional problems more frequently and are approaching college as little more than job training.

Thus we have more Holden Caulfields out there than ever before. What is the cause of all of this?

"A lot of these kids are the product of a more conservative society, a more conservative political administration," said K.J. "Gus" Kravas, associate vice-provost for student affairs at WSU.

Kravas said in the aforementioned article that students are gravitating toward money-making fields like business, economics and engineering. They are also more conservative in their political outlook.

Certainly these students are not to blame for going into these fields and wanting financial success, but it appears they are paying a high price for these wants.

Like Holden, students are crying out emotionally that they are somehow being oppressed in a conservative society which necessitates a herd mentality in a crude and brutal chase for materialistic goals.

"Alienation is manifest in all realms of modern life," Fritz Pappenheim states in his book, The Alienation of Modern Man. "That its existence is not just the result of certain accidents of recent history but exemplifies one of the basic trends in our age."

Pappenheim points out that alienation is seen everywhere. Politicians sacrifice convictions and adopt the popular cause of big business policies and increased military expenditures. Artists sacrifice creative freedom for the security of the advertising agency. Fraternity members and "company" wives find they cannot afford friends they like and submit to selectively choosing those "friends" who promote their own interests.

Modern man is also alienated spiritually. People grasp desperately and pitifully at New Age crystals and runes, at material things which will allow them to somehow transcend the problem they are creating for themselves.

Others tighten their grip on "fundamental" religion and in doing so strangle the original spirit inherent in scripture which can be seen when literal statements are put in proper perspective by seeing through metaphors.

Alienation is then seen at all levels and areas of modern life. It is seen in technology, in politics, in the daily conduct of our lives. The emotional and mental breakdowns are not isolated cases of Holden Caulfields. As psychologist James Hillman notes in a 1982 Spring article:

"Breakdown is in a new place — Vietnam and Watergate, pollution and street crime, the loss of literacy and the growth of junk, deceit and show. We now encounter pathology in the psyche of politics and medicine, in language and design, in the food we eat. Sickness is now 'out there.'"

We have projected sickness on to the world surrounding us. Holden Caulfield is indeed in "lousy" shape, but so is his world.

We have found ourselves in a very deep predicament. By following too closely the teachings of Descartes and the British empiricists, we have found ourselves reacting to the world from the isolation of our encapsulated egos. Subject is split unnecessarily from object.

A worker in a factory thus places rivets in an unimportant component of a product he will never see nor use. In fact, he probably can't afford the product. Thus he does not care and his work grows increasingly shoddy.

This is the result of alienated labor. Quality decreases, but a society of uncaring workers accepts poor products. Meanwhile, uncaring students like Holden Caulfield flunk their exams.

Still, because we have an uncaring society, we have decreased wants. Because real quality is an alien idea, people will settle for less. Rambo films are produced and an alienated crowd cheers. Money is made and the profit motive lives on.

But the incoming freshman class is indicative that our conservative-egoistic society isn't working. Anxiety, depression, stress and finally mental illness is taking over.

Like Ivan in Dostoyevky's Brothers Karamazov, we are suddenly awakening to find our own materialistic devil standing before us. What we originally took for logic, courtliness and high fashion is but a deceitful, bad-mannered and threadbare devil.

Devils must be exorcised or they will destroy us. We must revolt against conservatism. We must stop voting for Republican presidents and holding stupid political affiliations which ensure a hollow economic prosperity. Above all, we must stop building mechanisms like nuclear weapons which control us.

Holden Caulfield found some peace at the end of The Catcher in the Rye, but he had to withstand a breakdown first.

I'm not sure our country can withstand a breakdown of national, perhaps international, proportions.

Vandies make NRU, NAU look bad

By LYNNETTE PIXLEY
Sports Writer

The UI women's basketball team had a successful weekend, thumping both Nevada-Reno and Northern Arizona to improve their Big Sky Conference record to 4-2 and 10-7 overall.

From the opening tip-off to the final seconds the Lady Vandals controlled the court Friday night against Nevada-Reno.

NRU, coming into the match-up with a 2-13 overall record and an 0-4 conference mark, had problems from the start. Almost 12 minutes into the game, Nevada-Reno had not yet scored, while the Lady Vandals were up by 18.

UI forward Lori Elkins had an impressive evening, scoring 22 points, a 4-4 performance from the free-throw line and three rebounds.

"I thought we really started to click against Reno, things started to come together," Elkins said.

By the half, UI led 36-24. UI maintained a dominating lead throughout the second half and with seconds left on the clock, guard Christy Van Pelt was fouled on a lay-up, and ended the game on a free throw to add three more points to UI's 74-58 win.

UI took on Northern Arizona Saturday night, defeating the Lumberjacks and moving to 4-2 in BSC.

Center Sabrina Dial scored early, and NAU responded quickly as the two teams battled back and forth throughout the first half. At halftime, the Vandals were ahead 37-34.

Christy Van Pelt helped break the tug-of-war in the second half, scoring 17 points, and adding 11 rebounds and 11 assists.

"We came out good as a team should," Van Pelt said. "We executed a good offense and defense. We took care of business."

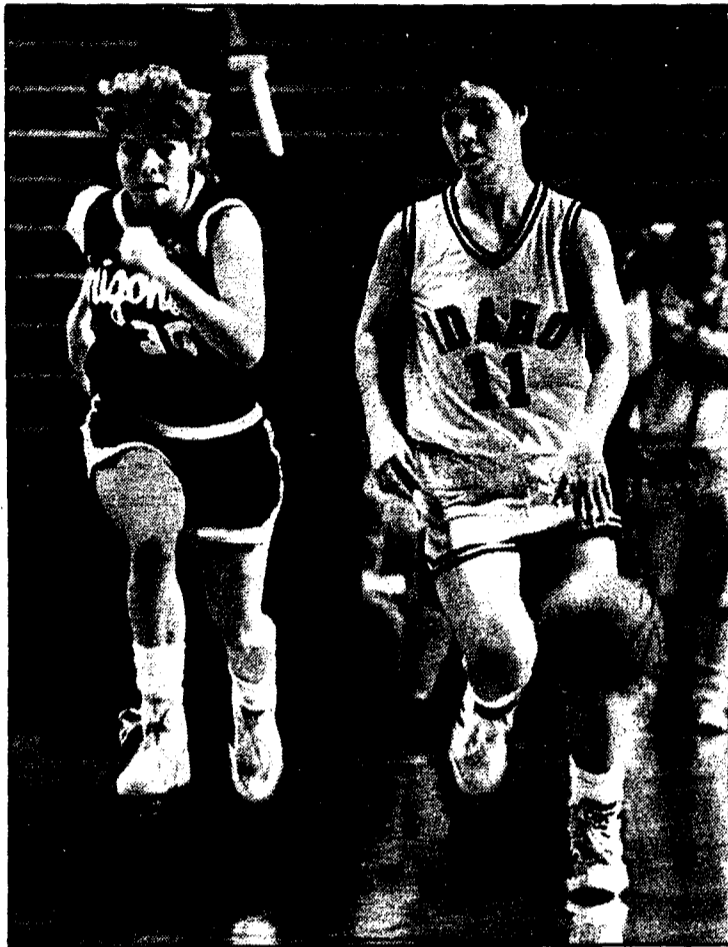

Dial, who fouled out midway through the second half, played well, putting up 7-of-11 from the floor, with 10 rebounds and two blocks.

"I could have played smarter, my defense could have been better by not fouling," Dial said.

Idaho defeated the Lumberjacks 78-69.

UI takes on Weber State College in the Kibbie Dome on Jan. 27.

"Home games are important," Turner said. "The support we do receive really helps."

Baseball club needs pitchers

By RUSS BIAGNE
Sports Writer

Facing a 23-game schedule, the UI Baseball Club anticipates a competitive season.

Though the club was only 4-8 last year, co-captain Wade Wilson called it a successful season.

"We only had three home games, and of the eight losses, five were really close," Wilson said. "The guys played well."

The club begins practice at the end of this month and will hold practices in the Physical Education Building until the snow melts.

The season starts Feb. 25, with a game against Northwest Nazarene College, followed by a game against Lewis Clark State College.

During spring break, the club heads south for games against Boise State University, College of Idaho and again with NNC.

Currently, the club has 25 players but needs pitchers. Wilson said anyone may join, especially those who can pitch.

"We need pitchers badly," Wilson said. "Anyone can join though, but playing privileges go to the first players on the roster."

As with any UI sports club, the UI Baseball Club finds it difficult to remain a team. In 1980, UI dropped baseball as a sanctioned

Pigskin Prophets

SUPERBOWL XXIII, 20-16. Well, the biggest game in football is over, and fans, equipped with 3-D glasses, saw what can be characterized as one of the most dramatic, hair-pulling, seat-squirring Superbowl games ever.

With 34 seconds remaining, the 49ers on Cincinnati's 10, Joe Montana passed a pigskin bullet to John Taylor to wipe out the Bengals' dreams for their first Superbowl Championship.

And as if this wasn't enough excitement for one sitting, how about that funky, first time ever, 3-D halftime show featuring Elvis Presto in his full-body polyester suit and his dynamic dancers! Or the numerous instant replays of Cincy nose tackle Tim Krumle's broken leg, which bended and flopped in directions that made even the toughest sports fan run for the bathroom — not to downplay S.F.'s offensive tackle Steve Wallace, who himself gruesomely busted a leg.

And let's not forget the helmeted, long-necked bottles battling it out in Budbowl I, where Budweiser beat Bud Light 27-24 on a thrilling last-second field goal.

All this in one complete package.

Fans, in order not to miss the festivities, really had to budget their time well for an opportunity to head for the kitchen to bloat up on chips, beer or possibly a meat sandwich.

But even more exciting than Sunday's four-hour extravaganza was the results of last week's Superbowl predictions from UI students. While the bookies made S.F. seven-point favorites over Cincy, the Argonaut found two students who almost hit the score on the nose. Matt Muller, a member of Lambda Chi Alpha, managed to muster up a 24-17 prediction, which was substantially close to the 20-16 outcome. Delta Gamma, Michelle Macke, was also impressive, prophesying the 49ers as winners, 23-15. Neither would reveal their secret to success in a phone interview, but both are said to have been disciples of the recently fired CBS sports predictionist, Jimmie "The Greek".

Next year's Superbowl hardly seems capable of matching the overall excitement of this years, but I'll be waiting.

Vandals, Gomes, Smith take two

By DERON KOSOFF
Sports Writer

W,W,W,W,L,W,W,W,W,W,W,
L,L,W,W,W,W,W!

That's what the Vandals record looks like after back-to-back road wins last weekend of 67-52 at Idaho State and an 81-78 thriller at Weber State.

The Vandals have ripped off five wins in a row, raising their record to 15-3 overall and 5-1 in the Big Sky Conference.

Idaho could well be 18-0, considering the fact their three losses are by a mere total of 12 points, their 15 wins by a total of 304.

Saturday night's matchup at Weber State came down to the wire. With six seconds remaining and the score tied at 78, Mauro Gomes, the senior guard from Brazil, nailed the winning three-pointer from 20 feet, icing the win. Weber's Michael Ostlund lost the ball at :02.

Gomes connected on all four of his first half three-point attempts, then went almost the entire second half without shooting.

But this game-winner kept Idaho in a tie for first place in the BSC, while dropping Weber State into second place. The Wildcats are 11-4 and 4-2.

Idaho shot a red-hot 20-for-26 from the field in the first half and 69 percent for the game, the best by a BSC team this season.

The foul line was a different story, however, as the Vandals shot a cold 14-for-28. Idaho missed several free throws down the stretch as Weber State made a comeback from an eight-point deficit.

"With everything kind of going wrong at the end, our guys hung in there," said Vandal Coach Kermit Davis.

Gomes' outside shooting was

countered by the powerful inside play of Weber State senior center Rico Washington, who scored 28 points.

Midway through the second half, the familiar duo of Idaho posts Raymond Brown and Riley Smith combined for nine points in a three-minute span, giving Idaho a momentary lead.

"At halftime I couldn't believe a team could shoot that well (16-for-23) against us," Davis said. "But we shot 77 percent and we were tied. That's awful. You would think you'd be up 10 or 12. That just shows how well Weber State played."

Smith, last week's BSC Player of the Week, continued his torrid inside game, scoring 18 points on 6-for-8 shooting.

Brown finished with 21 points on 10-for-16 shooting while Gomes' five three-pointers tied a school record equaled on three other occasions.

Idaho's James Fitch and Ricardo Boyd added 12 and 11 points, respectively, and Lorenzo Nash dished out a game-high 10 assists.

The victory was the Vandals' second straight at Ogden, where they had won just twice in their last 26 tries.

Friday night at Idaho State was another big win for Idaho. Before last season, the Vandals were 2-16 since the ISU Minidome opened in 1970. But the Vandals are 2-0 since it was renamed Holt Arena last season.

Smith led the Vandals again, hitting nine of 11 shots for 18 points, 12 during a critical second-half stretch.

"Idaho State has always been a tough place for us to win," Davis said. "Especially because they are so well prepared and they guard so well. We were just fortunate to make some plays during that one critical stretch that gave us the win."

Trailing 42-41 midway through the second half, Smith hit two baskets to begin an 8-0 run. The Vandals continued to build their lead, opening a 59-46 margin on a three-pointer by Gomes.

Boyd added 17 points while Brown scored 14 and pulled down nine boards.

Steven Garrity led the Bengals with 18 points.

"It's a good way to start," Davis said of Idaho's 5-1 conference record. "It's a long road to the league championship. I want to give our guys credit. It was really a great road breakthrough."

(The Vandals will try to topple the Weber State Wildcats again in a rematch this Thursday in the Kibbie Dome. The game is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Come out and support the Vandals quest for a Big Sky Championship.)

sport because of a lack of teams in the Big Sky Conference.

According to Wilson, chances of it coming back are not good.

Because the club is not in a league, it is usually able to play only junior varsity teams. However, it does receive $330 from the ASUI and uses this money for equipment.

MUD director Michael Johnson

MUD premieres tonight

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

The Moscow Actor's Theater production of Mud opens tonight at the Moscow Hotel. Additional performances will be given Jan. 26, 31, and Feb. 2.

Director Michael Johnson described the play, written by Maria Irene Fornes, as a story about "getting out."

Mud portrays a woman struggling for freedom from a stifling, male-dominated world. As a victim caught in the emotional battles of the other two characters, she seeks human recognition while trying to escape from the trap her life has become.

The cast includes: Meg Gibson, Robert Morgan, and Alvin Warren Berg. Sponsors of the play are Nick Bode of the Moscow Hotel, and Joan Swensen Cunningham of The Main Street Deli.

Tickets are $7 each and are available at the door or by reservation. Performances begin at 7 p.m. and are preceded by a cocktail hour with appetizers from The Main Street Deli beginning at 6 p.m.

Audience members are encouraged to arrive early, as seating is limited. Reservations will guarantee a place in the theater, but seat selection is open.
