Vandals crowd out Bronco hoopsters

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

Na, Na, Na, Na—Na, Na, Na, Na—Hey, Hey, Goodbye is what the fifth largest basketball crowd in Idaho's history sang to the Boise State Broncos as the Vandals clinched a 76-68 victory in the final minutes last night in the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals and 9,000 screaming fans held off a second-half hair-raising comeback from the Broncos, who managed to get within three points of the Vandals with two minutes remaining.

UI came out strong and led by scores of 20-3, 23-7, 33-9 and ended the first half with a commanding 39-22 lead.

The only thing UI did wrong in the first half was putting BSU on the free-throw line. Thirteen of BSU's 22 first-half points were from the foul line. BSU managed only a 25 percent shooting average from the floor — three two-point baskets and their only impressive shot of the first half — a three-pointer by Wilson Foster to end first-half scoring. Bronco All-Conference player Chris Child was held to only seven first-half points, all from the foul line.

In the first half, UI outrebounded BSU 17-5, shot a perfect 11-of-11 from the foul line and did this without the efforts of starting forward Raymond Brown, who sat on the bench most of the first half after picking up two fouls in the first minute of the game.

Although fans in the northern bleachers never left their feet during the game, the Vandal fans and players lost some of their intensity in the second half, allowing BSU to outscore UI 46-37, and as a result chewing Idaho's lead to 67-64 with a more than a minute remaining.

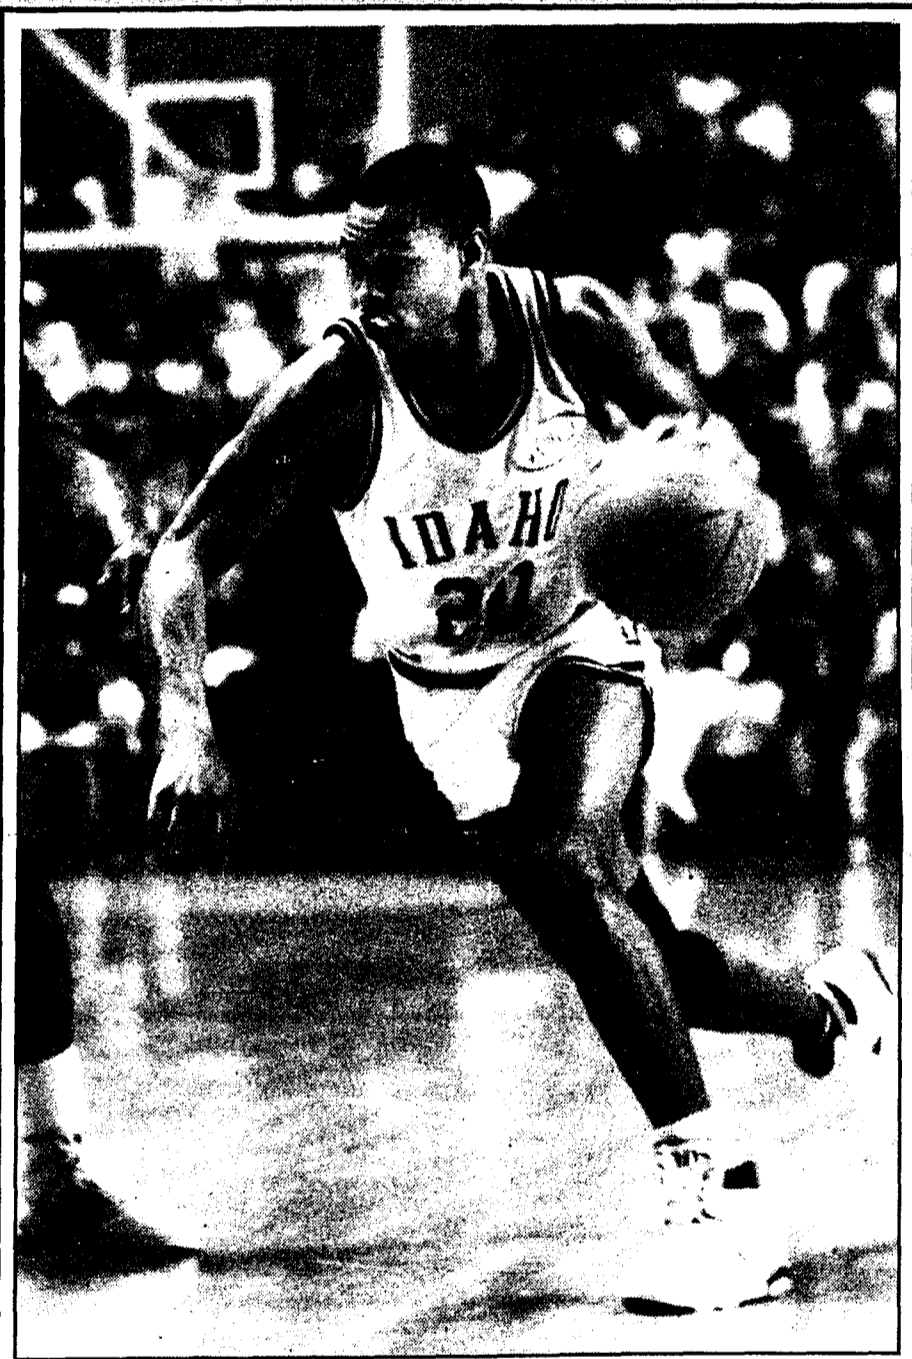

At this moment, a possible loss entered Davis' mind. "It was in the back of my mind. We've only lost five games but final minute comebacks is how it's been done every time," he said.

"But our guys competed hard and won the game without Raymond (Brown)," he said.

Playing without Brown, who eventually fouled out, is not something that Davis necessarily wants, but he was surprised and glad to see the team could play and win without relying on him.

"The bench was the difference tonight," Davis said. "The guys did a great job of coming off the bench."

Davis said rebounds were also a factor. UI ended with 34 rebounds to BSU's 17, and Riley Smith once again had an impressive game, with nine rebounds and leading with 22 points. Idaho's James Fitch ended with 16, followed by Ceasar Prelow with 10 and Mauro Gomes and Ricardo Boyd with nine each.

The win moved Idaho to 22-5 overall and 12-3 in Big Sky and back into a first place conference tie with BSU, now 21-5 and also 12-3 in conference.

The concern for most fans is probably UI's chances to win the regular-season title and host the Big Sky Conference Coors Light Tournament March 9-11.

So here it is — to win the championship and host the tournament, UI must win its final game against ISU this weekend and hope BSU loses its last game against Eastern Washington. Or, if the Vandals and Broncos remain tied, Idaho must hope for several wishes to come true this week.

First of all, Idaho must hope Nevada-Reno loses both of its games at Montana and Montana State, thus creating a tie for fourth with Weber State, which would be broken before the tie for first is broken.

UI rushes to accommodate 460 for Greek conference

By KARA GARTEN
Staff Writer

At least 100 more fraternity and sorority members than originally expected are arriving here today to attend this weekend's third annual Rocky Mountain Greek Conference.

Kelli Robison, co-chairperson for the conference, said planners anticipated about 300 participants, but 460 students have registered. The unexpectedly high turnout has left planners scrambling to add more workshops and make housing arrangements for the visiting Greeks.

Fraternities and sororities here are providing lodging for out-of-town visitors.

"The houses have been really good about helping out," Robison said. "Some sororities are keeping as many as 20 people."

Following registration at 4 p.m. today, there will be a Monte Carlo Casino for all conference participants. Casino action begins at 8 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom and features prizes donated by area merchants.

Tomorrow, Greeks will have a chance to attend workshops on topics including self-defense, eating disorders, dating and relationships, communication skills, Greek traditions, citizenship, resume writing, social skills and surviving the first year of college. Of the 40 workshops, participants can attend four of their choice.

The workshops are being conducted by campus and community members as well as Greek advisers from other universities.

Frances Dobernig, UI Greek adviser, said the workshop topics range from scholastics to health to specifically Greek issues.

"This is not just another leadership conference. The focus is on the Greek as an individual, not just as an officer or leader," Dobernig said.

This is the first time the UI has hosted the conference. Last year, Washington State University hosted it.

Eleven schools from Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington are participating this year, including Boise State University, Eastern Washington University, Montana State University, Oregon State University, Whitman College, Willamette University and WSU.

"Almost all of the national fraternity and sorority organizations will be represented," Dobernig said.

Saturday's activities will be highlighted by keynote addresses from Henry Bauer, president-elect of national IFC and past national president of Kappa Sigma, and Eileen Stevens, founder of CHUCK, the Committee to

Ed board asks Zinser to respond to offer by Monday

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

The Idaho Board of Education will fax UI presidential candidate Elisabeth Zinser a job proposal this morning, says a board spokesman.

"The proposal includes all Zinser's terms of employment," said William Hargrove, public affairs officer for the board.

Thursday afternoon, board members completed a conference call discussing a list of employment terms Zinser sent to the board last week. Members

"Gosh, that looks so good I think I'll authorized board President Charles "Tiny" Grant to present the proposal to Zinser, Hargrove said.

Grant will ask Zinser to respond by Monday or sooner, Hargrove said.

"She might just get the offer tomorrow and say take it," Hargrove said.

If Zinser agrees to take the job, the board will draw up a contract next week.

In other board business, members Roberta Fields and Diane Bilyeu were reappointed to five-year terms effective Wednesday. Marc Johnson, press secretary to Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus, released a statement Thursday announcing the appointments. Bilyeu's and Fields' board terms expired Wednesday.

Dorm fee hikes leave rebates intact

By KARA GARTEN
Staff Writer

Next year's housing rate increase will cost students $24 instead of the originally estimated $40-50, and students won't have to give up upperclassman room rebates.

Jim Bauer, assistant dean of student services, announced the new housing fees at this week's RHA meeting.

"We took some risks," Bauer said. "We are predicting we can do things more efficiently next year and we have tightened up the budget."

Two weeks ago, Bauer estimated a 4.5 percent housing fee increase. Increased operating costs required that housing fees would increase, he said. But after paring down budget projections, the Housing and Food Service office was able to make a proposal to the administrators for a 2.5 percent increase, he said. The proposal goes into effect if approved by the Idaho Board of Education.

The new budget was created on the assumption that enrollment and heating costs will remain steady next year. If they don't, budget cuts will have to be made next year, Bauer said.

Bauer fielded questions from RHA officers and hall presidents at the Monday meeting and explained the problems with eliminating the upperclassman room rebates — an option previously discussed as a way to lower the room rate increase.

"Rebates come out when people are deciding where to live next year," Bauer said. "If the room rebates work it would be foolish to drop them. Upperclassmen are the future of the halls and they make them a better place."

"If the room rebates work, it would be foolish to drop them."

— Jim Bauer
Student Services

However, several hall presidents said they didn't think the rebates influenced students' decisions whether to return to the halls.

Ray Horton, Borah Hall president, said he thinks students base decisions on food quality and general hall atmosphere.

Bauer said that operating costs have been cut where possible and some cost increases, like cable TV, have been absorbed without passing the increase on to the students.

Last year, cable TV hook-ups cost 17 cents per room each month. This year they jumped to $1.70.

One growing budget item is elevator maintenance and repair. Elevator vandalism costs exceeded this year's budgeted amount. The Gooding and Ballard wings of the Wallace Complex had especially serious vandalism problems, Bauer said.

"It costs $65 an hour for an elevator repairman and more on the weekends," he said.

Since responsibility for the vandalism cannot be pinned to one person or hall, everyone living in the residence halls pays, according to Bauer. He said he would like to spend money on improving the halls but problems like vandalism are taking money away from improvement projects.

Although hall residents already faced a 2 percent fall rate increase, the UI has the second lowest room rate in a 1988-89 survey of 22 Western and Midwestern universities. The housing rates ranged from Utah State University's double room rate of $873 to $2,585 at the University of California-Davis. The UI was below the average of $1,467 with a cost of $972. The figures do not reflect board rates.

Bauer said some schools raise their housing rates to match the inflation rate or the consumer price index, but he doesn't like to see them raised unless there are specific operating cost increases.

Minnesota beats UI in bid for Japanese branch campus

Idaho came close ITAD director says

By BENJAMIN LONG
Senior Staff Writer.

After losing their bid to build a branch campus in the city of Yuwa, Japan, UI officials say they have no specific plans to pursue similar deals. "I'm obviously disappointed," said Dorothy Zakrajsek, director of UI's office of International Trade and Development, who has spent the last eight months trying to arrange an agreement.

The University of Minnesota beat out the UI and the University of Maryland in the race to open a branch campus in Japan. Officials here were told of the decision earlier this week.

The Japanese selected the Minnesota school due to previously established relationships between Japan and UM campuses, Zakrajsek said.

But the Japanese delegation who visited the UI in February left with high regards for the Moscow school, she said.

"They were very sold on the UI," she said. "I was confident we were in first place and I think they thought so too. I know we ran a good race."

The future may bring other opportunities for interactions between the University of Idaho and Japanese communities, Zakrajsek said.

"Those opportunities exist," she said. "There are other communities that are interested in establishing educational opportunities. Several contacted me, and I visited others while I was in Japan in September."

Zakrajsek was in Japan on a fact-finding mission for the university and decided that Yuwa was the best of those areas for relations with the UI.

But there are no definite plans to keep looking, she said.

"I don't think we're immediately going to jump right in," she said. "I've got to gather my energy and enthusiasm."

Bicentennial time capsule to include messages from 1989 students, faculty

Students, faculty and community members have the opportunity to include messages in the UI Bicentennial time capsule.

Those interested should complete the form below and return it to the Centennial office in the Administration Building by March 31, said Terry Maurer, director of University Communications.

The messages will be included with dozens of other items in the time capsule the university will inter this spring, to be unearthed in 100 years.

Messages can be serious or not so serious, as were those removed from the time capsule buried Jan. 30, 1939 and displayed at the university's 100th birthday party a few weeks ago in the ASUI Kibbie Dome.

Messages will be read at the university's Bicentennial celebration Jan. 30, 2089.

Officials are asking that submissions be printed legibly.

Greeks can't afford lousy next-door neighbors

Why in the hell do Greek fraternities and sororities that won't put up with mental or physical hazing in their own chapters let a next-door neighbor's atrocities go unreported, unprevented and unpunished?

Fraternity and sorority members from Northwest campuses cringe every time they read yet another super-hyped, tabloid-style article decrying Greek hazing as some huge national problem.

After all, chapters here tend to be more tame than their counterparts in New York, Los Angeles or Miami.

Greeks say they have taken unfair bashings from articles in national college publications like Newsweek On-Campus, Campus Voice and the U, the national college newspaper. And they have watched in horror as talk show hosts like Geraldo, Oprah and Donahue make isolated hazing incidents from far-away campuses sound like the norm.

But while Greeks who don't practice mental or physical hazing are boo-hoing that their reputations are being shot by the minority that does, few are doing anything to correct the problems when they happen next door.

For example, year after year at least one fraternity on this campus publicly strips its rush chairman down to his undershorts and ties him to a well-known campus landmark while people throw garbage on him. Then house officers and their next-door neighbors spend the rest of the day praying that photographs of the event won't show up in the campus newspaper or yearbook.

Maybe Greeks wouldn't have to worry if they imposed and enforced fines — perhaps as much as $1,000 — against such outrageous behavior.

Even chapters which do not practice overt physical hazing may still be involved in forms of mental harassment. Word gets around about houses where pledges are regularly called "pukes" and are degraded in other ways. The few Greeks who believe scaring and degrading individuals is a form of "building brotherhood" are dead wrong.

It's been said that one hazing incident is the only thing that stands between a Greek fraternity or sorority chapter and a half-million dollar lawsuit. Worse yet, it could add to the 49 U.S. deaths linked to hazing during the past decade.

Idaho, Washington and Montana are among 19 states in this country that have assault laws, but haven't passed laws specifically forbidding hazing.

Hopefully, they won't ever have to.

It's time for members of campus Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils to do more than pass empty resolutions decrying hazing.

The next time some lousy next-door neighbor is doing something that could damage your reputation, call a faculty adviser, the police or whoever else will actually put a stop to it before it blackens every Greek's reputation.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Join free thinkers in tolerance

Editor:

This letter is addressed to Greg Dickison and all those like him who refuse to think for themselves, preferring to allow others to do their thinking and make their decisions for them, and whose only joy in life is to ridicule (in the name of a God whom they claim to be wonderful, kind and benevolent) that which they don't understand and never make any attempt to understand:

Do you feel lucky?

Does never having to make a decision more important than whether to eat Wheaties or Cocoa Puffs for breakfast, or whether to wear a T-shirt or a sweater to class appeal to you?

Would such an existence be as blissful as the willful ignorance which these people advocate?

Thank goodness most people are willing to think for themselves; if Dickison and his sort had their way, we'd be as easily brainwashed as the people of Germany were under Adolf Hitler.

If more people were as unwilling to think and use their reasoning powers as Dickison, we'd have concentration camps full of homosexuals (alleged or proven), artists, religious minorities and anyone else who deviated from the ruler's set of standards.

Let's just hope that these poor, indoctrinated dupes see the errors of their ways and join us free thinkers in tolerance and understanding, rather than senselessly choking to death on their own irrational hatreds and fears.

—Don Nelson

Sex, drugs, guns and parking

Yo, society — use your brains, not your buns

Maybe it's me, but does it seem like everyone has gone nuts? Why is there such a profound lack of common sense operating on this campus and in society in general? Doesn't anybody think with their heads anymore? There are a few current issues that I just can't figure out what all the fuss is about.

The Gun Debate

What's wrong with owning a firearm if you're an average, law-abiding citizen? After all, the Constitution says it's every American's right to keep and bear firearms. So what's the problem? Aside from the fact that the Constitution is one of the most misinterpreted and abused documents in the world, the problem here is how one defines firearms, or more appropriately, how the authors of the Constitution defined firearms. When our Constitution was framed, the most advanced way of shooting someone or something was with a musket-type rifle or a primitive pistol. Uzis and AK-47s didn't exist. These days, owning a Winchester 30-30 or a .357 Ruger is one thing, but why does the average American need an automatic (or even semi-automatic) assault rifle? For hunting? Game animals haven't resorted to guerilla warfare and aren't any harder to kill than they were 200 years ago. For that matter, why do average citizens need teflon bullets or plastic guns?

The UI Parking Debacle

To say that the parking on this campus is inadequate is the understatement of the year, but aren't there any better solutions than the quick-fixes of the parking committee? Get real! Segregated parking in the core lots? Banishing off-campus students to off-campus parking to solve traffic and parking problems? That's like cutting off your head to get rid of a headache. What about a multi-level parking garage, paid for with some of that Centennial money the university has been so avariciously gathering? How about telling the advocates of segregated parking to eat dirt and change the core lots back to blue or red stickered parking? Perhaps if enough students protested by parking on the administration lawn and refused to pay any and all parking fines, the parking committee and the "powers that be" would start considering the needs of the students.

The Great Pornography Debate

Although this issue is basically dead, some people just don't know when to quit. Of course I'm talking about the folks from Student Values and Crossroads Bookstore who sponsor those incoherent fliers that decry the horrors of being a slave to "pornography" or some other vice. The content of these little "writs of wisdom" indicate these people still think that "pornography" leads to increases in acts of sexual aggression. Don't these folks ever use the library? If they provided convincing research to back up their claims, rational people might begin to take them seriously. There is an abundance of available research evidence that debunks the notion that there is a link between non-aggressive pornography (ie. Playboy and Penthouse) and sexual aggression. Who or what is "Student Values?" Exactly what students and whose values does this group represent? From the nonsense they've been sponsoring, it looks like they value disinformation and deception. Apparently, membership in this group requires one to abandon the use of the brain. An ad for Crossroads Bookstore in a recent Argonaut claims they're "much more than books, bibles and music." Evidently, this means they're also a sponsor for fundamentalist propaganda and misinformation. What gives with these people? Why do they feel the need to propagate lies and misinformation? Are they that unhappy with life?

The Continuing National Hysteria Known as "The War on Drugs"

In the U.S. in 1987, 3,704 people died from causes directly attributed to the use or abuse of illicit drugs. In that same year, 400,000 people died from causes directly attributed to the use and abuse of the licit drugs known as alcohol and tobacco. In fact, an average of 400,000 people die every year because of these drugs and yet, our government is spending (read "wasting") billions of our tax dollars in a "war" it cannot possibly win. Why?! Why can't we admit that the real drug epidemic lies in alcohol and tobacco use?

It seems the closer we get to the twenty-first century, the more some people refuse to think and act rationally. I guess I just don't get it. I thought we were supposed to learn from our mistakes instead of repeating and compounding them. Maybe it's a part of a new national craze — thinking with your gluteus maximus instead of your brains.

Critics recommend other biographies on Muhammad

Editor:

The letter in the Feb. 24 Argonaut by Abdullah Al-Sada bears a remarkable resemblance to a letter by D.J. Mulla, which was printed in both the Idahonian and the Lewiston Morning Tribune. In fact, with the exception of one paragraph and a few other words which are lacking in Al-Sada's letter, they appear to have been written by the same person.

Unfortunately, the book by Martin Lings (Muhammad: His Life Based on the Earliest Sources), which they claim to be a "fair and factual book on the life of Muhammad," was not well received by book critics. Some of the scholar-reviewers mention the sources of the book as being mainly a couple of Arabic biographies written in the 8th and 9th centuries (Muhammad lived in the 7th century). Legend, poetry, and obvious interpolations are placed on an equal footing with critical scholarship; discrepancies are passed over in silence. Lings, however, says nothing about his sources; in fact, the book has no introduction at all.

Some better biographies of Muhammad recommended by the same critics are: Muhammad: Prophet and Statesman, by W. Montgomery Watt and Muhammad, by Maxime Rodinson. A good thumbnail sketch of his life and influence may be found in Chapter 9 of The Transcendental Temptation, by Paul Kurtz.

EDITOR'S NOTE: With the current debate over Salman Rushdie's The Satanic Verses, members of Moscow's Muslim community felt it important to express their collective viewpoint.

Thus similar letters to the editor were sent to all area media. The letter submitted to the Argonaut, however, had been altered to fit the audience it was intended to reach — the UI community. In addition to author Abdullah Al-Sada, 49 others signed the letter.

impeachment trials and singing "Quayle to the Chief." Great, just what we need, another poet-laureate smart ass.

Kent is criticizing Bush for his initiative to bail out the savings and loan industry. The ironic part is that he would also be the same person who would criticize Bush if he didn't do anything to save the same industry. I'll tell you what Mr. Kent, send me a letter and I will pay the two-cent per dollar charge for you. In return you might want to wait until after Bush's term to bash him instead of 28 days after inauguration.

Two Soviet rock groups plan Moscow concert

By MIKE LEWIS
Staff Writer

Two of the Soviet Union's most popular rock music groups will perform here Tuesday.

The Stas Namin Group and Rondo will appear in the SUB Ballroom Tuesday at 8 p.m. The Stas Namin Group has sold more than 40 million records since it was permitted to release its recordings in 1972.

"I would urge people to go to this concert," said Brigitta Ingemanson, a professor of Russian at Washington State University. "They're incredible. They are so popular."

KUOI-FM and One More Time Productions are co-sponsoring the event, and organizer Charlotte Buchanan says she hopes for a good turnout.

"What we're concerned about is that people see them," Buchanan said. "In the '50s, rock and roll really loosened up the people in our country. I think rock and roll is something that gets in the souls of people and is a real part of social change."

Buchanan said that while tickets for the band's performance in Anchorage, Alaska last week went for $24, tickets for its Moscow performance are $6.

"I just want people to see them," she said.

Aside from their appearances in Anchorage and Moscow, The Stas Namin Group and Rondo will perform in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and New York, Buchanan said.

The bands are appearing in the United States as part of an effort to improve U.S./Soviet relations regarding the Bering Strait, which has been closed to all traffic since the late 1940s.

The movement to have Stas Namin appear in the U.S. was begun by Dixie Belcher, a resident of Juneau, Alaska, who wants to see relations between Alaska and the Soviet Union improve.

The Alaska Arts Organization, of which Belcher is director, and the Alaska State Chamber of Commerce co-sponsored the Stas Namin concert in Anchorage last Saturday, which attracted more than 4,000 fans. American pop artist Eddie Money also appeared at the concert.

Buchanan said that a friend in Pullman who was involved in the production of the concert in Alaska called her and asked her to try to arrange the stop in Moscow.

Stas Namin was the first Soviet rock band to tour the West — the United States, Canada, and West Germany — in 1986. The group also appeared with Peter Gabriel in Tokyo and has made appearances in parts of western Europe, Africa, and Australia.

Stas Namin himself is the grandson of former Soviet President Anastas Mikoyan, Ingemanson said. She said a number of members of Namin's "very, very well-known family" hold prominent political positions in the Soviet Union.

Dance group celebrates UI Centennial

The University Dance Theater presents a Centennial Concert beginning tonight in the Hartung Theater.

The concert features both original choreography and repertory pieces. Dancers will perform modern, jazz, cultural, and tap styles of dance.

Approximately 40 students will participate in this weekend's performances. Students dancing in the program are enrolled in a one-credit course which ends after the performance.

According to Diane Walker, director of dance theater, the project attracts dance majors and minors as well as others who simply enjoy dancing.

Performances will be held tonight and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 3 p.m.

Paradox Politics gives inside look at Idaho politics

Review by MATT HELMICK
Senior Staff Writer

One day in 1956, Glen Taylor, a former Democratic senator running for another term, hit town. Taylor had been a vaudeville singer and actor, and it showed in his campaigns. He drove to downtown Orofino, stopped in front of the Sports Club, jumped atop a platform on the roof of his station wagon, picked up his guitar and started singing. Andrus watched and thought, "My God, is that what politics is all about? Thank you, no thanks."

—from Paradox Politics by Randy Stapilus

Of course, Cecil Andrus did go into politics despite Taylor's vaudevillian tactics and he also put on some interesting performances himself. One such performance involved Andrus tramping grease into Ray McNichols' law office just after working at a logging mill.

Paradox Politics is full of interesting anecdotes such as these, as well as political history. As the name of the book might suggest, since we are dealing with Idaho politics, the amusing (and sometimes shocking) anecdote and political history go hand-in-hand.

Still, writing an interesting book on state politics is no easy task. Stapilus, however, has met the challenge and his work is fruitful. By conducting more than 50 interviews and a great deal of research, Stapilus has come up with a book that is as entertaining as it is informative.

Stapilus follows no strict timeline in his revealing of Idaho's political history. He jumps from the modernity of the Coeur d'Alene Resort to the gambling arguments of the '30s back to Boise's present development problems. Remarkably, the organization of the material works.

The reason Stapilus is successful is because he has an eye and ear for the relevant. Instead of bogging the reader down with a lot of trivial facts and figures, he has focused on those issues that played an important role in the development of the present power structures.

Such relevance helps explain why a formerly Democratic North Idaho has changed to Republican (answer: Californian influx and the decline of logging and mining power) and why Idahoans elect liberals Sen. Frank Church and Gov. Cecil Andrus on the same day as conservatives Steve Symms and George Hansen (good question).

Yet, Stapilus doesn't deny us the interesting quirks and follies that our "enquiring minds want to know" either. The connection of Steve Symms with the John Birch Society is there, as is the Mormonism of George Hansen.

Don't allow me to paint the book as being a freak parade of bad legislators, however, for inside the reader will also find the noble tradition of legislators such as Frank Church and William Borah. The works of these men transcended the borders of Idaho and had lasting and positive effects on national and foreign affairs.

In sum, Paradox Politics is a good book and a particularly relevant one to the University of Idaho student. ASUI officers with political pretensions could benefit a great deal from reading about the examples set before them. The general student might find the book useful in order to find out just what the hell all this political stuff is about.

Animotion takes on new style

New additions to group leave much to be desired

Review by SCOTT TROTTER
Editorial Staff Writer

Name any typical pop band today and chances are that Animotion, with its newly released album, could be added to the list.

Animotion has returned after nearly three years, with two new pretty-faced lead singers and a different playing style from the band's old "Obsession" days.

Lead singers Aristid Plane and Bill Wadhams of "Obsession" fame, the 1984 debut LP's first single which became a top-10 hit worldwide, have left the band to be replaced by film actress-singer Cynthia Rhodes and experienced vocalist Paul Engemann.

Rhodes has had screen lead roles opposite Patrick Swayze in Dirty Dancing and John Travolta in Staying Alive, plus featured roles in Flashdance, Xanadu and Runaway.

The two new lead singers join old band members Greg Smith (keyboards) and Don Kirkpatrick (guitars).

Rhodes and Engemann joined Animotion last year and Rhodes noted, "We were all in a room together for the first time and instinctually knew we all wanted the same sound, look, style and direction."

Apparently Animotion has also picked the same sound, look, style and direction as numerous other top 10 artists — their music hinting influences from the likes of Robbie Nevill, Richard Marx, etc., etc.

There is not much diversity or excitement in the new LP — the two bright spots being the group's first single "Room to Move," and the longer version of the same single "Room to Move," used as a filler at the end of the second side of the album.

"Room the Move," written by Simon Climie and Dennis Morgan, (who penned the No. 1 Aretha Franklin/George Michael hit "I Knew You Were Waiting For Me"), has been getting some radio time and is actually appealing. But its common whiny guitar solo, lead singer duet and oooh-oooh-oooh's, makes it sound like so many other similar pop songs — not to condemn pop music or this particular song.

The album is not by any means horrible to sit through. It's packed with dreamy love songs, including "Calling It Love," "Message of Love" and "House of Love," that are pleasant; yet not incredibly creative.

The band even attempts to get a bit rowdy in the duet "Send It Over," which is upbeat and gets a little wild with the keyboards and synthesizer.

Though still incorporating the use of keyboards, the band has changed to a more rock and guitar emphasized band — and Engemann sings with a tough, Bruce Springsteen-type voice (well sort of), which contrasts with the gentle singing of his lead vocal partner Rhodes.

But the most exciting element of the album is that both Engemann and Rhodes look really "hot," along with Smith and Kirkpatrick, on the front and back of the album cover.

The cover alone almost makes the album worth buying.

It's not bad music, though. Pick it up, listen to it a few times, and file it next to those Madonna and Debbie Gibson albums.

Orphans continues through weekend

Lyle Kessler's psychological drama in two acts, Orphans, opened the Collette Theater's spring season last night and will continue through this weekend.

The play is centered around two orphaned brothers who finally discover the parent figure they have always yearned for.

"Orphans provides an incredible emotional experience that you can't convey in words," Director Tom Armitage said. "You forget you are in a theater."

The all male cast includes Tim Johnson playing Treat, Tom Patrick portraying Harold and Dale Hitsman as Phillip.

Orphans will be presented tonight through Sunday at 8 p.m. with matinees on Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Collette Theater on the UI Campus.

"We're hoping it will sell out," Armitage said. "With only 85 seats, the extra matinee on Saturday provides an opportunity for more people to see the show."

Tickets are $3 at the door or at Ticket Express in the UI Student Union Building (208) 885-7212.

Replacements' reckless sound finds new image

By PAUL GREENWOOD
Staff Writer

While strumming through the pages of a Rolling Stone a while back, I spotted a rather curious ad for a new album. The album was the Replacements' latest musical venture, Don't Tell a Soul, and it wasn't the ad's visual element that caught my attention, but rather the headline on the top, THE LAST, BEST BAND OF THE '80s.

Next to this rather boisterous claim there bore no critic's name in quotations, nor results from a reader's poll, nor anything in the world to indicate anybody in the music world or the public thought this way. Apparently, this was the Replacements' opinion of themselves.

Although being an active critic of arrogance, pomposity and general all-around cockiness by musicians everywhere, I decided that this would indeed fall under the category of tongue in cheek, since the Replacements have never taken themselves all that seriously it wasn't even worth being skeptical over.

In actuality, the Replacements certainly can lay claim to being one of the better and more influential underground bands of the decade. With a reckless, post-punk sound that epitomizes the scruffiness and raunchiness of "garage rock," and lyrics that are insightful, intelligent, carefully conceived and full of soul, the Replacements have always come across as sort of philosophical garbage men, or perhaps, working-class professors.

Whatever they are, this workable combination of intelligence and recklessness has been the mainstay of their popular following in the alternate circuit appealing to the college rock scene as a rougher and tougher version of R.E.M. in a similar, antithetical relationship shared by the Rolling Stones to the Beatles.

Their new album, however, marks a surprisingly distinct change in their traditional sound that all of their fans will notice immediately. They seemed to have shaved off their scruff somewhat and paved their way to shedding their skins of the garage rock sound and the angry, drunken adolescent image that dominated their first two albums, Tim and Pleased to Meet You.

Then, Idaho must hope MSU finishes ahead of Eastern Washington in the conference standings, thus breaking the fourth-place tie in Weber State's favor, and ultimately in Idaho's favor because Idaho has swept Weber State and Boise split with the Wildcats.

But last night brought bad news. Nevada-Reno beat Montana, thus eliminating UI's hopes for this complicated process to happen. Now, BSU must lose to Eastern Washington if UI is to host the tournament. UI and BSU will be Conference Co-Champions if both teams win their final games, with the privilege of hosting the tournament going to the Broncos. Understand? If not, just root for UI's victory over ISU and an EWU victory over BSU.

They seem to have directed themselves to a noticeably more subdued sound that at times seems like a total departure from the chaotic, energetic sound that forged their reputation. Listeners hearing them for the very first time will probably not associate them with rowdy bars and cheap beer as did their early fans, but rather see them as an intelligent, adult yet still avant band heavily influenced by a diverse array of music and utilizing many forms of musical experimentation.

With this new more mature sound is undoubtedly going to come a new image for the band. Viewed for years as rebels without a cause, they made their reputation by defying mainstream conformity with a zealous passion, going out of their way to be as far from the top 40 as possible.

Their new album is still rather far from the realms of top 40, but they are more likely to be viewed as a sophisticated, serious band from now on. With this new subdued sound, many fans are going to be listening to their very meaningful and reflective lyrics for the first time, realizing there is more to them than their stereotype as a backstreet bar band.

Although they are bound to be accused of selling out with this new album, they have in actuality broadened their horizons to a wider panorama of musical experimentation than in their previous releases, making Don't Tell a Soul one of their most interesting albums yet. Changing their musical format was simply a maturation process that all worthwhile bands must go through to keep from getting boring, stale and having all their albums ungracefully blend into each other.

The Replacements may have grown up somewhat but they have also opened many new doors. They still every bit hold their position as exciting heroes of the '80s underground. Within only nine more months to uphold their title as the last, best band of the '80s, we can only hope the '90s proves to be an era of even greater experimentation and maturation than this album indicates.

However, Namin dropped his family name and took his surname from his mother's first name, Nama, partially in an effort to distance himself from the politics that his family was known for. Ingemanson therefore doubts that Namin is involved politically.

"When I read about him, it tends to be about music, his new music, and helping people, but through rock," she said. She also said that she doesn't think Namin wants to be popular politically.

Namin's music was circulated on the black market via a network of illegal recordings for some 10 years before he was permitted to openly sell his recordings, but Ingemanson said that she doesn't think Namin's ancestry helped influence the state's decision to permit him to do so.

"It may have helped him survive in the early years, but it was in the best interest of the state to stop looking to the West (for musical precedents)," Ingemanson said.

FROM RUSSIA WITH ROCK. The Stas Namin Group will be featured in concert in the SUB Ballroom Tuesday. (FILE PHOTO)

Rondo, the group traveling with Stas Namin, was formed in 1986 and received widespread acclaim after their prize-winning performance at the Rock-Panorama '86 Soviet rock festival. The band has sold more than 1.5 million records, and appeared on the television bridge between Soviet and American youth organized by Phil Donahue in 1987.

The two groups will also receive keys to the city in a ceremony at Moscow City Hall sometime Monday or Tuesday, Moscow Mayor Gary Scott said. Scott said that each band will receive a key and the members will be declared honorary citizens of Moscow.

Tickets are on sale at One More Time and Ticket Express for $6 and will be available at the door for $8.

Fly tying fisherman teaches Saturday

By DENA BANDAIZAN
Staff Writer

Bits of fur, feathers, hair and hooks are scattered on a table.

Soon they will be transformed into a fishing fly. The fly must imitate a fish's natural food to serve its purpose. This imitation causes a certain involvement with the environment and respect for the creation of a fly.

This philosophy, of knowing a fish and its habitat well enough to imitate its natural food, makes many fly fisherman catch-and-release fishermen.

"The pleasure comes in tying a fly yourself, using it and getting a fish to take it," said Charles Thompson, a self-taught fly tier.

Thompson said that tying flies makes him feel more involved with the environment because he is imitating the fish's natural food. He has to know the fish and their habits to fool them with the flies.

"Using a hand-made fly makes me feel like I am part of their ecosystem — that's where the pleasure is," Thompson said.

"About 15 years ago I bought a cheap vice, some hooks and materials to imitate store bought fly patterns," Thompson said, "I attended a few clinics — a lot like the ones I teach now — and here I am."

Thompson, a University of Idaho physical education teacher will be teaching a one-day workshop on tying flies March 4. The workshop is sponsored by the UI Conferences and Enrichment Program.

The $21 class includes supplies for the novice fly tiers. Materials include a variety of feathers, furs and synthetic fibers.

"For dry flies, we use hackle feathers from the neck of a bird. These feathers are bristly and stick up," Thompson said. "The fur from rabbits, muskrats and beavers is frequently used for the body of the fly to achieve the fuzzy appearance."

Different materials are used for different purposes. Color and texture are important factors as well as whether the fly is supposed to float or sink, Thompson said.

"In the class I teach about six styles and several techniques. Occasionally part of the class will be devoted to fly fishing/casting," Thompson said.

Sometimes the actual fishing can be taught on location but mostly the casting is demonstrated on the lawns around campus and in small streams around the area, Thompson said.

Thompson uses the flies he ties and does not sell them. He said it takes him three to 15 minutes to tie a fly he is familiar with and 30-45 minutes to develop a new fly.

Thompson has been teaching fly tying classes for several years and has taught a variety of people ranging in age from 10-75.

"People from all walks of life show up at these classes," Thompson said.

"The intensity of the class is incredible — you could hear a pin drop. People really concentrate on the 'other world' of flies," Thompson said.

Pacific Lutheran next for Idaho tennis team

By LYNNETTE PIXLEY
Sports Writer

The UI men's tennis team schedule is up in the air this weekend as weather conditions will determine match-ups against Pacific Lutheran and the University of Montana.

The team will travel to either Washington State University or Lewiston today for the match against PLU.

"Pacific Lutheran has always been one of the better teams in the Northwest," Coach Davie Scott said. "It should be a close match."

"We haven't played PLU in two years, so we really don't know what we're up against," Scott said.

Saturday, the match is scheduled to be held at WSU and Scott said he is optimistic that the Vandals will do well.

"Montana tends to be somewhat weaker than Montana State. Having defeated Montana State I feel we should do well," Scott said.

The men's tennis team, which is now 6-0, looks to make their record 8-0 this weekend and Scott feels the team has the ability. "If we keep playing the way we have been we're going to be very successful."

Today's match-up is scheduled for 5 p.m. at either WSU or Lewiston against PLU. Saturday the team takes on the University of Montana at WSU at 1 p.m.

Elkins Big Sky Player of Week

UI junior Lori Elkins was named Big Sky Conference

Player of the Week after leading the Lady Vandals to two more conference wins last weekend. Elkins scored 39 points in Vandal victories over NAU and NRU.

Snowboard Bash at North-South this weekend

By KARA ANN OLSON
Contributing Writer

Snowboard racers and enthusiasts will gather at the North-South Ski area this weekend for the third annual Snowboard Bash.

The annual race is expected to bring in snowboarders from Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Montana as well as some UI students.

"I'm fairly sure that there will be UI students competing in the event," said Jan Sweitzer, North-South's program director. "I know of several that snowboard here from Moscow."

"We are also looking for the Barefoot Skiboard Team to show up along with Keith Wallace who is the Junior World Snowboard Champion," Sweitzer said.

Snowboarders will compete for money prizes in four different divisions: men's amateur, women's amateur, junior amateur and professional.

The Snowboard Bash is free to the public.

UI Chrisman Raiders take fifth

The UI Chrisman Raiders took fifth overall against 26 teams from six northwest states in the Army ROTC Ranger Challenge competition at Ft. Lewis, Wash. last weekend.

The 10-man team took first in rifle marksmanship, fourth in the 10-kilometer forced march, eighth in the physical fitness test and one-rope bridge competition, 13th in orienteering (finding various locations in the least amount of time), and 14th in weapons assembly to pace their fifth place finish in the six-event competition.

The result is both a pleasure and a shock to the UI team. "We lost to Gonzaga on a technicality a month ago," said team captain John Ingram. "They've really improved since then."

UI track team hosts Big Sky Championship

By RUSS BIAGNE
Sports Writer

The University of Idaho will host the Big Sky Conference Men's and Women's Indoor Track and Field Championships in the Kibbie Dome this weekend.

The meet begins today at 11 a.m. and will conclude with the finals tomorrow afternoon.

Once again Northern Arizona is favorite to win the men's division, which would make it their third-straight Big Sky indoor track title. NAU is defending champion in the women's division as well.

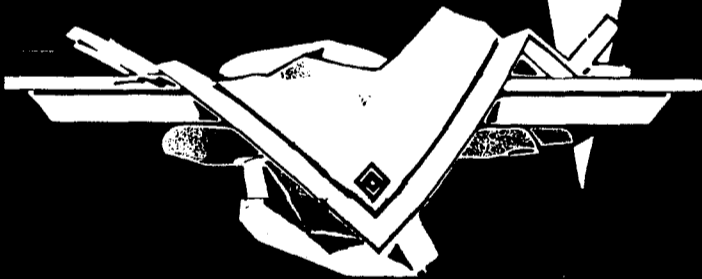

This year the UI men have qualified six members for the championships, including last year's 55-meter fourth-place and 200-meter fifth-place runner Eric Haynes and 400-meter runner-up Lenford O'Garro. Also participating are sprinter Patrick Williams, 800 runner Eversley Linley, long-jumper Orde Ballantyne and NCAA Championships qualifier (hurdles) Dan O'Brien. O'Brien, who UI Track Coach Mike Keller described as the sixth fastest in the nation in the hurdles, could place in as many as three events this weekend.

Leading the women's team is Caryn Choate-Deeds, who placed fifth in the 55 and 200 meters last year. Choate-Deeds is coming off an impressive performance last week at EWU where she equalled her own school record in the 55 meter dash. Accompanying her in the championships will be last year's sixth place finisher in the 55 meters Kim Gillas, Stacey Asplund in the high jump, and Monica Langfeldt in the 800 meters. Langfeldt is one of the favorites to win the 800 after bettering her own school record last Friday with a 2:13.84 time.

The Big Sky Conference Championships are free to the public.
