

Two UI students' artwork stolen within a week

By SHERRY DEAL
News Editor

Two student paintings have been stolen from the art loft in the University of Idaho Art and Architecture Building within the last week, and one professor feels it is the start of a trend.

Art Professor George Wray said although there have been problems in the past when students have had art supplies stolen, this one seems to be unique. "This seems to be pretty deliberate," Wray said. "There seems to be a real rash of thievery going on."

Wray said there have also been various items stolen from the ceramic department lately.

The art loft, located on the third floor of the Art and Architecture Building, is open 24 hours a day to give students access to their work, and is used by 16-18 intermediate and advanced level art students.

Art student Dan Emery said the convenient hours benefit art students who have to spend a great deal of time on their work.

"Art students aren't like engineering students," Emery said. "We can't take our homework home."

Emery said having the loft open also benefits people who are not art students.

"The loft serves as a museum in a way," he said. "There's a lot of different styles up there."

Emery said many people enjoy browsing through the loft, and if it were locked up, viewing opportunities would be limited.

"I always liked to go up there when I was a freshman and see what the good guys were working on," Emery said.

Wray said he and other faculty members will discuss ways to make the loft more secure at the next faculty meeting.

He said the best idea brought up so far involves enclosing the paintings in cages and issuing keys to the art students.

The stolen paintings have been reported to the police, primarily to be sure there is a record of the crime, according to Wray.

Wray said he is not sure how the police department will handle the situation because it will be difficult to determine who might have stolen the work, but said he remains hopeful.

"You certainly always hope they'll be found some way," he said.

Mike Farley of campus night-watch said nightwatch officers usually check the Art and Architecture Building twice each night. However, he said they generally just check the outside doors, and know the loft is unlocked 24 hours a day.

Vandals win Homecoming in front of 15,500

Defeat UNR Wolfpack 42-22

By ERIC ELG
Staff Writer

The Vandals took a giant step Saturday toward becoming the second team ever to win the Big Sky title in three consecutive seasons.

The 42-22 University of Idaho Homecoming rout of the University of Nevada-Reno leaves the Vandals with a 6-0 conference mark and a 7-2 record overall. After Boise State University was pummeled by the University of Montana 48-13, UI became the only Big Sky team with an unblemished conference mark. With only two games remaining, against Idaho State University and BSU, the Vandals are in the driver's seat to win the Big Sky title for the third straight year.

John Friesz and the Vandal offense once again dominated the opposition by piling up 593 yards and scoring on its first five possessions.

The Vandals' first possession consisted of a 13-play, 82-yard drive capped off by a three-yard run by Damon Daniels. An ensuing two-point conversion gave UI an 8-0 lead. UNR responded with a long drive, but was thwarted when a field goal attempt was blocked by Vandal cornerback Charlie Oliver. Friesz promptly hit David Jackson on a 62-yard scoring strike to put UI up 15-0. Reno again drove deep into Vandal territory and was halted by Oliver as he intercepted a pass in the end zone. After a Thayne Doyle field goal, the Vandals put together two more drives, which were capped by a five-yard scoring run by Daniels and an 11-yard touchdown catch by Kasey Dunn, to move ahead at the half 32-0.

Reno scored on its opening possession of the second half to make the score 32-8, but any thoughts of a recurrence of an Eastern Washington style comeback were erased, as the Vandals responded

"The University of Idaho Celebrates Idaho" Homecoming brought approximately 16,000 students, alumni and community members together for all the festivities.

Saturday morning's parade of 60 floats, which involved living groups and community effort, had an audience of more than 8,000. Living group participation was over 80 percent for this year's celebration, surpassing the homecoming committee's goal.

Two hundred alumni returned for the 1950 and 1960 reunions, while 250 attended Saturday night's homecoming dance. About 15,500 fans came to the ASUI-Kibbie Dome to cheer the Vandals on to a 42-22 victory over the University of Nevada-Reno.

RHA meeting emphasizes new pre-registration procedure

By KARA GARTEN
News Assistant

The Residence Hall Association voted unanimously to move RHA elections from the spring to December at Monday night's meeting.

This amendment to the RHA Constitution takes effect immediately and, as a result, current RHA officers will end their terms in about a month. The next election will take place at the first RHA meeting in December.

In other business, ASUI Vice President Lynn Major presented RHA representatives with information about the new pre-registration system the University of Idaho is phasing in during the next few weeks.

All students are asked to see their advisers next week and register on appropriate days the following week. Informational packets are available at the Administration Annex to be picked up with midterm grades, Major said.

"They are trying to ease us into touch-tone registration," Major said.

UI plans to go to a complete touch-tone system in a couple of years.

This year, students will be able to add or drop courses until finals week. If students are unable to get their courses finalized by Christmas break, they will be able to go through regular ASUI-Kibbie Dome arena registration.

Centennial fund surpasses original goal

The University of Idaho has reached a landmark in its "Second Century of Distinction" fund-raising campaign. University officials announced Thursday that gifts and pledges stand at $43.5 million and are climbing. The initial goal of $43 million was announced in September 1987.

"We still have a number of activities to complete," said UI Foundation Director Bill Belknap. "Campaign activities will continue until the end of '89, and I expect we'll exceed our original goal by a significant amount."

Designed to raise monies for student and faculty recruitment, distinguished professorships, research and academic programs and construction projects, the campaign is the largest of its kind in Idaho history.

To date, more than 19,000 individuals and some 1,300 corporations and foundations have made contributions or pledges to the campaign.

"Through this campaign, we've only begun to support the University of Idaho in a manner which must continue into our second century," said J. Kirk Sullivan, campaign general chairman and vice president of Boise Cascade.

"It's been a great honor for me to work with friends and alumni of the UI during the course of this effort," Sullivan said. "This is just the beginning of a course the university will chart into its second 100 years."

Among the largest individual gifts have been those from UI alumnus Leonard Halland, a retired faculty member from Great Falls, Mont. University officials said his recent gift of $500,000, bringing Halland's total commitment to the university to the $3 million level, set the stage for the campaign race past the $43 million mark.

"When Leonard made that gift in mid-October, we knew we'd reach our initial goal by homecoming," Belknap said.

"Through the efforts of our Student Centennial Campaign Telecommunications team, which has been making phone calls every night for the past several weeks, we've gone over the top."

Belknap said it was probably a pledge made during the annual phone campaign, and most likely a call made late last week, that assured the total had passed $43 million.

Fund-raising activities in conjunction with the campaign are continuing at a brisk pace. University officials noted that during one 48-hour span last week, more than $350,000 was pledged.

The Second Century of Distinction Campaign was announced just over two years ago. At that time, UI had already raised $11.5 million of its initial goal.

Former UI President Richard Gibb said he was "delighted, but not surprised" that the initial goal had been reached.

"I always knew we'd achieve more than the $43 million figure," Gibb said.

Gibb said numerous thanks were in order.

"A lot of people both on and off campus have worked very hard on this," he said.

Gibb said the end result was that the money would be used to make Idaho "a better institution, providing a higher quality education."

The Centennial campaign has also increased the university's ability to raise funds in future efforts, said Gibb, who stepped down after 12 years as president last summer.

"Some people will now see the University of Idaho in a different light, and we'll find more people who will support the university with more dollars," Gibb said.

According to Belknap, the fund raising isn't finished.

"The pre-campaign list of identified needs on this campus was in excess of $100 million, so we still have a ways to go in future efforts."

Tutoring center drops SOAR program

By DREW ARNOT
Staff Writer

A unique program designed to help students placed on academic probation or academic disqualification has been dropped by the Tutoring and Academic Assistance Center.

The program, Student Opportunity for Academic Renewal, was canceled because the time commitment necessary for making the program successful was not possible.

"The program was labor intensive, not cost intensive," said Judy Wallins, director of the Tutoring and Academic Assistance Center. "The money was available, but not the time."

Wallins also said even though SOAR's initial run was a success, the center will need to work on time efficiency before trying the program again.

SOAR, the only program of its kind in the United States, was aimed primarily at juniors and seniors having academic problems in college. Wallins said all the students involved in SOAR were hand-picked.

Wallins said she obtained a list of students and their grades from the registrar and then identified which students might fit into the SOAR profile. Generally, the student had high test scores in high school but low grades in college. Wallins would then speak to the student's adviser and also screen the student. Project SOAR participation was always made a condition for re-enrolling in school.

"For the first time the student felt like the institution was interacting with them, face to face," Wallins said. "The adviser is not to blame, but in some cases the student had never seen their adviser. There just wasn't much interaction."

Despite their high test scores, Wallins said 50 percent of the students scored below the college reading level. Wallins said "10 percent of all students on academic probation were active in high school and felt high school was a breeze."

Wallins said all the SOAR students were very articulate and verbal, but they all had weak study skills.

"It was like they missed the whole chapter," Wallins said of the students' poor study habits.

Wallins said when the program is revived, more emphasis will be placed on small group work and not so much one on one.

"Pressure from a group of one's peers seems to work well in getting the student motivated to do well in school."

For now, though, Wallins said she will work on probationary freshmen.

"We feel it is better to get the student when they are first having trouble," Wallins said. "That way we can get them on the right track as soon as possible."

Chin speaks on women's health

By DONALD CHIN, M.D.
Guest Columnist

For many people, the concept of women's health care means contraception or preventing an unplanned pregnancy. Actually, "well woman care" entails much more, is appropriate for all women of all ages and is aimed at preventing illness.

Annual exams with Pap smears are a main ingredient in women's health care. The yearly exam includes a health history followed by a physical exam with a breast check and a pelvic exam. During the pelvic exam, a Pap smear is taken to test for cancer of the cervix, and the reproductive organs are checked for abnormalities. There are several stages in the development of cervical cancer. The Pap smear is one of the best cancer tests available, as it identifies early changes so remedies can be taken before cancer occurs. The American Cancer Society, The National Institutes of Health, and physician and nursing groups recommend a Pap smear once a year for all women 18 years or older. Approximately 15 percent of college-age women have abnormal Pap smears that indicate early changes in the cervix.

The self breast exam is another important part of women's health care. As the name implies, this is an examination by the woman to check for any abnormalities that might develop into cancer.

Breast exams are best done after the menstrual period and in a thorough, consistent pattern. Mammograms are X-rays of the breast to further identify any abnormalities. For women with a family history of breast cancer or with fibrocystic breasts (breast lumps that can be felt on exam), a baseline mammogram should be done once between ages 35-40.

Thereafter, mammograms should be done every three years until age 50, then every year. Although breast exams are each woman's responsibility, it is helpful and caring for family members and friends to encourage women in self breast exam.

Two UI professors take sabbatical leaves

By PAM KUEHNE
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho offers a sabbatical leave program that allows eligible professors to go elsewhere and improve their skills in a specialized area.

UI philosophy Professor Nicholas Gier took his first sabbatical leave to Denmark during the 1978-79 academic year.

Gier's time in Denmark allowed him to finish a book manuscript he published in 1981.

Gier took another sabbatical to Denmark during the 1985-86 academic year and again spent time writing a book. While on sabbatical, Gier said he had more time for his family, leisure and research. He said there is not enough time to properly research a topic while teaching, and that sabbaticals have improved his teaching ability.

"I wouldn't have gotten promoted the way that I did," Gier said. "I wouldn't have been able to finish those two books."

Although sabbaticals might sound like vacations, they're not. Gier said his sabbatical consisted of researching and writing eight hours a day.

Gier is looking forward to his next sabbatical to China in 1992. He hopes to learn the language and philosophy of the Chinese.

"I think it is money well spent by the university, if it's serious about quality faculty," Gier said.

UI theater arts professor Forrest Sears went on sabbatical for the 1987-88 academic year and attended directing and acting workshops.

During the summer of 1987, he went to Columbia University in New York to attend a three week International Directors Workshop, where directors from the U.S. and Europe talked about their experiences.

After his return, Sears was off again to another workshop in Ashland, Ore., that dealt with Shakespearean acting. He said he approached that workshop as an actor, and what he learned about acting styles and Shakespeare has helped his UI work.

In September 1988, Sears went to the University of Washington in Seattle, where he spent 10 weeks observing the graduate theater program and the professional actor training program, where top undergraduates determined to have "real potential" are trained.

Sears also attended a London Theater workshop in July where top London theater professionals and professionals from around the country held discussions about various areas of theater.

Sears later attended his final workshop at UW, which dealt with training the master actor teacher.

"It was a very busy year," Sears said. "It was very productive, very exciting work being at centers like New York and London where you're really at the center of theatrical activities."

Faculty members can apply for sabbatical leave after they have been at UI for at least six years, Sabbatical Evaluation Committee Chairman Monte Steiger said.

The application process involves submitting a proposal that explains where, when and why the sabbatical will take place. The Sabbatical Leave Evaluation Committee evaluates the application on the basis of "merit and feasibility, ... meritorious ser-

UI WRITER WINS FELLOWSHIP

A University of Idaho communications specialist has won a $3,000 fellowship from the Idaho Commission on the Arts.

Joy Passanante Williams, staff member in the Center for Business Development and Research, is the only writer to receive a fellowship this year.

Fellowships are awarded to individuals of exceptional talent and are based on the quality of previously created art work. They are given in an effort to keep Idaho a vital place for artists to live and work.

Williams' work appears in Idaho's Poetry and in the forthcoming centennial collection of Idaho fiction. Her collection of stories, Women of One Blood, earned honorable mention status in the 1983 Idaho Writers' Competition.

cess) sounds confusing, but I think it's going to go relatively well," Major said.

Also last night, RHA Vice President Jason Albrecht announced his candidacy for the position of ASUI Vice President and encouraged other dorm residents to run for ASUI office.

"We are currently unrepresented," he said. "There is not one person from our side of campus on the ASUI Senate. Let's get the GDIs out to vote. I really want some GDIs coming into office with me."

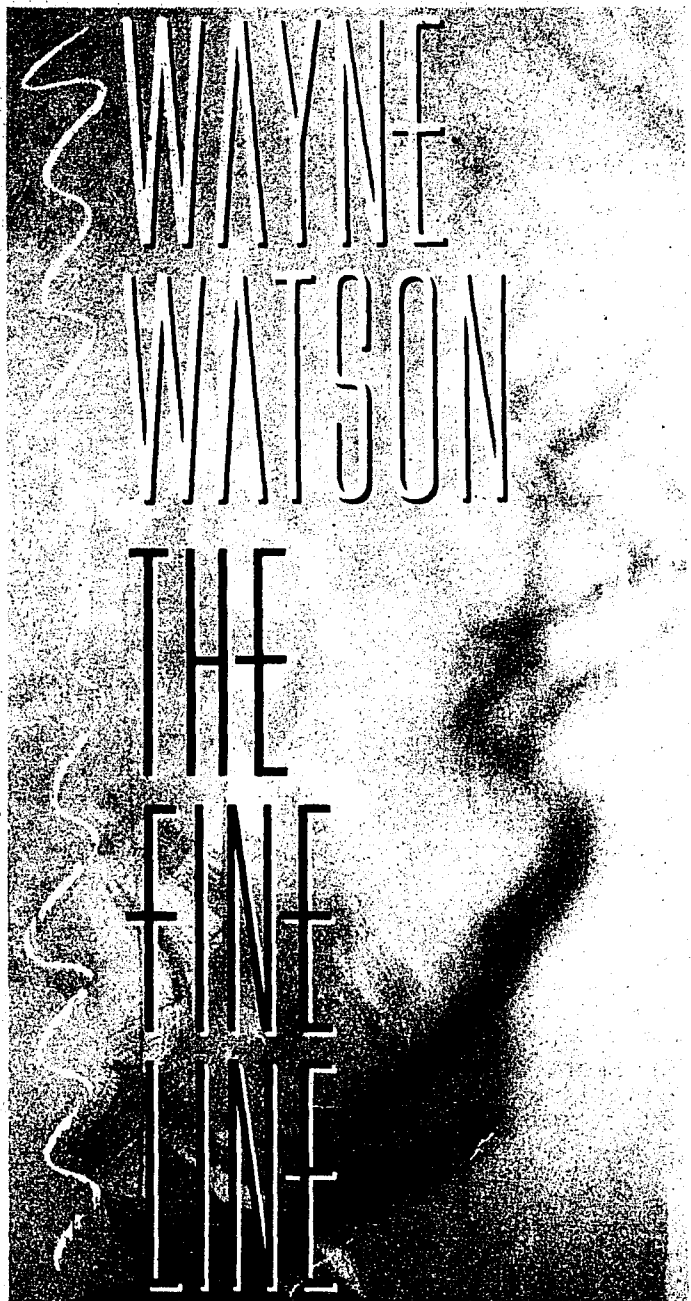

On the recurring problem of the false fire alarms in the dorms, RHA President Ray Horton said he "heard an unconfirmed rumor that they caught him (the fire-alarm prankster)."

However, just Saturday night, dorm residents were sent out into the cold when someone pulled an alarm. Horton called the incident a "Saturday night massacre."

"I think I was just within seconds of catching him myself," he said.

Horton said that if he had arrived at his dorm just a few seconds earlier than he did, the prankster would have "run right into him."

Fascist zeal is manifest in flag law

Welcome to Nazi Germany. The new federal anti-flag desecration law and the enforcement of it resembles a zealous deference for symbols that appears in most fascist states.

Evidence of this is apparent in the arrests and violence that the law has spawned.

Since the law went into effect last Saturday, several protests and demonstrations against the law have taken place nationwide. Last Friday, four flags were burned in Berkeley, Calif., and a flag burning also took place at Colorado State University, in which an overzealous patriot snuffed the flames with his bare hands.

Neo-Nazi skinheads came to the rescue of Old Glory in Seattle when a Vietnam veterans' group burned a pile of flags minutes after the law went into effect. The skinheads, always ready to defend symbols to further a fascist cause, helped promote the fistfights and vandalism that broke out following the torching of the flags.

Monday, four demonstrators were arrested for burning flags on the steps of the U.S. Capitol. According to the law, these flag burners could face up to a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Already the anti-flag desecration law has inspired more trouble than it has alleviated. What's more, it has created the opportunity for the ultra-right to prosecute against artists and people who wish to use images of the American flag in art, clothing and other forms of expression.

The line between patriotism and blind idealism is a thin one. That line is transgressed whenever veneration for objects and symbols exceeds individual rights.

Although we have separation of church and state in America, legislators should realize that separation between idolatry and state is just as important. Any law requiring people not to use an image in any fashion they want is just that — idolatry.

What's at issue here isn't just the right to burn flags. It's the right to remain free from being subservient to symbols. Hitler and the Nazis showed how reverence for symbols and rampant idealism can stamper over human rights. A similar reverence is being projected upon our flag now.

The charges against the four persons arrested for flag burning on the Capitol steps should be dropped. Burning a flag doesn't desecrate America; creating a law upholding the flag over the principles it is supposed to represent does. Quit treating Old Glory like some skeletal swastika and let her stand on her own.

• LETTERS TO THE EDITOR •

Accusations unfounded

Editor:

I am writing in reply to Mr. Hasselberg's letter in the Oct. 24 Argonaut. First, I would like to thank him for attending the cross country race and supporting the Idaho team. However, his letter, which was based on a lack of understanding of cross country racing, unfairly slandered a dedicated and very hardworking group. His statement that "various members of the men's team cut some corners of the course" is ridiculous.

I have trained with the team on trails on Moscow Mountain, where few if anyone would know or care if they cut corners, and have never known even one team member to take a shortcut to make up ground or get ahead even in something as insignificant as a workout. One member of the team admitted that he stepped over a marker that was knocked out of place. Other than that, the team members have no idea what Mr. Hasselberg could have seen.

It is, of course, always easier to make up your own facts, for whatever motive, than to make an effort to learn or understand the truth. Be assured, Mr. Hasselberg, that if Idaho runners were running a shorter course than the other teams, there would have been complaints from the other teams. (By the way, it is difficult to believe that Mr. Hasselberg saw something everyone else missed, when there were actually 11 teams in the race instead of the "four or five" that he saw.) If you felt that someone cut the course, you should have brought it to the attention of the marshall of the course. A letter in the Argonaut won't get anyone disqualified.

The letter also made unfounded accusations against Coach Keller. In the 12 years that I have known him, I have NEVER known Coach Keller to encourage or condone, in any manner, the breaking of rules to improve performance. In my experience, he has no use for those athletes who cannot perform well within the rules. I have also witnessed the fact that if an athlete is not a credit to the University of Idaho, he will never wear a UI men's

Three stooges represent Idaho

The three stooges are alive and well in 1989! No kidding. Larry, Curly and Moe are up to their old antics, bumbling and crashing from one outrageous farce to another.

Actually, their names are slightly different today, but their bumbling hasn't changed. The really hilarious part (or scary, depending on how you look at it) is that the Stooges are in government now - representing Idaho! That's right; Larry, Stevie and Jim provide a constant source of entertainment, irritation and mostly embarrassment for the people of Idaho.

Stooge #1 - Larry Craig. It's no big deal that Craig is 1) a conservative and, 2) a Republican. Hey, nobody's perfect. These days it's fashionable to appear pious, puckered and completely irrational. What better way to be in vogue than supporting the right of every American to own semi-automatic assault weapons - even though you don't know why anyone would want one.

Aligning himself with that old bete noir of public education (fundamentalists), Craig supports the Dannemeyer bill. This is a Senate bill that, if passed, would bring prayer back into public schools. Presumably, this would allow the teaching of the "Judeo-Christian ethic" in public schools, thereby bringing some semblance of "morality" back into those dens of atheistic heathenism - not to mention offending all

Stooge #2 - Steve Symms. Every so often, I get a newsletter from the Idaho senator that Spy magazine dubbed "the stupidest senator in America." As if to confirm this, Congressional staff associations repeatedly vote Symms "one of the ten dumbest senators in the Senate."

The more I read his newsletters, the more convinced I am that these titles are not undeserved. Apparently, I'm not alone. At one post office box location in town, there were literally hundreds of recent Symms newsletters crammed into two or three trash cans, all unread.

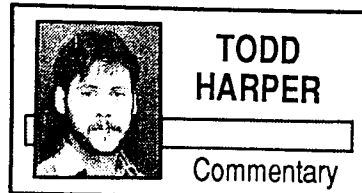

The latest writ of wisdom from "Idaho's Senator" complains about those damn "preservationists" wanting to add more acreage to Idaho's wilderness lands. Idaho currently has about four million acres of area designated as wilderness (about three percent of the state). According to Symms, these bleeding hearts want to "ban humans from government-owned land." Upon closer inspection, his statement is blatantly misleading.

Those so called "preservationists" aren't trying to ban hunters, non-Christian students. But that's OK in America. If it isn't smacking of Christianity, it's automatically immoral.

Like most conservatives, Craig fully supports the trampling of the First Amendment to sanctify a piece of cloth.

Yep, it's that idiotic piece of legislation introduced by our beloved George Bush-wacker. All you commies beware; no more flag burning! After all, the American flag stands for some pretty high-minded ideals - the myth of equal opportunity, the myth of religious freedom, the myth of a government for the people, by the people and of the people, and a commitment to the spreading of democratic freedom via CIA-trained death squads.

fishermen, hikers, etc., from enjoying Idaho's natural beauty. What they are trying to do is prevent big business (the timber companies) from clearcutting thousands of acres of forest land.

According to Symms, "If Idaho's mills are to survive, they must have access to the sawtimber being grown on (forest service) lands." Oddly enough, the day before Symms' newsletter appeared in the mail, an Idahoian article claimed that Idaho mills were enjoying their second best year ever.

Other Symms goofs include: * Wanting the Air Force to drop phone books on Cuba. The rationale was that the yellow pages would convince those commie Cubans of the strength and validity of American capitalism.

* Encouraging constituents to shoot endangered species.

* Supporting the invasion of Nicaragua. It's interesting to note that "Idaho's Senator" was a member of the peacetime Marines.

* Wanting to restore Oliver North's military pension. Remember Ollie? He was convicted of three felonies in relation to the Iran/Contra mess. Under federal statutes, officers convicted of felonies are no longer eligible for pensions. But according to Symms, America morally owes North a debt of gratitude because he's a decorated battlefield veteran. Never mind that he was involved in a scheme to use illicit drug money to fund an illegal war. Poor Ollie. Now that he's out of the Marines, he has been relegated to the lecture circuit where he only receives a piddling $25,000 per appearance.

Stooge #3 - James McClure. Many of you might remember our esteemed Sen. McClure's reaction to Earth First's practice of spiking trees - calling for 100 acres of clearcutting for every tree found with a spike. But then there are those pesky preservationists in the way again. They just won't bow before the whims of the almighty Corporate. Imagine being so misguided as to think that our wilderness areas should be preserved for future generations. Just like Stevie, Jim wants to redesignate wilderness areas so they can be "harvested" by timber industries.

As for you Idaho artists, your creativity had better conform to the standards of "decency" as set forth by that guardian of public morality, the thoroughly raving Sen. Jesse Helms. Giving a two-fingered poke in the eyes of the First Amendment, McClure supports Helms' legislation that would deny federal funding for artwork that offends the tender sensibilities of a handful of uptight conservatives.

Odd as it may seem, McClure has been a longtime supporter of the arts. It just goes to show what can happen when one lets oneself get buffaloed by a Bible Belt conservative.

It's nice to know that our tax dollars are well-spent on trips to distant ports for both Stevie and Jim. In fact, for fiscal years '87 and '88, Stevie and Jim made the top 10 list of traveling at the public's expense. Without Larry, these two stooges took 11 trips to 27 countries between January 1987 and December 1988 on "federal government business." All their food, lodging, transportation and pie-throwing expenses were funded by the federal government, which is in turn funded by you and me.

Who would have ever thought that the "famous potatoes" state could have such talent and entertainment within its own borders? I can hardly wait for upcoming episodes of the Three (Idaho) Stooges.

Every year I have a Thanksgiving dinner to which there is an open invitation. Particularly I wish to invite university students who may be far from home at this season. There are doubtlessly students who must remain because of work commitments, or who have too great a distance to travel to go home. International students, students with families and children ... all are most welcome!

There will be turkey and all the fixings as well as plenty of vegetables and fruits. A vegetarian could have a good meal. There will be enough variety.

For entertainment I will have a slide show of some of the art work of my late husband who was from Paris, France, and Painted all over the world. Besides that, there will be a free door prize drawing with a number of gifts which will make it fun for everyone.

If those wishing to attend could RSVP by the Monday before Thanksgiving (after that I start cooking), it would be very helpful. But last minute drop-ins will be welcome. There is no cost, as you would be my personal guest. The dinner is held at St. Mary's Family Center for the sake of space. The address is 618 East First, Moscow, and we will begin at 12:30 p.m.

Remember, the more the merrier! Clip this out and save it if you might consider coming. Please RSVP to 882-8124 or 882-4813.

Friesz became the first Big Sky player to pass for more than 10,000 yards in a career, as he completed 32 of 51 passes for 446 yards.

The Vandal receiving trio of Lee Allen, Jackson and Dunn was spectacular. Jackson caught five passes, for 158 yards, Dunn had seven catches for 116 yards, and Allen caught nine passes for 99 yards.

tions, including two by Charlie Oliver.

The Vandal offense was 11 of 13 (84.6 percent) in thirddown conversions in the first half and wound up 14 of 21 (66.7 percent). UI's third-down conversion rate is 58.3 percent this season, first in the Big Sky rankings. This is one statistic that, according to Friesz and Head Coach John L. Smith, contributed to the Vandals' victory over UNR and to their other wins as well.

Next the Vandals travel to Pocatello to face the Idaho State University Bengals in the Minidome. UI has not won there since 1982 but defeated ISU 41-7 last year. ISU is 2-3 in conference play and 3-4 overall.

After the game against ISU, the Vandals will take a weekend off before they face arch-rival BSU in the ASU-Kibbie Dome at 1 p.m. Nov. 18. The Broncos are currently third in the Big Sky Conference.

University of Idaho/ Washington State sponsor upcoming Palouse Turkey Run

By RUSS BIAGGNE
Sports Editor

The University of Idaho and Washington State University intramural sports departments will sponsor the annual Palouse Turkey Run Nov. 11.

Formerly known as the Turkey Trot, the run is yet another cooperation between the UI and WSU intramural departments in an attempt to promote the good will that sports should incorporate.

"The name was changed to reflect that it is not just a University of Idaho event," said Bob Beals, assistant director of UI Campus Recreation.

Beals said the run is open to all UI and WSU students, faculty and staff and residents of the Palouse area. There is no age limit and no intramural points will be awarded.

WSU and UI have recently been working together to sponsor combined events, starting with the Mountain Bike Rodeo and now the Palouse Turkey Run. The universities are promoting the non-competitive side of athletics.

"The events are just for fun," Beals said. "We want to mix the two universities in as many non-competitive competitions as possible."

Beals said WSU will be sponsoring a swimming event next semester for both schools.

The Nov. 11 run will take place at the UI Golf Course on a 4.5-mile, out and back course on dirt, pavement and gravel. This should make the run fairly challenging. All runners finishing will participate in a random drawing for prizes.

"Last year, Thanksgiving-type prizes such as turkeys and pumpkin pies were handed out," Beals said. "The same types of prizes will be handed out this year as well."

The top male and female from each school will receive an intramural champion T-shirt from their respective university. Because the event is not for

All participants must have experience in free-style, jazz and aerobic dance. Dancewear is required. For more information, contact Vanessa Carr.

BIG SKY ACTION. In other Big Sky action this weekend, Montana State University defeated Weber State College 31-27, Eastern Washington University lost to Stephen F. Austin 42-36, and Idaho State University won their second Big Sky game by defeating Northern Arizona University 24-20. With three weeks remaining in the regular season, Idaho sits atop the conference at 6-0 followed by (in order) Montana, Boise State, Nevada-Reno, EWU, ISU, MSU, NAU, and WSC.

Cross Country: Runners take two first place finishes at invitational

By AMY JAMISON
Staff Writer

If one first place finish isn't enough, try two.

Bernardo Barrios and Diane Knudson finished in first place for the University of Idaho men's and women's cross country teams Saturday at the Wandermere Invitational in Spokane.

UI faced Washington State University, Eastern Washington University, Eastern Oregon University, Bellevue Community College, Spokane Community College and Greenriver Community College.

A team score was not kept for UI since the invitational was a qualifying meet for junior colleges. However, UI women's Head Coach Scott Lorek is pleased with his team's performance and said the team showed much improvement over the previous meet in Boise.

"It was a good meet," Lorek said. "People came through."

Lorek noted Knudson's personal achievement at the invitational.

"Diane ran a faster time on that course than Paula Parsell did," Lorek said.

Parsell was a cross country runner for UI and an all-conference runner last year.

"This is the first time Diane has exceeded one of Paula's performances," Lorek said.

Following Knudson came Kari Krebsbach, sixth, Kristy Klason, 23rd, Linda Walsh, 25th, Monica Langfeldt, 28th and Moss Stone, 34th.

According to Lorek, only four runners competed for the men's team. Mark Lynch sat out of the meet due to an injury. The remaining men's results were unavailable.

Both the men's and women's teams will have two weeks to prepare for the Big Sky Conference and District 7 Championships to be held Nov. 11 in Salt Lake City, Utah.

UI sets eyes on third title

By RUSS BIAGNE
Commentary

The weekend worked out perfectly for the University of Idaho football team.

Not only did the Vandals win their homecoming game 42-22 against the University of Nevada-Reno, but the University of Montana Grizzlies did them a favor by destroying Boise State University (who was second in the Big Sky behind the Vandals) 48-13.

The Broncos, who have posed a serious threat to UI as the season begins to wind down, actually defeated themselves. They set a Big Sky Conference record 10 interceptions, two for touchdowns, and tied a Big Sky Conference and NCAA Division I-AA single-game record by committing 12 turnovers. Six of the Bronco turnovers led to Montana scores.

Because of the two games' results, the Vandals are in the driver's seat en route to their third straight Big Sky title. They sit alone at the top of the Big Sky at 6-0, followed by 5-1 Montana, and BSU in third at 4-1.

UI can clinch a tie for the Big Sky title by defeating Idaho State University this weekend in Pocatello. If UI wins, and BSU loses to UNR, the Vandals will clinch the title and the automatic berth to the Division I-AA playoffs. Both BSU and Montana have one league loss, but since the Vandals defeated Montana, they hold the tiebreaker advantage over the Grizzlies.

One thing that stands in the Vandals' way is their apparent inability to defeat ISU in Pocatello. They have only defeated ISU once in Pocatello in the '80s. Their last victory there was in 1982. Despite this, the odds are against the Bengals. Their Big Sky record is 2-3, and the Vandals defeated them last year 41-7.

Conceivably, the Vandals should win their third straight title. Their offense is averaging better than 400 yards per game, and they are riding a seven-game winning streak. Also, the Vandals have not lost a league game since their opener against Montana last year.

points this year, Beals could not estimate the turnout.

"It used to be a pledge activity for the fraternities in order to get intramural participation points," Beals said. "Because it is not for points, participation from the universities could be down, but community participation could level out the numbers."

The entry deadline for all runners is 5 p.m., Nov. 8. Non-university runners pay a $2 entry fee. There is no entry fee for UI and WSU students, faculty and staff. The race begins at 9 a.m. blocks. Teammate Abby Bayona helped the 5-6 Lumberjacks with nine kills, two assists, three serving aces, six digs and seven blocks.

Coach Hilbert and the team were looking to break their five-match losing streak.

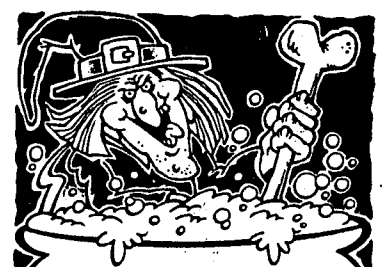

"We needed a win to turn us around," Hilbert said. "The team was feeling that they couldn't control their play."

With better passing and a good balance of attack, the Lady Vandals broke the losing streak with a 15-10, 17-15 and 15-13 win over the Nevada-Reno Wolfpack. Stacey Asplund and Kristy Frady recorded 11 kills each, while Karen Thompson and Debbie Thayer each had 10.

Dee Dee Bailey recorded three serving aces along with five kills, eight digs, three blocks and a .273 hitting percentage.

With the win, the Lady Vandals stand at 5-7 in the Big Sky Conference. The Wolfpack falls to 1-11.

When asked about still making postseason play, Coach Hilbert said, "It's not likely, but it's still possible. If Montana loses, we're still mathematically in it."

Halloween is here...

Evening full of madness

By SALLY GILPIN
Staff Writer

Ghosts, witches, monsters and goblins will be walking about the Palouse tonight, trying to scare up a few goodies.

Halloween is here, and this time of year has everyone thinking not only about costume parties and candy, but also of supernatural or unexplained events.

Did you ever wonder how Halloween came about? Or what the story behind jack-o'-lanterns and trick-or-treating was?

According to The American Book of Days by George W. Douglas, Halloween has roots that go back before Christianity.

The druids, who originated the ceremonies and mystic rites of Halloween, called Oct. 31 the Eve of the Festival of Saman. Each Oct. 31 the druids would hold ceremonies and rituals to honor Saman, the druid lord of death. The druids believed that Saman would take the wicked souls of dead humans and place them in the bodies of animals. Good souls, on the other hand, were placed in human bodies. The ceremonies were meant to appease Saman and guarantee human bodies for the druids in their next life.

Karp discusses art and looks at works

By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

Ivan Karp, a self-acknowledged veteran of the New York art scene, spoke on "The Power and Politics of Art" Friday.

Karp discussed the nature of artists, the art scene, galleries, and collectors.

Karp also said he was in Moscow to look at the work of David Giese, who will be showing his work in Karp's gallery in October 1990. Karp called Giese's work a splendid achievement.

"We think it's going to create reverberations at least in some portions of the art world."

Perceptual ability allows people to fully appreciate fine art and distinguish quality from junk, Karp said. It is a perfected response to visual stimuli.

Karp said since most art comes from within the self, most artists don't have or need perceptual ability. Rather, artists are obsessed.

"They have to make what they make. They have to do what they do because they are a helpless breed," Karp said.

According to Karp, craft skills and original ideas are imposed on the obsession, and the obsession is the driving force behind the finished work.

Getting ahead in the art world is 80 to 95 percent politics, four to seven percent merit, and two to three percent insanity, Karp said. Many of the artists shown are those who show up at all the openings, hold social gatherings, badger or cajole dealers, and are attractive, according to Karp.

He said 50 to 64 percent of success depends on physical beauty. He said you can't make progress on this planet on merit alone.

Karp said the art scene is divided into numerous factions, yet the community is close. Everyone knows everything about everyone.

Although highly divided by ideals and convictions, members of the art community stick together because most people outside their circle could care less about the arts, according to Karp.

New York galleries schedule shows two years in advance. Of the 550 galleries in the city, only five will look at new artists' slides.

Karp's gallery, the O.K. Harris, is one of these few. He views slides for about 150 artists weekly and of those, five or six will stand out.

Karp said he looks for a balanced mix of ripened craftsmanship and original ideas in new artists.

His gallery puts up a new show every five weeks and runs four shows consecutively.

The best months for a show are October, November, April and May, because the collectors are in town during those months, Karp said.

According to Karp, collectors are people who ignore the rhetoric of the art world. They know with conviction which pieces are worthy when they walk into a room. He said they have perfect perceptual ability.

Karp said there are only 63 contemporary art collectors in America. In the 1960s, there were only six.

Contemporary art collectors buy art because they love it. They purchase on a regular basis and acquire more art than they can use in their homes.

Although many collectors are vulgar people, they are necessary to the art world, Karp said.

Album review: Young's album shows progression

Neil Young's latest release, Freedom, has shown that since his last album he has neither "burnt out" nor "faded away." I was reluctant to purchase this new album without hearing it first, due to his history of rapid style changes from one album to the next. This release is definitely new Neil Young, and a refreshing example of his progression over the years as a musician.

This new style, if you want to call it that, is actually a combination of all his previous music phases brought together on one album. The majority of the songs date back to his early 1970s folk style; however, Young periodically scatters heavy distortion throughout, revealing a dedication to his more recent years of rock 'n' roll. So the real change in style is brought about by bringing his different modes of music together in one song.

The technique of using distortion is effective in accentuating the emotion of the music and the lyrics. The content of Young's new songs is similar to that which he has written for more than 20 years. It consists of a few political jabs, a few love stories, but mostly tales of a common man's life in America.

Not all the songs use this technique of mixing folk with rock 'n' roll. Young recorded the same song, "Rockin' in the Free World," twice on this album, each in a different style. This example reveals Young's ability to play at both ends of the music spectrum. This ability is also amplified by the quality of the recording, as compared to some of his earlier works.

The band, which includes Young on guitar and vocals,

Chad Cromwell on drums, Frank Sampedro on keyboards, and Rick Rosas on bass guitar, plays tight for Young's standards, which have been known to be loose at times. Singing backup is Linda Ronstadt, whose voice mixes well with Young's on the songs "Hangin' on a Limb" and "The Ways of Love."

If you have not heard much Neil Young, this album would serve well as a sampler of every style he has had over the years. If you are already a Young fan, I recommend this album for your collection. Until his next work appears, let's hope he continues to defy the odds by refusing to, in his words, "fade away" or "burn out" but instead keep "Rockin' the Free World."

When the Romans came to the British Isles, they renamed the festival All Hallows Eve, which later became Halloween.

Over the centuries many Halloween customs were started and later brought to America. Two of the most popular Halloween traditions still practiced are jack-o-lantern carving and trick-or-treating.

In Ireland and Scotland children carved jack-o-lanterns out of turnips or potatoes. The lanterns were supposed to remind the children to be good and to remember the story of Jack, an Irishman who was forbidden to enter heaven because of his misdeeds, and was banished from hell for always playing practical jokes on the devil. Jack was condemned to walk the earth with a lantern until Judgment Day.

Trick-or-treating also has Irish origins. Irish peasants were said to have gone door to door asking for money or food to use for the Festival of Saint Columba, which had replaced the Festival of Saman. If the peasants did not get something from a house, they would put sheep's blood on the door, or even set it on fire.

For centuries Christians believed that on Halloween the dead walked the earth and witches and other mystical creatures ruled the night. Some of that belief still exists. Ghost stories are still popular, even right here in Moscow.

The University of Idaho Hartung Theater is said to be haunted by Oscar, the benevolent ghost of a construction worker who died of a heart attack while working on the building. There is a report of an incident in which an actor could not find some shoes to fit him. He had looked everywhere in the costume and fitting rooms to no avail. Then from a cubbyhole fell a pair of shoes that fit him perfectly.

Former theater student Angel Katen, who is now a lecturer for the UI School of Communication, confirms the story.

"Yes, there's a ghost in the Hartung," Katen said. "A lot of the theater students have had unexplained things happen to them."

■ TURTLE MARKS COFFEE HOUSE RE-OPENING

The "burning stake" from the '60s and '70s, makes a reappearance on the University of Idaho campus.

A coffee shop located in the basement of the Campus Christian Center earned the title in 1963 to recognize heretics who had been burned at the stake because of their past beliefs. The shop featured live music, a small bookstore and a counter-culture atmosphere.

A psychedelic turtle at the corner of Elm Street and University Avenue marks the shop's return and heralds passers-by to stop in.

The Burning Stake Coffee House, which opened Monday, provides a haven for students to study, hang out, converse and listen to music. A grand re-opening will take place Friday night with music provided by Loralee Lindsley and the Palouse Folklore Society.

Textbook costs biggest complaint at UI bookstore

By ANDREA CHAVEZ

Hamlet by Shakespeare, $2.65; Pascal by Nance, $37.05; Theory and Practice of Biological Control by Huffaker, $113.

The cost of textbooks, along with not having them in time for class, are the chief complaints from students concerning the University of Idaho Bookstore, said bookstore assistant manager Peg Godwin.

"You can't really blame them," Godwin said.

Most textbook problems can be traced to two areas: textbook price, which is determined by publishing expenses, and availability, which becomes a problem when class size estimates are miscalculated.

"When you look at the cost of textbooks over the last 15 to 20 years, prices have gone up tremendously," Godwin said. The average price of a textbook at the UI Bookstore is $30, Godwin said. That is less than the cost of one pair of brand-name jeans, but students must buy many textbooks at once.

Textbook prices are determined by publishing costs. The most expensive books deal with specialized topics where only a small number of books are produced and the cost-per-unit is high. Production expense is not spread out over a large volume of books, and the price is passed on to the consumer.

Due to their specialization, expensive books are usually needed for small classes. However, larger classes had a problem with book availability this semester due to the large, unexpected jump in enrollment.

"We are not on a pre-registration system, so we never know until the first day of class how many people are going to be in those classes," Godwin said.

While many books can be received quickly by air freight, large numbers must be trucked in and can take up to 10 days.

The university's new pre-registration system could help solve some of the problems that occurred this semester. Godwin suggested that individual departments place orders on time and make any additional orders as soon as possible.

"Some departments are wonderful," Godwin said. "They call me again about a week before classes start and they'll say, 'It looks like there is going to be an over-enrollment. Let's order another 100 books.'"

Unfortunately, not all departments are well-organized when it comes to book ordering.

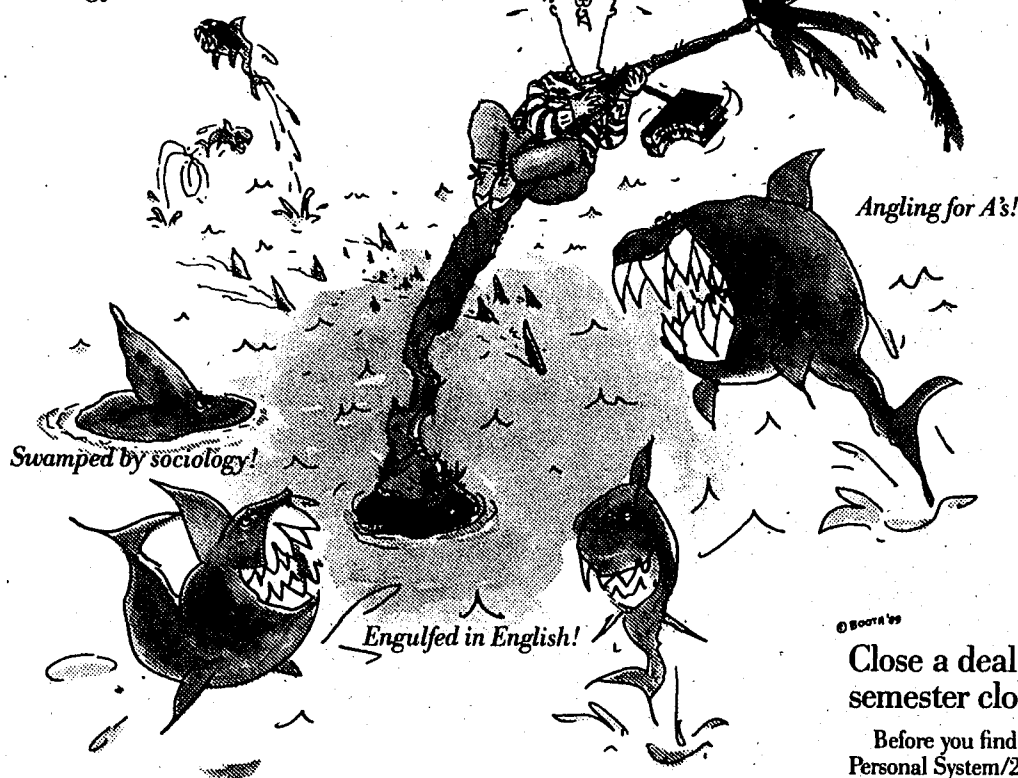

"Not many departments track details as well as others," Godwin said.

While the problem of book availability can be worked out with better cooperation and pre-registration, the high price of textbooks is here to stay.

"If one looks at the big picture, I had a stack of stat' books that cost $10,000 — just one stack of books," Godwin said. "That used to buy a house; now it buys a stack of books."
