

Computer viruses detected in SUB, Ag Science PC labs

By BENJAMIN LONG
Senior Staff Writer

A pair of computer viruses have cropped up in University of Idaho PC labs and officials are asking students and other computer users to check their floppy disks to prevent damage to data and spread of the viruses.

One virus, which may have originated in Pakistan, has the potential to destroy stored information, the manager of UI computer services said Thursday. Manager Bill Pyle said someone unknowingly introduced the virus to UI computers.

The virus was first detected at the forestry department's computer lab in February, and was thought to have been contained until it turned up again at the SUB basement Tuesday night, Pyle said.

"It's someone's idea of a practical joke," said Leo Stephens, SUB Underground director. "To me it's like throwing rocks through windows."

Stephens said he spent most of Wednesday checking diskettes and removing any detected virus.

The second virus, which computer personnel are calling the "Ag Virus" because it was first discovered at the Agriculture Science Computer Lab, will not destroy data unless it infects a full disk, Pyle said. Both viruses infect DOS disks and seem only to affect the common 5 1/4 inch, low-density disks, Pyle said. Pyle and Stephens said it was impossible to guess how many computer users were affected by the viruses.

To check a disk for the Pakistan virus, Pyle said to call up the directory and look for a volume label that reads "(c) brain," or a CHKDSK command that shows 3,072 bytes of bad sectors—a total memory 7,168 bytes less than normal.

A Memory Key diskette with instructions to check for the "Ag Virus" is available at the Computer Services lab at the Administration Building, Pyle said.

Pyle recommends the following steps to prevent the spread of viruses:

■ Turn off the PC before you begin to use it

■ Boot from a diskette that is known to be free of virus

■ Use write protect tabs on all diskettes, except diskettes that must be written to

■ Be careful about the source of programs

Pyle asks that people who find the signs of the virus call Computer Services at 885-6721. The office has a program that will get rid of the virus, although it does not return lost data.

Survey: Campus full of frequent drivers

71% of campus drivers make 3 or more trips weekly

By WENDY WOODWORTH
Contributing Writer

Campus residents are using their automobiles more often than officials expected, a UI parking survey shows.

The just-released document indicates that 71 percent of those owning cars and living in the university area drive to or from campus three or more times a week. The report also found that 52 percent of those surveyed are parking for free.

"The most startling information to us was that people living on campus used their cars as often as others," said Eve Magyar, UI Facility Planning architect and planner.

Of students living on campus and owning cars, 45 percent drive to and from campus one or more times a day.

According to Joanne Reece, director of Facility Planning, only those people who purchase parking permits pay for campus snow removal, street sweeping and repair. The report found that 52 percent of the students, staff and faculty surveyed are parking without permits and are parking for free on the streets.

"I am concerned with the fairness of those buying permits paying for all the maintenance," Reece said.

In addition, the survey found that 50 percent who have bought permits feel the price is reasonable and 74 percent are parking in the location they prefer.

Of those surveyed, half felt the present permit prices were reasonable. Only 4 percent would pay more for the same permit, while 27 percent felt the permit prices were too high.

Of the 74 percent who were parking where they preferred, 58 percent felt the cost of the permit to park there was reasonable. However, 23 percent felt the permit prices were too high in relation to where they were parking.

"We felt it was important to do the survey because input was needed from all the people who are affected to solve this problem," Magyar said.

Of 793 individuals surveyed, 66 percent were undergraduates, 10 percent graduate students, 15 percent staff and 9 percent faculty.

According to space planner Ned Warnick, the 12-question survey provided a fairly good summary of opinions on the parking situation. The parking survey is part of a complete parking study being prepared by Facility Planning.

"We are aiming at a comprehensive study to improve parking and the survey is one of the largest and most important inputs," Warnick said.

About half of the work for the parking study is complete.

UI veeps ask students to pay $1 million more

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

University administrators gave student leaders a free breakfast Thursday, then told them there was no free lunch.

The university faces loss of program accreditation and $1 million more of student fees may be the only solution, UI Academic Vice President Tom Bell and Financial Vice President Joe Geiger told some 40 ASUI officials and living group presidents at the 7:30 a.m. breakfast in the SUB.

Last week, the Idaho Board of Education denied a notice of intent to raise resident student matriculation fees $50 per semester — the same amount administrators presented to students Thursday morning. Under the plan, non-resident tuition could also increase an additional $100 per semester and graduate fees could increase $33. Bell and Geiger have asked students to respond by mid-April before the board meets again.

Imposing such a deadline on students may not allow them to sufficiently consider the issues, said ASUI Sen. John Goettsche.

"They're good salesmen," Goettsche said. "They're using the old 'quick, make a decision' tactic. Used car salesmen do that."

The UI faces a time crunch now because university officials didn't push the Idaho Legislature hard enough for money, Bell said.

"You can pound on how poor your institution is and how scared you are of accreditation and do a lot of damage to your reputation," Bell said.

The fee plan calls for the first $300,000 of the $1 million increase to be cover the cost of maintaining existing operations. The remaining $700,000 would indirectly address accreditation issues.

Facing questions from students who asked if the university would lose accreditation if fees did not increase, Bell said "It's not necessary to gamble that away for want of a million dollars."

Goettsche said that by holding accreditation loss over students' heads, the administration is trying to scare students into supporting a fee hike.

"If the University of Idaho lost its accreditation, what would happen to the state?" asked Goettsche. "People would start losing their jobs."

Sen. Mike Mick agreed. "Idaho won't let its flagship institution lose accreditation," Mick said.

Will consensual sex policy go in UI handbook?

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

The University of Idaho came one step closer to implementing a consensual relationship policy Thursday afternoon.

The latest draft of a policy discouraging consensual romantic or sexual relationships between university instructors and their students met with little opposition during Thursday's public hearing.

The new draft, like its predecessors, does not expressly forbid consensual relationships. However, it labels such relationships "unwise, inappropriate and unethical."

The policy will be forwarded to the Faculty Council April 11 for approval. The proposed policy is sponsored by the UI Affirmative Action Committee.

Faculty Council members sent the fifth policy draft back to committee in early February. Professor of Law James Macdonald had blasted a phrase in the draft referring to a "power differential" between professors and their students. Affirmative Action deleted the phrase from the latest draft. "They were willing to compromise if we were willing to compromise, and that's fine," said Affirmative Action Chairperson Jan Scott.

But faculty members disagreed on how the policy will be used. Options include placement in the Faculty Handbook Borah panel debate: Should U.S. legalize narcotics sales?

By BENJAMIN LONG
Senior Staff Writer

Point: Drug interdiction is costly and futile, and the best way to fight drug abuse is to give narcotics the same legal status as alcohol and cigarettes.

Counterpoint: Drug interdiction is possible if the U.S. government gets tough and uses the military to guard the southern border against smugglers.

Those were two of the opinions argued before a crowd of about 500 at Tuesday's Borah Symposium, which was subtitled, "Can the War on Drugs Be Won?"

If drugs are treated as a public health problem, and not a criminal justice problem, they could be legalized, regulated and taxed to help fight addiction said Ethan Nadelmann, an assistant professor of politics at Princeton University. Nadelmann was one of five panelists speaking at the Symposium Tuesday night.

Holding that opinion while in political office is "political suicide," Nadelmann said. But members of both the political left and right consider drugs a public health problem, he said.

"This is not a policy of surrender," Nadelmann said. "It's the traffickers who have the most to lose" if narcotics sales are legalized.

The current laws against drugs are similar to the 1930s prohibition of alcohol, spawning a vast, lucrative and violent black market, he said.

"It seems to me a dumb policy," Nadelmann said.

But panelist Rep. Dunkin

Hunter, R-Calif., disagreed. Anti-drug laws were society's means of protecting itself, similar to laws against dangerous pesticides, he said.

NADELMANN

REUTER

Hunter said the military should become involved in stopping drug smuggling by assisting the Customs Department in searching cargo and monitoring the southern border by radar planes.

"Customs is designed to go through suitcases and mix up people's socks," he said, adding that the so-called "War on Drugs" has been mostly political rhetoric.

"We've seen absolutely no action. We've got a case of the slows," he said.

Increased security at the U.S.—Mexico border is an inefficient and ineffective means of fighting drugs, said Peter Reuter, an economist with the Rand Corporation. The financial incentives to go around risky smuggling routes will keep drug-runners entering, he said.

"Smugglers adapt," he said. "Smugglers are an insult, but they are an insult we have to live with." The forces necessary to seal the border would be similar to "war-time footing" and are "not compatible with our perception of freedom," he said.

Panelist Samuel Routson, deputy assistant secretary of Navy and UI alumnus, agreed that interdiction is necessary. But he warned against increased involvement by the military. Instead, he said the government should find alternative routes in fighting drug trafficking. The government should focus on issues such as money laundering, drug testing and stopping precursor chemicals, he said.

About the only thing the panelists agreed on was that the U.S. drug war is far from over.

"At the end of Reagan's watch, in my opinion, we are losing the drug war on every front," said moderator Bruce Bagley, a professor of international studies at the University of Miami.

and distributing copies of the policy to students and faculty at the beginning of each school year.

"Many of my colleagues felt the policy was a slap in the face," said Extension Clothing Specialist Ernestine Porter. "Placement in the handbook is what I can't support."

And the policy would be more well-read if distributed individually rather than being included in the Faculty Handbook, Faculty Council Chairman Peter Haggart said.

While the policy would not need Faculty Council approval for widespread distribution, Affirmative Action Officer said faculty endorsement is important.

"If endorsed by the faculty it becomes a product of the faculty," Hahn said.

"If this is the strongest you can get past the Faculty Council then that's OK," said Roger Wallins, associate dean of graduate studies. "I'd like it to be stronger, but I recognize there were some problems."

Policy problems aside, policy approval is crucial, said Kate Grinde, assistant professor of landscape architecture.

"I don't think some of our students are at a maturity level to know how this (consensual relationships) affect their personal life," Grinde said.

However, the policy was changed to respect students as adults, Scott said.

Marc Thiel, one of two undergraduate student Faculty Council representatives, said the old draft was too broad to become university policy. The latest version, he said, is "great just as a reminder."

The consensual relationship policy has been a year and a half in the making, Scott said.

Lewis Clark State College's newly passed a consensual relationship policy expressly prohibiting teacher-student relationships.

The university faces two accreditation visits this fall, from the Northwest Association of School and Colleges and from Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology. Bell said the UI is in great danger of losing engineering accreditation.

"We have a $3 million accreditation need," Geiger said.

Said ASUI President Tina Kagi: "I'm wondering how much improvement we'll see from $700,000 when our needs are $3 million."

"When the accreditation committee comes, our $700,000 is going to look a whole lot better than a goose egg," Bell said.

Under the funding plan, student monies would be used to help pay a larger portion of building maintenance and utility fees. State funding of some Physical Plant operations would be diverted to academics, including $186,000 for three new engineering instructors. The state constitution does not allow student money to fund instructional fees.

The proposed fee hike may include student fees prohibited in the Idaho Constitution, Goettsche said.

"The administration is trying to get students to support a money-laundering scheme," he said.

Other administrators scattered throughout the crowd of student leaders at Thursday's early-morning breakfast included Flip Kleffner, acting vice president of development; Bruce Pitman, dean of student services; Terry Armstrong, executive assistant to the president; Jerry Wallace, budget officer; George Simmons, assistant vice president for academics and research.

Tuesday, administrators hosted a similar breakfast for ASUI senators. Wednesday night, they explained the proposed fee increases to members of a campus fraternity.

Borah hall supports Smart, calls law students 'juvenile'

By ANGELA CURTIS
Managing Editor

A campus living group assigned to ASUI Sen. Steve Smart has passed a resolution supporting Smart in impeachment proceedings against him.

And the president of that living group says a settlement proposed by the Student Bar Association, the group filing charges against Smart, is merely an attempt to save face.

"This settlement is basically the defeated trying to dictate the terms of peace," Borah Hall President Ray Horton said Wednesday night.

Last week, the SBA initiated proceedings against Smart on charges of misfeasance, non-feasance and malfeasance. Smart is assigned to stay in contact with the College of Law. All UI law students are members of the SBA.

Tuesday in a senate pre-session meeting, SBA representative Christopher Hooper presented a settlement which would forego a lawsuit against the ASUI and dismiss Smart's impeachment if the senate repealed a budget rider cutting SBA and the Idaho Law Review from future funding. The proposed settlement asks that Idaho's open meeting law be added to the ASUI Constitution.

"If we force the university through the open meeting laws act to follow the constitution, then it's not a waste of ASUI funds," SBA President Jean Brennan said.

Passed Sunday night, Borah Hall's resolution says that hall members have been "more than satisfied" with Smart's representation and fully support him in the conflict with the SBA.

The resolution also states that ASUI senators are assigned to represent all students, not select organizations or groups.

Horton called SBA's request for line-item inclusion into the ASUI budget juvenile, saying other organizations are not specifically budgeted.

"If SBA wants, I'll make a similar request for Borah Hall. We sure could find a good use for $3,100," Horton said.

"I think it's ridiculous that an organization of 282 is ordering around 9,000 students," he said.

The Borah Hall resolution says: "The residents of Borah Hall endorse and support the actions taken by the ASUI Senate to correct the unfair and improper budgetary consideration given to the SBA."

Said Brennan: "If Mr. Horton wants to pledge his support before he gets the facts, he's a fool."

Senate allots $1,000 to pay potential legal costs

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

The ASUI Senate Wednesday approved a bill transferring $1,000 from the student body General Reserve to the President's budget to cover potential legal costs.

The senate has hired Lawrence Beck, a local attorney, to provide legal counseling services concerning the impeachment proceedings brought against Senator Steve Smart by the UI Student Bar Association.

Meanwhile, a bill requesting Smart's impeachment was sent to the Government Operations and Appointments Committee, who will determine what procedures the senate will take in considering the impeachment bill against Smart.

The Student Bar Association requested Smart's impeachment last week. The bill remains on the agenda for possible discussion at next week's senate meeting.

Prior to debating the transfer of monies, Vice President Lynn Major added the transfer bill to the agenda with senate approval.

"Under normal circumstances, I would forbid this motion," Major said, "but because I feel that this is an emergency situation, I will allow the motion to add the bill to the agenda."

Bills placed on Wednesday night's agenda without prior senate approval must be submitted to Major by noon the preceding Monday.

Senator Jeff Friel, who sponsored the transfer bill, explained that if any money is left over, it will be put back into the General Reserve at the end of the fiscal year.

President Tina Kagi suggested that the senate consider removing the $1,000 cap on the bill.

The money will be transferred to the President's budget from the General Reserve. The senate will approve expenses as they occur.

Tuesday night, Christopher Hooper presented a proposal in which the SBA would drop impeachment charges against Smart.

Hooper said there was nothing in the agreement that was to the advantage of the law school.

The agreement could be presented and voted on by the senate meeting within two weeks.

Students shouldn't pay for legislative mistakes

Students don't want or need a $1 million fee hike, and it's high time that University of Idaho administrators stop making it sound like they do.

This week, Joe Geiger, vice president of finance, told local reporters that students were practically lining up in droves to support student fee increases.

Said Geiger: "I think that the students are contemplating asking that reconsideration be given to a fee increase. They're organizing themselves, and at this point, we're just acting as technical support staff."

Bull pucky.

The truth of the matter is that at the University of Idaho, it is difficult to get students to rally about anything — especially about paying $100 more a year in fees.

Ask ASUI President Tina Kagi what she thinks of increased fees and you won't see any banners waving. Ask living group presidents where hall members would get an extra $100, and they'll shake their heads. To date, only a handful of students support the increases — mostly because administrators have successfully scared them into thinking that without the increases, university departments could lose accreditation.

The truth of the matter is that a million dollars in student monies isn't going to solve this university's accreditation problems — problems that the legislature has been neglecting by underfunding UI academic programs for more than five years.

Maybe what Geiger really meant by his statement was "I think the university is contemplating asking that reconsideration be given to a fee increase. The legislature didn't come through this year, so we're spending hundreds of dollars this week hosting student leaders to free breakfasts trying to convince them that if they don't pay $100 more a semester, university programs will lose accreditation."

Last month, financial vice presidents from the state's colleges and universities unsuccessfully asked the Idaho Board of Education to consider a student fee raise at their April meeting. The board voted against an initial "notice of intent" to raise student fees, holding that students were already paying a fair share.

Since then, UI budget writers complain that the legislature gave public schools (K-12) double-digit budget increases, but state colleges and universities averaged only about 6 percent increases.

In the process, the legislature chopped $4.4 million that the UI had requested to hire some new faculty members, improve campus facilities and develop several other programs. Idaho may suffer from that mistake.

But students aren't to blame for legislative cuts, and they shouldn't be asked to pay for the mistakes. The UI's plan to charge students more for building maintenance so monies can be shifted into a select few academic areas is desperate and deplorable.

And if a single UI program loses accreditation next year or in the next decade, it's not because students haven't been paying their fair share. It's because the legislature hasn't.

SBA, lawyers have no ethics

Editor:

Twenty years ago a survey was taken. It listed the most respected, prestigious professions. The top three were doctors, lawyers and engineers. Recently the same survey was taken again. This time the result had doctors first, engineers second and lawyers were two places higher than garbage collectors.

What has caused public opinion to overestimate the current worth of lawyers? For one thing, lawyers used to care about right and wrong. They used to care about the truth. No so anymore. Now their credo is "It doesn't matter if he is guilty or not. Just get him off the hook so you can improve your reputation." Or, "It doesn't matter if he is at fault, just sue him so you can get some money."

I was hoping to see the return of ethics in the new up-and-coming generation of lawyers. Unfortunately, there isn't any evidence of it at the UI College of Law or in the Student Bar Association. The SBA doesn't care who is right or wrong, they just want someone's head and someone else's money.

By the time I graduate, lawyers will probably be listed two places below garbage collectors. In fact, I was slightly worried about this letter. There are probably 20 ambulance-chasing lawyers just waiting to sue me for slander or libel. Well, I have bad news for them — the truth is not slander.

..WHEN THEY FAIL TO GET THEIR BUDGET KICKBACK, THE EVIL FORCES OF S.B.A. ATTACK AGENT #86 WITH THEIR "RETROFEASANCE-IMPEACHMENT-RAY BLASTER".

Ask Lois

Is future President Zinser Greek?

Q. I noted that President-elect Zinser's letters to the Idahonian and the Argonaut showed overt attention to the Greeks at UI in references to Alpha Gamma Delta sisters in the mall parking lot in Boise and the Fiji's "secret" officers. These references seemed a little gratuitous. Could Zinser be Greek, too?

A. No. According to Terry Maurer of University Communications, there was no sorority (or women's fraternity) system at Stanford during her undergraduate years there. Maurer explained that Zinser received flowers from both groups and spoke personally with members of each during her visit to Idaho.

Q. Which would you rather be? Tina Kagi without blue eyes or Steve Smart without a "feasance"?

A. Hey that's a sexist question. Since a "feasance" sounds like something you pay for when you sign a lease, I would much rather be a fish without a bicycle.

Q. Lois, do people really ask you these questions, or do you and the Argonaut staff sit around all night making this stuff up?

A. Of course, real people ask me real questions. They do it all the time. Some people ask me in person — feel free to do this — and some people bring them in to the Argonaut written on little slips of paper. People can even call in and leave me a question in the form of a message, which I may or may not receive in time for inclusion in the next column. Furthermore, questions are retained in a large yellow file folder in my desk drawer. I hope this answers your question.

Q. If it takes a chicken and a half a day and a half to lay an egg and a half, how long will it take for the gravel on campus to be cleaned up? Or are they waiting for it to snow again?

A. Parents Weekend. It always snows for Parents Weekend (remember Parents Weekend 1986 — Idaho in Springtime which could have been mistaken for Antarctica Anytime) and this way saves on cleaning up more gravel later.

Q. Are participants in the SBA impeachment action against Sen. Smart really receiving extra credit at the "College of Law"?

A. That's not the point. The point is an exercise of due process and the system. The outcome of these proceedings will certainly set a precedent. Could off-campus students impeach their senators for not having to do anything? Does anyone care as much about student government as the people who run for senate positions? Could the College of Law elect a senator from their ranks to protect their interests?

But before I continue, let me remind the reader that a cockroach, like any insect, has only six legs and two antennae. Also, in Texas, where supposedly everything is big, cockroaches are rarely found to be more than two inches from antennae to toe.

Maxwell either has a huge imagination or must have been suffering the results of intoxication the night before.

And anyway, how could a foot-long insect crawl onto the ceiling without being seen?

Also, Maxwell might want to look up the dictionary term of what he plans to write about next time. The Webster's Dictionary definition of "cockroach" is a "nocturnally active" insect. In other words, it sleeps during the day. It does not make suicidal skydives into salads.

Not only had Maxwell exaggerated about the insect, but he also blamed Marriott for the incident. He said that Lynn Morrison should be happy that the cockroach didn't fall for one of the health inspectors to see during the time that Marriott was being evaluated at UI.

And it didn't. So what.

Marriott did not have anything to do with the so-called cockroach. Cockroaches are rarely even found in this climate, especially in the winter.

The evaluation had just been completed at Marriott, and although the it did not turn up to be much to Marriott's advantage, the evaluation did not mention anything about insect infestation in the area.

Maxwell, the next time you make an allegation, remember to have the facts.

Editor:
I write this letter in desperation.

I consider myself a normal consumer but I, like many others, have my limits of abuse. This letter is written as a warning for consumers.

I recently made a large purchase from Howard Hughes Appliance and Video. Being from a small town I assumed customer satisfaction would be of interest to a vendor in Moscow, but I was rudely awakened to find Howard Hughes has no understanding of such a value. Upon receiving a replacement VCR for my first VCR, which had broken within two days of purchase, I decided I wasn't satisfied with the VCR and simply wished to return the VCR for a refund. No harm or use had occurred to the VCR. In fact, the VCR was still in the box.

Upon trying to return the VCR, the manager of Howard Hughes had implied to me that my scam to get a free rental of a VCR had been discovered. In addition, my lack of understanding of his policy, of a no customer satisfaction guarantee, was annoying him, and he rudely asked me to remove myself from his store. This implies to me that Howard Hughes must not stand behind its equipment sales.

I consulted the UI Legal Aid Clinic and was told that Howard Hughes had an airtight scam going. I had signed an agreement in the form of a sales receipt and Mr. Hughes has no obligation to refund the product. While Mr. Hughes honors product warranties, he doesn't have a return policy.

So I inform all to beware when dealing with Howard Hughes. If you become dissatisfied with an item, beware that you are stuck with it until it rots or you put a hammer through it. Howard Hughes will clearly inform you that customer satisfaction isn't their goal, but getting your money is.

Marriott deserves

Editor:

Marriott is here and despite all the complaining and bad publicity, Marriott is not going to go away. It is discouraging to see the attitude that has been taken in so many of the recent articles and letters about Marriott.

Almost all of them express dissatisfaction with Marriott in one way or another. Unfortunately these letters seem to lack any hint of giving the food service company a chance. Complaints and criticisms are fine, Marriott surely welcomes and considers them. However, can't we ease up on the aggressive tone in them?

Most would agree that criticism is great — as long as it is constructive and done with good intentions. Perhaps if suggestions, in the true sense, were given we could all begin to enjoy the UI food service more. After all, aren't we all on the same side?

It comes down to the fact that Marriott has only been here a very short three months. Let's give them a break... and a chance.

Defense used facts, not sexism
in rape case

Editor:

Did Ms. Williams attend the preliminary hearing she wrote about in Tuesday's Argonaut? Or did she rely solely on information gleaned from the Idahonian, which could not possibly have contained all of the testimony given during the hearing? Her letter suggests she based her conclusions on insufficient data and misplaced outrage and frustration.

The defense attorney did not set out to prove that the "woman deserved to be raped because she was asking for it." He tried to establish that her memory of the night's events was selective and less than credible. Thus he tried to cast doubt on her accusation against the defendant.

The subpoenaed witnesses, including the young woman who traveled with her to Moscow, all refuted the alleged victim's testimony. Because no one remembered her name, the issue of what the woman wore was critical for identification purposes. Her clothing and behavior were so singular that the witnesses had no trouble identifying her and recalling her activities at the football party.

The alleged victim swore under oath that she drank alcohol with her under-aged companion on the drive from Coeur d'Alene to Moscow, but did not knowingly ingest any alcohol or drugs at the party. Her friend denied that either one of them drank on the drive or at the party. Several party witnesses, however, testified that the woman was drinking blackberry schnapps straight from the bottle and she appeared highly intoxicated. Furthermore, the alleged victim did not recall other incidents in which she was involved — events the judge felt were significant enough to question her credibility about what she said she did remember. We're not dealing with "every detail," but with details one would expect her to recall.

Every case ultimately must be judged on an individual basis, the testimony and evidence in this case were not sufficient to show probable cause that the rape occurred or that the defendant was the perpetrator. The alleged victim's credibility contributed to this decision. Since most of her sworn testimony was refuted by subsequent witnesses, any reasonable person would question her rape claim. Indeed, what Ms. Williams and the Idahonian failed to report was that there was no medical evidence to indicate that the woman was raped.

Only an anarchist would propose a blanket indictment of accused individuals, and we, thank God, live in a democratic society where a logical and methodical justice system prevailed. As a feminist, I strongly support the reporting of rape and even more serious penalties than the law currently allows for convicted rapists. I also believe one should not let strongly held views obviate the testimony and evidence in this case. Ms. Williams' inaccurate and inflammatory letter does no service to women. I suggest she is guilty of the "ugly publicity" she warns against.

Erickson lets
opinions rule
SBA editorial

Editor:

Unfortunately, your editorial of March 24, 1989 does not quite hit the mark of responsible nor accurate journalism. The Student Bar Association president is not the only person who presented the ASUI Senate with the Articles of Impeachment. The Idaho Law Review joined in this effort and fully supports it. In case you are not familiar with this academic organization, we publish a professional journal three times per year.

Mr. Erickson, I must admit that I am sorry you consider ASUI senators the babysitters of the students at this university. Were I an ASUI senator, I would be deeply insulted by an inference such as yours. I have always considered elected officials, no matter what level, as representative of their constituents. As elected officials, these representatives are expected to act in their constituents' best interests. We do not believe that Sen. Steve Smart did so.

No one at the UI College of Law is throwing a temper tantrum. We are but attempting to require the ASUI Senate to follow the ASUI Constitution and bylaws and Idaho law. Like it or not, the SBA and the Idaho Law Review are unique organizations. The law school, to my knowledge, is the only professional college on campus that does not have undergraduate representation. That may be why our organizations go the ASUI for funding. To speculate on how such funding began is not only ridiculous, it is completely unfounded.

Yes, it is true that we are a somewhat politically powerful group. It is a fact of real life that those with political clout do generally have some influence in a legislative body. Could this be because candidates for a particular office actively solicit this political influence? If you do not believe this type of activity really exists, attend a session of the Idaho Legislature and witness the political lobbying that goes on behind the scenes. Better yet, watch the ASUI candidates woo the law students when the ASUI election rolls around.

We at the law school are taking the ASUI Senate's actions like adults. We have and will continue to respond in the manner we deem appropriate considering the circumstances. Remember, Mr. Erickson, evaluation of a response to a situation depends on whose ox is being gored.

Mr. Erickson, you tell the SBA to grow up. I urge you, sir, to take off your rose-colored glasses and get a glimpse of reality. As an editor of a paper with a rather large readership potential, I urge you to take your responsibility to your readers seriously. Report factually, accurately and completely. Don't get overly emotional because you disagree with what someone else has done. At the very least, your readers then will respect your opinion.

If the readers of this paper would like the other side of the story, I urge them to contact me. I will be happy to rationally present the law school's version of what is really happening.

KUOI, KZUU band together for support of diverse radio

By DENA BANDAIZIAN
Staff Writer

Three local bands are playing in the Combine Mall in Pullman tonight to support diverse radio.

UI student radio KUOI Washington State University's KZUU are presenting Baby So High, Ignatious and Horse in a first-ever joint fund-raiser.

"We thought that since the stations are so close we should be able to talk and compare our stations," said Ken Fate, station manager of KUOI.

"KUOI and KZUU are two of the few diverse stations in the Northwest. We have a grand reputation among college radio stations."

— KEN FATE
KUOI Station Manager

"The fund-raiser was just a natural extension of talking. We can have a larger event by combining efforts," Fate said.

The stations have combined advertising and promotional efforts for the event and will split the proceeds.

KUOI and KZUU fill the gaps on the dial that the commercial stations leave. Listeners won't hear Top 40 on either station, rather, they will hear a variety ranging from the African band 'Chance' to Jazz and Blues to rap.

"KUOI and KZUU are two of the few diverse stations in the Northwest. We have a grand reputation among college radio stations," Fate said.

Ignatious, which formed last November, is composed of two WSU students and two UI students. Drummer Craig Redmond and bass player Jeff Thomas are both UI students and KUOI disc jockeys. Guitarist John Polle and lead singer Bob Long are WSU students.

The young band's emphasis is currently on song-writing and rehearsing. All of the band members contribute to song writing.

"I guess you could say that the main theme is social-political. The lyrics always seem to come back to that," said Long, lead singer.

"The songs are serious. We sing about oppression and anti-apathy, the things that are frustrating," Long said, "We want people to think."

Baby So High has been together since last summer. Guitarist Scott Adams, bass player Ean Hernandez, drummer Matt Simmons and lead singer Marlin Mangels are all from WSU. Their songs are more pop-oriented yet they are definitely a rock band.

Horse is the oldest of the three bands and, like the others, continues to struggle. Horse plays slow, heavy, droning-type music.

All three bands share the problem of playing non-paying gigs. This makes it difficult to reinvest any money in the band Long said. The fund-raiser for the radio stations provides good practice and good exposure.

The concert begins at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Combine Mall, admission is $3.50.

Collette ends season with double bill

Students prepare for spring productions

By STEPHANIE BAILEY
Staff Writer

A night of comedy and thoughtfulness is promised when the Collette Theater closes its season with a double bill April 13-16.

Doctor Auntie and The Stonewater Rapture are both one-act plays.

Alice Brown's Doctor Auntie, a comedy set in the Victorian era, will be directed by theater student Jim Petersen.

The plot revolves around the classic love triangle. The happy marriage of Tom Hammond (Dan Powell) and wife Sylvia Hammond (Amy Edel-lute) is threatened when Hammond's male secretary, Branscombe (Don Nelson), tries to win over the boss' younger wife.

Hammond finds himself fighting a losing battle until Hammond's Aunt, Dr. Kate Cunningham (Sue Goodrich), better known as Doctor Auntie, unmasks Branscombe's true character.

Petersen, who will be directing his first full production, describes Doctor Auntie as a "perky little show" that should give the audience plenty of chuckles.

The second play will be directed by Robert Morgan. The Stonewater Rapture by Doug Wright is a play that will make you think, said Morgan.

The play takes place next door to you today, according to Morgan. Whitney (Stephen Hartnett) and Carlyle (Emily Force) are your neighbors.

"The play is about today and for today," Morgan said.

Whitney is Carlyle's boyfriend and together they learn the pleasures and pains of being teenagers in a religiously-oppressed Texas town.

Morgan said he chose to direct this particular play because it presents a situation the audience can learn from.

"Theater is for social commentary," Morgan said.

The Collette Theater productions are student-produced in order to allow students practical hands-on experience in all areas of theater.

"The Collette Theater is a place for students to experience the three dimensions of 'what if' situations," Morgan said. "It's a chance for students to see and hear a distorted reality that they would otherwise be afraid to imagine."

Tickets are $3 at the door or at Ticket Express in the SUB. The Collette Theater only seats 85, therefore early ticket purchases are recommended.

Cabaret musical headed for Hartung

By BETH BARCLAY
Staff Writer

The UI Theater Department will present the Broadway hit musical Cabaret April 25 through April 30 at the Hartung Theater.

Set in pre-World War II Berlin, the play revolves around the Kit Kat Klub, a bawdy pleasure haunt of anxiety-ridden Germans, where wild night-life numbs the sense of impending disaster.

The play features a large cast including Lyrissa Gunderson, Robert Morgan, Rick McKinnon, Kimberly Lenz and Dale Maxwell.

Gunderson plays Sally, an English girl who trades the stuffiness of her family for the raunchy night-life of a chanteuse at the Kit Kat Klub.

A young American, Bradshaw, played by McKinnon, enters Sally's life, but their affair is short-lived, as Sally finds she cannot leave her new life as a singer.

Another romance involves Fraulein Schneider (Lenz) and Herr Schultz (Maxwell). This middle-aged couple hopes to end their loneliness in a life together, but the realities of the encroaching Nazi movement come between them — she is a Gentile and he is a Jewish fruit-store owner.

Morgan plays the leering Master of Ceremonies. Despite the ominous atmosphere of the play, he invites the night club patrons to join him in his revelry.

The play also features The Kit Kat Girls, a group of sleazy, Cabaret dancers, who bring the play's famous musical score to life.

In all, Cabaret promises to be a good time. For music, dancing and fun theater goers are encouraged to take up the invitation of the hit-song Come to the Cabaret!

Breathe delightfully vulnerable

Review by JILL CHRISTINE BECK
Entertainment Editor

Breathe? What do they sing? It took me a while to remember the group's name. And it took a lot of air play and three hit songs to convince me to buy their album, but I don't think I'm likely to forget them now.

All That Jazz (available on Siren Records) has rightfully taken its place among my favorite "bop" albums — you know the style. The music is fun to dance to, you can sing to the lyrics and their message is simple enough that everyone relates.

Their first release, "Hands to Heaven," features the soft vocals of lead singer David Glasper. Glasper's seductive voice carries you into the music, the lyrics show his vulnerability.

Glasper and co-writer Marcus Lillington (also featured as the group's guitarist) show this vulnerability in much of their songwriting. Songs such as "Hands to Heaven" and "All This I Should Have Known" reach out to the listener.

"If only I'd tried a little harder to reach this goal, to reach your soul. If only we'd been a little closer, if only we'd pulled together."

"Don't Tell Me Lies" is one of the most fun songs on the album. The song has also received a great amount of airplay and should be familiar to most "Top 40" listeners. There's no way to listen to it without tapping a foot, which is how many of their faster-paced songs are. Just get up and dance and leave the lyrics behind (not that they're bad or anything.)

Fortunately Breathe's own style is prevalent throughout most of the album. Granted, there are a few tracks on the album which sound more like Wham! rather than what I had expected from Breathe. "Any Trick" just seems to scream of George Michael, but like most Wham!

music, it is very danceable.

The three songs released so far ("Don't Tell Me Lies," "Hands to Heaven" and "How Can I Fall") do a good job representing the group's variety in music. They are definitely the best of the album's tracks.

I do have to admit although I will not forget Breathe, some might feel that the whole album just isn't for them. But, if you are in for something to keep you company while studying, it would be a good buy.

Movie still brings Big laughs

Review by DONNA PRISBEY
Staff Writer

If you still haven't seen Tom Hanks' hilarious portrayal of a 12-year-old boy trapped within a man's body in Big, the Micro will give you an opportunity this weekend.

However, this is not just another "boy ends up in man's body, man ends up in boy's body" movie. This comedy, unlike Like Father, Like Son, has Hanks' redeeming comedic talents combined with an excellent script.

Big mixes the hilarious antics of Hanks with a few heart-warmingly tender scenes, some deep comments on human nature and adulthood, and a spice of romance — just for fun.

A small-for-his-age, picked-on boy wishes, in the frustration of being 12 years old, that he could be "big." The next morning he wakes up to discover that his wish has come true.

However, his mother is not aware of the transformation and is unnerved when she sees a strange adult man in her house. As a result he is forced to flee and run to the city, find a place to live and make a life for himself.

By a fluke, he obtains a job in a toy company. Using his 12-year-old sense of toys he quickly moves up to an executive position.

But how does a 12-year-old deal with the pressures of executive life?

Hanks manages to perform with the innocence and honesty of a child that all adults wish they had, but have lost.

He wins the heart of one fellow executive, the jealousy of another and becomes the favorite of his boss with his innocence and natural ability to just play.

However, the pressures of the adult world eventually become too much for him and he wishes that he could just be a boy again.

Classic scenes that deserve comment include Hanks dancing on a giant piano while playing Chop Sticks with his feet, his awaking "big" and fruitlessly attempting to put on his child-sized pants and his sheepish behavior when he is caught by his boss playing with the toys.

Big, rated PG, was just released on video and will be showing at the Micro today and Saturday at 4:30 p.m., 7 p.m. and 9:30 p.m.

Bat 21 among newest videos

Bat 21, the latest in war action-adventure starring Gene Hackman and Danny Glover will be released April 6, to local VHS merchants.

Hackman plays a middle-aged Air Force officer, General Icaal Hambleton, who has never seen combat and becomes stranded behind enemy lines.

Glover plays a determined spotter pilot, Captain Dennis Clark, who vows to try to rescue Hambleton, no matter how hot the situation becomes.

On the ground, Hambleton discovers that he is a prime target for the Viet Cong and in one scene he is attacked by a Vietnamese whom he is forced to kill. This is the first time Hambleton has ever had to kill in combat and feels the guilt associated with the death of the Vietnamese.

Meanwhile in the air, Clark tries to locate Hambleton over a walkie-talkie that they know the Viet Cong are monitoring. Between the two of them, they devise a coded system of golf-related terms to direct Clark through the Vietnamese jungle, all the while relaying information on Viet Cong troop movements.

Also to be released April 6: Hellbound, rated R, starring Ashley Laurence.

Mystic Pizza, rated R with Lily Taylor.

Stealing Home with Best Actress Oscar winner, Jody Foster and Mark Harmon, rated R.

Quilters presents a slice of pioneer life

By DONNA PRISBREY
Staff Writer

As part of Parents Weekend, the Moscow Community Theater and the Palouse Patchers will present The Quilters, a musical about the life of a pioneer woman.

The musical centers on a quilt being made by a pioneer woman and her six daughters. Each scene, representing one of the quilt's patches, portrays a part of their lives. The play shows the joys and hardships that are part of a woman's life.

"It relates the universal experience of women, especially in the pioneer times," director Michael Davis said.

The 10-woman cast portrays about 90 different characters. Each actor takes on many different roles, with children portraying adults, adults portraying children and both playing men and boys.

The cast includes Patricia Tassinari, Kris Walters-Murphey, Sandy Lambacher, Kristi Jackson, Kathy Dawes, Jennifer Jenness, Jennie Hudson, Monica Mossee, Ana Obermayer and Joanna Smith. They fill the ranks from Moscow High School, Moscow Junior High and the community.

A wide variety of music is presented, from folk to contemporary. The play first showed on Broadway in the late '70s.

The music is directed by Mary Jeanne Jenness and Llean Clark.

The Quilters is co-produced by Moscow Community Theater and Palouse Patchers, a local quilting society.

Tickets for The Quilters are $6 for adults and $2 for seniors and students. Shows run April 14 and 15 at 7:30 p.m. with a matinee April 16 at 2 p.m. at the Moscow High School Auditorium.

UI Rodeo Club hosts Idaho Western Classic

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

After months of planning and five hours of laying down plywood, plastic and dirt with a crew of 60 workers, it's time for the biggest event of the UI Rodeo Club's season — the Idaho Western Classic.

The Kibbie Dome field area has been closed throughout the week in preparation for creating the rodeo arena which the club is more than used to installing.

"We kind of got the whole process down to a routine," said saddle-bronc rider Benny Smith. "We contract out someone to bring the dirt and then do all the work ourselves."

"This competition is the biggest event we put on," he said.

The rodeo club, which belongs to the Northwest Region, will be competing against 10 different colleges, including Oregon State and Treasure Valley, in this weekend's events.

"Probably our biggest competition will be Blue Mountain College," said Smith, a pre-veterinary major. "They're national champions."

Smith said the club has a "pretty good chance" at placing well in the event.

"Right now our steer riders are leading the region and our bull riders are fifth," Smith said.

The event starts tonight at 7 p.m. and continues tomorrow also at 7 p.m. and Sunday at 1:30 p.m. Ticket prices at the door are $5 for adults, $4 for students and $15 for a family.

"Rodeo is a great sport — it's good to be around the people and I like the competition," Smith said.

Volleyball Club travels to Seattle

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

The UI men's volleyball club continues spring semester play Saturday traveling to Seattle, Wash. for a division tournament.

The club sports a 6-4 overall record and according to player Chris Clark, the team is satisfied with their play this season.

"Things are going pretty good," said Clark. "A couple of our top players are graduate students and haven't been able to make some of the tournaments, but if we can put our best team together for Seattle and our upcoming Spokane tournament we should do well."

According to Clark, the club has solid, well-rounded players this year.

"We have four players who are returners from last year," said Clark. "And we have a guy who used to play for the Honduras National team."

One of the clubs goals this year is to try and bring the sport of volleyball out into the open.

"We're trying to form a collegiate league in this area," said Clark. "A lot of guys are interested in the game of volleyball and we're hoping the more peo-

Moscow's Ms. Swim: Deborah Norum

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

Under the word "busy" in the dictionary reads Deborah Norum's name—or at least it should.

Norum is currently the Assistant Director of Campus Recreation and one of her numerous responsibilities is overseeing the swim program for the UI Conferences and Enrichment Program.

Since taking the assistant director job in 1983, Norum has made some major accomplishments in regard to the swim program. Through program expansion she has helped double the income for the swim center in a four-year period, increased participation in swim programs from 500 to over 2,000, designed a new accounting system and forms for the swim center and written training manuals for recreational supervisors and swim center personnel.

"Deborah is Ms. Swim of Moscow," said Sid Eder, director of UI Conferences and Enrichment, of Norum's accomplishments and increased success of the UI

Kappa Sigs raise $475 for charity

By SCOTT TROTTER
Sports Editor

The Mountain States Tumor Institute located in Boise has an extra $475, thanks to Kappa Sigma Fraternity and their 17th annual 24-hour basketball marathon.

The UI fraternity began the event March 24 at noon and hooped it on through the night until noon the next day.

"It was really a good time," said Kappa Sigma Matt Nelson. "We always enjoy putting it on and everyone in the house enjoys getting involved. I think the teams who participate also have a good time."

Nineteen living groups participated in the event, including: Delta Delta Delta, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Delta Chi, Delta Tau Delta, Alpha Gamma Delta, Borah Hall, Sigma Chi, Taco Time, Lindley Hall, Delta Gamma, Lambda Chi Alpha, FarmHouse, Phi Gamma Delta, Gamma Phi Beta, Beta Theta Pi, Pi Beta Phi and a team from the Music Department.

Each team donated $25 to compete in the marathon. Beta Theta Pi won the men's division and Pi Beta Phi won the women's division.

The winners were awarded pizzas from Pizza Perfection, Nelson said.

"We had five different teams in our house and each team was scheduled to play four or five games throughout the event," he said. "Whatever team beat our team by the greatest amount of points won."

Nelson said the Betas beat one of the Kappa Sig teams by more than 100 points.

"I played for about the first 12 hours in a row," he said. "Each of our teams usually had about a five-hour span in between games — we were pretty tired out by the time it was all over."

"It was pretty fun," said Lambda Chi Alpha Chris Brueher. "I don't remember the final score — we beat them pretty good. But the Pi Phis were really impressive. I think they beat them by 30 points."

UI Baseball Club drops games in doubleheader

By GREG NUNES
Staff Writer

Following a pair of disheartening losses to Lewis Clark State College's junior varsity baseball team, silence dominated the UI dugout.

After falling 4-2 in the opener of Wednesday's double-header, the Vandals saw a three-run lead slip away in the final inning, sending UI to an 11-10 defeat in the nightcap.

The two losses dropped the Vandals to 1-8 on the season.

Despite being swept in the twin bill, UI was impressive, as the last meeting between the two teams resulted in two easy wins for the Warriors.

The Vandals trailed just 1-0 in the opener and tied the game when Martin Maxwell, who reached on an error and scored on a wild pitch.

After LCSC took a 4-1 lead heading into the final frame, UI had a chance to send the game into extra innings. After scoring once in the inning, the Vandals had the tying runs aboard, but Wade Wilson was retired on a pop-up to end the game.

Despite suffering the loss, Tim Burdick, 0-1, allowed just five Warrior hits in going the distance.

Accepting the loss in the nightcap was much harder for the Vandals, as they were unable to hold a 10-7 lead in the final inning.

During their winning rally, LCSC was aided by two Vandal errors as well as a hit batsman and a walk.

Although Vandals had just four hits in the game, they were able to collect twelve walks which led to most of their runs.

With the Warriors leading 7-5 in the sixth, UI was able to score five times. Bob Frei, who stole home later in the inning, picked up an RBI single and two other runs scored later in the frame with the help of an LCSC error. The Vandals showed patience at the plate during the big inning by gathering three walks.

Frei led the way for UI with two hits in the second game, while Gary Logosz and John Konrad each scored twice.

UI's next game will be tomorrow when the Vandals travel to Coeur d'Alene to take on North Idaho College.

ple who see it will want to get involved. Beach volleyball and other forms of volleyball are getting popular and really growing."

The club belongs to the A Division of the Evergreen Region which consists of teams from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and parts of Montana.

Following Saturday's tournament the club will head back to Seattle again on April 9 and then travel to Spokane for tournaments on April 15 and 21.

swim courses.

"I'm committed to recreation and think it's important to reach all segments of the population," said Norum.

With all the recreational responsibilities that Norum has, "committed" seems to be an understatement. A more applicable definition might be "possessed".

At Campus Recreation, Norum is in charge of hiring, training, supervising and evaluating a recreation and aquatic staff of 75. She manages three buildings and one weight room, schedules recreational hours, coordinates usage with athletics and academics and oversees maintenance and purchasing of equipment.

She plans and implements Campus Recreation's annual budget and designs and writes brochures, flyers and instructional literature. She solicits funds, awards, and prizes for special events, writes press releases and interfaces with the media.

On top of her responsibilities to the UI Enrichment Program swimming courses, she designs and implements other non-credit instructional programs and events for Moscow and surrounding communities, such as the annual triathlon in April and swimming, biking, and running clinics that help prepare participants for the triathlon event.

"I really enjoy what I do."

— Deborah Norum
Asst. Director of Campus Recreation

"I really enjoy what I do," said Norum. "My goal for the whole program is to make it an integral part of the community."

Norum herself is very active outside of her work.

She runs every morning, enjoys biking and is a certified Pool and Spa Operator Instructor. She is also a Water Safety Instructor and Lifeguard and a professional ski instructor.

And let's not forget that she single handedly raises two boys.

She also excels academically. She obtained a Bachelor of Arts degree at the University of Utah and majored in American History. She then received a Masters of Education degree at the same institution.

While working at UI, she gained a Masters of Science degree in Recreation and is currently working on a Ph.D. in Higher Education Administration.

"I'm still taking classes to finish up my Ph.D.," she said. "I plan to finish it in August."

Although life for Norum is "busy" and at times hectic, she still maintains that their is one basic element we should all keep in our lives. Fun.

"You have to have fun in what you do. Otherwise life gets to be a bore," she said.

Deborah Norum seems to have done rather well in avoiding boredom in her own life and promoting fitness and fun in the life of others.
