

Emergency landing gives Vandal players a scare

By M.L. GARLAND
& SHERRY DEAL

After a 41-31 win over Northern Arizona University, the University of Idaho Vandals got a literal put-down.

The United Airlines Flight 1272 from Phoenix to San Francisco, carrying victorious Vandals among other personnel and unrelated passengers, had to make an emergency landing at the San Francisco International Airport Sunday morning.

Apparently the emergency landing was caused by a hydraulic failure. The pilot was unsure if it would affect the steering or the landing gear, but passengers speculated the steering must have failed because the plane was towed to the boarding station.

The plane released fuel before landing and was able to land without incident.

The passengers were alerted about the situation and the possibility of a crash landing 40 minutes before the plane was scheduled to land in San Francisco.

According to Dan Moyer, a UI student employed by the athletic department to film Big Sky Conference games, everybody on board stayed fairly calm.

"I was listening to my headphones and dozing when the intercom came on, so I couldn't hear," Moyer said.

"All I remember is dead silence and blank stares," he said.

Flight attendants and the pilot explained the emergency landing procedure, and passengers practiced before reaching the airport. Brochures were also available to passengers.

"Everyone studied the brochures like they were cramming for a test," Moyer said.

The passengers practiced putting their heads in their laps, crossing their arms, removing their jewelry and locating emergency exits.

Two minutes before the landing, the passengers were told to assume the crash-landing position.

Moyer said he thought many passengers were frightened.

"People were releasing tension through nervous jokes and laughter," Moyer said. "People were scared, but I don't think anyone thought we were really going to die."

"I could feel the vibrations, and I was waiting in anticipation for something to happen," Moyer said.

Moyer said after the plane landed there was an enormous cheer.

"It was like what you see in the movies," he said. "Almost corny."

Vandal quarterback John Friesz said he was not too scared when he heard the announcement.

"The captain was calm," he said. "As it got more intense, I started telling Chris Hoff Boise State jokes."

Friesz said after he got off the plane, he saw Coach Bob Petrino kiss the ground.

What a cast of characters. Last night in the SUB Ballroom, special guest appearances were made by Billy Joel and Charlie Daniels imitators, several sheep, Marriott officials, Big Bird and a one-eyed, one-eyed blind purple people eater from outer space.

Approximately 380 residence hall members turned out last night to watch these and other personalities compete in the GDI Week Skit and Airband competitions.

And after nearly three hours of performances, Gault Hall and Steel House took top honors for their airband presentations, while Borah Hall's and Carter Hall's skits garnered first place finishes.

But not everything was up-to-par with last night's activities. When well-rehearsed and carefully orchestrated teams performed, the audience couldn't get enough. But when

GDI Games:

Halls battle for GDI title

By J.E. ERICKSON — Senior Staff Writer

Snow Hall is out to take top honors, again.

This week, the men fully intend to bring home the University of Idaho GDI Week men's championship title. If they do so, it will be the fourth time in the last five years.

"We are hoping to (win)," said Jeff Rau, president of Snow Hall. "We know everyone is gunning for us and we're out to kick some butt as usual."

According to Rau, Graham Hall will probably be their toughest competition.

Rau attributes the hall's prior success to "just getting the guys out, and supporting each other."

And during Sunday morning's GDI Week kick-off event, a fun run, Snow showed a strong start. But not strong enough to beat out first-place finisher Graham.

At 9 Sunday morning, an estimated 236 residence hall members gathered in front of Theophilus Tower for the run.

But according to Eric Kegel, GDI Week chairman, not everyone ran the race. A majority walked it. And since only participation points were given for the event, there was no rush for residents to finish quickly.

Nevertheless, participants who sprinted the course from the Tower, around the ASUI-Kibbie Dome, over to the Administration Building, down past the Janssen Engineering Building, and back to the Tower, finished in approximately 12 minutes. The walkers finished the trek far behind, taking up to 30 minutes to return.

Kegel said points went to the top three women's and men's halls based solely on the percentage of their residents participating in the event. Participation will be a focus for all this week's events, he said.

"Events like this are a boost for smaller halls," Kegel said. "This helps the smaller halls compete with the larger residence halls."

French Hall had the highest participation for both men and women, with nearly 51 percent turnout. Steel House and Campbell Hall took second and third respectively for the women. Graham took first place for the men, with Snow and Gault Hall following.

With a GDI Week Committee made up of all hall vice presidents, Kegel has developed a week of events ranging from an air band competition to an assassination game. And he says the committee is more organized this year than in the past.

"A good portion of everything the committee has been doing has been done at a quicker pace," he said.

Kegel credits the vice presidents as the key motivators.

"They are really going out and breathing fire into this thing," he said.

After being held in the spring last year, GDI Week has been moved back to the fall. Kegel says the main reason relates to participation.

"They (the hall presidents) are really going out and breathing fire into this thing."

— Eric Kegel
GDI Week chairman

"They had hoped for more participation in the spring, but that didn't occur," Kegel said. "It wasn't too popular with people."

Kegel says the week's activities usually unite the hall members, and especially motivate the freshmen.

"It gets them more pumped up in the fall, and then they are more likely to do things later on in the year," he said.

In addition to unity, the top men's and women's halls will earn a $200 grand prize. Although in the past the prizes have included items such as cruises and pizza parties, this is the second year for the cash awards.

"It's a boost to a lot of halls' budgets," Kegel said. "They get the money and can do whatever they please."

However, there are three more nights of activities and events before the overall winners are announced.

At 6:30 tonight, the GDI Bowl is being held in the Morin Room of the Wallace Complex. Similar to College Bowl, four-person teams from each hall will be quizzed over subjects such as music, sports, politics, history and science.

Kagi recall petitioners add cover letter

Initiators still anonymous

By AMY JAMISON
Staff Writer

A cover letter of explanation has recently been added to the circulating petitions in residence halls asking for the recall of ASUI President Tina Kagi.

However, the writers continue to remain nameless, for "fear of persecution by Kagi and Senate-controlled Argonaut."

The writers, who refer to themselves as the Residence Hall Political Action Committee, feel the Argonaut has printed and will continue to print letters that are biased and contain false information.

The letter states that the Argonaut is written by "influential friends or supporting senators (of Kagi's)."

The focal point of the letter is last semester's referendum asking students whether they were in favor of a $25 fee increase, and Kagi's involvement.

The referendum was voted down by students nearly 2 to 1 last semester.

According to the letter given to living group presidents, Kagi considers the referendum a mandate to take legal action against the state of Idaho.

"Never was a lawsuit openly mentioned as a course of action, let alone any consequences that a lawsuit might bring," the letter states.

The letter continues, saying Kagi is supporting the proposed lawsuit even though "most students, consulted about the issue, believe the senate should halt action on the matter."

"I've never, never said we should sue the university," Kagi said. "I'm giving the students the supports, means and information if they want to do it. If they don't, I'll be the first to back down."

The letter stated that Kagi "demanded" President Zinser hold the $25 fee increase separately until the constitutionality of the fee could be determined.

"She obviously did not care that the money was to go indirectly for accreditation issues in the Colleges of Business and Economics and Engineering," the letter states.

"I was never convinced we had an accreditation problem," Kagi said. "I called the accreditation board and they said the University of Idaho would never have to worry about losing accreditation in engineering."

The letter continues to say that Kagi is interested in the "principle" of the constitutionality of the fee increase, but is not interested in the consequences that a suit might bring.

A positive outcome would be reducing semester fees to $270. A negative result would include "a crisis in funding higher education in the short run and the potential legalization of tuition in the long run," the letter states.

The letter encourages students to get both sides of the issue, and

State of financial emergency warrants firing of UI employees, regents' lawyer argues

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

University of Idaho regents can legally fire staff by declaring a state of financial emergency, an attorney argued last week.

Marc Lyons, who is defending the UI regents in a lawsuit filed by a former UI lab worker, said that declarations of "financial exigency" by the regents cannot be appealed by classified employees.

Last week's hearing was on a request by the UI regents for a summary judgment in their favor. A decision will be made later.

The lawsuit centers around the charges of Igor Mazur of Pullman, who worked as a UI physics lab technician for 16 years. He was fired in August 1982, two months after the regents had declared a financial emergency.

UI was placed on censure by the American Association of University Professors in 1983 on the basis of investigations into the termination of 17 faculty appointments on stated grounds of financial exigency.

Last June the censure was lifted. The efforts to remove the censure over the last six years were complicated by shortcomings in the UI's regulations addressing financial exigency and basic policies of the state board that were blasted as "unjust and unwise" by the UI Faculty Council in September 1986.

However, despite the lifting of the censure, those policies remain virtually unchanged.

The recent argument proposed by Lyons for the regents seems to contradict the intentions of UI President Elisabeth Zinser about university actions concerning the issue.

In a memo dated May 26 to the Associate General Secretary of the AAUP from Zinser, she stated, "I believe that any individual terminated under conditions of financial exigency should have the right to appeal."

Zinser also said she believed the termination of faculty appointments should be resorted to only when less drastic means had already been attempted.

Zinser prefaced her comments in the memo by stating that since she was not yet UI president, she was expressing her individual view, but intended to abide by the same principles when she was in office.

those quickly put-together skits hit the stage, the audience just as quickly lost interest.

The most popular topic for skit discussion was easily University Dining Services by Marriott. For example, an archangel suggested an Upham Hall farmer send his quite dead and rotting sheep to Marriott for lunch meat. French Hall's Sesame Street skit also featured a character known as "Grouch Morrison."

If an award had been given out for cruelty to animals, Olesen Hall would have won for their rough handling of a living puppy. A stuffed animal would have sufficed, and kept that poor dog from becoming neurotic.

Lindley Hall was the most likely to inflate their own egos last night. With audience participation, and a few very strategically placed elongated balloons, the men exposed their greatest virtue by singing "My Ding-a-Ling" to the audience.

Finally, the most likely skit to offend a majority of the audience had to be the one performed by the men of Chrisman Hall. This raunchy, sexist skit had nearly every woman in the room booing. One woman even threw something at the actors.

But when the skits and airbands were good, they were excellent. Gault's performance to "The Streak" was perfectly fitting considering the hall's traditional campus run. The audience was in the aisles when the streaker ended up with a half-naked "Ethel" at the conclusion.

Steel House performed equally as well with their presentation of the Miami Sound Machine's "Conga." Complete with a tropical backdrop, free-standing palm trees and bongo players, this act was perfectly choreographed.

Borah Hall's skit, based on the Saturday Night Live characters Hanz and Franz, had the audience all "pumped up." Meanwhile, Carter's explicit skit solved the sexual problem of a recently paroled prisoner.

Other halls taking honors included McCoy Hall with a second place for skits and a third place for airbands for the women. Steel placed third in skits, while Houston Hall took second in airbands.

Snow Hall and Upham tied for second in skits for the men. Chrisman garnered the second spot in airbands, while Snow placed third.

MVFD sets date for Fireman's Ball

By WILLARD VAN CORBACH
Contributing Writer

The rubber-soled boot is on the other foot.

When the fire alarms ring, the Moscow Volunteer Fire Department responds quickly to help others. Now the department is asking for help.

In an effort to raise money, the fire department will hold the 81st Annual Fireman's Ball Saturday. The event will be hosted by the Moose Lodge and the North 4-D, which will provide live music for the festivities.

The MVFD is different from most other fire departments in that it is strictly volunteer. Sixteen of its 70 members are full-time students, and only the fire chief, the fire inspector and the dispatcher are paid for their work.

Some fire departments labeled "volunteer" raise money and split it up among members according to how many hours are spent fighting fires. Not so with the MVFD, according to Head Dispatcher Darrel Daniel.

"We're strictly volunteer," Daniel said. "There's no call pay here."

So how are donations used? According to Daniel, most of the money goes toward upkeep of the two fire stations.

The MVFD used some money to repair the roof and complete minor internal renovations at the South Main station, which the department owns.

The MVFD is also responsible for half of the maintenance costs of Station Two, near the Latah County Fairgrounds. The City of Moscow picks up the other half of the tab.

Both stations provide free housing to University of Idaho student firefighters.

The MVFD also owns and operates the two ambulances, which receive no support through taxes.

Additionally, the department must find money to train firefighters.

To break even, Daniel said the department will have to receive at least $30,000 from this fundraiser, the only one put on by the department.

Daniel said the response to the 10,800 letters mailed out has been fairly good so far, although he insists it's too early to tell.

The department moved up the date of the Fireman's Ball so it would not conflict with holidays as it had in the past.

Tickets may be purchased in advance or at the door. Donations are tax deductible. At $3 a ticket, it's easy to put that boot on the other foot.

UI resident hall students paint the palouse

By WENDY WOODWORTH
Staff Writer

Sunday volunteers from five University of Idaho residence halls took time off to "Paint the Palouse."

Students from Carter, Houston, Campbell, Snow and Graham halls painted the homes of two Moscow residents.

"We are hoping it will catch on to becoming a big community effort," said Beth Rumpel, resident hall adviser for Campbell Hall. "We went to Adult Services through Health and Welfare to find an elderly person who needed their house painted but wasn't able to."

The second home, which only needed the trim painted, is owned by Leah Sprecher. "I was really surprised and very pleased they wanted to help me," said Sprecher, who works in the Wallace Complex cafeteria. "I think it is wonderful that college kids would do something so constructive in their temporary community."

Carter and Houston halls obtained $400 in donations from local businesses. The $400 went toward buying supplies to paint the homes of the two Moscow women.

The paint for the project was donated by Carter Hall President Sue Radobenko's father, William Radobenko, who owns a retail paint outlet in Spokane.

"I'm really excited by the idea, and it's turning out really well," Resident Adviser Melissa Inman said. "Our main goal was to establish contacts in the community so it can be done every year."

The students are following an idea called "Paint the Town" which started in Boise seven years ago. Last year 3,000 Boise volunteers painted 10 houses.

says the initiators of the recall petition believe the only way to stop Kagi is to recall her.

The letter also says the majority of UI students are opposed to taking legal action against the university, but Kagi said she is not convinced this is true.

"The majority of students live off campus, and there are the Greeks," Kagi said. "They (Residence Hall Association) shouldn't have a monopoly of the input."

RHA passed a resolution last week opposing any ASUI involvement in the fee issue. Kagi said it is the ASUI's and her responsibility to stand up for students' rights. "I think it is a mistake to let it go uncontested," Kagi said.

Referendum the only solution to fee battle

In an age in which a citizen's right to burn a flag is put to the utmost scrutiny, Dan Quayle is elected as vice president and abortion rights are being questioned, a referendum in the ASUI November general election to determine the students' true voice on the constitutionality of the fee issue is equally plausible.

That's why we live in America. Isn't democracy wonderful?

A referendum seems to be the only solution to determining whether students are willing to challenge the University of Idaho's allocation of student fees.

Approximately 50 students attended the three-hour fee issue forum presented by Tina Kagi Wednesday. ASUI-retained attorney Ray Givens was present to answer questions. Givens has been investigating the legality of the fee increase, which may result in a court battle. From this discussion, only debates providing no guidance for further action resulted.

Anyone surprised?

However, the intent was sound: Educate the students on the issue and voice both sides.

RHA and the Residence Hall Political Action Committee have made their opposition to any action well-known. Last week RHA passed a resolution stating their position, and RHPA has a petition circulating to recall ASUI President Kagi over the situation.

RHA represents about 20 percent of the UI student population. The ASUI needs input from the other groups on campus — the Greek system, married student housing and off-campus students.

A referendum is the only solution.

"I think it's the only way to satisfy everyone," Sen. Lisa Krepel said. "It's the only way to reach the off-campus students."

Kagi suggested taking the issue to a referendum at the forum. And with the state of abounding confusion, misinformation and debate, it should be on the ballot.

However, Kagi said she was not sure what the question would be or what the senate's or students' reaction would be.

"I haven't sat down with the senate and discussed this as a group," Kagi said. "It's hard to speculate at this point what they will do."

Last year's referendum on the original $25 fee increase proposal, voted down nearly 2 to 1, obviously didn't hold water with the administration or the Idaho State Board of Education. But it gave guidance to the ASUI and to the protest group Students Concerned About Money.

"I know those students who voted against the fee increase do not necessarily support a lawsuit," Kagi said. "That's why I want another vote on possible legal action."

Hey! It's America. Commonly known as a democracy where people discuss things rationally before making a decision and vote to give governing bodies the guidance they need.

Keep debating, keep researching and keep pushing to use your constitutional rights. Hopefully in the Nov. 15 ASUI general election.

Idaho, The Progress State?

As some of you people who read the Argonaut may have noticed, Idaho is not the most progressive state in the United States. Idaho has a running competition with Arkansas and Mississippi to spend the least on education. Idaho also tries to send its products out of state with less processing than any other state.

I have wondered if there is a connection between these two situations. Perhaps the owners of the lumber mills in Idaho don't realize that we can send chopsticks to Japan instead of raw logs. Perhaps they think that the Japanese build log cabins instead of making chopsticks out of Idaho logs.

Another unnoticed fact is that the Japanese use a new set of chopsticks at every meal. With approximately 150 million new sets of chopsticks used three times a day, there are 350 million chopsticks used each day. One does not need to be an economics major to realize that this is a lot of

Commentary

Because no one in the United States makes chopsticks, this class may even require a visiting Japanese scholar.

This would also reverse the trend of having Japan copy American technology as fast as it is developed. We can use their research money to make money in Idaho.

Speaking of research in Idaho, many of you might remember the little flap that a proposed fisheries research lab has started. The local press was full of accusations that civilization as we know it would come to an end if this lab was built.

The problem is water, or rather the lack of it. This is not a new problem in Moscow. Moscow was rejected as the site for the first major sawmill in this area because of the statement made by William Deary, "Moscow doesn't have enough water to baptize a bastard." Deary got a town named after him and Moscow didn't get the sawmill.

The new line says that we do not understand the aquifer that supplies our water and that we shouldn't pull any more water out than we need to. This is less colorful and no more informative than Deary's statement.

If wasting water is bad, then lawns are bad, leaking swimming pools are bad, flush toilets are bad, and long, hot showers are evil. The correct use of a limited resource is a difficult choice, and chances are the wrong choice will be made. My evidence for this assertion is that three times unconstitutional practice — they sure don't want to do that! It has become apparent that Lynn Major doesn't know diddly about the basic principles by which this nation has been founded, one being a fair trial by an impartial judge or jury in an independent court system. She wants the government agency which is violating our rights to "check" and see if they are okay. So, who do you think would give the most impartial and fair answer to the issue? A judge maybe? A judge is, after all, a professional at law. We just want to know if what they are doing is legal.

I also find it incredibly unfortunate that Ray Horton and Pam Stone have chosen to fight on Lynn Major's behalf without seeking an alternate opinion. I guess it is not necessary to question Lynn's never-failing legal advice.

Grow up and vote

Editor:

OK folks, this is just about the last straw. The 'majority' has been silent for too long now.

Remember Uncle Ronnie and how 'the cost of education just got higher' while he was in office? That was because we the majority didn't vote. Do you notice every time Marriott, General Electric, Potlatch, or DuPont rips you off or rapes your environment? No? Then perhaps you've been hypnotized by the Great American Pacifier — television. Wake-up! You're dozing!

Now we are being lulled into inaction by a few wanna-be politicians who are saying, "Well, the 12 people that I counted don't want to pursue the fee issue, so I think we should shut up and be good, quiet children. Let's not make anybody angry!" Heaven forbid!

Grow up, people! You are adults now. You have to take responsibility for your world. That means paying attention to the issues and standing up for your beliefs and your rights, as well as the rights of your fellow citizens and of those who will follow you in this community/world.

If something is broken, we should fix it. We might not need a lawyer, but then again we might. Please don't let one percent of the people dictate to all. Take a few minutes to learn about the fee issue (or any other that affects you) and then take a stand on it.

You are citizens in a democracy that only works when you use your voice. Get a life. Speak your mind. Vote!

Avoid the riddle of misinformation

Now's the time to recall Tina Kagi. "Stop the madness, stop Kagi." Put the "wicked witch of fees" in her place. This uncaring, selfish and totally out of control ASUI president is jeopardizing everything University of Idaho students care about.

Or so anonymous organizers of a Kagi recall petition would have you believe.

In a letter attached to recall petitions sent to living group presidents yesterday, a Residence Hall Political Action Committee denounces Kagi's interests and work regarding the fee issue.

But this letter is riddled with classic "misinformation" and "half truths" that both sides claim is running rampant with this issue.

The letter first states that Kagi considers last semester's referendum on the $25 fee a "mandate" by the students. Kagi, wisely, should consider it a mandate until she hears otherwise. The referendum, legally binding or not, is still the "best" gauge of overall student opinion on the fee. And no lawsuit had even been thought of at that time. Remember, the Idaho State Board of Education didn't pass the fee increase until June.

The letter says Kagi is "pushing the proposed ASUI lawsuit" even though "most students consulted by the issue" disagree with the proceeding. The qualifier here is "consulted by the issue." Only the residence halls have become vocal so far. And off-campus students, 55 percent of the ASUI, have not yet had adequate means to voice their support or disapproval. The letter also whines that the ASUI didn't talk to the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council or Residence Hall Association before a lawyer was hired. True. But the ASUI also did not talk to the presidents of such groups as the Soccer Club, BACCHUS or Campus Crusade for Christ. So, don't feel too left out. Perhaps the ASUI didn't realize how political the living group governments had become over the summer.

J.E.

Commentary

The letter continues by saying Kagi is "pushing" for a student referendum on the issue. But the letter says she is doing this in the face of opposition. What opposition? Oh, that 20 percent student minority that just happens to live in the halls. Maybe the other 80 percent of us would like some input, if that's all right with dormitory residents.

Kagi, with the senate's support, did write a memo to UI President Elisabeth Zinser in August "demanding" the $25 fee remain separate until this issue could be resolved. Zinser declined. Because of this memo, the petition letter states Kagi doesn't care about the business and engineering students who were helped by the fee increase. Well, as a graduate with a business degree, I'm not too excited at the possibility of paying for instructors' salaries. And no one has proven my degree is any less valuable without the approval of an accreditation team. Administrators would have had us believe the College of Engineering would have a "closed for business" sign on it this fall if the fee increase didn't pass. But surprise, surprise. After the accreditation teams visited two weeks ago, Dean William Saul said accreditation probation was unlikely. And he said, "I have no doubt that our accreditation will continue." So much for the hyped-up accreditation threat.

Before you simply sign any petition, especially one asking for the recall of a state-elected official, make sure you do know both sides of the story. While it will require an open mind and a bit of work to find the real truth, signing a petition is a responsibility, not just a right.

Recall is a sham

Editor:

I find the current 'anonymous' recall threat against ASUI President Tina Kagi disgusting. Anonymous? It isn't hard to tell who you are and under whose direction you are operating. This particular mode of operation is certainly no secret to many former and current members of the ASUI. The threatening letter received by Sen. Mike Mick was equally obnoxious.

What are you 'anonymous' individuals afraid of other than identifying yourselves publicly? That is not a difficult question to answer. It was quite apparent at the fee presentation meeting that various 'student leaders' wish to run the ASUI as a totalitarian regime. Any guess as to who the 'anonymous' dictator would be? These same 'student leaders' invoke the constitution when it suits their purposes but do not want to allow anyone else to have a chance to voice their opinion through the privacy of the ballot box. Thus the reason for the recall campaign.

Maybe some of you 'student leaders' should go back and take Political Science 101. Obviously you have forgotten what the words DEMOCRACY and CONSTITUTION mean, along with FREEDOM OF SPEECH and INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS.

This recall effort is nothing but a vindictive, childish sham and that is how it will be perceived by the 'majority' of those students who consider themselves adult enough to be above tactics of this sort. President Kagi has been truthful over the fee issue and has conducted herself with dignity throughout the ordeal. The students should be proud to have her as their representative and not become involved in dirty, underhanded schemes that only serve the perverted interests of certain individuals.

as much money is spent for cosmetics as for the space program. We live in a society that glorifies the trivial and flashy and ignores long-term progress.

After several weeks of water rhetoric, it finally came out that one of the main purposes of this research lab was to find a cheap, easy way to clean the water as it came out of the fish lab and reuse it. It turned out that this water problem had its own built-in solution.

The University of Idaho was created to facilitate research, and it has an excellent record in many areas of research. The harder the local citizens make it for research to take place, the less research will take place. I don't mean to imply that all research is automatically good, but on the fish lab issue I think that hysteria could overcome reason.

The fish lab is still in the debate stage, but a decision is due soon. I think this is the one project that could do more for Idaho than any other. Idaho produces 85 percent of the commercial trout in the United States and could produce more if the problems this new lab is designed to solve are solved.

One of the main problems facing fish producers is water quality. The water from the fish farms in southern Idaho goes into the Snake River after the fish have used it. It turns out that fish manure, like all other manure, is full of nutrients. These nutrients are a problem in the Snake River. They are added to the natural, human-produced, and farm-produced nutrients that already have had a major effect on water quality.

These are only two of many areas where Idaho could improve its economy without destroying Idaho values and lifestyles. Unless people change their own circumstances, they may be forced to change in ways they may not be able to control.

Research can improve our local economy and environment if it is allowed. The alternative is a poor, backward, resource-exhausted state that resembles a third world country.

Lady Vandals improve to 4-4 Defeat Weber State, E. Washington

AMY WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

The Lady Vandals revealed the meaning of aggressiveness as they chalked up two wins and increased their conference record to 4-4 and 12-6 overall.

The Lady Vandals began Thursday's match with a new lineup, using a 5-1 offense that defeated Weber State College in three games, 15-7, 15-2 and 16-14.

"The girls hung in there and played solidly," UI Head Coach Tom Hilbert said.

Karen Thompson recorded 15 kills and 13 digs and Stacey Asplund hit nearly 60 percent for the night.

The Lady Vandals used their new lineup going into Saturday night's game against the unbeaten Big Sky Conference team, Eastern Washington University.

By the end of the third game, the outcome of the match came down to who was the toughest. Going into the fifth and decisive game, the Vandals had won the first and fourth games 15-13 and 15-12, while EWU claimed the second and third games with scores of 7-15 and 3-15. The crucial turning point came after a two-point tiebreaker when Jodi Boggs served four straight points.

"They gave us a lot of opportunities in that final game," Hilbert said. "They played tough in the first three games, but just seemed to make a lot of mistakes after that."

Numerous blocking errors resulted in 17 kills by Thompson and 10 kills by Kristy Frady. The most exciting and astounding play came from senior setter Marianne Moore, who had 14 digs and contributed to four of the last eight points scored by Thompson and Frady. Moore accomplished all this with a fractured fibula in her right leg.

"I'm very pleased with the performance of Marianne," Hilbert said. "She made some unbelievable plays for us and kept us tough all night. She's a solid player and a great leader."

The Vandals won the fifth game 15-3 at Eastern Washington's home court, which increased the players' motivation.

The Lady Vandals will keep this positive state of mind as they prepare for Lewis Clark State College tonight in Lewiston and cross-town rival Washington State University Thursday in Pullman. Both games begin at 7:30 p.m.

The team will practice playing their own game, review the offense, and work on defense.

UI has claimed two previous victories from LCSC and WSU.

"It would be nice if the fans do a little traveling and join us in Pullman," Hilbert said. "WSU fans brought a lot of spirit to our campus. Now it's time for us to pack their house."

Vandals defeat Lumberjacks 41-31 No.1 defense falls to Friesz's air attack

By ERIC ELG
Staff Writer

The third and final matchup between University of Idaho's John Friesz and Northern Arizona University's Gregg Wyatt, two of the Big Sky's all-time best quarterbacks, lived up to all expectations.

The game featured 733 yards of total passing and was eventually determined by the Vandals' air attack and five turnovers forced by the defense.

After a 14-yard touchdown pass from Friesz to Kasey Dunn, which gave UI a 7-0 lead, NAU sustained a long drive down to the UI 2-yard line. UI's goal-line defense forced a fumble and, on the next play, Friesz threw a 98-yard touchdown bomb to Lee Allen, giving the Vandals a 14-0 lead.

In the second quarter Dunn caught his second touchdown pass to put UI ahead by three touchdowns. Vandal kicker Thayne Doyle closed out UI scoring in the half with a 33-yard field goal and a 24-7 lead.

"I like to think that I am somewhat of a big-game player."

— John Friesz
UI quarterback

Down by 17, NAU was forced to abandon their running game and rely on Wyatt's arm. The Lumberjacks scored 24 points in the second half as Wyatt hit on 33- and 16-yard touchdown passes.

Wyatt finished with 301 yards, two touchdowns and one interception, on 28 of 39 passing.

Although Wyatt performed well, he remains under Friesz's tall shadow. Friesz finished with a 3-0 career record against Wyatt and the Lumberjacks as he completed 21 of 33 passes for 423 yards and five touchdowns.

Friesz could not have picked a better time for a big night. The contest between the two great quarterbacks attracted 15 professional scouts and several writers from national sports publications.

"I like to think that I am somewhat of a big-game player," Friesz said. "Somehow I usually get up for the big games."

Friesz's main targets Saturday afternoon were Allen and Dunn. Allen had six receptions for a career-high 218 yards. Dunn hauled in eight passes for 99 yards.

Damon Daniels led the Vandal rushing attack with 84 yards on 19 carries.

With the victory, UI remains atop the Big Sky with a 3-0 conference record; and is 4-2 overall.

The Vandals will travel to Bozeman, Mont. Saturday to take on the 3-3 Montana State University Bobcats.

Outdoor Program sponsors canoe trip to Upper Priest Lake

By MATT WALO
Commentary

Imagine a weekend away from Moscow. No noise from traffic, roommates, or the neighbors who insist upon making Friday night last until 5 a.m.

Now, picture a mirror-smooth lake, reflecting an exact image of the fall foliage colors that made New England famous. The only human sounds you'll hear will be from the water slowly dripping off your canoe paddle as you rest between strokes, or the hushed voices of fellow explorers describing the beauty of the surrounding area.

Only a limited number of participants will be lucky enough to escape with the ASUI Outdoor Program to Upper Priest Lake for a wilderness canoe trip. Those who go will awake to crisp mountain air only to see the long shadows cast by the surrounding Selkirk Mountains slowly disappear as the sun rises above the horizon, and watch as the lake surrenders its blanket of fog to the warming air of morning.

Emerging from your tent, the smell of fresh-brewed coffee will overwhelm your senses and warm your insides while the sound of frying bacon sizzles and pops over an open fire, adding to the distinct outdoor flavor that can only come from food cooked while camping.

The group will canoe five to eight miles before camping. Chances to catch fish and observe native wildlife such as moose, deer and beavers will be excellent, according to outdoor center employee Scott Calhoun.

If you would like to be part of this weekend's wilderness adventure, a pre-trip meeting will be held Wednesday at 5 p.m. at the Outdoor Center Office in the SUB basement.

Express yourself at the golf course

By GREG NUNES
Contributing Writer

Golf is supposed to be a relaxing and quiet game.

The University of Idaho Golf Course differs from the quiet atmosphere of the common country club, however. At the UI course, angry golfers who hook or slice shots often yell from distant corners.

That is the beauty of having a golf course on a college campus. It loosens the belt around the waist of the game of golf.

"The kids really have a nice course," said Greg Bowen, assistant golf professional.

Students sometimes abuse the course, however.

"We've had a couple problems with kids running over trees with power carts," Bowen said.

Students also damage the greens and leave divots on the fairways.

"Kids wouldn't get away with not replacing divots at a country club," Bowen said.

casual atmosphere of the UI course and appreciates the privilege of playing on a college course.

"You're allowed to express yourself more at the UI course than you are at a country club," Davis said. "It's not a snotty attitude at the UI course."

If the good weather continues, the course should be open until the end of October and into early November, so students will still have time to enjoy golf from a different perspective: the college student's.

Vandal Rugby Team goes 1-2 in Canada

By DAYNA WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Rugby Club had a tough weekend in Canada, where they played three games Saturday but won only one.

The club lost 3-0 against Terrace Lake and 15-3 against the Anchorage Oosiks. The club pulled through in the game against Prince George, however, and won 15-14.

Tony Borro, who plays scrum half, made the winning kick for the UI team.

"Tony made some very crucial kicks for us," player Paul Reisenburg said. "His kick in the last game won the game for us."

Reisenburg said he is happy with the progress of the new players.

"The new players are doing very well," Reisenburg said. "They're still making some of the new player mistakes, but I'm quite impressed."

The team has moved up to the traditional 40-minute halves instead of the 25-minute halves they played against Washington State University.

Saturday the UI Rugby Club plays the College of Idaho at noon and Boise State University at 1 p.m.

"I think we'll do pretty well," Reisenburg said. "We have a good strong scrum, and we'll do well as long as we're organized."

Reisenburg said he hopes anyone interested will consider joining the team.

"I encourage new players to come out. Experience is not necessary," Reisenburg said. "Don't be afraid. Once you know what you're doing, it's not a difficult game."

Hartung debuts with Bette and Boo

By BETH BARCLAY
Staff Writer

Comic family situations are the focus of Christopher Durang's semi-autobiographical play, The Marriage of Bette and Boo, but according to director Tom Armitage, the play is a dark humor that satirizes some real problems not altogether unique to this family.

"The humor is somewhat like a political cartoon," Armitage said. "The problems are serious, but they are portrayed in a funny way."

The play centers around Bette and Boo, beginning with their marriage, and extends over a period of about 30 years. It is written from the viewpoint of their son Matt, played by John O'Hagan, who is trying to find out why his family is so weird.

According to Armitage, every element of family life is looked at satirically, from holidays to birthdays to church. Durang has made this play into an autobiography by incorporating his own personal beliefs and experiences. But, says Armitage, the play is funny

Spanish opera visits Pullman

By SHIRLEE CARBAUGH
Staff Writer

Carmen is coming to town. Washington State University is hosting the San Francisco Opera Wednesday at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum.

The story of Carmen, set in Seville, Spain, is wrapped in a backdrop of Spanish romance, passion and magic. This is the classic love triangle scenario. Brigadier Don Jose and bullfighter Escamillo fight for the attention of Carmen, the young gypsy.

"This is a great opera. There is so much good music, too. The audience will recognize a lot of the pieces."

— Jim Crow
Project Coordinator

Jim Crow, who was a major influence in getting the opera to the Pullman area, finds Carmen one of the most enjoyable operas performed today.

"This is a great opera," Crow said. "There is so much good music, too. The audience will recognize a lot of the pieces."

Carmen will tour through 56 cities in 22 states. The San Francisco Opera will visit California, Oregon, Idaho, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Connecticut, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Kentucky.

The second leg of the tour will begin in January and go until March.

The new production of Carmen is directed by Hans Nieuwenhois. Jay Kotcher constructed the scenery and the San Francisco Opera Shop made the costumes.

Tickets are on sale at the Beasley Coliseum Office and at all G & B Select-A-Seat outlets.

Eurythmics enthusiastic

Positive energy pulses through the latest album by the British duo the Eurythmics.

The duo consists of Annie Lennox and Dave Stewart, two very different but complementary individuals.

"Our music is based on opposition," says Lennox. "It's about friction."

We Too Are One is the duo's sixth album and is possibly their most solidly consistent one. Every song on this album is good. The lyrics are classic Eurythmics — honest, bold, and a mixture of pain and beauty.

The music is reminiscent of their other albums but seems to have matured a little more. Perhaps they picked up a few things from collaborative work with artists like Tom Petty, Bob Dylan and Daryl Hall.

The music is not as technopop as their first album. The melodies are deeper and the rhythms richer. Annie Lennox's voice is strong and hearty throughout the album, contrasting with Dave Stewart's sometimes mellow guitar and synthesizer.

One can especially hear this contrast in the song "When The Day Goes Down," which starts off like a quiet plea for help, with soft bells and guitar strums in the background. The song gradually builds into a stronger, more hopeful ballad. Lennox sounds like a gospel singer as she proclaims, "This is for the broken dreamers/ and this is for the vacant souls."

The title track, "We Too Are One," is one of the best songs on the album and has some top-of-the-chart potential. The song starts with wah-wahs of a synthesized trumpet and moves into a funky, danceable beat. Lennox sounds like Aretha Franklin.

Other songs to look for are "Revival," "Don't Ask Me Why," and "Angel."

The Eurythmics have had much success with their previous albums, and We Too Are One promises to live up to the same expectations.

Comedians provide laughs

REVIEW By BRAD TEED
Contributing Writer

The Just Kidding Production Company provided its own brand of off-beat humor to a small but receptive crowd at the University of Idaho SUB Ballroom Sunday night.

The comedy group is on its 1989-90 "Where's My Thermos" tour. The group performs original skits with a diverse range of subjects.

"Nuts," by troupe member Jon Hein, takes a look at a college-age version of Charles Schultz's Peanuts gang. And although "it appears that Pig-Pen is rather intoxicated," Charlie Brown is better with age. "I just love his hair. It's grown in so well."

In "Abstraction To Go," by Jason Allington, a young girl is pitted against a vendor of abstract ideas. "I would like to buy some hope for my cause ... Boise State beating Idaho in football." She is told there is no hope available.

"If Geeks Were Cool," by Kevin Hughes, takes an interesting look at role reversal. "We get high ... high grades."

Just Kidding was "founded over a few hot chocolates in the winter of 1986 by a couple of people who, for the rest of their lives, simply wanted to make people laugh."

The troupe's two-hour comedy-filled program does just that.

ASUI Productions sponsored the program. Michelle Drewin, assistant coordinating director for ASUI Productions, was disappointed with the turnout.

"I don't know if it's what we're programming or just lack of interest," Drewin said. "Every school I talked to filled the house up when Just Kidding was there."

Turnout aside, those who showed up for the performance were treated to a comedic breath of fresh air. Even UI mythology Professor Louis Perraud doesn't quite portray Zeus the way Just Kidding does in "The Great Horny God."

in that it is quite universal.

"People in families just don't talk to each other," Armitage said. "These people are not connected in any way except that they're related. This is a big problem."

"The humor is somewhat like a political cartoon. The problems are serious, but they are portrayed in a funny way."

— Tom Armitage
Director

An example of the play's dark humor is found in Bette, played by Karla Ketterer. Bette has been brought up in a good, Roman Catholic family, and her goal in life is to have as many children as possible.

"Oh, I like babies," she says, "more than I like people."

The problem, though, is that Bette and Boo are only able to have one child, Matt. Although Bette's doctor, played by Mark Spear, has told her she is incapable of having any more children who will live past childbirth, she keeps trying.

Through successive stillbirths, Bette's dream of being a mother of a large brood lives on. This, said Armitage, is because of her inability to deal with reality.

Armitage said her obsessive behavior and romanticized view of children further lead the audience to believe she would have a difficult time with motherhood anyway.

But Bette is not the only pathetically comic character in the play. Matt's father, Boo, played by Michael Porter, is an alcoholic.

"While this play is very sad, it touches home in comic way," Armitage said.

The Marriage of Bette and Boo will play at the Hartung Theater Thursday through Sunday and Oct. 19-22. Curtain time is 8 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are available through Ticket Express at the UI SUB.

Gaultier definitely unique

The word skepticism would underestimate the feeling I had when I picked up Jean Paul Gaultier's newest album, Aow Tou Dou Zat. With Euro-pop-type tunes like "How to Drum That," "It's Crazy with an Accordion" and "How To Do That (in a New Way)," you may realize why I raised an eyebrow.

The first time I slipped this fine piece of art into my car stereo I wanted to stop, jump out, and place it under my tire for immediate destruction. Maybe it was the mood I was in that evening because, when I heard the tape later, I rather enjoyed it.

Influenced by MARRS, James Brown (in a roundabout way), and other extreme groups you would hear on any corner filled with dark-clad skate-rats, Gaultier's main goal is not to establish world peace or to save the whales but to entertain slender girls wearing black spandex dresses (red spandex in some unusual cases) on Friday nights at the local dance club.

"Do it Again," which features vocals by Gaultier, ended up being one of my favorites on the tape.

"How to Drum It" was close to annoying, and most of the other songs eventually all melted together with the same melody and lyrics. The worst part of the tape was the unbearable "bye-bye" at the end of almost every song.

All in all, Aow Tou Dou Zat doesn't come close to listening to the Eagles on a sunny afternoon, but it certainly stands on its own. If you're up for a night of hard-core rug-cutting, Jean Paul Gaultier is just the ticket.

Electronic artist to perform concert

By SALLY GILPIN
Staff Writer

Computers, laser graphics and electronic keyboards are just a few of the things electronic artist Ron Pellegrino will use in his concert tonight at Washington State University's Kimbrough Concert Hall.

The concert, "Visualizing Music," will feature original compositions by Pellegrino, who uses music and visual effects to create a performance that is out of the ordinary.

A former professor, Pellegrino has taught at several universities, including Oberlin Conservatory, Miami University, Ohio State University and Sonoma State University. Now he tours the United States to perform and give lectures and seminars.

Pellegrino is not only a composer and lecturer but an author as well. His books include The Electronic Arts of Sound and Light and An Electronic Studio Manual.

PELLEGRINO

He has also written numerous magazine articles.

The WSU Visual, Performing and Literary Arts Committee is sponsoring Pellegrino's week-long residency at the university. During his stay Pellegrino will give demonstrations and lectures and will be featured in two concerts.

In addition to his solo concert, Pellegrino will perform a joint concert with local dancers, musicians, poets, visual artists, actors and video artists.

"It will be a collaboration between him and faculty and staff," said Marty Mullan of the WSU Visual, Performing and Literary Arts Committee. The concert will take place Saturday at 8 p.m. at WSU's Kimbrough Hall.

Pellegrino's solo concert, tonight at 8 p.m. at Kimbrough Concert Hall, is free and open to the public.

Zinser names Godwin acting vice president as search to fill vacancy continues

The University of Idaho, where a national search for a permanent vice president for student services is about to begin, has named W. Harold Godwin to the position on an acting basis.

The announcement was made by UI President Elisabeth Zinser Thursday, following a meeting she held with directors responsible for student services at the university.

GODWIN

Godwin, who has served the UI in roles as diverse as Centennial director, fundraiser, acting athletic director and faculty representative to the NCAA — in addition to his duties as a psychologist with student services — will serve as acting vice president until the search ends. University officials say they hope to name a vice president for student affairs by July 1, 1990.

The acting vice president's responsibilities will not be the same as they were when the position went unfilled in the early 1980s.

As acting vice president, Godwin's duties include overseeing the Career Services Office, the Counseling Center, the Financial Aid Office, the Student Health Service, Stumade, student housing and University Dining Services by Marriott will report to the office of the vice president for finance.

In addition to the administrative change, the student affairs leadership function will move from the President's Office to a more central location accessible to students, student government and most student services. The office of the vice president for student affairs will be located in the SUB.

"We expect that Dr. Godwin will serve in more than a 'caretakers' role in his new responsibilities," Zinser said in making the announcement. "I fully expect his vigorous leadership and years of experience in student services will enable him to make significant advancements in the university's capability to serve its students — from recruitment to graduation."

The president has asked Carolyn Youmans to serve as lead secretary to the vice president, and she has accepted that responsibility. She and Godwin will work together in the new office.

"I fully expect his vigorous leadership and years of experience in student services will enable him to make significant advancements ..."

Parking lots crowd out lizards

By BETH PETTIBON
Staff Writer

Many people don't give much thought to lizards, or the consequences a new parking lot plays on their habitat, but for University of Idaho doctoral student Robert Sprackland and other zoologists around the world, this has become an issue of international concern.

Sprackland is a first semester graduate student working on lizard evolution. While attending the First World Congress of Herpetology in Kent, England last month, Sprackland was elected to co-chair a committee that intends to point out inconsistencies in current conservation policies.

"Where do animals go when you convert their homes into parking lots?" asks Sprackland, who has been studying lizards near the coast of California.

Conservation laws protect the lizards, but builders are routinely able to put in beachfront malls and condominiums in the restricted habitats. One construction job kills more lizards than several generations of lizard collectors would ever take, Sprackland said.

The committee hopes to promote both amateur and professional zoologists with better access to wildlife for captive breeding and long-term field studies. Sprackland said that many amateurs do a much better job than a great many of the zoos do at breeding these animals.

Sprackland said that legislation restricts amateurs from experimenting with wildlife because they are endangered, but permits huge building projects to destroy their habitats.

"It isn't prudent to wait until a species is nearly extinct, as in the case of the black-footed ferret, to try to find out how to breed them in captivity," Sprackland said. "We're looking to do this on an international scale, but a lot needs to be done locally. We need to make noise on every level."

Sprackland, who is fulfilling his teaching requirement by instructing an introduction biology lab at the UI, describes himself as an "old romantic" when it comes to lizards.

"I see the kinship with animals, and I personally feel like the custodian in my relationship with lizards," Sprackland said. "They're just too damn important to let them become extinct."

game dominate Wednesday night's activities. The hunt starts at Targhee Hall at 5 p.m. Also at 5 p.m., teams of five will try to "kill" each other in the arboretum during the assassination game. In this capture-the-flag inspired tournament, players armed with dye-filled water pistols will attempt to obtain the other team's flag while defending their own.

Thursday night at 8:30, residents will gather at the Dome for the GDI Games. Besides the traditional tug-of-war, pyramid building race and keg toss, participants will be forced to throw a football through a Hula-Hoop at varying distances.

Also on the schedule is a relay contest in which team members will individually race while hula-hooping or holding a golf ball on a spoon in their mouth. Other team members will be hopscotching, bat spinning or running a three-legged race.

Friday the week's activities round up with a 5 p.m. barbecue and an awards presentation at Guy Wicks Field. And at 8:30 that night a dance will be held in the Gault-Upham Party Room.

Snow Hall will have to wait until Friday to discover if they've taken top honors again. But, Rau says winning isn't everything.

"We'll also be out there for the fun," he said. "After all, that's what it's really all about."
